An Advertisement to the Reader concerning this large and exact Table, much wanted and desired in the First and Second, and now annexed to the Third and Fourth Impression of this Book.

How well it is observed, That Humane Industry cannot begin and finish any thing at one and the same time, this famous Book may be an instance; whole first Edition was but the Monogram, and rude draughts, to a more exact Composure; the second adding much Matter and Method to the first; and the third and fourth adding Matter, Method, and a most exact and full Table of both, to the second; containing all the Provinces, Kingdoms, States, Principalities, Continents, Isles, Promontories, Isthmus's, Seas, Rivers, Havens, Mart-Towns, Cities, Strong-holds, with their Longitudes, Latitudes, Situations, Plantations, Inhabitants, Ancient and Modern Names; and the Book and Page where they are satisfactorily discoursed of.

A Table (that notwithstanding every Methodical Book, such as this is, is its own Index : Every great Memory, like that of Cæfar, carrieth a Table of all Books in his Brain ; and every hopeful Student makes his own Table to all Claffical Authors) that carrieth with it its own Commendation. 1. To those that have not time to read Books, but Indexes. 2. To those that have not patience to go through the whole Body, and yet curiosity to observe the Remarkable parts of Geography. 3. To those that would recollect what they have forgotten of their reading. 4. To those that upon any emergent occasion, would see the Situation, Rivers, Havens, Strong-holds, Garrisons, Longitudes, Latitudes, Commodities, Products, Curiosities, Inhabitants, Genius, Condition, and History of any place in the World. 5. To those that read any Ancient or Modern Histories, or other Authors, and would be satisfied in the Scene of the Actions they read of, and the situation of the places there mentioned. 6. To those that aiming at exactness this way, would compare all the Ancient and Modern Geographers. And 7. To all the Perusers of this Book that complained of the intolerable defects of former Tables and Indexes ; of which number the Learned Compiler of this Table, who drew it up for his own satisfaction, and published it for the Publick, is one who witheth others as much benefit in the easie way of Perusing it, as he had in the more toilsom way of Collecting it.

The Matter added to this Impression, is much; and all under the Author's own hand, not long before he died; putting to it (as he said truly to his Friend that was with him in the perusal of it) his last hand.

TO THE READER.

The AUTHOR rendreth this Account of his Undertaking and Performance in the following Work

IT is a great complaint with many, That they want time, either to undertake great matters, or to accomplish those they have undertaken: Whereas it is more truly affirmed by Seneca, that we do not so much want, as waste it: Non parum temporis habemus, sed multum perdimus, as that Author hath it. We trifle out too much of our precious time, as he well observeth, Aut male agendo, aut nihil agendo, aut aliud agendo; either in doing ill, or nothing, or else things impertinent: and then cry out, that we want things convenient to perform those duties which are expected from us in our several places. Nor have we only time enough to spend, but some time to spare; some privacies and retreats from business; some breathing fits from the affairs of our Vocations: and even of them (those times of leisure and recess) we are to render an account, in Cato's judgment: Optimè reddendum rationem judicabat Cato, as was read in Tully. In which account, as all men generally are concerned, so am I interred therein as much as any. For being, by the unhappiness of my Destiny, or the infelicity of the Times, deprived of my Preferments, and divested of my Ministerial Function, (as to the ordinary and publick exercise thereof) I cannot chuse but say, I have leisure enough; the opportunity of spending more idle hours (if I were so minded) than I ever expected or desired. And though, perhaps, I could have spent those times of leisure which the change of my affairs hath given me, with greater benefit to my self, and more to the advantage of my private fortunes: yet that of Cato did so over-balance me, that I was willing to do somewhat which might witness to ensuing times, how I had passed away those hours, and employed that leisure. And when I was considering of some particulars within the compass of my power, and answerable to that small stock of Books which I had recruited, (mine own being taken from me, and disposed of, contrary unto publick Order) I was requested by some Friends, of no common quality, to review my Geography; to make it more compleat and useful to an English Reader: my vacancy from business, used by them as an Argument to induce me to it. A motion looked on, when first made, with neglect enough;

my desuetude from those younger Studies, my great want of Books, the sad complexion of the times, and the unhandsome entertainment which my Endeavors for the Publick had lately met with, seeming sufficient to dissuade me from the Undertaking. Little encouragement, God wot, to write Books for others, when I could not be permitted to enjoy my own; or to employ my self in order to a Publick Service, when not alone my private Fortunes, but the publick Patrimony of the Church, was destroyed and dissipated. But afterwards, being pressed unto it by some Members of Parliament, whom I found loth to be denied, and by some others of great Rank, but such different Interests, that I wondered how they could all center upon the same Proposal: I thought it, at the last, a more Christian duty, to satisfy the honest desires of so many men, than to sacrifice any longer to my own privacy and retiredness, to which I had intended to devote my self. So I resolved to venture on it, though well I saw that my condition in so doing might be resembled unto that of the Israelites in the Land of Egypt; of whom the Task-masters did expect the full tale of Bricks, and yet denied them their accustomed allowance of Straw and Stubble. My case, in this, not much unlike unto that of the Duke of Alva; Who being under the displeasure of the King of Spain, in quality of a Prisoner, without the least assurance of recovering the King's favour, or his own liberty; and yet employed, in that Conjunction, for the conquest of Portugal, was wont to say, That he was sent to Conquer Kingdoms with his Fetters on.

And here I cannot but remember a pretty accident which befel me in the Month of January, An. 1640. at what time it had been my ill fortune to suffer under some misapprehensions which had been entertain'd against me, and to be before the Committee for the Courts of Justice, on the complaint of Mr. Prymme, then newly return'd from his confinement, and in great credit with the Vulgar. Heard by them, confessed, I was, with a great deal of ingenious patience; but most despitigfully reviled and persecuted with excessive both noise and violence, by such as thronged about the doors of that Committee, to expect the issue: it being as natural to many weak and inconsiderate men, as it is to Dogs, to bark at those they do not know, and to accompany each other in those kinds of clamors. And though I had the happiness to come off clear, without any censure; and to recover by degrees, amongst knowing men, that estimation which before had been much endangered: yet such as took up matters upon trust and hear-say, look upon me as a Person forfeited and marked out for ruin. Amongst others, I was then encountered, in my passage from Westminster to White-hall, by a tall big Gentleman, who thrusting me rudely from the Wall, and looking over his shoulder on me in a scornful manner said, in a hoarse voice these words, Geography is better than Divinity; and so passed along. Whether his meaning were, That I was a better Geographer than Divine; or that Geography had been a Study of more credit and advantage to me in the eyes of men, than Divinity was like to prove, I am not able to determine. But sure I am, I have since thought very often of it; and that the thought thereof had its influence on me, in drawing me to look back on those younger Studies, in which I was resolved to have dealt no more: and thereto in the Preface to my Microcosm, had obliged my self.

And it is possible enough, that, in respect of that general promise, I may lie under the censure of inconstancy, and breach of Covenant, in that I had solemnly declared in the aforesaid Preface, that the Reader, should not fear any further enlargements, which might make him repent his (then) present Markets; that it had received my last hand; and that from thenceforth I would look upon it as a Stranger only. But it was meant with all, and expressed accordingly, unless it were for the amending of such Errors, of which, by the strength of mine own judgment, or any ingenious information, I should be convinced. And Errors, I must needs say, I have found so many on this last perusal, and those not only verbal, but material too, as did not only free me from that Obligation, but did oblige me to a further Review thereof. For being written in an Age, on which the pride of youth, and self-opinion, might have some predominances; I thought it freer from mistakes, than I since have found it. And those mistakes, by running through eight Editions (six of them without my perusal or supervising) so increased and multiplied, that I could no longer call it mine, or look upon it with any tolerable degree of patience. So that, in case the importunity of friends had not informed me, in a manner, upon this employment, the necessity of consulting my own fame, and leaving the Work fair behind me, to succeeding times, would have perfwaded me, in the end, to do somewhat in it. Which, though the last, was not the least of those inducements which inclined me to the undertaking of this present Work.

Having thus plainly and ingenuously laid down the reasons which did induce, though not encourage me unto this performance; it is now fit I should declare what I have done in it, and what the Reader may expect from so great Enlargements. And first, the Reader is to know, that my design originally, was only to look over the former Book, to give it a Review, to purge it of the Errors which it had contracted; and not so much to make a new Book, as correct the old. But when I had more seriously considered of it, I found sufficient reason to change that purpose, to make it new both in Form and Matter; and to present it to the World with all those advantages which a new Book might carry with it. The greater pains I took about it, the greater I conceived would be the benefit, which might from thence redound to those who should please to read it. And I would willingly so far comply with all expectations, that the short Taper of my life should give light to others, in the consuming of it self. Non nobis solum nati sumus, may well become a Christian's mouth, though an Heathen speak it. But if all expectations be not satisfied in the compleatness of the Work, (as I fear they will not) I desire it may not be ascribed unto any neglect or fault of mine, but to the wants and difficulties which I was to struggle with. Books I had few to help my self with, of mine own; nor live I near so rich a Clergy, (most of the Benefices of these parts being poor and mean) as to supply my self from them with such Commodities. The greatest helps I had, was from Oxford Library; which, though but nine or ten miles off from my present dwelling; yet the charge and trouble of the Journey, with the loss of time, made my visits to that place less frequent; and consequently, the Neighbour-hood thereof less useful to me, than the generality of the Design might well comport with. So that when all things are considered as they ought to be, it rather may be wondered at, by an equal Reader, how I could come to write so much, with so little helps, upon a Subject of such a large and diffused variety; than that in any part thereof, I have writ too little. And to say truth, the Work so prospered in my hand, and swelled so much above my thought and expectation, that I hope I may, with modesty enough, use those words of Jacob, Voluntas Dei fuit ut cito occurreret mihi quod volebam; The Lord God brought it to me, as the English reads it.

In the pursuance of this Work, as I have taken on my self the parts of an Historian and Geographer; so have I not forgotten that I am an English man; and, which is somewhat more, a Church-man. As an English man, I have been mindful, upon all occasions, to commit to memory the noble Actions of my Country, exploited both by Sea and Land, in most parts of the World; and represented on the same Theaters upon which they were acted. And herein have followed the example of the great Annalist, Baronius; who pretending, in that great and laborious Work, a sincere History of the Church, and no more than so; yet tells the Pope, in his Epistle, that he principally did intend the same, pro Sacrorum Traditionum Antiquitate, & Autoritate Romana Ecclesie; to manifest therein the Antiquity of such Traditions, and for defence of that Authority and Power, which at this day are taught and exercised in the Church of Rome. And so much I may also say of my self in this performance, though without any by design to abuse the Reader, That though the History and Chorography of the World, be my principal business; yet I have apprehended every modest occasion of Recording the Heroick Acts of my Native Soil, and signing on the Registers of perpetual Fame, the Gallantry and brave Atchievements of the People of England; Exemplified in their many Victories and signal Services in Italy, France, Spain, Scotland, Belgium; in Palestine, Cyprus, Africa and America, and indeed, where not? Nor have I pretermitted their great zeal and piety, in converting to the Faith so many of the German and Northern Nations; Franciscans, Thuringians, Hassians, Saxons, Danes, Frisons; as also, amongst the Scots and Picts; together with those of Lithuania, and the people of Norway; by that means more enlarging Christ's Kingdom, than they did their own. And as I have been zealous to Record the Actions, so have I been as careful to assert the Rights of the English Nation: inherent personally in their Kings, by way of publick interest in the Subject also; as the whole Body doth partake of that sense and motion which is originally in the Head. And of this kind I reckon the true stating of the Title of the Kings of England to the Crown of France, demonstrating the Vassalage of the Kingdom of Scotland to the Crown of England; vouching the legal Interest of the English Nation, in right of the first Discovery of Primer Seizure, to Esotland, Terra Cartivalis, New-found-Land, Nonnem Belgium, Guiana, the Countries near the Cape of good Hope, several of the Indian Islands, and some other places, against all Pretenders: insinuating the precedency of the English Kings, before those of Spain; their Sovereignty and Dominion in the British Ocean: with the great benefit which might from thence arise unto us, invaded and almost ingrooved by the Hanse and Hollanders. And yet there is another thing which speaks me more an English-man, than all these together; which I shall fall on soon enough, and indeed too soon, the sacredness of the subject being well considered.

Next, as a Church-man, I have taken more especial notice of the ancient and present face of Christianity, in all parts of the World; the planting and Government of Churches, the Heterodoxies and opinions of those several Sects into which it doth now stand dismembred. By which it will appear most clearly, amongst other things, that the Doctrine and Government of the Church, were of equal standing; that this Government was no other than that of Bishops; and that wheresoever Christianity did find any admittance, Episcopacy was admitted also as a part thereof: the Gospel being in most places first Preached by Bishops, or growing to esteem and strength under their Authority. And it is found on these Researches, that as Episcopacy was coeval with the Church it self, so the Subordination of Bishops to their several Primates, and the Co-ordination of those Primates among themselves in the common Government thereof, was of such antiquity (as being settled and confirmed in St. Cyprian's time, who flourished in the year 250.) that it is hard to trace the beginnings of it. Debere Episcopos in commune Ecclesiam regere, is a noted Maxim, in St. Hieron; but practically true in the Communicatoria, and Formate, of the Elder Ages: Which happy course, had it been preserved, Episcopacy had been so far from being made a Stirrup for Antichrist to mount into his Throne, as the Smectymmans fallily charge it; that it had served rather as a Martingal to have kept him down from lifting up his head too high above the rest of his Brethren. And that this course was not preserved, came not intentionally, from the Popes, (for that by Antichrist they mean the Popes of Rome, is a thing past question) but from the Inundations of the barbarous Nations: though I confess the Popes were apt enough to make the best advantage of those various Accidents, which the distresses of the Church did present unto them. For by the overflowing of the barbarous Nations, Christianity was either quite extinguished, or the Authority of the Primates trodden under foot; or that intelligence and commerce which had been antiently amongst them, interdicted on good reasons of State, by such Heathen or Mahometan Princes, under whom they lived. And then, how easie was it for the Pope, in the new planting of the Gospel in these Western parts, (done either by his Ministers, or by his encouragement) to give unto the Bishops, of his own appointing, such a limited Power, as might make them more and more obnoxious unto his Commands, and afterwards to lessen their Authority, as he saw occasion, by granting large Exemptions to Monasteries, Convents, and Cathedrals; with Jurisdiction over the Parochial Churches which belonged unto them? So that it is most evident in the course of Story, that the Popes never came unto their height, nor could obtrude their Superstitions and Novations on the Church of CHRIST, till they had weakened, by degrees, the Episcopal Power. Followed, in that design, though though on different ends, by Wicliff, and some others in the Ages since; who have driven on their private projects under the colour and pretence of a Reformation. Episcopacy, as it was Coequal with the Church of CHRIST, so was it the best and strongest Buttreſs in that Sacred Building. The weakening or ſubverting of which Primitive Order, did either proſtitute the Church to the Luſt and Tyranny of that proud Uſurper, or expoſe the Patrimony thereof unto ſpoil and Rapine; or finally, ſubject it to the Anarchy and licentiousneſs of Heterodoxies, and confuted Opinions. But I fear I have digreſſed too far in this ſpeculation.

As a Geographer, I have been punctual and exact in giving unto every Province its peculiar bounds, in laying out their ſeveral Land-marks, tracing the courſe of moſt of the principal Rivers, and ſetting forth the ſituation and eſtate of the chiefſt Towns, and did once think of beautifying the Work with as many Maps as the ſeveral States and Kingdoms which are here deſcribed. But upon further conſideration, how much it would encreaſe the Book both in bulk and price, and conſequently make it of leſs public uſe than I did intend it; I laid by thoſe thoughts, and reſted ſatisfied with the adding of four Maps for the four parts of the World: by which the reader may diſcern how each Country lies unto the other, though he find not each particular Province, and much leſs all the Towns and Cities which are here expreſſed: and on the other ſide, may meet with many Towns of inferior note, which are here omitted. And herein I have took ſome pains in ſearching out the firſt Inhabitants of each ſeveral Country, as far as I could ſee by the light of Letters, or go by probable Conjectures, in finding out the place of ſuch ancient Cities as are now decayed, not eaſily viſible in their Ruins; and adding to ſuch Cities as are now in being (if of any Antiquity) their Original Names. A thing as neceſſary to the underſtanding of the Hiſtories of thoſe Elder times, as the knowledge of the preſent Names is to the more delightful reading of our Modern Stories. And though I have not pretermitted any Town of note, fit to be ſpecified and inſisted on in a Work of this nature; yet would I not have the Reader look for ſuch a punctual enumeration and deſcription of them, as he may meet withal in thoſe who have written the Chography of ſome Country only; or think himſelf unſatisfied in his expectation, if he find not here the ſituation and affairs of each Town of War, or the Quartering-place of every Company or Troop of Soldiers, which are preſented to him in the Weekly News-books. In all Countries there are many places which either by the advantage of their ſituation, or ſome preſent exigency of affairs, are fortified and made Towns of War; or otherwiſe remarkable for ſome ſignal Battel, in theſe late battles and commotions of the Chriſtian World; of which no notice hath been taken in former times, and conſequently not within the compaſs of this Diſcourſe: and yet perhaps may grow as famous and conſiderable in the times to come, as many of the mightier Cities now decayed and ruined. He that ſhall think the Work imperfect (though I confeſs it, to be nothing but imperfections) for ſome deficiencies in this kind, may be likened to the Country-fellow in Ariſtophanes, (if my memory fail not) who picked a great quarrel with the Map, becauſe he could not find where his own Farm ſtood. And ſuch a Country Customer I did meet with once, a Servant of my Elder Brother's, ſent by him with ſome Horſes to Oxon; to bring me and a Friend of mine unto his Houſe. Who having loſt his way, as we paſſed through the Forreſt of Whitchwood, and not able to recover any beaten Track, did very earnestly intreat me to lead the way, till I had brought him paſt the Woods to the open Fields. Which when I had reſuſed to do, as I had good reaſon; alledging, that I never had been there before, and therefore that I could not tell which way to lead him: That's ſtrange, ſaid he, I have heard my Old Maſter, your Father ſay, That you made a Book of all the Worlds, and cannot you find your way out of the Wood? Which being ſpoken out of an honeſt ſimplicity, not out of any pretence to wit, or the leaſt thought of putting a blunt jeſt upon me, occaſioned a great deal of Merriment for a long time after; but I hope to meet with no ſuch Readers. The greatneſs of the Bulk, and conſequently of the Price, makes me ſomewhat confident, that none but men of Judgment and Underſtanding will peruſe theſe Papers: and ſuch as they, will look for no more particulars, than the nature of a general Diſcourſe will ſtilly bear. Perfection and Exactneſs is to be expected in each kind of Science, as is obſerved by Ariſtotele in his Second Book of his Ethicks, ἡ δὲ θεωρία ἀπὸ τοῦ ἀκριβοῦς ἐκτελεῖται: as far forth as the condition of the Argument may be capable of it. And ſo much if I have attained unto, it is all which can with reaſon be expected from me. To look for more, were as improper and abſurd, (in the words of Ariſtotele) as for an Arith to expect Tropes of Rhetorick from a Mathematician, or Demonſtrations from an Orator.

Laſtly, as an Hiſtorian, I have traced the affairs of each ſeveral Country, from the firſt Inhabitants thereof, (ſuch as the Latins call Aborigines, and the Greeks Ἀνατολῆς) till theſe latter times. Which that I might be ſure to do on a good Foundation, I have took more than common care, to ſettle all the firſt Adventurers (after the proud attempt at Babel) in their right Plantations; and that too in the way of an Introduction, that I might the better know where I was to find them, and to go on with their Affairs

with the leſs diſturbance. The reſt of their Occurrences, I have ſummed into ſo ſhort an Abſtraſt, as may be uſeful to the Learned, in the way of a Remembrancer; to the leſs knowing man in the way of a Tutor: Brevity, in this kind, I have much endeavoured; but ſo as to avoid all obſcurity alſo. Nor have I only kept my ſelf to the Story of Kingdoms, or the greater Signeuries, Eſtates or Nations, which are or have been of the greateſt conſideration in the ſway of the World: But looked on the Eſtates of ſuch Dukes, Earls, and inferior Princes, as in their times have had the Government of thoſe parts which gave Title to them; whoſe Actions and Succeſſions are diſtinctly ſpecified, and all ſuch Alterations noted, as have hapned either in the ruine of ſuch Eſtates, or the Tranſlating of them from one Houſe to another. The Catalogues and Succeſſions of which Royal and Illuſtrious Families, I have drawn down unto the year 1648. towards the expiring of which year, I began to ſet my ſelf upon this Employment. And there I fix, as on the top of ſome dreadful Precipice, which one can neither venture down without danger, nor look down without horror. Some things there are of ſuch a nature, that either to ſpeak of them, or to hold our peace, is a like unſafe. In ſuch a caſe it is beſt to keep at a diſtance. For though truth be the beſt Miſtreſs which a man can ſerve, (Magis amica veritas, ſaid the great Philoſopher) yet it is well obſerved withal, that if a man follow her too cloſe at the heels, ſhe may chance to kick out his Teeth for his labour.

In this regard, as alſo out of that compaſſionate affection which a true Engliſh-man ought to bear his Native Country, although in my approaches towards theſe preſent times, I have took notice, in ſome other places, of ſuch Battels, Sieges, and Succeſſes in the Chances of War, as have hapned in theſe later dayes: I have forborn to take the leaſt notice of thoſe Tragedies of Blood and Death which have been lately acted on the Stage of England. I cannot but with grief confeſs, that I might find variety of this kind enough, in the late Wars amongst our ſelves: in which there have been more pitched-Fields, more ſtrong places taken, more notable Traverſes of State, and exploits of War, than all the World can parallel in an equal time. But I have too much Engliſh Bowels to pleaſe my ſelf in the recital, or too look back on thoſe unfortunate adventures, which I ſhould rather chuſe to cover with the Aſh of Oblivion, or bury in the Grave of perpetual ſilence. How gladly I could have Recorded theſe Exploits of War, had they been exerciſed on a Subject more proper for them, my willingneſs to take notice, upon all occaſions, of the Actions and Atchievements of the Engliſh Nation, will bear witneſs for me. But the employing of that Valour againſt our ſelves, as if not to be Conquered, but by one another, ſtrikes ſuch horror in me, that I cannot think thereof, without much affrightment; nor intimate thus much of it, without great reluctance. I fear it may be ſaid too truly of our late embroilments, as the Hiſtorian of the Civil Wars betwixt Cæſar and Pompey, Cauſa hujus Belli eadem quæ omnium gentium felicitas; that they were principally occaſioned by a ſurfeit of too much felicity. But if we were grown weary of our own proſperities; and that Prayer and paſſage in the publick Liturgy (Give Peace in our time, O Lord) did not reſiſt with us: How happy had it been if we had found ſome other Field to have tried our Valour in? And made ſome Foreign Country that Aeldama, which ſo fatally was made at home? The diſhonour which we ſuffered in the Ille of Rhee, when beat thence ingloriouſly by the French, the forcible and long detention of the Palatinate, by the Power of the Spaniards, the barbarous Butchery at Ambonyas, and the beating up of the Spaniſh Fleet within the protection of our Caſtles, by thoſe of Holland; the Inſolencies of the Scots; and the Rebellions of the Iriſh, might well have ſtirred fome indignation in an Engliſh Breaſt. And had we fought upon thoſe ſcores, or on none but them, our Victories had deſerved the honour of a ſolemn Triumph, denied by the old Roman Laws to a Civil War: But our infelicity (as it ſeems) was like that of Rome, in following thoſe unnatural Wars with ſuch animosities; when the unreverged death of Craſſus, the blood of ſo many thouſand of their ſlaughtered Citizens, and the ſhameful loſs of ſo many of the Roman Enſigns, ſhould rather have invited them to the Conqueſt of the Parthian Empire. Of which, thus feelingly the Poet:

*Cumque ſuperba foret Babylon ſpolianda Trophæis,
Bella geri placuit, millos habitura Triumphos,*

(conſtrain'd)

And when proud Babylon ſhould have been
To give us back our Enſigns lately gain'd:
We rather choſe ſuch Quarrels to purſue,
For which no Triumph could be juſtly due.

But ſuch is the condition and viciffitude of humane affairs, that there is nothing permanent, and much leſs of certainty. The greateſt Monarchies of the World, the Babylonian, Perſian, Grecian, Roman, have all had their periods, nothing remaining of them now, but the name and memory. And what is now become of thoſe mighty Cities of the Eaſt, Ninive, Babylon, Ecbatana, Suſa, with the reſt mentioned in the Scriptures, and in Clafſical Authors? Are not their very Ruines now become inviſible? Where are the puſſant Families of the Achæmenides of Perſia, the Seleucide of Syria, the Pharaohs and Ptolemies of Egypt, the Cæſars of Italy, the Merovignians and Carolo-vignians of the Realm of France, and the Plantagenets

genets of England? Are they not all extinct and gone, not to be found but by the benefit of Story, and some ancient Monuments? And if it be so, as it is, with the greatest Monarchies, the most mighty Cities of the World, we must not think that smaller Kingdoms and Estates can either be so evenly balanced, or so surely founded, as not to be obnoxious also to the same vicissitudes. And being that saying of Optatus is most undoubtedly true, Ecclesia est in Republica, that the Church is but a part of the Commonwealth, we must not hope to find it in a better posture than the Civil State in which it is, and under the protection whereof it subsists and flourisheth. The Church must needs miscarry in the ruine of the Civil State; and may miscarry, many times, although the Civil State receive no such alterations. Compared, for this reason, to the Moon, by the ancient Fathers who had observed her in her Prime, in her Encraces, and her Full; and finally, had not only seen her in the Wane also, but sometimes too under some horrible Eclipses. Which various condition of the Militant Church, the Scriptures and succeeding Stories have set forth so fully, that there need no better nor no clearer demonstrations of it. The Ark of God taken by the Philistines, the Temple destroyed by the Chaldeans, and profaned by the Syrians, the Apoclyst of Ten Tribes at once from the Law of their God, and the extermination of the other two in a short time after, abundantly declare the frail condition and estate of the Jewish Church. And find we not the same for the Christian also, in the removing of the Candlestick from the Asian Churches; and making them, together with those of Greece and Egypt, and all the flourishing Churches in the East and South, to languish and decay remedilessly under the merciless encroachments of the Turks and Saracens? He must be more than blind that sees not, more savage than those merciless men, that grieves not at their sad condition: but a dead Member, at the most, of Christ's Mystical Body, who feels not in himself the suffering of those wretched Christians.

If now we look into the causes of that desolation which hath hapned in the Civil State of those mighty Empires; to what can we impute it, but their crying sins? the pride of the Babylonians, the Effeminacy of the Persians, the Luxury of the Greeks; and such an aggregation of Vices amongst the Romans (or Western Christians) before the breaking in of the barbarous Nations, that they were grown a scandal unto Christianity. In nobis patitur Christus opprobrium, in nobis patitur lex Christiana maledictum, as the devout Savian then complained. Thus also in reference to the Church, did not the Idolaters of the Ten Tribes hasten in the Affrians? The shedding of the Blood of so many Prophets by the other two, as much accelerate the coming in of the Chaldeans first, and the Romans afterwards? Do we not find the Arianism of the Eastern Churches to usher in the inundation of the Saracens; the Donatism of the South, to have set open a wide Door to let in the Vandals? Did not the Saxons follow on the heels of Pelagianism, as soon almost as entertained amongst the Britains? If so, as most undoubtedly it was in the dayes of old, why should we think but that the Superstitions and Corruptions of the Church of Rome, the Sacrilege and Faction of the Churches of the Reformation shall at the last receive the like Retribution? Or that the Divine Justice is so fast a sleep, that our sins must cry as loud as the Priests of Baal did under their god, before it be awakened by us? Assuredly, we are no less sinners than any of those on whom the Tower of the Divine vengeance hath so heavily fallen; whose blood the Pilates of all Ages have mingled with their solemn and Religious Sacrifices; and therefore have no cause to hope, but that unless we do repent, we shall likewise perish.

The serious consideration of all these particulars, hath made those alterations both in Church and State, which have hapned here amongst our selves, the less strange unto me. For is there any of these things, whereof it may be said, Ecce hoc est novum, Behold this is new? Ecc. i. 10. Have they not been already in the times before us? Do we not find it positively affirmed by the wisest man that ever was, That which hath been, is now; and that which is to be, hath already been; Nihil enim novum est sub sole, for there is no new thing under the Sun, Ecc. i. 15 and i. 11. And though I cannot tell what effect the reading of this following Book may produce in others, yet I can warrantably say thus much of myself. That the observation of the fall of so many great and puissant Empires, the extirpation of so many mighty and Renowned Families, the desolation of so many flourishing Christian Churches, as the compassing of this Book did present me with, (though formerly no Strangers to me in the course of my Studies) did more conduce to the full humbling of my Soul under the mighty hand of God, than either the sense of my own Misfortunes, or any other moral consideration which had come before me. And I could wish, the Reader may receive so much benefit by it, (besides the profit and delight which Books of this nature carry with them) that the Mighty man may learn hereby, not to glory in his greatness, Strength, nor the Wise to glory in his Wisdom, or in the cunning carrying on of his great Designs. Let the great Leaders of these times in the Art of War, consider the sad ends of Joab, the General of David's Forces; and of Belialinus, the Commander of Justinian's Armies: whereof the one was slain ingloriously at the Horns of the Altar, after all his Services; the other forced to beg his bread at the Gates of the Temple. Let the great Masters sters of Wit, and State-craft, have before their eyes the unsuccessful ends of Achitophel, the Oracle of the times he lived in; and of Cesar Borgia, proposed by Machiavel, for the Pattern of a Politick Prince: of which, the one laid violent hands upon himself, because his Counsel was not followed; the other, after the defeatment of his Projects, and a long Imprisonment to boot, forced to fly his Country, and slain obscurely in an Ambush. Let all men lay unto their hearts the Ebbs and Floods, those alterations and vicissitudes, to which all Humane Power is subject; the slippery Foundations of that Might and Greatness which is not laid upon the Principles of Justice, and regulated by the Maxims of Christian Piety; and, that even those which have Dominion over others, have a God too, above themselves, to whom they are to render an accompt of all their Actions. Nor such a God as that of Lewis the Eleventh of France; of whom it is reported, that he wore a Leaden Medal in his Bonnet, in the form of a Crucifix; which, when he had caused any man to be killed, whom he feared or hated, he would take into his hands and kiss it, desiring it to pardon him that one Murder more, and it should be the last which he would commit. Such mockeries as these may be well put on a Leadens-god; but the God of Heaven and Earth, will not be so mocked: who being totus oculus, and totum lumen, as the Father calleth him, can easily discern our intents and purposes, notwithstanding those disguises which are put upon them; and see the nakedness of sin in its ugliest shape, though appraised with the Fig-leaves of the best pretences, which the self-deceiving wit of man can patch up together. God is the same God now, as in former times, Primus ad extremum semitis fuit, Yesterday, and to day, and the same for ever; and will not put up those affronts which the Impieties of men do afflict him with: though in regard of his great patience, and long-suffering, they may flatter their poor Souls, and say, Iush, God doth not see it.

Lastly, I am to tell the Reader, that I have now no other Patron than himself, to whom to dedicate this Work, and from whom to receive protection and encouragement in it. The time was when I might have said with Seneca, Unus mihi erat pro Populo, that one man was to me instead of all men: the Powers of all the People, being virtually united in him. But now, as the case stands, I must be fain to invert those words, Populus mihi est pro uno; the body of the Nation is to me, in this respect as the Head before. Unto them therefore I present it, and that not improperly: A General survey of all the World, the Government, Affairs, and Successes of it, requiring a more general Patron than particular Tractates. But because all the People in the Body Collective have not Abilities to read, and much less to judge; and that many of those who can do both, may neither have the list nor leisure to peruse these Papers: I look on the Nobility, Clergy, Gentry, as their Representatives in this kind; to whose favourable and ingenuous acceptance I submit the same. Which if I can attain unto, it is all I aim at. And it will be no small comfort to me in the midst of so many sorrows as are round about me, that I have been useful to the publick, or added any thing by my Studies unto the Honour and Content of the English Nation: whose peace and happiness is heartily commended to Almighty God, by

A GENERAL INTRODUCTION To the following WORK.

Containing the Creation of the World by Almighty God, and the Plantation of the fame by the Sons of Men; the necessary use of History and Geography, as well for understanding the Affairs of the Ages past, as for converse and correspondence with the Nations present; together with a brief extract of some General Præcognita which necessarily are required unto the Knowledge of each.

WITH great both Piety and Prudence did the Apostles in their Summary of the Christian Faith, join our Belief in God the Father Almighty, with that clause or Article of making or Creating the Heaven and Earth. For as the name of Father doth imply a making (Is not he thy Father which hath made thee? faith the Prophet Mica. 3.2.6.) so Who but an Almighty Father could by his meer Word, without any pre-existent Matter, create that goodly Edifice of Heaven and Earth, which we behold with so much wonder and applause? A work so full of wonder to the ancient Gentiles, that some of them made the World a God. Vu illum (i. e. Deum) mundum vocare? non falleris; as it is in Seneca: others more rationally conceiving God to be the Soul of the World, as giving animation or beginning to it. And though they erred, as well in making the World a God, as God to be the Soul of the World, yet might they very well have said as one since hath done, That the World is nothing else but God unfolded and manifested in the Creature. Nil aliud mundus universus, quam Deus explicatur, as Cyprian a late Cardinal hath it. For certainly the special motives which did induce God unto this great work, were a desire and purpose to manifest his Power, to exercise his Providence, and declare his Goodness. Not that God needed to have made the World in regard of Himself; for the World we know was made in the beginning of Time, but God is Infinite and Eternal before all Times: but that it seemed good to Him to Create it last, as a thing most conducive to his praise and glory; the Heavens declaring the glory of God, and the Earth showing his handy-work, faith the Royal Psalmist. Some measuring the God of Heaven by their own affections, and finding nothing so agreeable to their own dispositions as to be in company, conceive that God being at last weary of his own Solitude, did create the World, that he might have the company of the Angels in Heaven, and make a start into the Earth (when he saw occasion) to recreate himself with the Sons of Men. Que beata esse solitudo que n? What happiness (said Hor- tenfius) can there be in Solitude? To which Lactantius Lib. 1. Cap. 7. not being furnished with a better doth return this Answer: That God cannot be said to be alone habes enim Ministros quos vocamus Nuncios, as having the society of the Angels. But then Lactantius must suppose that the Angels were co-eternal with God himself, which were to make all Gods, and so God at all; or else his Answer is no Answer, as to that Objection. How much more opolitely might he have thus replied unto Horatius. That the Supream contentment possible to Almighty God is by reflecting on Himself, and in Himself contemplating in his own infinite glories: which being co-eternal with Himself, even from all Eternity, he needed no more company before the World was made, than he hath done since. Lactantius being himself a man of a very great reading (though indeed a better Humanist than Divine) could not but know these sweet delights which a man habited in Learning takes in Contemplation, and the good society he hath of his own dear thoughts, when he is most retired from the sight of men. And if the wife Gentle could esteem so lolly; Nunquam minus solus quam cum salus esset, that he was never less alone than when he was by himself, what need can any rational man suppose in Almighty God, of having more company than Himself, to delight himself in? If this suffice not for an Answer to that needless Question, What God did before he made the World, let him take that of Augustine on the like occasion: who being troubled with the like curious and impertinent Caption, is said to have returned this Answer: Fabricasse inferos cunctos, which he made Hell for all such troublesome and idle Questioners. Which resolution of that Father is by Salmasius, a late Dutch Poet, moulded into this handsome Epigram.

Dum Christum Libyæ Patre Augustinus in iris
Afferit, & pergit natus in ede sum;
Dum miranda refert populo primordia mundi
Esse docuit verbo cuncta creata Dei;
Impius assurgit, verbisq; procacibus, Affer,
Ergo Opusce verum quid faciebat? ait;
Ait, Quibus intentus fallaces tempora curis,
Mundus adhuc nondum cum fabricatus erat?

Presul ad hæc Libycus, Fabricavit tartara, dixit, Eli quos fecerunt italia mente juvat.

Which may be Enghlish in these words :

When Reverend Auslin did in Africk Preach,
And in Gods House the ruder People teach,
As he the Worlds Creation prov'd and taught
That God made all things by his Word, of nought :
A fawcy Swain upstarting needs would know,
How God before that did his time bestow :
And what to spend his thoughts upon, he had,
When neither Heaven, nor Earth, nor Seas were made :
To which the Father partly thus ; He then Made Hell for thee, and such audacious men.

But not to spend more time in answering so vain a caption, suffice it us to know, that it pleased God at last when it seemed best unto his infinite and eternal wisdom, to create the World, and all things visible and invisible in the same contained. A time it had, in which it first began to be, which before was not. This Moses calls Principium a beginning simply. In the beginning, God created the heaven and the Earth, in the first words of the Book of Genesis : which is all one as if he had said, the Heaven and Earth had a beginning ; or that this unformed Mafs or Chaos which he entituled there by the name of Heaven and Earth, was the beginning or first draught of those feveral things which after were created in their proper times ; that is to say, the first in order of time, because made before them, not in order of causality, as the causes of them. Calum & terra, in principio. (i. e.) ante omnia fæsta sunt, saith Simon Pottius in his Scholies on St. John's Gospel. So that whether we do expound those words, that the Heaven and Earth had a beginning ; or that Moses by these words did mean, that out of that Matter which he calls Heaven and Earth, as out of the beginning, or first matter, all things were created, it comes all to one ; because it is thereby acknowledged that the first Matter was created by Almighty God, and therefore of necessity to have a beginning. And to this truth we have not only the Authority and consent of Scripture, but of the greatest part of the old Philosophers ; guided thereto by this impossibility in nature, that any visible work, whether it be natural or artificial, should either give it self a being, or have that being which it hath from no cause precedent. For from that Principle Tully argueth very rightly in his most excellent Book De natura Deorum, that as a man coming into a goodly house, in which he found nothing but Rats and Mice, could not conceive that either the House had built it self, or had no other maker but those Rats and Mice which were nested in its loft neither can it be imagined, that either this World should be eternal, or a self-existence ; or was composed by any natural Agent of what sort soever. And this is that which is more briefly and expressly said by the Apostle, viz. That every house is built by some man, but he that built all things is God. Heb. 3. 4. It is true, that Aristotle being a very great enquirer into the works of Nature, conceiv'd the World to be eternal ; and yet not always consistent unto that opinion. But then it is as true withall that there was something else that inclin'd him to it, than a mere admiration of the works of Nature. Democritus and some others had been of opinion, that the World was made ; the accidental union or conjunction of those several parcels, of which the Universe consisted ;
and that man himself was but voluntaria elementorum concretio, a voluntary mixture of all the Elements, as Minnu-tius had observed out of their Writings. To which absurd opinion (as it was no better) though it found a general imbracement amongst many of the old Philosophers, when Aristotle knew not how to submit his most exquisite judgment ; and yet was destitute of such further light, as might more fully have instructed him in its true Original : he rather chose to grant, the World to be eternal, than to be made of such ridiculous, and unsound, though eternal Atomis. Et maluit hanc pulchram mundi faciem ab eterno esse, quam aliquando ex æternis deformitate emersisse.

Valerius in his Book de Sacra Philosophia pleads the case in his behalf ; and I thank him for it : who am (I must confess) a great Friend of Aristotle's, whom some account for the Præceptor of our Saviour Christi in rebus na-turalibus, as John the Baptist was in divinis.

Nor doth the Scripture and the light of Reason tell us only this, that the whole World had a beginning ; but, by the help of Scripture, and the works of some Learned men, we are able to point out the time when it did begin ; or to compute how many years it is precisely from the first beginning, without any notable difference in the calculation. For though it be most truly said, Cito in inter Horologios quam Chronologios ; that Clepsy may fitter be agreed than Chronologers, yet most Chronologers in this point come so near one another, that the difference is scarce observable. From the beginning of the World to the Birth of Christi, in the account of Berosus, 'are 3928 years, 3945 in the computation of the Genevians, 3960 in the esteem of Luther, and 3963 in the calculation of Melanchthon : between whom and Berosus (being the least and the greatest) there is but 35 years difference, which in so long a course of time can be no great matter. Now if unto the Calculation made by Berosus, which I conceive to be the truest, we add 1648 since the Birth of Christi, the total of the time since the Worlds Creation, will be 5576 years, neither more nor less. A thing which I the rather have insisted on, because that during this Epoche or Era of the Worlds Creation, we shall compute the times of such Kings and Princes, as Reigned and flourished in the World before the Incarnation of our Lord and Saviour.

It being then resolved as a thing undoubted, that God made the World, and that He made it in such time as Himself pleased ; let us next look upon the matter and the method which it pleased the Divine Majesty to make use of, in this wondrous work.

First, for the matter, out of which all things were created, I take it, as before was said, to be that which Moses in the first words of Genesis calls the Heaven and the Earth, because they were so in potentia ; but after telleth us more explicitly, that that which he calleth Earth, was inanis & vacua, without form and void ; and that which he calleth Heaven was but an overcast of darkness, or tenebre super faciem Abyssi, as the vulgar reads it. Of which Chaos or confused Mafs we thus read in Orvid, who questionless had herein consulted with the works of Moses, before he wrote his time communicated to the Learned Gentiles :

*Ante mare & terras & quod tegit omnia Calum,
Quis erat tota nature unius in Orbe,
Quem dicere Chaos, nullis indiligens, males,
Nec quicquam nisi pondus iners, congestaq; mole,
Non bene junctarum discordia finia rerum, &c.*
Which I shall Enghlish from G. S. with some little change.
Before the Earth, the Sea, and Heaven were framed,
One face had Nature which they Chaos named ;
An indigested lump, a barren land,
Where jarring seeds of things ill-joyn'd abode.
No Sun as yet with light the World adorns,
Nor new Moon had repair'd her waning Horns :
Nor hung the self-polit'd Earth in thin Air plac'd,
Nor had the Ocean the vast Shores embrac'd.

Earth

Earth, Sea, and Air, all mixt ; the Earth untillable,
The Air was dark, the Sea unnavigable.
No certain form to any one affign'd ;
This, that refists ; for in one body joyn'd
The cold and heat, the dry and humid fight,
The soft and hard, the heavy with the light.

Out of this Chaos or first matter, did God raise the World according to those several parts and lineaments which we see in it, not as out of any pre-existent matter which was made before, and had not the form of the Author or first Maker of it ; but as the first preparatory matter which himself made before, including in the same potentially both the form and matter of the whole Creation, except the Soul of man only, which God breathed into him. And therefore it is truly said, that God made all things out of nothing ; not out of nothing as the matter out of which it was made, for then that nothing must be something ; but as the terminus a quo, in giving them a real and corporal being which before they had not, and did then first begin to have by the mere force and efficacy of his powerful Word. And though it be Maxim in the Schools of Philosophy, Ex nihilo nil fit, that nothing can be made of nothing ; that every thing which hath a being doth require some matter which must be pre-existent to it, yet this must either be condemned for erroneous Doctrine in the Chair of Divinity, or else be limited and restrained to Natural Agents which cannot go beyond the Sphere of their own activity, Invisible and supernatural Agents are not tyed to Rules, nor in the production of the works of Nature ; though Nature, constituted and established in a certain course, work every thing by line and measure as a certain Rule. And so it was that the World, but the Worlds Creation ; he did not only make the World, but he made it out of nothing, by his word alone : Dixit & facta sunt. He spake the word and they were made, saith the royal Psalmist, Psal. 33. 9. There went no greater pains nor matter to the whole Creation, but a Dixit Deus : And this not only said by Moses, but by David too, Verbo Domini firmati sunt cæli, & spiritus oris eius omnis virtus eorum, v. 6. i. e. By the Word of the Lord were the Heavens made, and all the Hosts thereof by the breath of his mouth. In which it is to be observed, that through the Creation of the World be generally ascribed to God the Father, yet both the Son and the Holy Ghost had their parts therein ; Verbo Domini, by the word of the Lord were the Heavens made, saith the Prophet David. In the beginning was the Word ; all things were made by him, and without him was nothing made, saith S. John the Apostle. The Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters, saith Moses in the Book of the Law : Et spiritus oris eius by the breath (or Spirit) of his mouth were all the Hosts of Heaven created, saith David in the Book of Psalms. Made by his Word, and yet not made together in one instant of time. In the first day he laid the foundation and no more ; in the five next, he raised the building ; and this he did, to teach us men deliberation, in our words and actions ; and to set forth withal unto us, both his Power and Wisdom. His Power he manifested in the Method of the whole Creation, in that he did produce what effects he pleased, without the help of natural causes ; as giving Light unto the World before he had created either Sun or Moon ; making the Earth fruitful, and to bring forth Plants, without the influence or motion of the Heavenly Bodies. And for his Wisdom he expressed it in as high a degree, in that he did not create the very Beasts of the field before he had provided them of fodder and sufficient herbage ; nor made man after his own Image, before he had finished all the rest of his works, fitted his House, and furnished it with all things necessary both for life and pleasures.

But all things being fitted and prepared for him, at last comes Man into the World ; and he doth make his entrance with a greater pomp than any of the rest of the Creatures which were before him. They came in with no other Ceremony, than a Dixit Deus ; but in the Workmanship of Man, there was a Consultation held by the blest Trinity. It is there, Faciamus Hominem. Let us make man ; each Person contributing forthwith (as it were) to his composition. For God the Father as the chief Workman, or principal Agent, gave him form and
Image. The Son, who is the living and eternal Word, gave him voice of speech, that he might be able to fit forth Gods praises. The Holy Ghost, the Lord and giver of Life, (as the Nicene Fathers truly call him) breathing into him the breath of life, whereby he became a living spirit. In this one Creation, was assaid whatever thing was excellent in the whole Creation ; the quantity or substance of Inanimate Creatures, the life of Plants, the sense of Beasts, and the understanding of Angels. In this one Creation did God shew the excellency of his power and wisdom, in printing on him his own Image, and giving him dominion over all the works of his hands, which Image of God they look for it in a very wrong place who hope to find it in mans Body, though of a gallant conposition, and erected structure. The Heathen Orator was able in this point to inform some erroneous Christians. Ad Divinum imaginem proprius accedit humani viri quæ figura, Man doth approach more near to the Image of God, in the endowments of his Mind, than in the figure of his Body, as divinely Cicero. And as for that dominion which God gave him over the works of his hands, the Patent is at large laid down in the first of Genesis. For God no sooner said, Faciamus Hominem. Let us make man after our own Image, but presently he adds this Charter of Supreme Authority, And let him have dominion over the Fish of the Sea, and over the Fowls of the Air, and over the Cattel, and over all the Earth. A more particular explication of those several points, wherein that Image and this Power do consist especially, I shall not take upon me or endeavour now ; as being not of this place and purpose : Which only is to shew, that as man in the very act of his Creation participated more of the Divine Images, than all other Creatures : so he by Gods special grant encoined with a larger power, than any of the rest could pretend unto. Man, though made lower than the Angels, is in this above them ; that all the Creatures of the World were made to be his servants, and to attend upon his pleasure. And yet this great and mighty Prince, this general Lord of all the World, and the Creatures in it (setting aside the dignity of his first Creation) doth come into the world in a worse condition, than any of the Creatures which were made to serve him, naked, and impotent, and speechless, without use of reason ; neither of power to help himself, or ask help of others. Whereas Lactantius, in my mind, gives a very good reason, who telleth us, that God sends man into the world, nudum & inermem, naked and weak, and un-defenced against all violences and dangers ; whereas all Creatures else, munita indumentis naturalibus & armata sunt, are naturally both armed and clothed, and able to relieve themselves. And this he doth unto this end, that man being naturally destitute of faculties of judgment, wit and understanding, in furnishing himself with that which he wants by nature. For hereto the first that which he wants by nature. For hereto the first

referred, as is most plain and evident from the Book of God, in which we see, that presently upon the procreation of Mankind, Abel betook himself to keeping Sheep, and Cain to Husbandry: Jubal to handle the Harp, Organ, and such Musical Instruments; and Tubal Cain to work upon Brass and Iron, two Metals very necessary to all sort of Trades. The like may be supposed in all other Mysteries and Arts of Living, though there be no express mention of them in those early days: except it be the Art of Building, or the Carpenters Trade, which no question is as old as any, as by the building of Cain's City, and Noah's Ark is most clearly evidenced. God made the World, and fitted it with all things necessary for the life of man, leaving man to provide himself of such additions as rather serve for comforts and conveniences in the way of his living, than the necessities of his life.

Hence then we have the works of God, and the works of men to be confidered, in pursuit of our present Argument. The works of God in shadowing the Earth with Trees and Forests, interlacing it with Chrysal streams, and capacious Rivers; enriching it with fruitful and delicious Vales, adorning it with lofty Mountains, and stocking both the Hills and Vales with all sorts of Cattle. But nothing more sets forth the Power and Wisdom of Almighty God, as it relates to these particulars, than that most admirable intermixture of Want with Plenty, whereby he hath united all the parts of the World in a continual Traffick and Commerce with one another: some Countries being destitute of those Commodities with which others abound; and being plentiful in those which the others want. Infomuch that as in the body of Man, that Microcosm, or little World, the Head cannot say, that it hath no need of the Foot, nor the Foot of the Hand, nor other members of the rest: so neither in the Body of the World, can Europe say to Asia, or Spain to England, I have no need of your Commodities, or am not wanting in those things whereof thou boastest an abundance. Something there is in every Country which may be spared to supply the defect of others; and are accordingly vented in the way of Merchandise: Of which, thus Dr. Barthe in his Colonies,

Hence come our Sugars from Canary Isles;
From Candie Currants, Muscadels, and Oyls.
From the Molucces Spices, Balsamum
From Egypt: Odours from Arabia come.
From India Gums, rich Drugs, and Ivory;
From Syria Mummys black, red Ebony
From burning Chus: from Peru, Pearls and Gold;
From Russia Furrs to keep the rich from cold.
From Florence Silks; from Spain Fruits, Saffron, Sack;
From Denmark Amber, Cordage, Firrs, and Flax.
From France and Flanders, Linnen Wood, and Wine;
From Holland Horses; Horse from the banks of Rhine,
From England Wool. All lands, as God distributeth,
To the Worlds treasure pay their sundry tributes.

This, as Dr. Barthe speaks of the present times, so questionless the same, or the like Commerce held good in the first Ages of the Worlds Creation: God furnishing all Countries from the first beginning with some Staple Commodities, for the benefit of themselves and others; for the maintaining of that intercourse between Nation and Nation, which makes them link the closer in the bonds of Amity. And to this end also serve those several Manufactures, wherewith some Countries do abound in respect of others; but looked on, in the present Book, as the works of men. And of this kind also are the several Politics and forms of Government. For though all Magistracy in it self be from God originally, and that the Monarchical form comes nearest to the Government used by God himself: yet being that some Politicks are merely but humane inventions, all Government or Magistracy is called an Ordinance of man in holy Scripture, 1 Pet. 2. 13. But those particular works of men, which are the most considerable part of our present subject, are Castles, Towns, and Cities of most eminent note, which thrive and prosper in the World, according as they do partake of those Conveniences which conduce most to their Magnificence and Greatness. Of these Botru gives us many (relation being had to the time he lived in) but of those many we shall touch upon the principal only; passing by those of lesser note, as pleasantness of Site, fruitfulness of Soil, salubrity of Air, and such like obvious Observations. First then there is required to the Magnificence and Splendor of Cities a Navigable River, or some such easy passage by Sea, which will bring thither a continual concourse and trade of Merchants: as at Venice, London, Amsterdam. Secondly some Staple Manufactures or Commodities which will draw the like resort of Merchants, though the convenience of Sea or Rivers invite them not; as in Nuremberg in Germany, a dry Town, but mightily traded. Thirdly, the Palace of the Prince; for, ubi Imperator, ibi Roma, where the Court is, there will be a continual confluence of Nobles, Gentry, Merchants, and all sorts of Trades: And by this means Madrid, not long since a poor beggarly Village, is grown the most populous City in all Spain. Fourthly, the Residence of the Nobility, beautifieth a City with stately and magnificent Buildings; which makes the Cities of Italy so much excel ours in England, their Nobles dwelling in the Cities, and ours for the most part in their Country-houses. Fifthly, the Seats or Tribunals of Justice, on which both Advocates and Clients are to give attendance; as in the Parliamentary Cities in France, and Spires in Germany. Sixthly, Universities and Schools of Learning, to which the Youth from all parts are to make resort; which hath been long the chief cause of the flourishing of Oxford, Cambridge, Bononia in Italy, and other Cities of good note beyond the Seas. Seventhly, Immunity from Tolls and Taxes; most men being most desirous to inhabit there, where their Income will be greatest, their Privileges largest, and their Disbursements least: So Naples, Florence, Venice, having been decimated by Plagues, were again suddenly re-peopled, by granting large Immunities to all comers-in. And last of all, the opinion of Sanctity, either for the Reliques of Saints, or some noted Shrines, or the residence of some famous man, or the Seat of Religion, is not the least Advantage, which draws people to it, to the great enriching of some Cities. And of this Rome it self can give us two most pregnant evidences: The one in reference to the Popes, and these latter times; that famous Town not otherwise subsisting now, then by the constant residence of the Popes and Cardinals; whose absence while the Papal See was kept at Avignon, had made it over-grown with Briars and Brambles, and buried it almost in its own sad ruins. The other, in the person of Titus Livius the Historian; to see which man there came so many from the Coasts of France and Spain, that St. Hierome elegantly saith, Quos ad sui contemplationem Roma non traxerant, unius hominis fama perduxit; qui jam urbem tantam ingressi, aliud extra Urbem quaerunt.

Such are the causes of the Greatness and Magnificence of Cities, when they are once built; none of all which might possibly be looked at by the first builders of Cities,

I mean by Cain before the Flood, and by Mimrod after; who aimed more at the love of Empire, and self-preservation, than at the general good of Mankind, or the particular wealth of those amongst whom they lived. Of Cain it is affirmed expressly in the Book of God, That being possessed with this fear, that every one that found him would lay hands upon him and slay him, in revenge of the blood of Abel, He builded a City and called it by the name of his Son Enoch, Gen. 4. 17. Builded a City? For what reason? To fortifie and secure himself against all revenge as the Text doth intimate; or thereby to oppress his Neighbours as Josephus witnesseth. Neither was this the only City of the first Ages, though none but this is mentioned in the Book of God. That which the Scripture faith of Jubal, that he was the Father of such as dwell in Tents, and of such as have Cattle; that is to say, he was the first of those that lived upon Pasturage, and followed their Cattle up and down with their moveable Tents, not having any certain home or habitations, as the wild Arabes now, and the ancient Nomades is proof sufficient, that the residue of all Mankind lived a more civil kind of life in their Towns and Villages. And if Pomponius Mela be of any credit (as in these things, I think he is) he will inform us, that the City of Joppa was built before the Flood; that the King thereof was named Cepha; and that his name, and the name of his Brother Phineas, together with the Grounds and Principles of their Religion, were found graven upon certain Altars of stone. But whether this be so, or not, certain it is, that as well Canaan in the West, wherupon Joppa stood, as the Land of Nad on the East side of Paradise, where Cain built his City, were peopled long before the Flood; and so were most of the other parts of the World besides: And if we well peopled in all, or most parts thereof, no doubt but they had Villages and Towns, yea and Cities too, as well for necessary habitations for strength and safety. Now that the World was thoroughly peopled before the Flood, seems clear to me by that great and universal Deluge, which God was pleased to bring upon the Face of all the Earth: For what need all the Earth be buried in that Sea of waters, if all the Earth had not been peopled, and all the people of it guilty of oppression in the light of God? Besides, it is expressly said in the holy Scripture, that in the time of Abraham, who lived about 350 years after the Flood in the largest account, and not 300 in the shorter; there were Kings of Egypt, and of the Philistines, Kings of the Canaanites, of Shinar, Elufar, Elan, and of the Nations who questionless had their Lands well peopled: that both Chalde, and Mesopotamia in the time of Abraham had their several Cities; as Ur in the one, and Haran, or Charran, in the other; and that Damafcar the chief City of Syria was then founded also: Not to say any thing of the building of Babel, Erech, Acad, and Chalneh in the Land of Shinar (or Babylonia) nor of the building of Ninive, Resus, Teboboth, and Chalab in the Land of Assyria, mention whereof is made in the 10. of Genesis. And it is found in good and credible Authors, that Ninus the third Assyrian Monarch (who lived before the birth of Abraham) having subdued the Kings of Media and Armenia, invaded Babylonia with an Army of 1700000 Foot, and 200000 Horse, and 10000 armed Chariots and was encountered by Zamosar the King thereof with an Army of four hundred thousand. The credibility whereof, if it were disputed, might be affirmed by the like numerous Army brought by Xerxes against the Greeks, though in times long after following. And if we will give credit unto Diodorus Siculus, who voucheth Ctesius to be his Author, Semiramis, the Wife of Ninus, invaded India with an Army of three Millions of men and upwards; and yet was over-matched, and slain by an Indian King. If then within the space of four hundred years, we find the Eastern parts to be so well planted, in many Kings possessed of their regal Thrones, and many of them able to impress such infinite Armies; why may we not conclude, that in the course of 1656 years (for so long it was from the Creation to the Flood) the whole World was inhabited and planted in all parts thereof; especially considering the long lives of men, amounting to eight hundred, or nine hundred years; and consequently the long time they had to apply themselves to the act of Generation. And though I have no certain ground for it in the Book of God, yet I am apt enough to be of Morcan's opinion; who placing the 16 Dynasties of the Kings of Egypt (where Enschius begins to calculate the Egyptian times; at the first planting of that Country by the Sons of Noah; reckoneth the former fifteen to have been before the Flood, and to reach very near the times of the first Creation. That, Misraim the Son of Noah was possessed of Egypt within two hundred years after the Flood, is a truth undoubted. Nor see I any cause to doubt, but that in the like space of time from the first Creation, it might be planted also by the Sons of Adam: considering, as we ought to do, that in the Infancy of the World, when the bodies of men were most perfect and of greatest vigour, they observed no degree of Kindred or Consanguinity; nor tied themselves to strictly to one woman, as they should have done. And for the names of all the Kings of those several Dynasties, either they might be left engraven upon Pillars, such as that of Seth; or upon Altars of stone, as in those of Joppa; or Misraim might have them by Tradition from the hands of Noah; and so deliver them by tale unto his posterity: the Egyptians being generally very good Historians, and standing very much on their own Antiquity. And if this may be said of Egypt (as for my part I see no reason but it may) then may the like be said of all Countries else, that they had their several Kings and Rulers, and set-Forms of Government: the Fathers of Families in those times, having the Command and Sovereignty over all that descended of them. Nor make I any question of it, but they had several Languages and forms of Speech, at least to the Dialect and pronunciation; although the Radicals of the Language might remain the same. But being there are no Remainers of this first Plantation, unless we will give credit to some Jewish Fablers, who tell us of some Giants who saved themselves upon Mount Sin; or that of Nicholas Damascenus, who speaks of some that saved themselves on an high Hill called Baris, in some part of Armenia; I shall the less insist upon it. Nor had I stood so long upon these first Ages; which Mela passeth over with so short a Narrative; but that is affirmed by Pomponius, a right learned Jewish, that neither Egypt nor Assyria, nor the rest of the World was planted and inhabited before the Flood; and that upon no stronger reason, for ought I can find, but that it is affirmed in the last words of the tenth of Genesis, That by these (that is to say, by the posterity of the Sons of Noah) were the Nations divided in the Earth after the Flood. Out of which words he thus concludeth, Quo significatur, tam diversum non fuisse ante Diluvium: By which it doth appear (saith he) that in the times before the Flood was no such division.

'Tis true, that this division of the World by the Sons of Noah, hath the best evidence in Scripture, because there is express Text for it, which is not for the first Plantations. But looking on the great carcass of mankind before the Flood, that saying of Berosus will prove tantamount to a Text of Scripture, Ad comparandas

Novus fides necessitatem compellit, that they were driven by necessity to seek new dwellings, the necessity of providing victuals for themselves and their Families, being as strong a motive unto such diffusions, as the Confusion of Tongues was afterwards. The difference is, that that which such necessity would have done in long tract of time, the confusion of Tongues did in an instant: not only making those proud Builders to give over the finishing of the Tower which they had begun; but to unite themselves with such, whose language came most near to that which themselves were Masters of. It was high time, no question, to desist from this proud Attempt, when the Labourer understood not what the Workman called for, but brought him things quite contrary to his expectation. But because some Plantations had no reference to the Confusion of Tongues, but were made before it, or on the finding out of such Colonies as were nearest to the place where the Ark did rest, I think it not amiss to resolve that question touching the settling of the Ark, on which the Plantations of the East have so great dependence. All that the Scripture telleth us of it, is, that the Ark rested on the Mountains of Ararat; but where those Mountains are, that it telleth us not. I know Josphus and some other of more eminent note, (but such as ground themselves upon his Authority) affirm, those Mountains of Ararat to be the hills of Armenia. Which they do chiefly on these Reasons: First, because Armenia is called Ararat in the Book of Qd. as it is confessedly; and secondly, because of an old Tradition, countenanced by Berosus, and some others of the ancient Writers cited by Josphus, affirming, that on the Gordian Mountains in Armenia major, some of the reliques of the Ark were remaining in their times and used as a preservative against Incantments. Which notwithstanding, I incline rather to the opinion of Georgius Bescanus (who amongst many strange whimsies broached some notable truths) by whom the Ark is said to rest on the top of Mount Caucasis in the Confiners of Tartary, Persia, and India. His Arguments are many, but I look on two as of greatest consequence: the first whereof is grounded upon evident reason; the second on plain Text of Scripture. That which is grounded upon reason, is, the exceeding populosity of those Eastern Countries, into which none of those by whom the World was planted after the Confusion of Languages, are yet reported to have travelled with their several Colonies, by any who have took most pains in this discovery. Those infinite numbers which Strabo relates, one (and but one of many) of the Kings of the Indians brought into the field against Semiramis; and the vast army of Zoroaster the King of Bactria, conducted out of that one Province against Ninus; are proof enough, that those Countries were of an elder Plantation, than to be a second or third Casting of some other Swarm settled in Persia, or Assyria after the Confusion. For Ninus, who was the Husband of Semiramis, was but the Grandchild of Nimrod; and I must needs look upon it, as a thing impossible, that those vast Armies which Semiramis was able to raise out of all her Dominions, should be encountered by one King with an equal force, and that of his own Subjects only; if that one King, and those his Subjects had been some late Colony of those new Plantations, and not possessed of a Country peopled and inhabited before that Confusion. Nor was it but upon some good ground, that the Sybilant (who inhabited on the North of Mount Caucasis) were generally esteemed the most ancient Nation in the World; and carried it away from the Aegyptians, Phrygians, and all other Competitors with this publick Verdicit, Sybarum gens semper antiquissima: which ground could be no other, but the neighbourhood of the Ark unto them (though perhaps that ground long since forgotten, was not flood upon) and the dwelling of Noah and his Children near the place of the Ark, till numbers, and necessity compelled them to enlarge their Border. And in the enlarging of their Borders, I shall make no question, but that such parts as lay nearest, were peopled and possessed before those which lay furthest off; according to the method of Plantations in all Ages since. This, though it be to me a convincing Argument, yet it falls short of that which comes from the Text it self, both in authority and weight; where it is said of the heads of those several Families which afterwards joined together in the Building of Babel that, As they went from the East, they found a Plain in the Land of Shinar, and there they abode. Gen. 11. 2. If then they came from the East to the Land of Shinar, as the Text faith plainly that they did; it might well be, that they came from those parts of Asia, on the South of Caucasis, which lie East of Shinar, though somewhat bending to the North; impossible they should come from the Gordian Mountains in the greater Armenia (supposed to be the Hills which the Ark did rest on) which lie not only full North of Shinar, but many degrees unto the West. For Babylonia, or Shinar, is situate in the Latitude of 35, and the Longitude of 79 and 80. The Latitude of the Gordian Mountains, in 41, and their Longitude in 75. By which account those Mountains are 6 Degrees more Northwards, and 5 Degrees more Westwards than the Land of Shinar; by no means to be reckoned on the East of that Valley, except we make Mesir (whose hand God guided in his Books) to speak God knows what, or, in plain terms, to speak plain nonsense. And though the Scripture be so clear, that it needs no commentary, yet the perplexities I find amongst those of the other opinion, in fitting out of the authority of so plain a Text, do add in my conceit some moment and weight unto it. For some will have the Mountains of Ararat to be indeed on the North of the Land of Shinar, but with some bending towards the East; which were true, as nothing is more truly false, Mesir had never told us that they came from the East; but from some Countries of the North, which lay towards the East. Others will have a double progress of the heads of those several Families: First, from the Mountains of Ararat, or the Plains of Armenia, to the Fields of Assyria, and Susiana; And secondly, from thence to the Land of Shinar. But of this first journey, there is no quidam, not so much as any syllable in all the Scripture; besides the needlessness of making them go so far abroad, and to cross over the great Rivers Euphrates and Tigris; whereas they had a shorter, and an easier passage. Capellus, singular by himself quarrelless with the Translation (received without dispute by all other Critics) and will not have not Hebreu Kadem, to be rendered East, but to signify that Region, whatsoever it was, which was inhabited by Kadem the son of Ismael, of whom we find mention, Gen. 25. 15. But then, besides his quarrel with all other Translations, he supposed a former progress from the Mountains of Ararat to that Land of Kadem; and consequently falleth into a part of the Error before refuted. Bochartus finding (if not fancying) that the Assyrians called all those parts of their Empire beyond Tygris, the Eastern, and those on this side of it, the Western; would thence conclude, that these Heads may be said by Mesir to have come from the East, because they came from one of the Eastern Provinces of the Assyrian Empire.

Every

Every way faulty in this point: For, besides that the greatest part of Armenia lieth on the North of Tygris, and the least part of it on the West, and therefore not within the compass of the Eastern Provinces; and that Bochartus hath not proved (nor indeed can prove) that this division was in use in the time of Mesir; we may as rationally conclude, and with less absurdity, that the first Inhabitants of Britain, might have been said by Ammianus Marcellinus, or any Writer of that time, to come out of the West (though he well knew they came from Gaul, which is plainly East of it) because Gaul in his time was a Province of the West parts of the Empire.

Having thus fortified our opinion both with Scripture and Reason, the Arguments produced against us will be easily answered. For though Armenia be granted to be the Country of Ararat; yet the Mountains of Ararat may extend beyond the Country. That mighty Ridge of Mountains which beginning in Asia the hills run as far as India (by the Ancients commonly called the Mount Taurus) might very well be called by Mesir the Mountains of Ararat, because that was the first Country of the greater Asia by which they passed; and where they were of greater note than they had been formerly. Just as the Adriatick Sea took that name from Adria, then the chief Port of it, though it washed many Shores besides: Or as some Hills which we are called Malvern Hills, because they are highest near that Village, though they extend themselves into other Lordships. And as for the Authority of Tradition, and the Testimony of humane writers, which (as before was said) are brought in for an help, touching some Reliques of the Ark to be seen on the Gordian Mountains; I of the Ark to be seen on the Gordian Mountains; I for look upon it as an Argument of no weight at all. For Isidore (followed herein by all the rest) reports it as only on the ground of uncertain hearsay; which is a weak staff for so heavy a cause to rely upon. Secondly, to balance the Authority of Berosus (fit of any credit in this case) we have the testimony and authority of Porphyrus (as ancient almost as he, affirming positively, In Sybia Saga renatus esse mortale genus, that Mankind was repaired in that part of Sybia, which after was possessed by the Sacians; and they, we know, dwelt in those parts of Sybia which lay next to Bactria, a Province of the Persian Empire, and not far from the branches of Mount Caucasis. And Thirdly, unto one Tradition to oppose another; those of Mount Caucasis do aver, that a large Vineyard in Margiana, near the foot of that Mountain, was of Noah's Plantation: Of which we shall speak more when we come to Tartary.

It is now time to give directions to the Builders of Babel, and their wide diffusions; for whom it was high time to consider themselves with such as they could understand: the necessity of discourse and conference on that fatal Accident, making them lay aside their old acquaintances, and join themselves to others of their own new Language. I know that many Learned men according to the number of names laid down in the tenth of Gen. being 70, have made to many Languages to have been spoken upon that Confusion: And that of those, 26 being the Posterity of Sem, dispersed themselves about Asia the greater, 30 others of the loins of Cham, peopled Africa, Arabia, and Syria; and that the 14 which remain, being the issue of Japhet, withdrew themselves towards Europe, and the lesser Asia. But this as to the number of Languages, I take to be but a vain conceit; though many, more improbable, have passed for current. It being plain, that Canaan and his Sons, eleven in all, had but one Language amongst them, which was the Hebrew, or the Language of the Land of Canaan.

And as for Jedán and his Sons, being 13 in number, considering that he was the younger Brother of Phaleg, in whose time this Confusion happened; it is most probable, and avowed for a certain truth, that either none of them were born, or, if they were, yet they were all of them too young to have an hand in the design of the building of the Tower of Babel; and consequently could not be within the cause of confounded Languages. So, here is near a third part of the Seventy to be taken off, as possibly might all the Sons of Misaim be, if it were worth the while to insist upon it. This then I take but for a fancy. And as for that, of the dispersion into the said three parts of the (then) known World, I take it to be true enough in long tract of time; but false enough, if understood of any present separation of the Sons of Noah into parts so far remote and distant from one another. For what needed any such remote Plantations be, as long as they had room enough to live one near another, and to enjoy that civil intercourse, and mutual Society which the nature of Mankind doth most delight in? And therefore I conceive it to be far more probable, that they who met together for the building of Babel, joining themselves to men of the same Language with them, did first let down upon the places near the Valley of Shinar; and from thence propagated and dispersed themselves into further Countries, as either the necessity of providing of Victuals; or seeking better and more fruitful habitations for themselves and theirs; or the desire of being out of the reach of some potent Neighbours, whose Yoke they found too heavy for their necks to bear, did enforce them to it. And being so settled to their minds, the addition of a few more years brought the like necessity of sending Colonies further off, as they grew more or less populous in their Generations: It being in Plantations of Men, as in that of Bees, amongst whom one Swarm tends out another, that begets a Casting, till the whole ground or Garden grow too small to hold them. For thus (to seek no further for an instance of it) the Gauls first Planted Britain, the Britains Ireland, and Iris Scotland, and the Irish. Thus the Helvetians finding their old dwellings both too barren to sustain, and too narrow to contain their Multitudes, angustus se fines habere arbitrantur, as in Cæsar's Commentaries, intended to plant themselves in Gaul. And thus the Syrians and Phoenicians flying the dreadful Sword of Jehonab the Son of Nun, sought them out dwellings further off from the present danger, whereof we shall speak more in its proper place. On the like motives and inducements did the first people after the Flood, distribute and disperse themselves into several parts, as their posterities have done since, and will do to the end of the World, in all probability: Giving their own names, or some names of their own implying, upon the Countries Planted or discovered by them. And though the length, and consuming nature of time, hath either changed or worn out the names imposed by the first Adventurers, I mean the first Planters after the Flood: yet all the Foot-Steps of Antiquity are not so defaced, but that some Nations and Cities have preserved the memory of their first Founders and true Parents. In the discovery whereof Isidore Josphus in his Book of Jewish Antiquities did first lead the way, and gave good light to those who have travelled in it, so a more notable proficiency hath been made therein by Junius in his Notes on the Tenth of Genesis, Sir Walter Raleigh in his excellent History, and lately by Bochartus, a French Writer in his Book called Geographia Sacra. Out of those Learned labours, and some Animadversions of mine own, I shall here say somewhat concerning the Plantation of the World by the Sons of Noah; leaving the more exact and punctual description description of it under the History of those several Lands and Countries which were planted by them.

First therefore to begin with the posterity of Sem, as those who fixed themselves in Asia, without wandering further, we find Sem to have had five Sons, that is to say, Elam, Assur, Arphaxad, Lud and Aram; of whom there is no Issue on Record in Holy Scripture, but only of Arphaxad and Aram; and of these two there are four Sons given to Aram, viz. Uz, Hul, Gether and Mefech, and but one to Arphaxad, which was Selah. To Selah was born Heber; to Heber, Phaleg, the Ancestor of Abraham, and Joktan, the Father of those thirteen Sons, whose names we shall rehearse hereafter, if occasion be. From Elam who is first named, did descend the Elamites, a people bordering on the Medes, and therefore oft-times joyn'd together in the Scriptures, as Genp, O Elam, Beleger, O Media, Esa. 2. 2. And all the Kings of Elam, all the Kings of the Medes, Jer. 25. And in the Second of the Adi, Parthians, and Medes, and Elamites, march in rank and file, as being Nations bordering upon one another. The principal City of this people was called Elymais, mention whereof is made in the second of Maccab. 6. 2. sufficiently famous for the rich and magnificent Temple which was there consecrated to Diana. A City seated on the Banks of the River Eulphr, and neighbouring close to Susana, which therefore is sometimes included in the name of Elam, as Dan. 8. 2. I was (saith he) in the Palace of Susa, in the Province of Elam: where Elam is not taken for the Province of the Elamites only, but as it gave denomination unto all those Nations whom they after mastered. The Second Son of Sem is Assur, of whom there is no question made amongst the Learned, but that he was the Father of the Assyrians, called Assyres in some old Greek Writers: Not of the whole people of that great and unwieldy Empire, who sometimes generally pass by the name of Assyrians; but of the People of Assyria strictly and properly so called, as it denotes the Country about Ninive (the Royal City of that Empire) which after was called Adiabene. Juxta hunc circumvallum Adiabene, Assyria priscis temporibus vocata, as Ammianus Marcellinus, Lib. 33. Arphaxad comes next after Assur, and him Josephus makes to be the Father of the Chaldeans, called anciently Arphaxadei, if he tells us true. But others tell us, and that more probable perhaps, that he planted in that part the Assyria which was first called Arphaxitis, afterwards Arrapachitis; by which name it is occurth in the Tables of Ptolomy. Lud the fourth son is generally said to be the Father of the Lydians, a people of Asia the less; the names of Lud, and Lydi (or Auasi as the Grecians call them) being much alike. And it is possible enough that some of the posterity of this Lud might afterwards settle in those parts, and call the Country by the name of Lud, their common Ancestor; as the posterity of Abraham took unto themselves the name of Hebreus from Heber, one of the Progenitors of their Father Abraham. But that Lud should in person go far from the rest of the Sons of Sem, I cannot easily imagine, for Aram the fifth and last (as they stand in order of the Text) sets himself down close by his Brethren in the Land of Syria, which in the Hebrew is called Aram, and from thence the name of Aramites was given to the Inhabitants of it. Of which, and of the several Provinces which were hence denominated, we shall hereafter speak more fully, when we come to Syria. Only take now this testimony and acknowledgment from the pen of Strabo. Quoniam non Syros vocantur, isti Syri Aramensis et Arameos vocant. Those (saith he) which we now call Syrians, do call themselves Arameans, or Aramenians. In, and about the same parts did the four sons of Aram set themselves and their Families; Uz in that part of Syria which is called Syria Damascena, or Aram Damascenica: the building of the great City of Damascus being generally ascribed unto him; and the Land of Uz, bordering South upon Damascus, taking denomination from him. The like did Hul, or Chul, the next son of Aram, whom both Josephus and S. Hieron settle in Armenia, or Armenia, as in Strabo; and that not improbably, considering that there is a Region in Armenia, which Stephanus calls Cholobetene, and divers Cities in that tract, which still preserve the Radicals of Hul, or Chul, as Cholobata, Cholimam, Calsa, and Colana, whereof mention is made in the Tables of Ptolomy. For Gether, the third son of Aram; it is not yet agreed on where to find his dwelling. Josephus, contrary to all reason, placeth him in Bactria; and Mercer, with as little, in Caria, a Province of the lesser Asia, and Acanania of Greece. Justin sets him down in the Province of Cassiotia, and Silencus, near his Father Aram, where Ptolomy placeth Gindarus, and the Nations called by Pliny, Gindarini: Bochartus on the banks of the River Centrius, which divides Armenia from the Carduchi, as it is in Xenophon. Which River, if it were called originally Getri, as he conjectureth it might be, the controversy were at an end. But being that we find in Ptolomy, a City of Armenia (which bordereth on Armenia) called Getara, and a River of the same Country called Getras; I see no cause why we should seek further for the seat of Gether than the Greek Copies (more subject to corruption in the times of ignorance, than the Latin were) instead of Getara read Gagara. But if this be too far to set him, we shall find Mar or Mefech, the last Son, planted nearer hand, even in the Northern Parts of Syria, towards Mesopotamia, near the Hill called Mafius: at the foot whereof there is a people, which Stephanus called Mafieni; and thereabout a River, which in Xenophon is named Mafica. Both which do evidently declare from what root they come.

Come we next to the second branch of the house of Sem, derived from Arphaxad, whom we left settled in the Region of Arrapachitis, or in near Assyria. Not far from which, in Susana, a Province of the Persian Empire, there is a City of chief note called Sela; mention of which is made both in Ptolomy's Tables; and the 23. Book of Ammianus Marcellinus. And unto this the authority of Eusebius Antiochenus, who briefly thus, Sela de Senuar. The People of Susana came from Sela. But this as I conceive, must be understood only of that Part of this people, which lived in and about the City of Sela, and not of the whole Nation of the Susians, or Susiani, which borrowed their denomination from another root. To Sela was born Heber, from whom the people of the Hebræi, or Hebreus, do derive their name. And to him Phaleg his first born, who in all probability gave name to the Town called Phalga, situate on the River Euphrates, not far from Selencia: Mention whereof is made by Stephanus in his Book de Urbinis, and by Ptolomy in his Geography; where it is placed right on the banks of Euphrates, where the River Chaboras mingles waters with it; but there corruptly called Phalga, instead of Phalga.

But the great increase of Sem's Posterity came by Joktan, the second Son of Eber, the father of no fewer than thirteen Sons, whose names are on record in the tenth of Genesis, where it is said, that their dwelling was from Melcha, as thou goest to Sephar, a Mount in the East, And here I must crave leave to differ from Bochartus, who hath wronged Joktan and his Sons into a little corner of Arabia Felix, where I can find no room for them, and less reason to place them. For being that Chus the Son of Cham, and the Chiefs of his Posterity, eight in number, were planted in Arabia, as himself confesseth,

it must needs be, that they had spread themselves over all the Country, before any of the sons of Joktan were of age sufficient to be the Fathers of Families, and lead Colonies thither. Joktan is credibly supposed not to have been born when such of Nashy posterity as are mentioned Gen. 10. dispersed themselves into new Plantations; but it is evident from the Text, that none of his children were then born, if their Father were. And this Bochartus doth acknowledge in two several places. First, granting that neither Phaleg, nor Joktan were present at the building of Babel, multa minus Joktanis filii post aliquot annos genti; much less the sons of Joktan begot many years after; Lih. 1. c. 16. And secondly affirming, that Jokan and his children came not within the curle of Confused Languages, quia nondum erant genti, because then unborn, c. 15. Hereupon I conclude it to be very improbable that Jokan and his children should find room in the best parts of Arabia Felix, which Chus and his posterity had inhabited long before. And as it is improbable that the sons of Chus would plant themselves in the worst part of the Country for so many Ages, and leave the best and richest of it for some new adventurers: So it is impossible that the sons of Joktan should either be removed so far from the rest of the house of Arphaxad, who were all planted on the East of the River Tygris, as was before shewed: or that they should be able, had they been so minded, to break through the whole Countries of the Assyrians, Chusites, and other Nations, to come unto the utmost corners of Arabia Felix. He that believes they did, or could, must have a stronger Faith than mine; but it shall never conduce any thing to his justification. Nor am I moved at all that which seems to me to be his weightiest Argument, namely, that the Arabians, particularly Joseph Ben Abdallah, and Mahomet Ben Jacob, two of their chief Writers affirm, that Joktan was the Founder of their Tongue and Nation; no more than I am moved to think that the Saracens are derived from Sara the Wife, and not from Harag the Concubine and servant of Abraham; because that people so report it for their greater glory.

And for the several Nations of Arabia Felix, whose original he ascribes to the sons of Jokan, I see no many transpositions of Syllables, alterations even of Radical Letters, such and so many wretched Originations, as by the like liberty of making quilibet ex quolibet, it were no difficult matter to find place for them in any Country whatsoever. For how extorted and unnatural are the derivations of the Alنامه from Almadad, of the Manita from Abimail, of the Joharita from Jubab? How impossible is it that Jarech should give name to the Isle which Ptolomy calleth Nio or Tapexan, Insula Jercama or Acipitrum, as the Latine hath it, that is to say, the Isle of Hawks, from the abundance of Hawks which were there bred: There being another Island of the same name near unto Sardinia (so called for the self same reason) and a Town called Jarax in Hammoniacia a Region of Egypt, to which Jarech might as well lay claim (if that would carry it) as to this Jercama, or Acipitrum, in the Gulf of Arabia. How improbable that Opbir should give name to Urbire, a poor Isle of the Red Sea, Obal to Sinu Avalliter in Libiopia, on the other side of that Gulf? Or that Diela must be fixed in Arabia, for no other reason, but because the word signifieth a Palm-tree, of which that Country yields good plenty, as if some other Countries did not yield as much? These and some other reasons hereafter following have made me bold to differ from that learned man in this particular, whose industry and abilities I do otherwise honour; and rather to look for Joktan, and his sons in the East part of the world, where the Scriptures place them; than in the South (with refer-rence to the wilderness, or Land of Madian, in one of which the Book of Genesis was written) where Bochartus placeth them. Yet so far I must yield to that learned man, that some of the Descendants of Jokan in long tract of time, moved with the rarities of the place, might come from India, and plant themselves upon the Sea-Coasts of Arabia Felix; as the Arabians at this day, moved with the Wealth and Trade of India, have possessed themselves of some of the Ports and pieces on the Shores thereof.

Now the Text telleth us of the Sons of Joktan, that their dwelling was from Melcha, as thou goest to Sephar, a Mount of the East; so that by these two boundaries, Melcha and Sephar, their habitation must be found. I know, Bochartus would have Melcha to be Mufa, a noted Port-Town on the South-west of Arabia Felix, and Sephar to be the City of Sephar in the South-east of that Country; that City giving name to some Mount adjoining. But being they both lie directly South of the place in which Mofes wrote, I cannot see how this position can agree with the word of Scripture; and therefore we must look for both in some other place. And first to find out Melcha, we need go no further than Bochartus himself, who nameth Melch the last of the Sons of Aram, the Son of Sem (according to the general opinion of most writers else) to be planted in the Mountainous tracts of Mesopotamia, from him called Mus Melcha, more of which before. And then for Sephar, which the Text calleth a Mount of the East; if it be the Southern part of Mount Imani, by Ptolomy named Bitigi, by the Moderns Gata extending from Mount Caucasus to the Cape Comari in the higher Indias Pagellus a right learned man doth conceive it to be; We have without more difficulty found out the dwellings of the sons of Jokan according to the bounds laid down in holy Scripture: But for fear this may not satisfy, for want of some Seconds to Pagellus (if Truth needs a Second) we have Siphare a City of Arria, directly East from Mus Melcha, or the dwellings of Melch; both in the East parts of the World, with reference unto the place in which Mofes writ: Mus Melcha being placed by Ptolomy in the 74 degree of Longitude, and the 37 of Latitude; and Siphare 36 degrees more towards the East, but with no more than two degrees of Latitude super-added to it. And this agreeth to the position assigned to the Sons of Jokan by Josephus, Eusebius, and S. Hieron; the entendation of Bochartus coming in to help. It is affirmed by Josephus that the Joquaites possessed all that Traci, απὸ Κασίου ὁρμήης ὀρέων, ἕως τῆς περὶ αὐτῶν Σελῆς ἁλῆς, which lieth about Kapheus a River of India, together with such parts of Syria as did border near it. These words being borrowed from Josephus both by Eusebius and S. Hieron; the first instead of Syria reads Seria, and the other Seria, but neither rightly: there being no such place in the world as Seria; and Syria & Seria (or the Country of the Seres) lying too far off to border on Cephenia a River of India; Bochartus therefore helps them out, conceiving (I think right enough) that for Syria we should there read Arria and withal granting, as he may, that Arria in the largest latitude and extent thereof, comprehending Parapomus & Arachosia, extendeth as far East-ward as the River Cephenis. So, that we have found out a dwelling for the sons of Jokan whetwixt Mus Melcha & Siphare, a Town of Arria: which probably might give name to some Mount adjoining, as Sephar by Bochartus is supposed to do to some of the Arabian hills bordering near unto it. And as these situations do agree exactly with the meaning of those ancient Writers, so is it also very suitable to the other Plantations of the sons of Arphaxad. For this I look on as a matter out of all dispute, that Phaleg and Jokan being both too young to go upon any new Adventures, when to many of

Egypt, of the name of Coptorim. Or if it did not, as it doth, why the name of Coptis, which at this day is given to the Christians of Egypt, may not be thought to have its first rise from Coptorim, rather than that they are so called quasi Aegyptii, corruptly for Aegyptii, I must needs say I am not satisfied. Besides, it being clear in Scripture, that the Callubim and Coptorim dwelt near together, and that the Philistins are said to descend from Callubim, if Callubim should go for Colobis, and Coptorim for Cappadocia, we must first carry them I know not how far off from the rest of their Brethren, against the method of all Plantations; and then bring the Philistins back again from Colobis, to find a dwelling on the Borders of the Land of Egypt, from whence their Ancestors and Allies were so far remote. Whereas by settling these two Nations amongst the rest of their Brethren, the Journey of the Philistins unto Canaan, and settling themselves in the possessions of the Avim (a Canaanitish people) whom they had subdued, Deut. 2. 25. is both easy and natural. But before we follow these Philistins further in their new Plantation amongst the Canaanites, we will first see what became of Phut, the Third Son of Cham. And if we guide our selves in this Labyrinth by the clew of Antiquity, we shall find him settled West by his Brother Misraim, and so the Atlantic Ocean, the Lake of Tritonis parting their Dominions. Some Relicks of the name there were in the time of Josephus, who tell us of a River of Mauritania, which in his time retained the name of Phut: Pliny makes mention of it, also Proclus takes notice of a River in those parts called Phutis, which comes very near it. And so doth Isidore Origin. l. 2. But St. Hieron in my mind puts it out of doubt, whose words I shall put down, and so leave Africa; Phut Lybia, a quo & Mauritanie fluvius usque ad presens Phut dicitur, uniusque circa eam Regio Phytensis cuius rei multi Scriptores tam Graecum Latine testes sunt. Where we have not only a River, but a Province of the name of Phut, and many ancient Writers both Greek and Latin called to witness to it.

And now we should proceed to Canaan and his Sons (eleven in all) being the fourth and last branch of the House of Cham. But being they all kept together in or near the Land of Canaan, we shall find them there; or meet with them in such Plantations and Colonies as they sent abroad, under the Title of Phoenicians. And therefore go we next to Japhet, whose Tours God promised to enlarge, as indeed he did; spreading his branches over Europe, the lesser Asia, and a great part of the greater Asia. To him were born seven Sons in all, that is to say, Gomer and Magog, Madai and Javan, Isabel, Mefech, and Thyras. Of which the issue of two only are upon Record, viz. Ashkenaz, Riphat, and Togarmas, the Sons of Gomer; Elifha, Tarsish, Kittim, and Dodanim, the Sons of Javan. And first for Gomer and his Sons, the first possessed themselves of convenient dwellings in the greater and the lesser Asia: Gomer himself first planting in the Mountainous places of Albania, where the Mountains called Cimmerii long retained his name; and after changing that unpleasant and unfruitful dwelling for the Plains of Phrygia, in which the City Cimmeria, in the days of Pliny, did preserve his memory. For that the posterity and people of Gomer, called at first Cimmerians, came to take the name of Cimmerians, as of Cimmerii afterwards, is generally agreed upon amongst the Learned. Now then, as Gomer fixt himself in the greater Asia, so his Eldest Son Ashkenaz in Phrygia Minor, and the Country of Troas, spreading himself along upon the Hellefpon, and those Greekish Seas, as far as Sybinia. In which places there were left some memory of this Plantation. For in Bythinia there is a

Bay called Sinus Ascanius, together with a River and a Lake of the same name also. And in the lesser Phrygia, and the Country of Troas, there were both a City and a Province adjoining, anciently known by the name of Ascania, and the Ascania Insula also on the Coast thereof. Nor is it any thing unlikely, but that in Honour of this Ashkenaz, the Kings and great men of those parts, took the name of Ascanius. Of which name, besides Ashkenaz the Son of Aeneas, we find a King mentioned in the Second of Homer's Iliads, which came unto the aid of Priamus at the Siege of Troy. In the same Quarters of the World we find Riphat also, the Founder of the Riphei, a People dwelling in the East parts of Bythinia, and spreading also over Paphlagonia: In both which Provinces there are some Remnants of his Name to be found amongst the Antients. For, besides that Josephus saith expressly, that the Paphlagonians antiently were called Riphei, there is mentioned in Apollonius's Argonauticks of the River Rhebeus, which rising in Bythinia, emptieth it self into the Pontus Euxinus, near to Paphlagonia; of which River Pliny also doth inform us: and Stephanus doth not only acquit us with the River it self, but tells us also of a Region of the same name, and of a people thereabouts, which are called Rhebei. Nor need we look much further to find out the seat of Togarmas the Third Son of Gomer, whom the Prophet Ezekiel not only joyneth with his Father as two neighbouring Nations, but makes both of them to lye Northwards of Judea: Gomer and all his bands, the hosts of Togarmas in the North Quarters, and all his bands, cap. 38. 6. So that they do not guess amiss, who place Togarmas and his Progeny in Cappadocia: a Country not only bordering near to the Plantations of Gomer, and lying on the North of the Land of Canaan, but very well stocked with an excellent breed of Mules and Horses, as Strabo testifieth in the Eleventh Book of his Geography; with which commodities they traded as the Fairs of Tyre, as the fame Prophet tells us of them, Chap. 27. 14. But for a more evident proof of this, that Togarmas dwelling must be found in Cappadocia; we must first know that the Greek Translators call him generally by the name of Togarmas; and then, that antiently there was a people in Cappadocia and Galatia, whom Strabo calleth Trogmii, and Julius Trogmii by Stephanus they are named Trocmii, and Trocmades in the Council of Chalcedon, in which Cyrilian Bishop of the Trocmades (Κοκκαὶς Βίσιον & Τρογμάδων) is often mentioned.

Having thus done with Gomer, and the Sons of Gomer, we will next pursue the rest of the Sons of Japhet, except Javan only, whom with his Four Sons we will keep together. And the next Son of Japhet is Magog, concerning whom there hath been much dispute and difference amongst our Antiquaries, some making him the Father of the Scythians, and some of the Guths, and others finally of the Tartars; all of them thinking that such terrible names as Gog and Magog, could not belong to any but such terrible Nations. And possible enough it is, that some of his posterity in succeeding times, finding their own seats too narrow for them, might remove further Northwards; and be the Founders of some Scythian and Tartarian Nation; but that Magog, himself in his first Plantation, should wander so far out of the way from the rest of his Brethren, when he had Elbow-room enough amongst them, I cannot easily imagine. Where therefore I find a Region in Stephanus called Gogarus, betwixt Iberia and Colchis; and read in Pliny, that the City of Calo-Syria, which the Grecians call Hierapolis, was by the Syrians themselves called Magog; I shall not trouble my self to look for Magog any where else, than in those Countries where they have left such evident Land-

Land-marks to discern themselves by. But this we shall the better see by looking out the dwellings of his two Brethren, Mefech and Tubal, who being joyned together with Gog and Magog, Ezek. 38. 2. and 39. 1. are very unlike to have their dwellings far asunder: or that they could concur in any publick Action against the Jews, according to the scope and purpose of the Holy Prophet. Now it is probable (if not more) that Mefech, whom the Antients named Mosch, seated himself on the North and North-East of Syria, in the confines of Colchis and Armenia, and so unto the Caspian or Hyrcanian Sea. For all along that Tract runs a ridge of Hills, which Pliny, Ptolemy, and Pomponius Mela call Montes Moschici, determining Colchis from Armenia, and both from Iberia; and most like to be the dwelling of Mefech or Mosch, and to take denomination from him. And this I am the rather induced to think, because Tubal, whom the Scriptures generally joyn together with Mefech, is by most Writers said to have settled himself in Iberia, the next Province to it. Josephus also telling us, that antiently the Iberi were called Thebeli, though called Iberians afterwards on some new occasion. And hereto the constant tradition of the Spaniards gives some good authority, who boast of their descent from Tubal; which can no otherwise be granted, than as they were a Colony of these Iberians, from whence the Continent of Spain was once called Iberia; and where one of the principal Rivers is still called Iberus. For Madai, the third Son of Japhet, it is most plain by the Authority of Scripture (where there no proof else) that he was the Father of the Medes; who in the Book of Daniel, and that of Hester, are represented to us by no other name than that of Madai.

Thus having took a view of those who fixt themselves in either, or in both the Asia's; let us look on Thyras, Javan, and the Sons of Javan, whom not contented with their dwellings in the lesser Asia, filled all Europe by degrees with their numerous Progenies. And first beginning with Javan as the Elder Brother, most Authors make him the Original of those Greek Nations which pass under the general names of Ionians; and there is very good ground for the assertion, considering that the Greek Translators of the Bible instead of Javan, read Ionan, and that all those who elsewhere ordinarily are called Ionians, are by Homer, one of the Antientest of the Greeks, named Ionians. Now Javan and Ionan found so like each other, that they were the same. A name not only proper to the Albanians, and their Coloniads, (though probably enough first belonging to them of Attica) but comprehending the Ionians and Achaean also; yea, and extending also into Macedonia, as appears Dan. 8. 21. where Alexander the Great, in the Hebrew is called King of Javan, which we English Greece. Nor do we much dissent Javan from the rest of that stock, by carrying him cross the Seas into another part of the World; for he might go along with Gomer in his second Plantation; and leaving him well settled in the greater Phrygia, and his Son Ashkenaz in the lesser; might then with very little trouble (and no improbability at all) pass over the Hellefpon, and plant himself in Attica, called at first Ionis, faith Plutarch in the life of Theseus. Or if any one notwithstanding conceive this for too great a leap, and will rather think with Hecataeus, that the Ionians came out of Asia into Greece (as Strabo cites him to that purpose) shall not much contend against that opinion; to be also granted on the other side, that Javan, not having room enough on the Shores of Asia, passed over into Greece, as a Land unoccupied. With Javan went Elifha his Eldest Son, the Father of the Aeolians, or Aeoli- ans, on the Asian side, as Josephus hath it; and the Founder of Elis in Peloponnesus, and Planter of the Grecian Isles, which by the Prophet Ezekiel 27. 7. are called the Isles of Elifha. And it agrees exceeding well with the Isles of Greece, what by the Prophet is affirmed of the Isles of Elifha; namely, that the Inhabitants thereof did trade to Tyre with Bliss and Purple in which some of the Grecian Isles were such excellent Artificers, that Carpathus had the name of Purpuris, and Cithera was called Περπυρρα, only from the abundance of Purple, which they had amongst them. Nor to say any thing of Coar, Nisyros, and Gyarus, and some other of the Cyclades, renowned in good Authors, for that Commodity.

A shorter Journey, but withal a far shorter Territory, fell to the lot of Tarsish the Second Son; whom Javan, when he travelled further upon new discoveries, left settled in Cilicia, a Province of the lesser Asia; where either he, or some of his Posterity, in honour of him built the City of Tarsus, the Principal City of that Province. For that Tarsish in those early days should go unto Spain, and there build Tartessus, I take to be a strange (if not idle) Romance; that Town being built by the Phoenicians, many Ages after, without Relation unto Tarsish, or his memory either. What Voyages or Plantations those of Cilicia or Tarsus made in times succeeding, as I no where find, so it is not material to my present purpose; which principally is to settle the Sons of Noah in their first Habitations. On therefore unto Cittim, the third Son of Javan, whom Josephus setteth first in the life of Cyprus, where he finds a City called Cittium, the birth place of Zeno the Stoick, thence Sicronem Κιτιον. Josephus is herein followed by St. Hieron in his Notes on Genes, in whose time (as Pintus telleth in his Comment on Ezekiel) the Town of Cittium was still standing; so do Enchiridion in his Hexameron, and divers others. The Author of the Book of Maccabees sets him further off, giving the name of Cittim unto Macedonia. After that (saith the Author) Alexander the Son of Philip, went forth of the Land of Chethim, and slew Darius King of the Persians and Medes, Cap. 1. 11. And after in the 8. Chapter of the same Book, Verse 5. Perseus King of Macedonia is called King of the Cittians. But this doth no way contradict that of his first planting in Cyprus, where it is very probable that he made his dwelling for a time, by reason of the neighbourhood of his Brother Tarsish (Cilicia and the City of Tarsus lying near unto it). But finding in time that Island to be either too barren, or too small for his people; and that the other parts both of Greece and Asia were taken up already by the first Adventurers, he might finally fix himself, or some of his posterity, in Macedonia, as a spare place which no body could lay claim unto. That either he or any of his Sons did plant first in Italy, which I see Bochartus would fain have, were against the method of Plantations; and he must give them wings to fly that conveyeth them thither, when as yet Mankind was not taught the use of Shipping, or not accustomed at least to make long Voyages. But that in course of time, as the World grew fuller, and that Greece was not able to contain its multitudes, some of the Race of Cittim might pass over into Italy, the passage thither from some of the Ports of Greece being short and easy, I am apt enough to believe, and in its proper place shall declare my self for it. Nor can I otherwise agree with him, as concerning Dodanim, whom against all right and reason he hath placed in Gaul; making the River Rhodanus, one of the principal of that Country, to be named of him; whom the Greeks, mistaking the letter Daleth for that of Reph (as indeed the letters are so like, that one to the French, the Scots to the English; the Portuguese have the like inveterate hatred against the Spaniards. The Princes of Italy enjoy great possessions without any good title; but are continually opposed by the more potent Cities of Venice, Florence, Genoa, and Lucca. The Argentin Kings of Naples, have found perpetual Enemies of the House of Anjou; as have the Dukes of Milizia, of the Dukes of Orleans. The Princes of Italy, and the Florentines, have a litch at Venice; as the States of Genoa, and Sienna, have against the Florentines. In Germany the animosities have been great and of long continuance, between the Houses of Austria, and Bavaria; the hatred grown beyond all hopes of reconciliation which is between the Swabians, and the Austrian Family. The Dukes of Cleve, and Guick, are always upon ill terms with their Neighbours of Gelderland; and in the North, the Cities on the Baltic Seas have their continual quarrels with the Kings of Denmark. Nor are the enmities any thing less, if they be not greater, which are discernable amongst the people of Asia and Africa, than those that are above remembred. So far and to this purpose faith that noble and judicious Writer.

The consideration of which points, if there were no other, were of it self sufficient to shew the necessary use of History and Geography, as well for the understanding the affairs of the Ages past, as for commerce and correspondence with the Nations present. For had no Histories been written in the former times, in what dull ignorance had we lived of all those occurrences which do so much concern the whole state of Mankind, and are our principal directors in Life and Action? for in which respect the Orator must truly calleth it, Magistrum vite. For upon the credit of this History, the examples of our Ancestors, the grounds of civil prudence, and the fames of men do most especially depend. And certainly to draw back the mind to the contemplation of Matters long ago passed; to search out with diligence, and to deliver with faith, freedom, and the life of expression, such things as are found out on a diligent search; to represent unto our eyes the changes of Times, the Characters of Persons, the uncertainties of Councils, and the Conveyances of Actions, the subtleties of Pretensions, and the Secrets of State; must of necessity be a work of as publick use, as it is of great both pains and judgment. Besides, it gives a kind of eternity to all such men, who by their Councils or Achievements have deserved nobly of those Kingdoms, and Common-wealths, wherein they lived. And thereupon the Orator doth not only call it, Magistrum vite, but Lumen veritatis, Telum temporis, Nuntium vetustatis, & Vite memoriam. According to which Character I find these Verses set before a Chronicle of some Kings of England (more worth than all the Book besides)

For though in these days Miracles be fled,
Yet this ball of good Histories be said,
They call back time that's past, and give life to the dead.

Nor want the other motives to endure unto the use of History, besides the light it gives unto all the remarkable Actions of preceding times; and the eternity (if I may say so) which it conferreth on the Actors themselves, by the preservation of their names from the ruins of time, and the pit of Oblivion. For first, it stirreth men to Virtue, and deterrs them from Vice, by shewing forth the glorious memories of virtuous men and the ill favour which is left behind men of ungody life; and especially keeps persons of most eminent place from letting loose the reins unto all licentiousness, by representing this to their consideration. That all their Actions shall be laid open one day to the view of the Vulgar. Secondly, it hath been a principal Conserver of most Arts and Sciences, by keeping on Record the Dictates and Opinions of so many of the old Philosophers; out of which, a perfect body of Philosophy, and others of the Liberal Arts hath been collected and digested. Thirdly, it is the best School-master in the Art of War, and teacher of Stratagems; and in that can practically afford more puseful directions, than can be otherwise obtained; and is withal the best Assistant to the Statesman or Politician, who from hence draw their Observations and Conclusions; and become thereby serviceable to their Prince and Country, though never travelled more than amongst their Books. So Archimedes in his study, and Demoghenes in his Orators Gown, endangered more the enemies of their several Countries, than the Athenians, or Syracusans, did by dint of Sword. And last of all, besides these civil benefits and considerations, and the great help which it affords in the way of discourse; there is no particular branch of knowledge more useful for the true and perfect understanding of holy Scripture, than that of Ecclesiastical and Prophane History; or which gives clearer light to many dark passages thereof, especially in the Propheticall Writings of either Testament.

This, as it shews the necessary use and benefit which redounds from History, so doth it serve to usher in that commendation which belongs to the study of Geography also; without some knowledge wherein, the study of History is neither so pleasant, nor so profitable, as a judicious Reader would desire to have it. 'Tis true Geography without History hath life and motion, but very unstable, and at random; but History without Geography, like a dead carcass, hath neither life, nor motion at all, or moves at least but slowly on the understanding. For what delight or satisfaction can any man receive from the reading of Story, without he know somewhat of the places, and the conditions of the people, which are therein mentioned? In which regard Amianus Marcellinus the Historian, hath deserved very well of all his Readers, premising to the Actions of every Country some brief Description of the place and chief Towns therein. For though the greatness of the Action doth ennoble and adorn the place; yet it is the knowledge of the place, which adds delight and satisfaction unto the reading of the Story, which conveys it to us. History therefore and Geography, like the two Fires or Meteors, which Philosophers call Cosmos and Polaris, if joined together, crown our reading with delight and profit; if parted, threatened both with a certain shipwreck; and are like two Sisters dearly loving, not without pity (I had almost said impiety) to be kept asunder. So as that which Sir Philip Sidney said of Argalus and Parthenia,

Her being was in him alone,
And he not being, he was none;

may be as justly said of History and Geography, as of those two Lovers. And yet this is not all the benefit which redounds from the study of Geography, which is exceeding useful to the reading of the holy Scriptures, as in discovering the situation of Paradise, the bounds and borders of those Countries which are therein mentioned; especially with relation to the travels of the Patriarchs, Prophets, Evangelists, and Apostles, yea of Christ himself; not otherwise to be comprehended and understood, but by the help of Geographical Tables and descriptions. Besides this, it is useful to most sorts of men, as to Astronomers, who are hereby informed of the different appearances of Stars in several Countries; their several influences and aspects, their rising and setting, according to different Horizons. Secondly, to Physicians, who are hereby acquainted with the different temper of mens bodies, according to the Climates they live in; the nature and growth of many Simplex, and Medicinal Drugs, whereof every Country under Heaven hath some more natural and proper to it self, than to any others. Thirdly, to Statesmen, who from hence draw their knowledge of the nature and disposition of those people with whom they are to negotiate; the bounds and borders both of their own Kingdoms, and the neighbouring Countries, with the extent of their respective Dominions by Sea and Land; without the exact knowledge of which, there would be a perpetual Seminary of Wars and discord. Fourthly, to Merchants, Mariners, and Souldiers; the several Professors of which kinds of life, find nothing more necessary for them in their several callings, than a competent knowledge in Geography; which presents to them many notable advantages, both for their profit and contentment. Finally, by the study of Geography, a man that hath not opportunity nor means of travelling, may with as much benefit, but far less danger and expence, acquaint himself with the particular descriptions of Kingdoms, Provinces, Cities, Towns and Castles, with all things considerable in the same, together with the customs, manners, and dispositions of all foreign Nations; and that too in as full a manner, as if he had survey'd the one, and observed the other, by a personal visit of the places represented to him.

Such is the necessary use which men of ingenious studies and professions, do, and may make of History, and Geography, in the course of their callings and employments. And there are some things also necessary to the knowledge of each, that we may study them with the greater benefit and contentment. To History, it is only requisite that it be defined, distinguished from such writings as do seem to challenge the name of Histories; and that somewhat be premised of those several Epoques from which all people do begin their computations. But to Geography it is needful not only that we do define it, but that we explicate those Terms, or second Notions, which are not obvious to the understanding of every Reader. First then for History, if we consult the name or Quid nominis of it, it is derived ἱστορίαν i. e. videre; and therefore properly doth signifie a relation of such remarkable actions at which the Author was an Eye-witnes, if not an Agent, Apud veteres enim (saith Isidore) nemo scribens Historiam, nisi is qui interfuit, & ea que scribenda essent vidisset. But now the customary use of the word hath taught it a more ample signification. History being defined to be A Perfect Relation of all Occurrences observable, hapning in the State whereof it is written, described by the Motives, Pretexis, Consultations, Speeches and Events; a special care being had both of Time and Place.

As for the writings which do challenge the name of History, but indeed are really distinguished from it, they are Commentaries, Annals, Diaries, or Journals, and Chronologies. First Commentaries set down only a naked continuance of Events and Actions, without the Motives and designs, the Councils, Speeches, Occasions and Pretexis of businesse. So that Cæsar with more modesty than true propriety of speech, applied the name of Commentaries to the best History in the World, A History commended by King James to his Son Prince Henry, above all other prophane Authors, both for the sweet flowing of the stile, and the worthiness of the matter it self. For I have ever (saith he) been of this opinion, that, of all Ethnick Emperors or great Captains, he hath farthest exceeded both in his practise and in his precept, for Marial affairs. Which makes me the more wonder at the strange and unjust censure of Julius Lipsius who calls them Nudum & simpliciter narrativum, for being intitled Commentaries, they do (saith he) nil polliceri præter nomen; with pride and arrogance enough. 2. For Annals next; they are a bare recital only of the Actions happening every year, without regard yet to the causes and pretexis, or any of the chief Ingredients required in History. So that Tacitus had no other reason to give the name of Annals to his excellent Work, than that it is distinguished by the years of the Consuls. Otherwise there is no great difference as unto the matter betwixt an History and an Annal, the subject of them both, being matter of State; and not such trivial things as Triumphs, Pageants, and such like, which stand not with the gravity and authority of Historical Annals; betwixt which and a Diary, the same Tacitus (speaking of some magnificent structures which were built that year) doth make this difference, Res illustres Annalibus, talia diurnis Urbis actis mandari, that matters of the greater moment were committed to Annals, and unto Diaries the Acts and Accidents of a meaner nature. 3. But Diaries, besides this difference in point of matter are distinguished from Annals also in point of time, a Diary or Journal, as the name imports, containing the Actions of each day; of which kind was the Chronicle called for by Abasurns, in which the Actions of his Court were referred to Journals, and in the which he found the relation of the treason intended against him by his Eunuchs. And of this kind was that of King Edward the sixth, mentioned in the History of his life, by Sir John Hayward. 4. Last of all for Chronologies; they are only bare supputations of times, with some brief touch upon the Actions therein happening, such as those of Eusebius, Festus, Cassiodorus, and Heliensis; of which last I dare give that testimony which Paterculus affords to Ovid, viz. that he is perstitissimus in forma operis sui; though he and all the rest are debtors to Eusebius for the incredible pains taken by him in his excellent Chronicon. Out of these four, as out of the four Elements, the Quintessence of History is extracted: borrowing from Annals time, from Diaries and Commentaries matter, from Chronologies content of time and co-entrancy of Princes; and discrete adding of her own all such other Ornaments in which these four are found defective.

That which remains is to premise somewhat of those several Epoques, from whence particular States, Nations and People, make their computations. There have been very different in former times, according to the several occasions took in several Countries. The Jews had several Epoche peculiar to themselves alone, and one in common with their Neighbours. Those which they had amongst themselves were first from the Creation of the World, or the beginning of time; Secondly from the universal Deluge, which hapned, A. M. 1656. Thirdly, from the Confusion of Tongues, A. M. 1786. Fourthly, from Abrahams journey out of Chaldea unto Ganaan, A. M. 2021. Fifthly, from their deliverance out of Egypt, A. M. 2453. Sixthly, from the first year of Jubilee, A. M. 2499. Seventhly, from the building of Solomons Temple, An. 2932. And lastly, from the Captivity of Babylon, An. 3368. That which they had common with other Nations, was the Æra or Epoche of the victory of the Greeks, which took beginning on the first Victory which Seleucus had against Antigonum, which was in A. M. 3637. An Accompt much used by the Jews, Chaldeans, Syrians, and other Nations of the East.

But the Chaldeans also had their own Epoche or Account apart, reckoning their time from the first year of Nabonassar (Salmonasser he is called in Scripture) which being 438 years before this of Selenicus, must fall in A.M. 3201. Next for the Grecians, they reckon'd a long while by Olympiads, the first of which is placed in the year of the World, 3174. (of which more hereafter.) But this Account perishing under the Constantinopolitans, they reckon'd after by Inditions (an account devised by Justinian;) every Indition containing 15 years, the first beginning A.Chr. 513, which amongst Chronologists is still used. The Romans reckon'd first from the foundation of their City, which was A.M. 3213, and afterwards from the sixteenth year of Augustus his Empire, (being that which is properly call'd the Roman Era) A.M. 3936. An account used by the Spaniards (where it first began) till the Reign of Pedro the fourth of Aragon, who abrogated it in his Dominions, A.Chr. 1350, followed there in by John the first of Castile, A.D. 1383, and then at last by the King of Portugal also, 1415. The Christians generally do reckon from the Birth of CHRIST, but this they did not use till the year 600, following in the mean time the Account of the Empire. And finally the Mahometans begin their Hegira (for so they call the time of their Computation) from the flight of their Prophet Mahomet from Meca, when he was driven thence by the Phylarches, which hapned A.Chr. 617. Of these we shall make use generally but of two alone, those namely of the Worlds Creation, and our Saviours Birth; and of the building of Rome, and the flight of Mahomet, in things that do relate to those several States.

Next for Geography we will first define it, and after explicate such terms or second notions, as are not obvious to the understanding of every Reader. First for the definition of it, it is said by Prology to be a description of the whole Earth, or the whole Earth imitated by writing and delineation, with all other things generally annexed unto it. Η Γεωγραφία ὁμοιωσις ἐστὶ διὰ γραφῆς (and not διαγραφῆς, as it is commonly but corruptly read) τῆς κατασκευῆς αὐτῆς τῆς γῆς μὲντοι καὶ μὲντοι τῶν ἐν ταύτῃ περιλαμβανόμενων, as his own words are. In which we look not on the Earth simply as it is an Element, for so it belongeth to Philosophy; but as it is a Spherical body proportionably composed of Earth and Water, and so it is the subject of Geography.

First for the Earth which is the first part of this body, it is affirmed by the best Writers to be 21600 miles in compass; which is demonstrable enough. For being there are in every of the greater Circles 360 degrees, every degree being reckon'd at 60 miles: let 360 be multiplied by 60, and the Product will be 21600 as before is said. So that if it were possible to make a path round about the Earth, an able Footman going constantly 24 miles a day, would compass it in 900 days.

The Earth is divided, in respect of men, into the right hand and the left: In respect of it self, into parts Real and Imaginary.

To Poets which turn their faces towards the Fortunate Islands (so memorized and chanted by them) which are situated in the West: the North is the right hand, and the South the left.

To the Angels of old, and in our days to Priests and men in holy Orders, who usually in their Sacrifices and divine Oblations, convert themselves unto the East, the South is the right hand, and the North the left.

To Astronomers, who turn their faces towards the South, because that way the motions of the Planets may be best observed, the West is the right hand, and the East the left.

Finally, to Geographers, who, by reason they have fo much to do with the Elevation of the Pole, do turn their face towards the North: the East is the right hand, and the West the left.

The Real parts of the Earth are divided commonly into Continents, Islands.

A Continent is a great quantity of Land not separated by any Sea from the rest of the World, as the whole Continent of Europe, Asia, Africa; or the Continents of France, Spain, Germany.

An Island is a part of Earth invironed round about with some Sea or other: as the Isle of Britain, with the Ocean; the Isle of Sicily, with the Mediterranean: and therefore in Latine it is call'd Insula, because it is situate in fale, as some derive it.

Touching the Continent I have nothing in general to enlarge, till we come to the particular Chorography and description of them. But for Islands (leaving the disquisition of their being, or not being before the Flood) there are four cafes to which they may be thought to owe their Original. 1. An Earthquake, which works two ways towards their production: First, when by it one part of a Country is forcibly torn away from the other; and so Euboea was divided from the rest of Attica: and secondly when some vehement wind or vapour being thrust up in such parts of the Earth as be under the Sea, raiseth the Earth above the Water; whereunto the Original of most of those Islands, which are far remote from any part of the Continent, is probably to be referred.

2. Great Rivers at their entry into the Sea carry with them abundance of gravel, dirt, and weeds; which if the Sea be not the more working, will in time settle to an Island. So the Corn which Tarquinius sowed in the Campus Martius, being cut down by the people and cast into the River, settled together, and made the Holy Island. So Tiber, Abelonus caused the Ebhidæ, as we shall more at large declare; and so the Island of Loanda in the Kingdom of Congo, is said to have been made out of the Sands of the Ocean, and the Mine of the great River Laanza, cast into an heap, and at last formed into an Island. 3. The Sea violently beating on some small lithmus, weareth it through, turneth the Peninsula into a complete Iste. Thus was Sicily divided from Italy, Cyprus from Syria, England from France, and Wight from the rest of England. And 4. sometimes as it catcheth and worketh on some places, so it voluntarily leaveth and abandoneth others, which in some time grow to be Islands, and firm land under foot. So it is thought the Isle of Zealand have been once part of the main Sea: and Vesputian proveth it, because that the Husbandmen in tilling and manuring the ground, find sometimes Anchors here and there fixt, but very often the bones of huge and great fishes, which could by no accident come thither. To these kind of Islands, Pythagoras in Ovid alluding, saith,

Vidi scilicet ex æquore terras,
Et procul a pelago conchæ jacuere marine,
Et vetus inventa est in montibus anchora firmis.

Of these I have seen that earth, which once I knew Part of the Sea; so that a man might view Huge shells of Fishes in the upland ground; And on the mountain-tops old Anchors found.

As concerning the situation of Islands, whether commodious or not, this is my judgment. I find in Machiavel, that for a City whose people covet no Empire but their own Towns, a barren place is better than a fruitful; because in such seats they are compelled to work work and labour, by which they are freed from idleness, and by consequence from riotousness: but for a City whose Inhabitants desire to enlarge their Confines, fertile place was rather to be chosen than a sterile, as being more able to nourish multitudes of people. The like I say of Islands. If a Prince desire rather to keep than augment his Dominions, no place fitter for his abode than an Island; as being by it self and nature sufficiently defensible. But if a King be minded to add continually to his Empire, an Island is no fit fear him; because partly by the uncertainty of Winds and Seas, partly by the longness of the ways, he is not so well able to supply and keep such forces as he hath on the Continent. An example hereto is England, which hath even to admiration repelled the most puissant Monarch of Europe; but for the causes above mentioned, cannot then any of her winnings on the firm land, though the hath attempted and achiev'd as many glorious exploits, as any Country in the World.

Peninsula quasi pene Insula, is a tract of land, which being almost encompassed round by water, is joynted to the firm land by some little lithmus; as Peloponnesus, Tanrica, and Pernana.

lithmus is that narrow neck of land, which joyneth the Peninsula to the Continent; as the Straights of Dariene in America, and of Corinth in Greece.

Promontorium, is a high Mountain which shooteth it self into the Sea, the utmost end of which is called a Fore-land, or Cape, as the Cape of good Hope in Africa; Cape Comari in India, &c.

The Imaginary parts of the Earth are such which not being at all in the Earth, must yet be supposed to be so, for the better teaching and learning this Science; and are certain Circles going about the Earth, answerable to them in Heaven, in name.

These Circles are either the Greater, or Lesser: in both which there are 360 Degrees, which in the greater Circles are greater then those in the lesser; and every Degree in the greater is 60 miles.

The greater Circles are either Immutable, as the Æquator. Mutable, as the Horizon, Meridian.

The Æquator is a great Circle going round about the Terrestrial Globe from East to West. It passeth through Habossa, Sumatra, Guiana, &c. The use of it is to shew the Latitude of any Town, Promontory, &c. Now the Latitude is the distance of a place South or North from the Æquator, or middle of the World; and must be measured on the Globe by the Degrees in the Meridian.

The Meridian is a great Circle rounding the Earth from Pole to Pole. There are many Meridians, according to the divers places in which a man liveth; but the chief and first Meridian passeth through the Island St. Michael one of the Azores. The use of it is to shew the Longitude of any place. Now the Longitude of a City, Cape, &c. is the distance off East and West from the first Meridian, and is usually measured on the Globe by the Degrees of the Æquator.

The Horizon is a great Circle, designing so great a space of the earth, as a quick sight can ken in an open field. The use of it is to discern the divers risings and settings of the Stars.

The lesser Circles either are noted with some name, as Tropical of Cancer, Capricorn; Polar, either Arctic, Antarctic; Noted with no distinct name, and are the Parallels.

The Tropic of Cancer (so called of the Cælestial Sign Cancer) is distant from the Æquinoctial 23 Degrees Northward, and passeth through Barbary, India, China, and Nova Hispania.

The Tropic of Capricorn, equally distant from the Æquator Southward, passeth through Libiopia inferior, and the midst of Pernana. And this is to be observed in these Tropicks, that when the Sun is in the Tropic of Cancer, our days are at the longest; and when he is gone back to the Tropic of Capricorn, the days are at the shortest. The first they call the Summer, the last they call the Winter Solstice; the first happening on, or about St. Barnabas day in June; the last on, or about St. Lucie day in December.

The Arctic Circle (so called for that it is correspondent to the Constellation in Heaven called the Bear, in Greek, Arctos) is distant from the Tropic of Cancer 45 Degrees, and passeth through Normay, Muscovy, Tartary, &c.

The Antarctic (so called because opposite to the other) is as much distant from the Tropic of Capricorn, and passeth through Terra Australis Incognita. The use of these four Circles is to describe the Zones.

The Zones are spaces of Earth included betwixt two of the lesser nominated Circles. They are in number five, one over-hot, two over-cold, and two temperate.

The over-hot, or Torrid Zone, is betwixt the two Tropicks, continually scorched with the presence of the Sun.

The two over-cold, or Frigid Zones, are situate between the two Polar Circles, and the very Poles; continually wanting the neighbourhood of the Sun.

The two Temperate Zones, are betwixt the Tropic of Cancer, and the Arctic; and twixt the Tropic of Capricorn, and the Antarctic Circles, enjoying an indifferency between heat and cold; so that the parts next the Torrid Zone are the hotter, and the parts next the Frigid Zone are the colder.

These five Zones are disposed according to the order of the Zones in Heaven; of which thus Ovid Metamor. 1.

Vique dux dextra calum, totidemq; sinistra
Parte fœant Zones, quinta est ardior illis;
Sic omnes inclusim plures distinctis eodem
Cura Dei totidemq; namque tellure premuntur.
Quarum quæ media est, non est habitabilis æstus;
Nix tegit alta duas: totidem inter utramq; locavit,
Temperiemq; dedit, mixta cum frigore flamma.

And as two Zones do cut the Heavens right-side, And likewise other two the left divide, The midst in heat excelling all the rest; Even so it seem'd to the Creator best; That this our World should so divided be, That with the Heavens in Zones it might agree. The midst in heat; the outward most excel In Snow and Ice, scarce fit for men to dwell. Betwixt these two Extrems, two more are fixt, Where heat with cold indifferently is mixt.

Parallels, call'd also Æquidistantes, circle the Earth from East to West, and are commonly ten Degrees asunder: Such are the Parallels which are set down in our Maps and Globes. But there are another sort of Parallels, two of which go to a Clime. These are call'd Artificial Parallels, because they shew the difference of the Artificial days; and are of an unequal breadth, as we shall see in the Table following. The use of these lesser Parallels is to shew the Climates.

Now a Clime, or Climata, is a space of the Earth contained betwixt two Parallels, the middlemost whereof divideth it into two equal parts: serving for setting out the length and shortness of the days in every Country. For under the Æquator the days are of the just length of 12 hours; but afterwards they encrease the length of half an hour for every Clime, till they come to the length of 24 hours, without night at all; which length attained, they encrease no more by hours, but by weeks and months, till they come to the length of half a year. So that we are to reckon 24 Climes Northward, and as many Southward: Those Northward known by the proper name of the place or City over which the middle Parallel of the Climes doth pass, as Dia Meroc, Dia Siene, &c. Those on the South by the same names, with the condition of Anti-Dia-Siene, Anti-Dia-Meroc, &c. 'Tis true, the ancient Cosmographers made but seven Climes in all; at the most but nine. Nor needed they to add more, as the cause stood with them; the extent of the habitable World towards each of the Poles, not being so fully known to them, as it is to us.

And here, because those Climes are not of equal breadth or extent of Latitude, but grow narrower and narrower towards each Pole; in which regard, it is impossible to describe them under any Rule: I have thought fit to add this ensuing Table, partly framed out of the Commentaries of Clavius on the works of John de Sacro Bosco, and partly out of Hues his Book, Of the use of the Globe. The whole divided into 7 Columns. In the first whereof is shewed what Climes are inhabited by the Amphiscii, Periscii, and Heteroscii, which terms we shall anon expound; in the second, is set down the number of the Climes; themselves; In the third the number of the Parallels; In the fourth, the length of the days in Summer; In the fifth, the distance of every Clime and Parallels from the Æquator; In the seventh, the name of the Town or place, through which the middlemost of the three Parallels doth pass in this manner following.

A second use of these Parallels and other Circles, is for distinction of men in their several dwellings, who are (according as they are treated of in Geography) divided in respect of their shadows into Amphiscii, Periscii, Heteroscii; and in respect of their site and position, into Anteci, Periceci, and Antipodes. 1. Amphiscii are such as dwell between the two Tropicks; so called, because their shadows are both ways; sometimes (when the Sun is North) to the South; sometimes (when the Sun is South) to the north.

2. Periscii are such as dwell beyond the Polar Circles so called, because their shadows are on all sides of them.

3. Heteroscii are such as dwell in either of the two temperate Zones; so called, because their shadows reach but one way viz. in our Zone, to the North only; as in the other, to the South only.

4. Anteci are such as dwell under the same Meridian, and the same Latitude or Parallel equally distant from the Æquator; the one Northward, the other Southward: the days in both places being of a length; but the Summer of the one, being the others Winter.

5. Periceci are such as dwell in the same Parallel, on the same side of the Æquator, how distant soever they be East and West; the season of the year, and the length of days being to both alike; but the ones midnight, being the others noon.

6. Antipodes are such as dwell feet to feet, so as a right line drawn from the one unto the other, passeth from North to South, through the Center of the World. These are distant 180 degrees, which is half the compass of the Earth. They differ in all things as seasons of the year, length of days, rising and setting of the Sun, with the like. A matter reckoned so ridiculous, and impossible (if not somewhat worse) in the former times; that Boniface Archbishop of Metz hapning to see a Trade written by Virgilius Bishop of Salzburg, touching the Antipodes; and not knowing what damnable Doctrine might be couched under that strange name, made complaint first to the Duke of Bohemia, and after to Pope Zachary, An. 745. By whom the poor Bishop (unfortunate only in being learned in such a time of ignorance) was condemned of Heretic. But Boniface might the rather be excused, in regard that many of his betters fell also on the self-same error. For venerable Bede, a man whose Books Arch. B. Boniface was not worthy to carry, esteemeth the opinion touching the Antipodes, to be no better than a Fable; neq. enim Antipodarum ullatenus est fabulis accommodandus assensus, in his Book de Ratione temporum, cap. 32. And yet the marvel is the less, considering that he lived in the darker times of the Church, when the state of Learning was in its declination; when S. Augustine and Laetantius, and some others of the Ancient Writers, who lived when learning was at the very height, condemn this point of the Antipodes, for an incredible ridiculous Fable: whose words I could put down at large, did I think it necessary. So that we of these Ages have very good cause (to use the words of the late L. Verrulam) to congratulate the present times, in that the World in these our days, have through-light made in it, after a wonderful manner; whereby we clearly see those things, which either were unknown, or but blindly guessed at by the Ancients.

But to proceed, the second part of the Territorial Globe is the Water, which making but one Globe with the Earth, is yet higher than it. This appears, first, because it is a body not so heavy; Secondly, it is observed by Saylor that their Ships move faster to the shore than from it; whereof no reason can be given but the height of the water above the land. Thirdly, to such as stand on the shore, the Sea seems to swell into the form of a round hill, till it puts a bound upon our sight. Now that the Sea hovering thus over and above the Earth, doth not overwhelm it, must be ascribed only to his Power and Providence, who, hath made the waters to stand on a heap; who hath set them a bound that they should not pass, nor turn again to cover the Earth. The other affections and Properties of the Sea, as motion, saltness, and the like, I willingly omit, as belonging rather to Philosophers, than this present Argument.

The Sea or Water is divided into 1. Oceanus, 2. Mare, 3. Fretum, 4. Sinus, 5. Lacus, 6. Flumina.

Of which and other Waters thus said Ovid in his Metamorphosis.

*Tum freta diffusit, rapidisq. timescere venit
Jussit, & ambire circumdare littora terre.
Addidit & Fontes, & Stagna immensa, Lacusq.
Fluminaq. obliquis cinxit declivis ripis* &c.

Which may be Englisht to this purpose.

He spread the Seas, which then he did command
To swell with winds, and compass round the Land:
To those he adds Springs, Ponds, and Lakes immense,
And Rivers, which their winding Borders fence.
Of those not few Earths thirstily jaws devour,
The rest their streams into the Ocean pour;
When in that liquid Plain with freer Wave,
The foamy Cliffs instead of Banks they lave.

							And

And for Oceanus the Ocean, is that general Collection of all waters, which encompasseth the Earth on every side. A point which Ovid hath determined right enough, but laught at by Horodotus in the former times; who counted it a gross absurdity for any man to relate or write, that the Earth was round, or compassed about with the main Ocean. But Modern Navigations have found that to be true, which he held ridiculous; and which the most learned in those times knew rather by conjecture than by demonstration. Nor were those Ages so acquainted with those ebbs and flowings of the Ocean, and all those other Seas and Rivers which have intercourse with it, as the meanest Sailor at the present. The natural causes of the which seeming so full of difficulty to the best of the Ancients, Experience hath taught us to ascribe wholly to the Moon; at whose Full and Prime the Tides are ever highest, and the Sea most furious. For as soon as the Moon cometh forth from under our Horizon, the Sea beginneth to swell, and floweth towards the East, (as it were to wait upon her, or bear her company) till she come unto the height of our Meridian: after which till her setting or Western fall, the Sea abateth or decreaseth, which we call the Ebb. And when she passeth out of our Horizon towards the Antipodes, the Ocean begins to swell till the height of Midnight, and coming towards our Hemisphere doth again abate. In brief, from the New Moon till the first quarter the Sea decreaseth; from the first quarter to the full it is said to spring: from the full to the last quarter it is said to nepe; and from the last quarter to the prime it springs again. As for the uncertainty of the Tides, varying every day, it is not so perplexed and intricate, but that they which live on the Banks or Shores thereof know well when to look for it; the next days Tide coming for the most part, one hour ten minutes after the time it hapned on the day fore-going.

2. Mare, the Sea, is a part of the main Ocean, to which we cannot come but through some Fretum or Straight; as Mare Mediterraneum. And it takes name, First, either from the adjacent Shore, as Mare Adriaticum, from the City of Adria; Mare Tyrrhenum, from the Coast of Tifany: Or, Secondly, from the first Discoverer, as Mare Magellanicum, from Magellanus, who first found it; Or, Thirdly, from some remarkable Accident, as Mare Icarium, from the drowning of Icarus, the Son of Dædalus.

3. Fretum, a Straight is a part of the Ocean, penned within narrow bounds, and opening a way into some Sea, or out of some Sea into the Ocean, as the Straight of Hellespont, Gibraltar, Fretum Davis, &c.

4. Sinus, a Creek or Bay, is a Sea contained within a crooked or circling Shore, wherewith it is almost environed; as Sinus Persicus, Corinthiacus, &c. and this is sometimes called a Gulf, as the Gulf of Lepanto.

5. Lacus, a Lake, is a great body or collection of waters, which hath no visible intercourse with the Sea, or influx into it; as the Lake of Thrasymene in Italy; the Lacus Asphaltites, or the Dead Sea, in the Land of Canaan, and of this kind properly is the Mare Caspium, though by reason of the greatness of it, it is called a Sea.

6. Flumina, or Fluvius, is a Watercourse continually running, whereby it differeth from Stagnum, or a standing Pool, issuing from some Spring or Lake, and emptying it self into some part of the Sea or some other great River; the mouth or out-let of which is called Ostium: Siberinaque longe Ostia, as the Poet hath it. These are conceived in the Earth, and derive both their birth and continual sustentation from the Air; which piercing the open chinks or Chasmes of the Earth, and congealed by the extreme cold of that Element, dissolves into water (as we see the Air in winter-nights to be melted into a pearly dew, sticking on our glass windows;) and being grown to some quantity, will (like Humbal in the Alps) either find a way, or make a way to vent its superfluity. Which beginning is seconded by the Ocean, which running through the hidden passages of the Earth, joyneth it self with this aerial vapour, and continueth the begun current. This Sea-water (though in it self of a salt and brackish favour, yet) passing through divers windings and turnings of the Earth, is deprived of all unpleasantness, and by how much the Spring-heads of Rivers are remote from the Sea, by so much actually are their waters affected with a delightful relish. Rivers having thus entered themselves into a good course, are never without the assistance of neighbouring Springs and waters; by whose addition they augment their streams, till they dischannel themselves into the Sea. Now there is of Rivers a treble use: First, that out of them Drink may be afforded to man and beast; Secondly, that running through the Earth, as blood through the body, by interlacing it, and sometimes overwhelming it, it might make the Earth able to produce those fruits which are necessary for the life of man. The last use of Rivers is, canals and speediness of conduct; and hereto are required four conditions: First, the depth, because deep waters sustain the bigger burdens, and on their navigation is more safe. Secondly, pleasantness, whereby the passage is ease both with the stream and against it: whereas in Rivers of a violent current or such as fall down by great Locks or Cataracts, the falling or rowing up the waters is as dangerous as laborious. Thirdly, the thinness of the water; for by how much the more slimy and gross a water is, by so much can it carry the heavier burdens. So Tiber, a River of more fame than depth, or breadth, is better for navigation, by reason of its fatness, than the pure and thin waters of the large and excellent River Nilus. Fourthly, the broadness of the Channel, that Ships and other Vessels may conveniently wind and turn, and give way to each other. Some of the old Philosophers reputed this conduct so dangerous that one of them being asked whether he thought the living or the dead were the greater number, would not declare himself, because he knew not in which rank to place such as were at Sea. And Cato Major thought that men never committed greater folly in their lives than in venturing to go by water, when they might have gone by land. I am none of that Sect, yet I cannot but hold with him that said, Dulcissima est ambulatio prope aquas, navigatio juxta terram.

The chief Rivers of Europe, are Danubius, and the Rhone; of Africa, Nilus and Niger; of Asia, Ganger and Euphrates; of America, Orenago and Maragana. Of which and others, more in its proper place.

Thus have we gone over these particulars both of Earth and Water, which are considerable in Geography, and come within the compass of those Anaxarctus of each which Ptolomy calleth τὰ κοινὰ: And having so done, may discover where the difference lieth between Geography and Chorography; which to some men, not rightly looking into the nature of both, seem to be the same. For howsoever a Chorographer doth describe a Country by the bounds, Rivers, Hills, and most notable Cities; yet it is still but the description of some place or Country, and not of the whole Earth universally, which is the proper work of a Geographer. So that Chorography differeth from Geography as a part from the whole: that being as Ptolomy doth very handsomely express it, like the painting of an eye or an ear, or some other member; this, as the picturing of the head, or whole body of Man. But Geography in its full latitude comprehendeth not Chorography only, but Topography and Hydrography also.

Of these the last is the delineation of the Sea by its several Names, Ports, Promontories, Creeks, and other affections; as also of great Lakes and Rivers: which is most necessary for the use of Mariners, and is best done by Petrus de Medius, Peter Novius in his Regula Artis Nauticæ, and Johannes Avicarius in his Speculum Nauticum, the chief writers in the Art of Pilots.

2. Topography is the description of some particular place or City; of which kind was the Book of Stephanus, des villes, or de Urbibus, among the Antients; and the Theatrum Urbium written by Brutus in these latter times; Stow's Book of the Survey of London, the French Antiquities de Paris, and such as these. And of this kind is the description of the Vale of Tempe, in the greater Ortelius; and of those the Elysian fields, the Gardens of Alcinous, and the Hesperides in the ancient Poets.

3. Chorography (as before was said) is the exact description of some Kingdom, Country, or particular Province of the same; unless this last may fall more properly under the motion of Topography. Of this kind the description of the several Estates of Greece written by Pausanias, is of most use and reputation of all the Antients: as that of Camden Clavennæ, for the Isle of Britain; of Levis Guicciardine, for the Low-Countries; Leander for Italy, &c. are amongst the Modern.

4. Geography, finally is an aggregate of all these together, borrowing from Hydrography the description of Seas and Waters; From Topography, that of Towns, Cities; and particular places; and from Corography, the delineations of Regions, Provinces and Kingdoms, which brought into body, make up that Portraiture or Picture of the whole Earth, and every considerable part thereof in writing; which, according to Ptolemy's definition before mentioned, is properly and truly called Geography. In the advancement of which studies, those which have took most pains, with the greatest benefit to Posterity, are the said Ptolemy, Pliny, and Strabo for the elder times;

Mercator, Maginus, and Ortelius, for the later Ages. Of which the two first lived in the times of Antonius Pius, the Roman Emperor, An. Chr. 141, or thereabouts; the other in the reign of Tiberius Cæsar, the unworthy Successor of Augustus: the three last flourishing in the days of our Fathers, about some 80 years ago.

Thus have I briefly summed up those general Præconita, which I conceive are necessary to the knowledge and understanding as well of History as of Geography. Out of which two compounded and intermixt, ariseth that universal Comprehension of Natural and Civil Story, which by a proper and distinct name may be termed Cosmography. And this may well be reckoned amongst mixed Stories; for it hath from Natural History or Geography, the Regions themselves, together with their Sites, and several Commodities; from Civil History, Habitations, Governments, and Manners; and from the Mathematick, the Climates and Configurations of the Heavens, under which the Coasts and Quarters of the World do lie. Of the Utility and Excellency of which study I need say no more, than what hath been already spoken of the several parts, whereof this is only the Result, desiring pardon of the Reader, that I have Christened these imperfect and unworthy Papers by so noble a name: which I desire they may deserve, though I fear they will not. However I will give the venture, and make as speedy and as profitable a discovery, as the times enable me, of the whole World, and the most observable things therein; according to the best light which the reading of Histories and Geographical discourses hath supplied me with; beseeching him who made the World, and ordereth all the Governments and Affairs thereof as to him seems best, to blefs me in the undertaking; and furnish me with fit Abilities both of strength and judgment to go through with it. Ipse enim est qui operatur in nobis & velle & perficere; as the Scripture hath it: And so on in God's name.

The First Book,

and BRITAIN, with the ISLES thereof.

OF THE WORLD: And First of EUROPE.

Of the Creation of the World by Almighty God, and the Plantation of the same by the Sons of Men, sufficient hath been spoken already. We are to look upon it now, as perfected and peopled in all parts thereof, but all those parts united into one Compositum; called therefore by the Græcians, τὸ πᾶν and τὸ ὅλον, because the Summa Totalis, and general comprehension of all things existent. In which respect 'tis called by the Latins, Universum, a name of multitude, but of a multitude united (Universi qui in uno loco versī, say the old Grammarians.) The great body of the World, like the body of Man, though it have many parts and members, is but one body only. A body of so perfect and exact a form, of so compleat a Symmetry in respect of the particular parts, and all those parts so beautified and adorned by the God of Nature, that from the elegance and beauties of it, it was called Κόσμος by the Græcians, and Mundus by the Latins, both names declaring the Composure of it to be full of Ornament; and all those Ornaments conducting Mankind to the knowledge of God. For (as the Christian Advocate reasoneth very strongly,) as he which comes into an house, and seeth all things in it ordered in a beautiful and comely order; utrisque præse crederet Dominum, &c. must needs conceive, both that the house had some wise Lord and Master who had so contrived it, and that such Lord and Master of it was of more worth and excellency then the house and furniture: So (saith he) whosoever doth observe the most eminent beauties of the Heaven and Earth, must needs conceive there is some great and more glorious power who did first create it; disposing of all things therein in such excellent manner.

This Contemplation, together with the notions of a Deity, which naturally are ingrafted in the soul of Man; hath trained up all men in the practise of some Religion though few (comparatively) so happy as to be practised in the true. For though the knowledge and worship of the true God, by reason of some accitions in America, and the Indies, be more generally diffused than in former times; yet is the least part of the World possessed by them who make profession of that Worship. For dividing the whole World into thirty parts, it hath been found by such as have laboured in this search, that nineteen of them are inhabited by Idolaters, who either know no God at all, or worship stocks and stones for gods, even the work of mens hands. Of the 11 parts which are remainings, six are possessed by Jews, Turks, and Saracens; who though they have the knowledge of the God that made them, yet abnegating, or not worshipping the Lord that brought them, they have no part or portion in the true Religion. Then for the five which are behind, two are conceived to be of the Greek Communion, the other three being divided betwixt those of the Church of Rome, and such as otherwise differing in some opinions, pass generally by the name of protestant or Reformed Churches. Which as it sheweth how small a portion of the World is possessed by Christians, who only (though not all of them) have reason to pretend to the true Religion: So doth it shew (I note this only by the way) how falsely those of Rome make multitude of professors to be a sign of the True Church; and then conceive themselves to be such a multitude, as corresponds unto that sign. Faulty, alike both in the position and the Application: For if the multitude of Professors be a sign of the Church, the true Church should be found rather amongst the Heathens or Mahumetans, than amongst the Christians: or if they do restrain their meaning (as I hope they do) to those who make profession of the Christian faith: those of the Greek Communion, possetting two whole parts of five, will be found more numerous than the members of the Church of Rome, though possibly of less esteem in the eye of the World. So infinitely vain was that brag of Bellarmino (though otherwise more modest than the rest of the Jesuits) affirming positively and expressly, Romanam Ecclesiam universum plene orbem possidere, &c. That the Church of Rome is fully of as large a latitude as the World it self. This I have noted by the way, intending to take a more special notice of the state of Religion in the several Provinces of the World; to which now I halloo; premising first this scheme of those several parts, into which it doth now stand divided.

The World is divided into two parts; unknown or not fully discovered; and is divided commonly into Europe and Africa: the last taking up the Southern Continent; the other lying on the North of Europe and America; whereof we shall say somewhat at the end of this Work.

Europe.
Anciently, as Known, either Africa.
Late, as America.

Europe is joyned to Asia, by that space of Earth which is between the heads of Tanais and Duina; Asia is joyned to Africa, by the Egyptian Isthmus; America is divided (as most conjecture) from all of them. Europe is separated from Asia, by a line drawn from the Bay of St. Nicolas, to the head of Tanais, from thence by that River it self all the length of his course, then by Palus Meotis, the Euxine Sea, the Thracian Bosphorus, the Propontis, the Hellspont, and the Aegean. Asia is parted from Africa by the Red-Sea or Gulf of Arabia; and Africa from Europe by the Mediterranean. Africa is greater then Europe, Asia than Africa, America than Asia.

They which have entertained a fancy of resembling every Country to things more obvious to the sight and understanding, have likened Europe to a Dragon; the head of which they make to be Spain; the two wings Italy and Denmark. In like manner they have been curiously impertinent, in resembling France to a Lozenge or Rhomboides; Belgium to a Lion; Britain to an Ax; Ireland to an Egg; Poloponnese to a Plantane leaf; Spain to an Ox-hide (spread on the ground; Italy (which indeed holdeth bell proportion) to a mans Leg; with divers the like Phantasies of a capricious brain; these Countries no more resembling them, then pictures made when painting was in her infancy, under which they were fain to write, This is a Lion, and this is a Whale, for fear the spectators might have taken one for a Cock, and the other for a Cat.

EUROPE, though the least (as being in length but 2800, in breadth but 1200 miles) is yet of most renown amongst us. First, because of the temperature of the Air, and fertility of the Soil; Secondly, from the study of Arts, both ingenious and mechanical; Thirdly, because of the Roman and Greek Monarchies; Fourthly, from the purity and sincerity of the Christian Faith; Fifthly, because we dwell in it, and so first place it.

EUROPE is generally said to be called from Europa, the daughter of Agnor, King of the Phœnicians, brought thence by Jupiter (as the Poets feign) in the shape of a Bull; or as some Histories say by a Cretan Captain named Taurus; as others in a ship whose beak had the portraiture of a Bull upon it. But why the bringing of that Lady into the Isle of Crete, should give denomination to the whole Continent of Europe, whereof that Island is so inconsiderable, and so small a part, I must confess I see no reason. Georgius Becanus, who holds the High Dutch to be the primitive language, which was spoke in Paradise, and loves to fetch all names from thence; not thinking it convenient, that Europe being first inhabited by Gomerians or Cimbrians, should be beholding to the Grecians for its name; will have it called Europe, quasi Ver-bop, by the transposition of the two last letters; Ver, signifying excellent, and bop a multitude (whence we use to say, as thick as Hops) because Europe contains a multitude of excellent people. And on the other side, Becharius, a French Writer, loving as much to bring all names from the Phœnician to Punic tongue, will have it called Europe from Ur-uppa, which significth in that language, a beautiful Countenance, because the Europeans much excelled the Africans in whiteness of skin, and clearness of complexion. But in my mind Herodotus hath best determined of the controversy, who telleth us plainly, 'Οὐδὲν τὸ ὀνόμα. ἔστιν αὐτὸ τὸ ἑλπίδος, &c. That it is utterly unknown, both whence it had the name of Europe, and who first called it so. And yet considering there is a Province in Thrace called Europe, (where of more heretofore) why might not the Asiatics give the name of Europe to this part of the world, according to the name of that Province which lay nearest to them; as the Romans did the name of Africa to the other part of the World, after the name of that particular Province or part thereof, which they first brought under their obedience? Or as the Europeans gave the name of Asia, to the greatest of the three known parts of the World; which properly and originally belonged unto Asia Minor (as it since was called) or rather to those parts thereof which lay next to Greece; as shall be shewn hereafter in convenient place.

The first inhabitants of Europe, as hath been shewn in part already, and shall be shewn more fully in its proper place, were the Sons of Japhet; amongst whom, as the Scripture telleth us, The Isles of the Gentiles were divided, Gen. 10. 5. which includes all the Continent of Europe, and the Isles adjoining. For besides that it is compassed about with the Cyclades and other Isles in the Seas of Greece, together with the Isles of Candy, Sicily, Sardinia, Corsica, the Isles of Britain and Zealand, with their young ones adjacent; Europe it self was formerly taken for an Island; as being invironed round with water, saving where it is joyned on the North-East to Asia the great, which very few of the Antients were acquainted with. And what are the great Countries of Anatolia, Greece, Spain, add Italy, all which did fall to the Posterity of Japhet, but so many Peninsulæ, or Demi-Islands, invironed almost round with one Sea or other? Nor was the name and memory of Japhet so much forgotten by the Children which descended of him; but that the Greeks, who were the first of their European Plantations, retained it a long time in their Japhetic, whom they make to be the Son of Caelum and Terra, and the Father of the wife Prometheus, whom Ovid therefore calleth Satus Japete, in the first Book of his Metamorphoses. So that we see how punctually the first part of Gods blessing was fulfilled upon him; which was, that he would enlarge the borders of Japhet, Gen. 9. 27. The second part thereof, that he should dwell in the Tents of Sem, though it was long before it came to the accomplishment; yet it came at last; and that both in the literal and mystical sense. First, in the literal, when the Posterity of Japhet, both Greek and Romans, made themselves Masters of Judea, or the Land of Canaan, and the Eastern parts, promised to, and possessed by, the seed of Sem: Next in the mystical, when God was pleased to break down the partition wall, and to incorporate the Gentiles of the House of Japhet, into the body of the Church: which for a long time was restrained to the Line of Sem.

Europe may be considered as it stands divided into the Continent, and the Islands: the Continent lying altogether; the Islands as they are dispersed in the Greek, Aegean, Cretan and Ionian Seas, the Adriatick and the Mediterranean, and in the British and Northern Ocean. But in this work we shall discover them, and discourse of them in this following order, dividing Europe into 1. Italy, 2. the Alps, 3. France, 4. Spain, 5. Britain, 6. Belgium, 7. Germany, 8. Denmark, 9. Swetbland, 10. Russia, 11. Poland, 12. Hun- gry, 13. Scalonia, 14. Dacia, and 15. Greece; and speak of the several Islands; as they relate to some or other of these greater Countries.

In all which Countries and Islands, belonging to them, besides the Latine Tongue which is now rather Scholastic, than Natural; and besides the Italian, French, and Spanish, being but as so many corruptions of the Latine; and besides the English which is a Compound of Dutch, Latine, and French; there are in all fourteen Mother-Tongues, which owe nothing at all to the Roman; that is to say, 1. Irish, spoken in Ireland, and the West of Scotland; 2. British, or Welsh, in Wales, and some parts of Cornwal; 3. Cantabrian, or Basquish, in Biscay, about the Pyrenean Hills, and near to the Cantabrian Ocean; 4. Arabick in the Mountains of Granada, called Alpuzaras; 5. Finnick, in Finland and Lapland, Provinces of the Crown of Sweden; 6. Dutch, (though with different Dialects) in Germany, Belgium, Denmark, Norway, Swetbland; 7. Caucasian, which the East-Frieslanders (or Canchi) speak amongst themselves, though to strangers they speak the Common Dutch; 8. Scalovian, in Scalonia, Poland, Hungary, and almost all the parts of the Turkish Empire; 9. Illyrian, on the East side of Istria, and the Isle of Veggia; 10. Greek, in most Provinces and Isles of Greece, by the Greeks themselves; 11. Hungarian, and 12. Epirotique in the mountainous Places of those Countries; 13. Jazygian, on the North-side of Hungary, betwixt Danubius and Tibiscus, and 14. Tartarian, in the Taurica Cbersonesus and other European parts of that barbarous people. And this shall serve for Europe in the general notion. Descend me now to the particular Kingdoms, Regions, and Islands of it; beginning first of all with Italy, contrary to the usage of most Geographers; who commonly begin with Spain or Ireland, as being the furthest Countries Westward, and consequently nearest to the first Meridian, from whence the Longitude was reckoned. Which we shall do by reason of that great influence which the Romans had in most parts of Europe, and many parts of the World besides, in matters as well Civil and Ecclesiastical, which much depended on the power of that Empire, formerly, and on the Usurpations of that Church in the later days.

O F

I T A L Y.

ITALY once the Empress of the greatest part of the (then known) World, is compassed with the Adriatick, Ionian, and Tyrrhenian Seas, except it be towards France and Germany, from which it is parted by the Alps; so that it is in a manner a Peninsula or Demi-Island. But more particularly it hath on the East, the lower part of the Adriatick; on the Ionian Sea, by which it is divided from Greece; on the West the River Varus, and some part of the Alps, by which it is parted from France; on the North in some part the Alps, which divide it from Germany; and on the other parts the Adriatick, which divides it from Dalmatia; and on the South the Tyrrhenian or Tuscan Seas, by which it is separated from the main land of Africa.

It containeth in length from Augusta Praetoria (now called Aost) at the foot of the Alps, unto Otranto in the most Eastern point of the Kingdom of Naples, 1020 miles; in breadth from the River Varo, which parts it from Provence, to the mouth of the River Arso in Friuli, where it is broadest, 410 miles; about Otranto where it is narrowest, not above 25 miles; and in the middle parts from the mouth of Pescara in the Adriatick or upper Sea, to the mouth of Tiber in the Tuscan or Lower Sea, 126 miles. The whole compass by Sea, reckoning in the windings and turnings of the shore, comes to 3038 miles, which added to the 410 miles which it hath by Land, make up in all 3448 miles. But if the Coast on each side be reckoned by a straight Line, then it falls very short of this proportion, amounting in the total, as Cassaldo computes it, to no more than 2550 miles. The whole Country lieth under the fifth and sixth Climates of the Northern temperate Zone, which it wholly taketh up: so that the longest day in the most Northern parts is fifteen hours, and three fifth parts of an hour; the longest in the Southern parts, falling short a full hour and no more of that length.

But these dimensions must be understood of Italy in the present latitude, and extent thereof, and not as it was called and counted in the times of the Romans, neither in the growth nor flourishing fortunes of that State; the bounds of Italy on the West, and North-western parts being then the River Rubicon, which runneth into the Adriatick, not far from Ravenna, and the River Arno, which runneth into the Tyrrhenian Seas by the Port of Ligorn. All that lay West-wards towards the Alps, as it was possessed by the Gauls, so it had also the name of Gallia; and for distinctions sake, of Gallia Cis-Alpina, and Togata, whereof we shall speak more when we come to Lombardy. And it continued, (though a Province of the Roman Empire) distinct from Italy, until the Empire of Augustus; who dividing Italy for the better Government thereof into eleven Provinces or Regions, divided Gallia Cis-Alpina into several parts, (whereof more anon) and reckoned them as Provinces or Members of the body of Italy.

The names hereof so bounded as before, are said to have been very many, according to their several Nations which were anciently of most power and authority in its or to the several fancies of the Name-giver: whereof some being the names only of particular Provinces, were by a Metonymy, taken for, and applied to the whole. Of this last sort, to omit others of less note, were Latium, and Ausonia; the Ausones being a people dwelling about Cales a Town of Campania; and Latium, that particular Province which lieth on the East of Tiber, so called, as most Writers are of opinion, a latendo, from hiding; because Saurn being driven from Crete by Jupiter, his late-bat abiding, did here live concealed:

Latiumque vocari

Matius his quoniam latuisset natus in oris, as the Poet hath it.

Nor was this Virgil's fancy only, but a Tradition generally followed and allowed of by the greatest Writers, as by Eutropius and Herodian and by Münster Felix also, though Varo pretending to more than ordinary knowledge in Antiquity, would have it called Latium, quod lateat inter precipitia Alpium & Apennini, as Servius in his notes on Virgil, because it lieth hidden (as it were) under the Precipices of the Alps and Apennine hills; which cannot possibly be said of Italy properly and anciently so called, no part whereof came near the Alps. The more general names of the whole Country, were, 1. Hesperia, from Hesperus the son of Atlas, as the Poets say, or rather, as Macrobius is of opinion, from Hesperus the Evening Star, as being seated Westward in regard of Greece. 2. Oenotria, either from the abundance and excellency of the Wines, Wine being called oeno by the Greeks; or, as most think, from Oenotrus an Arcadian King, one of the first Planters of the Country: And 3. Italia, the name at first of that part of this Continent which was afterward called Calabria; thut up sit between Golfo de Chiliari (called anciently Sinus Scylliticus) on the South; and Sinus Lamecius, part of the Bay of Golf of Tarentum, on the fourth side of it, For so faith Aristotle in the seventh Book of his Politics, Cap. 10. Τὸ ἀπὸ τοῦ τῆς Ἑσπείας Ἰταλίας τὸ πρῶτον λαβόν, &c. That is to say, That part of Europe which lieth between the Bay Sylliticus and the Bay Lamecius, took the name of Italy, the Gulf being distant from each other about half a days journey. And this Tradition he received (as he there affirmeth) from the best Antiquaries of that Country. The like occurs in Dionysius Halicarnassensis, out of Antiochus Syracusanus, a more ancient Author; the like in Strabo, lib. 6. So named from Italus, a chief Commander of some Nations; who first settled here, and by degrees communicated to the rest of this Continent. Of these three last, thus the Poet Virgil.

Gulf

*Est locus, Hesperiam Graei cognomine dicunt, Terra antiqua, potens armis, atq. ubere gleba,
Oenotrii cultore viri; nunc Fama, minores
Italiam disijcit, ducis de nomine, Gentem.*

Which may be Englished in these words:

That which the Greeks Hesperia call'd, a place Great both in Arms and Wealth, first planted was
By the Oenotrian; since, if Fame not lie,
Was from their Chieftain's name call'd Italy.

Who and from whence this Italus was, we shall see ere long. Mean time we will take notice of the consent or harmony, which is betwixt Aristotle and this Poet: it being said by Aristotle in the seventh of his Politics, cap. 10. that Italus having taught the Oenotrian the Arts of Husbandry, who before were wandering Shepherds only, he caused them by his own name to be called Italians. Let us next take a view of those honorary Attributes which have been given unto this Country, so denominated from him; by Zethus, called Regina Mundi, the Queen or Empress of the world; by Mamertinus one of the old Panegyrist, Gentium Domina, the Mistress of the Nations; by others, Paradisus Mundi, the terrestrial Paradise. But what need more be said then is spoken by Pliny, who hath adorned Italy with this following Panegyrick: Italia terrarum omnium alumna, eadem & parent, nuncine Deus electa que Caelum ipsum clarius faceret, sparsa congrueq. vet imperia, ritus mollires, tot populorum discordes linguas firmosque commercia ad colloquia dilaberet, & humanitati hominem daret. Italy (saith he) the Parent, and withal the Foster-child of all other Nations was elected by the Providence of the Gods, to make (if possible) the very Heavens themselves more famous: to gather the scattered Empires of the world into one body, to temper the barbarous Rites of uncivilized people, to unite the disagreeing languages of so many men by the benefit of one common tongue; and in a word to reform man to his humanity. A very high Encomion doubtless; and yet not much more than the place deserves, with reference to the times when the Author lived.

The People anciently, (and to this day they still partake somewhat of those qualities) were wary of behaviour, sparing of expence, and most greedy of glory, according unto that of Tully, Semper appetentes gloriae praefer citius nationes fuit Romani; by which he doth not mean those only who lived within the walls of the City of Rome, but also their Italian neighbours and associates, Romans by privilege and freedom, though not by birth. They have twice given the Law to the fairest, and most puissant parts of the world; once by their Valour, when the greatest part of the (then known) world was brought under the obedience of the State of Rome, the standing body of whole Armies was principally compounded of Italian bands; And secondly by their Wit, by which they have subdued a great part of Christendom, to the obedience of the Pope and Court of Rome, the standing body of whose Council (though he have Ministers of all tempers and Nations) do specially consist of Italian Heads. In former times here lived the renowned Capitaneus, Camillus the Sword, and Fabius Maximus the Buckler of Rome; the two Scipios, one of which subdued Africa; and the other Asia; Pompey the great, who extended the Roman Empire eastwards to the banks of Euphrates; Cesar, the greater of the two enlarging it Westward to the British, and the Belgick Ocean; besides infinite others of less note in respect of these, though most deserving in themselves. Here flourished also the famous Orators, Cicero, Hortensius, and Antonius; the renowned Historians, Livy, Tacitus, and Salustius; the memorable Poets Virgil, Ovid, Catullus, Tibullus, and Propertius; Plautus, and Terence the Comedians; the Satyrists, Horace, Juvenal, and Persius. So equally were they favoured both by Mary and the Muses, that it is not easte to determine whether they were more eminent in Arts or Arms. What men of pedal eminence it hath since produced, we shall see hereafter, when we are come to take a view of Italy as it stands at present; and to that place we shall defer our Observations of the Air, and disposition of the Soil, with such other particulars as have received little or no alteration in the change of times.

Italy was anciently divided, as most Countries else, into Triber and Nations, as the Latines, Sabines, Tuscanes, Samnites, Campani, Picentini, Fient, Ligures, Tarentini, Lucani, and others of inferior note; whom we shall meet with in the description of those several States into which it doth now (stand divided). But all those Nations being severally vanquished by the Roman puissance, and made up into one body, whereof Rome was the head; it pleased Augustus to divide it into eleven Regions, as before was said, that is to say, Liguria, Haemania, Latium, Campania, Umbria, Samnium, the Picenum, Gallia, Italia, Transpadana, Venetia, and Hispania. In the time of the Emperor Antoninus, the Provinces of Italy were encreased to sixteen, the bounds of the former Regions being somewhat altered; and the three Isles of Sicily, Corfica, and Sardinia, with the two Rhetia's first and second, added to the number. But this distribution also received some change in the time of Constantine the Great who altering both the names and bounds of the former Province, and adding one more to them, made seventeen in all, that is to say, 1. Tuscia and Umbria, 2. Picennus Suburbicarianus, 3. Campania, 4. Apulia and Calabria, 5. Valeria, 6. Samnium, 7. Lucania and the Bruis, 8. Sicily, 9. Corfica, and 10. Sardinia, which made up the Prefecture of the City of Rome; 11. Flaminia and Picennum Annurnianum, 12. Venetia, 13. Aemilia, 14. Liguria, 15. Alpes Cottiae, 16. Rhetia prima, and 17. Rhetia secunda, which made up the Dioceses of Italy, Properly and especially so called, whereof Milain was first the Metropolitan City, Aquileia afterwards.

The Language heretofore was divers; according to the several Provinces and People of it. In Apulia, they used the Messapian tongue; in that which is now called Calabria they spake the Greek; in Haemania, they used the Tuscan; and the Latin in Latium: which last so altered in short time by reason of the commerce they had with the conquered Nations; that the Articles of the Peace made between the Romans and Carthaginians, at the expulsion of the Tarquins, could not be understood (as Polybius saith) by the best Antiquaries of his time. And yet the time between the making of those Articles, and the time of Phibylus, who was contemporary porary with Scipio Africanus, passed not above 300 years. That the Latin tongue was afterwards at any time spoken generally in all parts of the Roman Empire, or of Italy it self, as I see some hold, I can by no means be persuaded. It is true, that the Latin tongue was at first the Civild speech being by special favour granted to the Romans, dwelling but an hundred miles from the walls of Rome, that they should use the Roman Language: which had been a meer mockery, and no mark of favour at all, if the Italian people dwelling out of Latium had used it formerly. And yet this hapned not above 140 years before the times of the Emperors, at what time the Romans were Lords of Italy, Sicily, Sardinia, Cosica, and a great part of Spain. It's true, the Latin tongue in succeeding times came to be understood in most parts of Italy, by reason of the Roman Colonies which were planted among them (being in all no fewer than 150) and their continual resort to Rome on their several buisnesses: it being a great point of the Roman State, not only to have their Laws written, and judgment pronounced by the Pretors for the several Provinces, in the Latin only; but to give audience in the open Senate to none who came thither from the subject Nations, save only in the Latin tongue, their own proper language. Yet for all this, it never grew to such extent as to be the Language of the whole Empire, no more of Italy it self, no more than the English tongue is natural or national to the Welsh, or Irish, though it be generally understood (for the very same reasons) by all of the better sort both in Wales and Ireland. In which regard I am not of their opinion, who think that the Italian (as the French and Spanish) are nothing but corruptions of the Latin tongues, occasioned by the inundations of the barbarous Nations: But rather that the Latin words which occur therein, proceeded from that weak impression which the Latin tongue had made among them, whilst they were under the obedience of that puissant Empire; and that the Italian tongue, as it is now spoken, could not receive so great a change from the Barbarous Nations, none of which tarried long amongst them, but the Goths, and Lombards: nor they so long (the Lombards not at all in the Eastern parts) as to be either the occasions or authors of the alteration. So that the present Language of Italy is a decompound, made up especially of Latin and the old Italian's some notions of the Lombard being mixt with it in the North, and Wells, some of the Goths, in the middle, about Rome it self, and not a little of the Greek, in the East of Naples.

And as the Language to the Religion of the Country, hath received some change. The Christian Faith was first preached in Rome it self, and in Rome first preached by Saint Peter, who came thither in or about the beginning of the Empire of Claudius. The two Apostles Peter and Paul, are generally said by the antient Writers, to be the first who preached the Gospel in that City. A duxerunt Apostoli Petrus & Paulus Romam fundata & constituta Ecclēsia, faith the old Father Irenæus Lib. 4. Cap. 2. To one of these, the first preaching of the Gospel there is to be referred? both being Bishops of that City: That is to say, St. Peter of the Churches of the Circumcision / St. Paul of those which consisted specially of the Gentiles. Now that the Gospel was preached there before Pauls coming, is evident by his Epistle written to the Romans, at Cenchrea the Port-Town of Corinth, six years at least before his being brought over all the World: he testified that their Faith was famous over all the World: and therefore could not count him who had never been there, for the planter of it: And as St. Peter was the first Preacher of the Gospel at Rome, so fount he his Disciples to promulgate it in most parts of Italy. The Roman Martyrologies reckon up eight Bishops of St. Peter's making for so many of the principal Cities of this Country: that is to say, Epaphroditus (not he whom St. Paul speaks of in his Epistle to the Philippians) for Terracina; of old called Ancor, Hermagoras for Aquila, Paulinus for Luca, Appollinaris for Ravenna, Marcus for Atina, Proculus for Padua, Marcianus for Syracusa, and Pencatius for Taurinum in the life of Sicily. But whether St. Peter planted it, or St. Paul watered it, certain I am that GOD only gave it the increase. It could not else have prospered under such a Tyranny, as many, if not most of the Roman Emperors did earnestly endeavor to suppress it with. But Sanguis Martyrum (saith Ecclesiæ) the watering of it with the blood of so many Martyrs, made it grow the faster. And this small grain of Mustard-seed waxed to great a Tree, as over-shadowed all the Provinces of that mighty Empire; and did not only stand it out against all Tempests, but in conclusion did suppress that Superstition and Idolatry, for whose sake all those Princes, till the time of Constantine, did more or less, labour to destroy it. How much it had receded since those times from its primitive purity, and how it did degenerate into Worldly pomp, and Secular policy, by the design and arts of those who boasted themselves to be Successors to that great Apostle, shall be a little touched at, in the story of the Roman Papacy. Suffice it in this place to say, that all the people of this Country, partly in reference to the Pope, partly for fear of the Inquisition, and partly by being kept in ignorance of the Protestant Doctrine (of which they are taught to believe many monstrous things) are all of the Religion of the Church of Rome.

But though the Fountains of the waters of Eternal life, have either been stopp'd or else corrupted by the Popes of Rome; the Rivers which do water this most flourishing Garden, still preserve their beds, and run unmixed and uncorrupted in the same Channels, as before they did. And of these Italy hath as many as any one Country, but none of any long course, by reason that all parts of it are so near some Sea, that most of which rising from the Alper, or the Apennine Hills, by melting of the Snows in Winter and casualty of Land-floods at other times of the year, do often overflow the Country, and for the most part leave an ill Air behind them. Those of chief note are, 1. The River Po or Padus, (the Greeke call it Eridanus) into which Phaeton is said to have been drenched when he fell from Heaven. It ariseth in the Alper, runneth through Lombardy, which it divideth into Cisfidanum and Transfidanum; and having taken in thirty lesser streams, falls with seven mouths into the Adriatick Sea not far from Venice. 2. Rubicon, now called Picciotto, anciently the North-bound of Italy; Hic fluvius quondam Iulii fuit, as it is in Pliny. It runneth into the Adriatick Sea not far from Rimini, or Ariminum now the Port-town to Ravenna, the Haven of Ravenna being long since choked; but of this River more in another place. 3. Arno, which rising in the Apennine falleth in to the Tyfasen Sea, and anciently divided Italy from that side from the Cisalpine Gallis: on the banks hereof standeth the fair City of Florence. 4. Ticinus, which gave name to the City of Pavia called of old Ticinum; it riseth in the Alps, and emptieth it self into the Lake called Lacus Verbanus. 5. Liris now called Gariglià, taketh with the blood of French and Spaniards, in three quarrels for the Realm of Naples, and no less unfortunately memorable for the drowning of Peter de Medicis. 6. Cyathus still rerum Tromfilla Potentia, Tiberis.

And Tiber, unto which was given The Power of all things under Heaven.

Lib. I.

It rifteth from the Apennine Hills, not far from Arethim (now Arezzo) Ja Town of Tusfany (which it parted from the Roman Latium, and the Land of the Sabines) and gliding gently near Cita de Castello, Perugia, and the old Oerietum, paffeth by Rome, and falleth into the Tifcen or lower Sea, at Offia. Here is also, 7. The lake of Thrafymene, near which Annibal defeated Plaminus, the Conful and his whole Army, opening thereby his paffage to the gates of Rome; and 8. The famous Rue of the Braurins, where the Romans overcame Adrahbal the Brother of Annibal, and thereby made a way to the ruin of Carthage. Others of lefs note fhall be mentioned in their proper places.

As for the Mountains of this Country, those of most note are the Alps, and the Apeninne, of which the residue in a manner are but spurs and branches. Of these the Alps being all appertaining to France and Germany, or rather containing many large and entire Provinces which belong to neither, deserve a Tractate by it self. The Apeninne, being proper only to this County, but so that it relates to many and particular Provinces of it, shall be spoken of here. A ledge of Hills which take beginning near Savona, a Town of the Commonwealth and Country of Genoa, situate on the Mediterranean, and fetching a little compass Northwards, extend to the furthest part of Italy, dividing it almost in the very midst : that part thereof which lieth towards the Tyrrhenian, or Tuscan Sea, being called Cispennina; Transpennina, that which lieth towards the Adriatick. Palling in one entire body as far as Acoli, a Town of Marca Anconitana (a Province belonging to the Pope) where they are at the highest; it is there parted into two horns or branches, whereof one runs out to the mount of Gargano, and so unto the Land of Otranto; the other spreadeth it self as far as Calabria, those being the most Eastern Provinces of this noble Continent. Called the Apeninne as some say, a Penna, by which word the Latins used to signify the top or summit of an Hill, by reason of the height and sharp points thereof; as otherwise, quasi Alpes Pœninae, because first overcome by Annibal and his Carthaginians, who the Roman Writers did by the name of Pœni. The Inhabitants hereof by Virgil named Apeninicolæ. But otherwise reducible to some of the neighbouring Provinces. Of this large Mountain molt of the Hills of Italy from Savona Eastwards, are but the excursions; which being of less note, shall be spoken of as they lie before us in the way.

To proceed now to so much of the History of Italy, as concerns the generals we are to know that the first Inhabitants of it (not to say any thing of the fictions of Friar Amnus under the name of Berosus, who will needs have Noah himself come thither shortly after the Flood) were doublets of the race of Cittim or Kittim the fourth son of Javan, one of the sons of Japhet. Who being planted by their Father in that part of Greece, which was since called Macedon; and after spreading themselves further as their numbers increased, peopled Ætolia and the Countries adjoining to it: From whence, desirous of a warmer and more fertile soil, they came in tract of time to the Coasts of Dalmatia, and thence to this Country since called Italy. That they did spring originally from the seed of Cittim (or Kittim, as the Greek Pronounce it) wants not very good Authors. For thus Eusebius, Klimes &c. Διογενες &c. Ποταμιος; that is to say, from the Kittians, or children of Kittim, descended the Latins and the Romans. The same occurs also in the Chronicon of Alexandria. So also faith Cædrenus in his Annals, but with more punctuality. Τελειπος (saith he) the son of Hercules, reckoned in Italy, and after him his son Latinius, &c. καὶ τῆς Κιτινῆς ἀπογονοὶ Λατίνος, from whom the Kettians were named Latins. The same in other words faith Suidas. Nor want there some remainders of this name in approved Writers, besides these authorities; there being a Town in Latium called Ketea, mentioned in Dionysius Halicarnassensis; and a River named Ketus not far from Came, whereof Artyfote speaketh in his book de Mirabilibus. And that they came immediately from the Ætolians, besides the other Arguments which Keimnecerus useth in this point, the nearness, or identity rather of the names doth seem to intimate. For Ætolia being written in the Greek Ætolia, and the letter O being changed into A according to the Ætolick Dialect, which was that used by the Ætolians; the alteration of the name from Atolia and Atiolians, to Ital and Italians, will be thought very eafie, not to be natural; the rather in regard there is an Island near Italy, in the Tyfas Sea, peopled originally by these very Ætolians, which in ancient times was called Æthalia. And if by such an eafie alteration of one Letter only, Italy may derive its first plantation from the Ætolians, as no doubt it may; then may that Italus, the Chieftain of whom Virgil speaks, be no other than Atolus, some man of principal mark and eminency, amongst that People, who had the Conduct of this Colony, when they came for Italy. And this I should believe much rather, than that this Italus was the name of a King of Sicily: It being more probable that Sicily should borrow its first planters out of Italy, than Italy should borrow either Name or People from so small a Kingdom: especially considering that the name of Atolus was famous in thole parts of Greece, ever since Atolus the son of a King of Elir, was Founder of the Ætolian Kingdom. The way thusfluen, and the passages into Italy laid open, it was not long before the Pelagii, another Greek Nation, found the way into it: after whom Saturn out of Crete; and Evander out of Arcadia, with their several followes, came and settled there. Not to say any thing of thole several Colonies, which coming out of Peloponnesus, and the parts of Achaia, planted themselves so thick in the East of Italy, now called Calabria, that of long time it had the name of Magna Græcia. So that the Græcians made the main grofs or body of the Italy people: to which the coming of some Tusfians under the conduct of Tyrrhenus, a Prince of Lydia, in Asia minor, served but as an Accessory, and altered nothing of the Principal. The last which I shall here, were some of the Relicks of Troy, under the conduct of Æneas; who flying from their Native Country, and enraged Enemies, were first cast upon the Coasts of Italy, frick; where having staid a while to refresh his Companies (we shall hereafter take an occasion to consider of the Fable of his loves with Dido) he set sail for Italy, being the place assigned him by the Gods for his Seat and Empire, whither he came with fifteen Ships, which might contain, according to the rate which Thucydides alloweth to the vessels then used, to the number of 1200 men. And there he landed, as it proved in an happy hour: For he was no sooner arrived, but he was lovingly chearished and entertained by Latinius King of the Latins, or of Latiun; whose chiefey City or Seat-Royal was then called Laventum; who much esteeming of this Stranger, as a man whose fate had been his Harbinger, though he could neither manifest his low sufficiency, nor bind him fast enough unto him, but by betrothing him unto Lavinia, his only daughter. Hence grew the Wars betwixt Æneas, and Turnus King of the Rutulii, a former Suter, which being ended in the death of the Rutulian Rival, confirmed Æneas and his Trojans in a sure possession. For now growing with the Latins, or Laventines, into a more constant bond of friendship, by many inter-marriages and mutual kindnesse, they built the against him in revenge of the Rape committed by the Romans on the Sabine Women, seeing his People give ground, called for help to Jupiter, and vowed if he overcame King Aron, to offer up his Armour to him. Aron being vanquished, the Conqueror cutteth down a fair young Oak and hangeth on it all the Armour of the vanquished King: then girding his Gown clove unto him, and putting on his head a Garland of Laurel, he laid the Oak upon his shoulders and marched towards the City, his Army following, and ringing an Epinicion, or song of Victory. To this we must refer the original and beginning of Triumphs. But, Nihil est inventum & perfectum eodem tempore, as the saying is. Tarquinius Priscus long after Romulus, added hereunto the purple Robe, and the triumphal Chariot drawn with four Horses. The other pomp came afterwards, as they grew both in power and pride. Now of these Triumphs there were two sorts; the greater, which was properly called a Triumph; and the lesser, vulgarly called the Ovation, which differed from one another in many circumstances. For, 1. The Triumph made his entrance in a Royal Chariot, and was met only by the Senators in their Robes; but the Ovation made his entrance on foot, and was met only by the Knights and Gentlemen of Rome. 2. The Triumph had a Laurel Crown, and the Ovation had only a Garland of Firr, with Flutes and Hautboys playing before him. 3. The Triumph was attired in a Garment of State, which they called Vestis Trabeata, but the Ovation in a plain Purple Gown only. 4. In a Triumph, the Soldiers cried out, To Triumph; but in an Ovation they ingeminated only O, O, O, from the often doubling of which word, it had (as some think) the name of an Ovation. 5. And lastly the Triumph used to Sacrifice a certain number of Oxen; but the Ovation a Sheep only, from whence the name is properly to be derived.

Now there was three cases in which the Conqueror was to be content with this lesser Triumph. 1. If the number of Enemies whom they slew in Battle exceeded not 5000 men; or that he had not so much overcome them by force, as by perswasion or subtilty. 2. If the War had been slight, curious, or not lawfully managed. And 3. If it were against an Ignoble Enemy. And of this last we have a fair instance in P. Rupilius, who having got the victory in the Servile War, (a victory of great importance to the State of Rome) was yet content with an Ovation, ne Triumphi dignitatem Servili inscriptione violaret, as it is in Florus. As for the greater Triumph, they were indeed very full of magnificence; the pomp whereof, who list to see, may find it in the Triumph of Paulus Emilius described by Plutarch; though by that which hath before been said, we may conjecture somewhat at the glories of it.

And yet this Honour was not always vouchsafed to those who had best deserved it, there being many ways whereby it might be forfeited or denied in a factious State, and jealous of the over-greatness of the men of War. For, 1. Sometimes it was denied a victorious General, by the strength of a contrary Faction; and so Pompey denied Mitellus the honour of a Triumph for the Conquest of Crete: 2. Sometimes the Conqueror himself is willing to decline it, for fear of envy: And so Marcellus in Plutarch, after his Conquest of Sicily, having Triumphed twice before, refused that honor: his reason was, quod si non cum viro tunc & deique, for fear his Third Triumph might become a matter of envy. 3. Sometimes the Soldiers, having been ill paid, or otherwise not well treated by their Commanders, opposed them in their suit for it: and this was the case of Paulus Emilius, who questionless had missed this honour for not dividing amongst them the spoils of Greece, as he once had promised if Servilius and others of the Senate, making it their own case, had not sticked hard for him with the Soldiers. 4. It was sometimes denied, because the General had born no publick Office in the Commonwealth: for so, in Livy, when Lucullus coming Pro-consul out of Spain required a Triumph, the Fathers answered, that he had indeed done things worthy of that honour, but that they had no precedent for it; ut qui neque Consul, neque Dictator, neque Pretor Res gessisset, Triumpharet. 5. Sometimes the Generals themselves omitted it for the furtherance of some of their other purposes: And so Cæsar coming towards Rome a Victor, at the same time the Consuls were to be chosen, laid aside his demand of the Triumph to sue for the Consulship; it being the custom that such as demanded the Triumph should abide without the City, and such as sued for the Consulship must of necessity be within. 6. Sometimes it was denied, when the War had been undertaken without the Command of the Senate: in which respect the Triumph was denied unto Manlius on the conquest of Galatia by him, to the great enlargement of the Empire, quia causam Belli Senatus non approbavit, because he had no Commission from the Senate for it. 7. There was no Triumph granted if the War had been Civil, because in all such Wars whosoever was Conqueror, the Commonwealth was a loser by it. And therefore Pompey and Metellus having vanquished Sertorius and his Party in Spain, would have it called a Foreign, not a Civil War, because they would not lose their Triumph. Externum magis id bellum quam Civile videri voluerunt, ut triumpharent. 8. If the Victory had not been obtained without great loss on the Romans side; in which regard Valerius after his conquest of the Galls was denied this honour, quia magis dolor civium amissionis quam gaudium fuisse hostium prevaluit, faith Alexander ab Alexandro. 9. And lastly, the Triumph was denied a General, if the service had not been performed in his own Province: And so we find that when Lucius and Nero, being Consuls, had vanquished Allobroges, Lucius only had the Triumph, though Nero was the man that had won the day, because the Field was fought in the Province of Lucius, to whom Nero came but as an Accessory, or assistant to him.

And these are all, or at the least the principal causes of hindering or omitting this great Honour, indeed the greatest that the Free-State could be capable of. But after when the Commonwealth was changed into a Monarchy, it began to be laid aside for altogether, as too great for subjects; and was first purposely neglected by Vespasian Agrippa, the Establisher of Angustus in the Roman Empire, who when he had a Triumph decreed unto him, for quenching certain Rebellions in Asia, and his quiet settling of that Country; to give Posterity an example, refused to accept it. And this example being (as it were) a rule to others, occasioned that this custom was in short time quite laid aside; and that no man under the degree of an Emperor triumphed solemnly; all others from thenceforth, being content with the Triumphal Ornaments, ut ait Suetonius, in his words of Dion. And though Belisarius having subdued the Kingdom of the Vandals in Africa, is said (600 years after the death of Agrippa) to have had the honour of a Triumph yet in propriety of speech, it was nothing but an honourable presenting of himself and his Prisoners before the Emperor, and was so far from the magnificence of a Roman Triumph, that it wanted many of the solemnities used in an Ovation. Nor did the Emperors themselves much affect this honour, either because too popular, or too agreeable, or that they thought it was beneath the Imperial Majesty; the last (as I remember) that made use thereof to set forth his glories, being Valerius Probus, after his victories in or about the year 284 of our Saviour's Birth.

In the next place look we on the encouragements and rewards of the Common Soldiers: For, besides the setting out of Lands and dwellings for the poorer sort, in which they might rest themselves when they are pait in service; and besides the large donatives which the General in his Triumph did bestow upon them; they had their mural Crown for him that first scaled the Walls, a naval Crown for him that first boarded the Enemies Ships, a Camp Crown, or Corona Castrifera, for him that had forced a way into the Tents or Camp of the Enemy's City Crown, or Corona Civica, for him that had preserved the life of a Roman Citizen. Not to say any thing of those Chains and Bracelets which Soldiers of inferior merit were adorned withal. By which encouragements, and the good conduct of their Councils in the Senate, the Roman affairs succeeded so prosperously, and their Dominions were enlarged so immensely, that never any Commonwealth had so large a growth.

And yet the greatness of this State is neither totally, nor only to be attributed to the Consular Government. For though the Walls of this great building were raised by the Consuls, yet the Foundation of the same was laid by the Kings, and the roof thereof laid on by the Emperors, who were the honour of Monarchical Government, whenever any great and imminent danger did seem to threaten them, they were fain to lay aside their confidence in the rule of their Consuls, and betake themselves to the Command of one Sovereign Officer, whom they called Dictator. Of which, and other the changes happening in the State of Rome, take this short abstract from Corn. Tacitus. "Urban Romam à principio Reges habuerunt, &c." "The City of Rome, was in the beginning Governed by Kings. Liberty and the Consulship L. Brutus brought in. The Dictators were chose but for a time: The Decemviri lasted not two years, neither had the Consular authority of the Triumvirs of the Soldiers any long continuance, or Chinas or Sylla's dominion. Pompey and Craffus quickly yielded to Cæsar's Forces; Lepidus and Antony to Augustus. So Tacitus in brief of these publick changes: Of which, as to the Decemviri, which were instituted only on a particular occasion for the reforming of the Laws by those of Athens; and the Military Tribunes of Consular Authority ordained to divert common people from seeking after the Consulship; I shall here say nothing. But as for the Dictators, being Officers of a Supreme power, and such as made way for the Emperors in the clove of all; I shall enlarge a little further. They were called Dictators à diando, because they prescribed what they pleased unto the people; which they were bound to execute and not dispute. Hence that memorable jest of Julius Cæsar, who being told that Sylla had resigned his Dictatorship, though by the decree of Senate made perpetual to him; returned this Answer, that Sylla made perpetual to him; returned this Answer, that Sylla knew not how to dictate, or to play the Dictator. They were also called Populi Magistri, or the peoples Masters, because from them lay no appeal unto the people (as did from all the rest of the Roman Magistrates) during the whole time of their Command, which ordinarily continued for six months; yet so, that if they did in the mean time settle the affairs of the Commonwealth; they resigned it sooner; if the necessities of the State required a longer continuance in it, they were chosen again. The names of as many of them as I have met withal, I have here subjoynt together with the services they did the Publick, in the time of their Office.

The Dictators of Rome.

- | | | |
|-----|----------|--|
| | A. U. C. | |
| 253 | 1. | Titus Lartius , chosen upon occasion of a general War made by the Latins upon Rome ; the first that ever had this Office. |
| 257 | 2. | Anulus Posthumus , chosen to pursue that War, which he ended with the slaughter of 30000 of the Latins . |
| 295 | 3. | L. Quintinus Cincinnatus , chosen to this Office from the Plough, overcame the Volsi ; chosen again A. U. C. 314, to suppress the sedition raised by Sp. Maelius . |
| 318 | 4. | Emilius Mamercus , overcame the Vientes and the Fidenates , and was thrice in Eleven years called unto this Office. |
| 338 | 5. | Pub. Servilius , who finally vanquished the Fidenates and the Lavinians . |
| 354 | 6. | Furius Camillus , who finally destroyed the City of the Volsi , and being chosen a second time A. U. C. 362, preserved his Country from the Galls : thrice chosen after this upon new occasions. |
| 375 | 7. | Tir. Quintinus Cincinnatus , chosen in the War against the Latins . |
| 385 | 8. | L. Manlius , elected in the time of a grievous Pettilence, to find a way for the appealing of the gods. |
| 396 | 9. | C. Sulpicius . |
| 418 | 10. | Martius Rutilius , the fifth Dictator chosen out of the Commons. |
| | 11. | L. Papirius , subdued the Samniters . |
| 438 | 12. | Cassius ; by whom the Samniters were again vanquished. |
| | 13. | Emilius , who also overcame the Samniters . |
| | 14. | Leulius , who triumphed also over the Samniters . |
| 451 | 15. | L. Ebulicellus , who finally subdued the Æqui and the Volsi . |
| | 16. | Corn. Rufinus . |
| 467 | 17. | Q. Hortensius , chosen for appeasing a difference between the Senate and the Commons, who had fortified himself in Janiculum , one of the Hills whereon Rome stood. |
| 518 | 18. | Cl. Glicius , forced to resign his Office to |
| 505 | 19. | Atilius Colatinus , the first that exercised his Office out of Italy : he was chosen in the first Penic War. |
| 536 | 20. | Fabius Maximus , chosen in the War against Annibal . |
| 537 | 21. | M. Junius , chosen upon the great defeat which the Roman Forces had at the Battle of Cannæ . |
| 545 | 22. | L. Manlius Torquatus , chosen upon the death of Marcellus Consul slain by Annibal . |
| 672 | 23. | L. Sylla , (descended from that Corn. Rufinus , who had been formerly in this Office) having by force of Arms suppressed the Faction of Marius and Cinna , made himself Master of the City, and caused himself to be chosen Perpetual Dictator , after the Office had been intermitted; for the space of 127 years: which Office having exercised with a great deal of cruelty, he resigned with as great a confidence. |
| 707 | 24. | C. Julius Cæsar descended from Julius the son of Afcenius , who was the second King of the Trojan |

These two gave way each to other; and both to death. Next these, as well in factions and designs, as blood and alliance, succeeded Cæsar and Pompey: Two men never truly parallel'd since their own times. Cæsar had a wit to invent or pregnant, a heart to execute so stout, and to both a Fortune so favourable, that he durst undertake what no man dared; and his performances commonly were answerable to his undertakings: Pompey, a man greater than his own or his friends wishes, had triumphed over all the parts of the known World; but could he but have brook'd an Equal, he had never met Superior. Had these two lived in divers Ages, or exercised their valour on the common Enemy, the World had been too little to yield them employment.

But turning their forces one against the other, Pompey overthrown in the Field, was basely murdered in Egypt; and Cæsar, victoriously conqueror in Thessaly, was barbarously massacred in the Capitol. And though none of these four Worthies could settle the Monarchy in himself, yet this shall be to their eternal memory recorded, that they first opened a passage to others, and first moved the stone, which rolling along, tumbled the People out of the Government.

6. After the overthrow of Pompey, and death of Cæsar, the Common-wealth might have recovered Liberty, if either Cæsar had left no heir, and Pompey no children: or rather, if Antonius, a man of an unquiet and turbulent spirit, had not begun new troubles. For he knowing the affection of the common people unto young Octavius, Cæsar's heir; and hearing the continual report of his approach to Rome for his inheritance, did by Decree of the Senate restore Sextus the son of Pompey to his blood and honours; hoping that they two, inheriting their Fathers hatreds, would like Pellets in a Boys Pot-gun drive out, each other; and so he might remain Lord of the whole. But young Octavius was too old to be so fetcht over, and had moreover more desire to revenge his Fathers death on Brutus and Caïus, than turn himself upon an Enemy that neither had done, nor could do him any hurt. At his first entrance into Rome he declared himself Cæsar's heir, though some regarding more his welfare than honour, dissuaded him from it. His retinue at his entrance was but small, his behaviour gentle and courteous, so that all had cause to love him, none to fear him. His first business was to Antonius, then possessed of all Cæsar's Estate. His words as modest as his Petition just. Antonius answer somewhat churlish, forbidding him to meddle in matters of State, adding that he was too young to take upon him the name of Cæsar, and so dismissed him unsatisfied, and with discontentments. AVGUSTUS (for by that name we mean to call him, though he was not yet so called) perceiving that Antonius answer, though in few but a delay, was in effect a denial, insinuated into the acquaintance of Cicero, then potent among the Senators, and a capital Enemy of Antonius; by whose means the Lords of the Senate began to cast great affection towards him. Next in a solemn Oration to the People, he let them know, how he intended to have distributed his Fathers wealth among them; and how Antonius did unjustly detain it from them both. Certainly, there is not any thing prevaileth sooner with the ignoble Man than hope of gain. No sooner had he finished his speech, and given away that to them, which he thought impossible to get for himself, but all was in a tumult. None was so sparing of his words, but he had some curse in store for Antonius; every one vowing the destruction of that man, whom they supposed to deprive them of AVGUSTUS donative.

7. In this hurly burly Antonius quits the Town, and is by the general voice of the Houses declared an Enemy to the State. An Army is given to Hircius and Pansæ, then Consuls: AVGUSTUS, aged but 18 years, being proclaimed Imperator, and made head of the League against the common Foe. AVGUSTUS, as he loved not to absent from a necessary War, so he always used to reserve himself from the dangers of it; and therefore he committed the whole enterprise unto the Consuls: well knowing that though the Officers and Soldiers took most pains to get the victory, yet would the honour of it be referred to him, as Imperator; Whereas if any thing fell out to the Army not well, his being a Non-agent in the business, would bring his honour off without stain. The Consuls therefore proceeded in the War against Antonius: who seeing little possibility of prevailing, resolved to sell the loss of his own liberty and his Soldiers lives, at a dear rate. And indeed the fortune of the day was so equally shared, that as the Consuls might boast of the vanquishment of Antonius, so Antonius might triumph in the death of the Consuls.

AVGUSTUS had now as much as he could desire, more than he expected; a victorious Army at his service. He therefore applies himself to them, that giving that among them which he had in present, and promising them greater favours, according as his fortune and their valour should advance him; he bound them unto him in an eternal bond of allegiance, and made them the first step by which he ascended the Royalty. The Lords of the Senate hearing of the young mans fortune, thought it best to hearing these hopes even in their Cradles, and to that end, decree the honour of overcoming Antonius, not to belong to AVGUSTUS, but to Decius Brutus; for whose defence (being besieged by Antonius in Mutina) their Army had been levied. Nor did they think this frost of unexpected unkindness, sufficient to nip the blossom of his hopes; but they deigned him the Consulship. These harsh proceedings compelled AVGUSTUS (his honour now lying at stake) to enter Rome as Conqueror, and force the Fathers to grant him his desires. Having thus gotten what for the time he aimed at, he generally shewed himself grateful to all, and particularly to some of the Soldiers, paying them what was behind by promise, and openly protesting that without their aid he durst not have adventured into the Capitol. So by keeping his day with the Military men, and shewing his noble and generous nature in a thankful commemoration of their service; he added stronger bonds to such as were already his own, and won many daily to his side, which before were either neutral, or adverse-ries.

8. Antonius in the mean time was not idle, but knowing that Lepidus was beyond the Mountains with a puissant Army, he posted thither, and so far prevailed with the Soldiers, that he was admitted into the Camp; where the General entertained him with all expressions of love and welcome. Antonius perceiving the facile nature of Lepidus, soon persuaded him to lead his forces into Italy; promising him no less than the Lordship of the World, if he durst but shew his face to the Romans. AVGUSTUS having continual news of this combination, and fearing much the prowess of Antonius, now strengthened; conceived no course so fitting and convenient to his ends, as to join friendship, and to enter into confederacy with them. And this he did, not for any good will to either, but because being destitute of means to resist them, and also to revenge the death of his father Julius, which he much laboured; he might with their forces oppress Caïus and M. Brutus, and, as occasion fell out, deal with them being severed. This League was solemnly confirmed by a bloody Proscription immediately following. Wherein, to be revenged on their Enemies they betrayed their Friends. A lamentable and ruthless time; good and bad, rich and poor, being alike subject to the slaughter. Now was the time of Julius Cæsar's Government thought to be the Golden Age; and every one began to curse Brutus and Caïus as the Authors of these present miseries; whom they but lately honoured as the Restorers of the Common liberty. Nay the very Kings were deemed tolerable, and such as lived in their days, happy. The poor Romans had not changed the Tyranny, but the Tyrants: Yea, they had three for one into the bargain. Such is the condition of us men, that we know not our own happiness in the fruition, but the want. Two of these Triumviri glutted themselves with blood, taking pride in hearing the lamentable cries and groans of the People. Antonius on the contrary, shewed himself much grieved at this barbarous cruelty; so that his consent seemed rather forced than voluntary. But this Proscription, though in it self cruel and tyrannical, produced some good and profitable effects in the Republick. For when by this Proscription and the ensuing Civil War, the stoutest of the Nobles and Commons were made away, few being left which durst censure the old Liberty; Antonius did the more easily establish his Monarchy, and restore peace to the City. Moreover the people against Antonius and Lepidus, that incensed the people against Antonius, found them always his fast friends, if not for love to him, yet in spite to them.

Tyranny,

9. But to proceed; Antonius and Antonius leaving the guard of the City to Lepidus, with joint-forces march against Brutus and Caïus, both overthrown by Antonius; whom AVGUSTUS did therefore put upon that service, as well to diminish Antonius forces, as to keep his own entire. As for himself, either he in policy suffered himself to be driven out of the field by Brutus, to make Antonius more work; or else indeed durst not abide the Battle. Such end had Brutus and Caïus, two men whom fortune seemed to be in love with on the sudden, and did as suddenly forsake them. Brutus the more accomplished man; Caïus the more expert Soldier. I pass over AVGUSTUS's Wars in Italy, Antonius in Asia, the discontents between them, and their reconciliation by the means of Octavia, sister to the one, and wife to the other Emperor. As also how joining forces together to oppress Sebastus, then Lording it over the Sea, and proud with the conquest of Sicilia; they received him into the Confederacy, and joyed the Island of Sardinia to his other conquests. To recompence which kindness, Sebastus invited the two Generals aboard his Admiral-Galley; and after a bountiful entertainment, returned them safe to their Camps. I scarce have ever heard of so great an over-sight among so many able Politicians. And much I marvel with my self, upon what confidence AVGUSTUS and Antonius durst so far trust their persons to a reconciled Enemy; or on what reason Sebastus having both of them in his power, would let slip so lightly that advantage, greater than which was never offered to a discontented and ambitious person. This I am sure of, that he afterwards repented it, and could have wished that he had harkened to the voice of Menas his old servant, who had persuaded him to make his belt of that opportunity. The Kings of France and Aragon, of old Enemies made new Friends, had the like interview at Savona: which that notable Historiographer and States-man Guicciardine describeth with much wonder and commendation. Yet, in the like case, have many, and, as I think, worthily condemned Lewis the 11. of France, and Charles of Burgundy, the Arch-politicians of those days, in that Lewis at Peronne put himself into the hands of Charles his Enemy, who also after a short restraint, dismissed him.

10. These solemn expressions of amity between the three Generals being thus ended, and Antonius gone for Egypt, AVGUSTUS then began to contrive his establishment in the State; though with the ruin of his Colleagues. He beginneth first with Sebastus, having by gifts and promises drawn Menas unto his side, who by reason of his inwardness with his Master, knew most of his designs. By the direction of this Menas and the assistance of Lepidus, he quickly overthrew Sebastus; who flying death in Europe by the hand of AVGUSTUS, found it in Asia, by the commandment of Antonius. After this victory, AVGUSTUS, either having, or pretending a quarrel against Lepidus, entereth into his Camp, seizeth his person, and depriving him of all honours, coninceth him to Rome. A man that half against his will, stumbling upon the Government, had beyond any desert of his, enjoyed ten years continuance of Empire and prosperity. An action of a very high nature, and such as AVGUSTUS durst not have ventured on, if Antonius had been in Italy. He therefore advicely removed him out of his way, before he would attempt the same. It hath been ever a chief Maxim in Court-Flattery, to remove that man out of the way, under pretence of some honourable charge, whom we intend either to call from his present honours, or else to make less potent with Prince and People. For which cause also AVGUSTUS perfwaded Antonius's absence from the City, to bring him at the last into discredit and contempt. For well he knew that his dotage on Cleopatra, could not but draw him into many inconveniences: neither could his neglecting the State, to riot with his Lemman, be other then distastful to the Lords and People. Next, he commanded his sister Octavia to leave her husband Antonius's house, yet privately he perfwaded her to live there still, and bring up his children; that so the Romans seeing her noble demeanor and love to her husband, might the more heartily detest him, who so ignobly and unkindly had rejected her. To add more fuel to this flame of hatred, he readeth Antonius's Will unto the people, in which many of the Roman Provinces were bequeathed to Cleopatra's children, and other things ordained to the common prejudice. Antonius likewise preferred many Bills against AVGUSTUS, as that he had deposed Lepidus from the Triumvirate; that he had divided Italy among his own Soldiers only, that he had not restored the Ships borrowed to make War against Sebastus. These discontents scconded with an ambitious hope of prevailing, made them both resolute to refer all to the decision of a Battle. Antonius had a Fleet consisting of 500 Ships, high built, and trimmed up rather for a Triumph than a Fight. His Land Forces consisted of 100000 Foot, and 12000 Horse, Antonius had the like number of Horsemen, 80000 Foot, and 250 good Men of War, snug and close, built more for use than ostentation. The Rendezvous is Actium, a place seeming to be marked out for notable defeats: here being fought almost in our Fathers days, that famous battle, wherein the Venicians gave the world to understand, that the Turkish Forces by Sea were not invincible. Antonius was on the Offensive-side, and therefore much doubted whether it were better to give the Onset by Sea or by Land. Cleopatra, whose words were Oracles, perfwaded him to the Sea-fight; not that she thought it more safe, but that if Antonius lost the day, the might with more facility escape. To this resolution, when most of the Captains had gained fair agreed; one of the old Soldiers thus bluntly gained said it. "What a miserable security art thou possessed with, most noble Emperor? Where is that ancient force, fight wherewith thou hast formerly prevented all disasters, & turned the Enemies devices on their own heads?" Confider with thy self, most noble General, what uncertain friends the Wind and Sea are? To how fickle an Element thou dost trust the fortunes? Let the Egyptians and Phenicians, old Mermaids, born and nurt up in the Sea, follow this kind of warfar. But let us try true Roman spirits try our valour on the firm Land, and there fight for thy Empire, and our own Lives. Perhaps

"happ'st thou dost mistrust our faith: Look here, Antony, (with that he opened his bosom) and thou shalt see many an honourable scar got in thy service. We are now too old to learn new Treasons: Alter therefore thy resolution, and, to please a woman, canst not away to many of thy faithful Followers. Certainly the irresistible powers of Heaven when they decree a mans destruction, overthrow those Counsels by which he should escape it. Antony turns his deaf ear to this Soldier's wholesome advice, and borrowing from Cleopatra two or three kisses (as if from the fountain of her lips he had derived all his courage) without any more ceremony prepareth unto the battle.

12. AUGUSTUS on the other side, seeing a necessity of a Sea-fight, was yet in this comforted, that his Vessels were more useful and better manned, though fewer than his Enemies: that his men to him were faithful, and by reason of their many Victories, in good heart: From Antony were daily revolted some Kings and Captains of note, to the great encouragement of the one side, and disheartening of the other. The whole charge of the War he committed to M. Vespasianus Agrippa, who failing in no duty of a good Captain, took from his Gallies whatsoever might be impediments to the valiant, or shelter for the cowardly: all that was cumbersome to his own men, or advantageous to the Enemy. Things thus ordered, and the battles ready to join, Antony Cesar standing where he might see and be seen of all, is said to make this or the like Oration. "Fellows and Companions in Arms, I suppose it needless to hear you, which never were acquainted with fear: or bid you overcome, which never yet knew what it was, not to vanquish. Conquest hath always fast upon the edge of your swords, and victory been written in your foreheads. Be not now backward to add this one to your other Triumphs. When after the death of my Father Julius of famous memory, I first dealt in matters of War, I rather found than made you good Soldiers. And during this twelve years service under me, neither have you been wanting in the duty of faithful followers, nor I (I hope) of a vigilant and grateful Leader. Sure I am, I expressed my self as far as I could, and more I would, had I been able. Let not the number, nor the greatness of the adverse Gallies any ways afflict you. The hugeness of their Bulks make them unfit for employment; and the multitude, one clogging and hindring the others, may as much further our Victory as theirs. They exceed us in multitudes of Men, we them in number of Soldiers. The meaning of the word Pilot is unknown among them. And for their Mariners, the best of them are but Carters, Reapers, and Harrow-men, raked out of the field; the rest, the excrement of common Prisons, where with the Vessels are loaded, not manned. The General is indeed a Captain for such a selected Company. It is the same Antony, whom you once drove out of the field, before Mutina. I verily persuade my self, that neither he dares think of recovering, or you of losing your former glories. It is the same Antony, who being shamefully chased out of Parthia; only in that he was not vanquished, proclaimed himself Victor. It is the same Antony, who intended to make Rome subject to the Egyptians; and to distribute the Provinces purchased with the blood and virtue of our Ancestors, amongst Iran and her fellow Chamber-maids. Nay indeed it is not Antony at all, but the shadow only of that substance, which now is hid in Cleopatra's Cabin. Courage then brave men of Arms; be, as you have still been, Conquerors. To speak more, were to detain you from victory. Only this, Call to mind your ancient valour. Remember that I am Cesar, you Romans.

13. This speech animated the new Soldiers, and confirmed the old; so that with a general acclamation they gave the assault. Death, wounds, and blows, diffied in divers fashions, and served in by several men, were the best delicacies prepared for these unwelcome visitants. Cleopatra beholding the Battle, and doubting the success, through the thickest of Antony's Fleet, made away with the 60 Gallies appointed for her Guard. This disorder made the breach, at which the Victory entered. Antony seeing her flight, left his Squadron also, and being taken into her Gally, hoysed sail for Egypt: Herein playing the part of a cowardly Soldier; whilst each of his Soldiers executed the office of a courageous General. For they so absolutely perished in the fight, that AUGUSTUS was fain to offer them mercy sooner than they would accept it. At last they all swear allegiance unto him. The Victory being thus gotten, AUGUSTUS (no loser of advantages) speedeth into Egypt, which he reduceth into the form of a Province; making the people pay, for fine, twenty millions of Gold. By receiving this money, he so weakened them that they had no ability to raise an after-war; and by distributing part of it among his Soldiers, he confirmed them in obedience. As for Antony, he seeing his fortunes desperate, redeemed the honour lost in his life, by a noble heroic death. And Cleopatra ended her life not long after also. A woman more well-favoured, than fair; well-spoken, rather than either. Antony's Courtiers had seen many Ladies more lovely, none more prevailing; men being chained to her by the ears, rather than by the eyes.

14. I willingly omit AUGUSTUS entry into Rome, as also the state and magnificence of his Triumph. His Victory he used so justly, that none felt the fury of the War, but such as were slain in the Battle. To assure himself of Antony's adherents, was his first care: to which end he burnt in the Common Forum, the Coffers of Antony, unopened; wherein all his Letters from his friends in Rome had been inclosed: well knowing that as long as any thought themselves suspected Adversaries; they would never leave themselves true Friends. To the Senators and Magistrates he made sumptuous feasts; to the Common People he exhibited magnificent and pleasing Stage-Plays; and, with all variety of pleasure, banished from both, as well sorrow for the old Proscription, as fear of a new. But this was only as a preparation to his main design. There were two men most dear unto him, and privy to his Council, Mecenas and Agrippa; which in the object of their love, differed only in this: Mecenas was a lover of AUGUSTUS, Agrippa of the Emperor. Mecenas was of the rank of Knights, a man of good and bad parts equally compounded; when his business required care, vigilant and circumspect; at leisure time, excessively riotous. Agrippa was the first of his house; a man alike fit for Camp and Council; one neither careless of a good name, nor covetous of a great. For although he only was the man which vanquished Sexsus, and Antony; yet well skilled in the humors of Princes, he gave AUGUSTUS the honor of all his Conquests; making the virtue not the reward, but the end of his Actions. So by doing nobly, and speaking modestly of it, he was without envy, but not without glory. With these two, AUGUSTUS withdrew into a private Closet, and then spake unto them in this sort. He made first unto them a long discourse of the Civil Wars; then added, "That having by his fortune, and the valour of his Soldiers, put an end to the troubles; he was unresolved what to do; Whether to resign the Empire to the People, or retain it still in his own hands: That in a business of such such importance, he durst not rely altogether on his own wisdom: That he had made them his Judges, as men that could speak soundly, and durst speak freely: That he knew them to have more care of his honour, than profit; but of the Common-wealth, more than both: That his Counsels, which course soever he took, would not be by them eliminated. He therefore intreated them to consider what was to be done, and to give up their opinions in it.

15. Agrippa after a short silence thus began. "I know, thou canst not but marvel, O Cesar, that I who under thine Empire, am sure to be beyond precedent exalted, should persuade thee to live private. But I esteem more thy honour, than my profit; the publick good, than my particular preferment. And yet perhaps my Council shall be as profitable, if not as plausible as the contrary. I know thee to be no way delighted with lies and flattery, and will therefore deal with thee freely and plainly. Thou hast indeed put a period to the Civil Wars, but to what end, unless thou dost restore unto the Common-wealth that Liberty for which the Wars were raised? What benefit can the people reap from thy Victory, if thou dost use it only as an instrument for their greater bondage? Dost thou think that the Romans having for many hundred years maintained their Liberty, will now be willing to forgo it? No, Cesar, no, Flatter not thy self with these hopes. Marius the younger, and Sertorius, were quickly cut off, when their ends were once known; and Julius thy Father of happy memory, did not long live, after his actions seemed to bring the Common Liberty in hazard. And shall we think that there is no true Roman spirit surviving? No Brutus, living to attempt the like against thee? Believe me, Cesar, believe me, it is far better not to meddle with the Empire at all, than to be forced to abandon it. But say, Divine Providence will so protect thee, that thou mayest out-live such practices; that thou also not out-live thy glories? This present age perchance will not censure thine actions, because it dares not; but Posterity, free from all respects of love or hatred, cannot but call them into question, and brand thy enterprise with Ambition, and perhaps Tyranny. If thy designs prosper they will judge thee to have risen unjustly; if otherwise, to have fallen deservedly. How much better then were it, now when thine honour is without blemish, and thy reputation untainted, to resign thy authority? Indeed when Scaxo lorded it over the Sea, and Antony over Egypt, it might have been thought want of spirit to have depozed thy self from the Government. But now to do it, when thou art without Rival in the Empire; to when thou art Commander of the Worlds Forces, now when the People and Senate lie prostrate at the feet of thy mercy; were to strike dumb detraction, and to make future Ages admire thy Temper. Thou art at this present thy ease and comfort of the World; there is wanting to thee neither Wealth nor Fame. Here then fix thy foot. For go but one step beyond this Non ultra, and thou wilt run into a boundless Ocean of perils, which have no end, but the end of thy life and reputation.

16. Not so, excellent Agrippa, replied Mecenas. I never heard good Pilot find fault with Sea-room, or of more vessels cast away into the Ocean, than in the Strait, and narrow passages. Our Republick, is a Ship fraught with diverse Nations. She hath been long tossed on the waves of Civil dissension, long driven up and down with the Wind of ambition; and there is now no place to fit for her safety, as the unlimited Ocean of one mans power. This Empire at first rising, seemed not to require a Monarch; but it is now grown too unwieldy, to be without one. Take then upon thee, O Cesar, this Empire; or to say better, do not forsake it. I should never thus advise thee, did I conceive any possible inconveniences. The Senate doth allow thee a competent guard of valiant and faithful Soldiers; whom thou shouldst thou fear? Nay, I may I prosper, if I see any cause of fear, were thy Guard cashiered. Enemies thou shalt none: For such as were, are either already slain by thy valour, or made thy friends, by thy bounty and clemency. To omit Marius and Sertorius, I will a little touch at thy Father Julius. He, too good a Soldier to be a Slave, was too heady and violent in establishing his government. Nor could he cunningly temper, and suffer the people infinitely, and by degrees, to drop into bondage; but oppress them all at once. Again, he committed a great Solacium in State, when discharging his Guard, he sought to retain that Empire by fair means, which he had gotten by violence. I know thee, O Cesar, to be of a more wary and cunning behaviour. I am able to work out thy own safety, by Pompey's misfortune. He after the finishing of the Parthian War, at Brundisium, disbanded his Army; and thereby merited to be accounted an honest and moderate man. Certainly, he showed himself in the course of this action, rather virtuous than fortunate or politic. For presently he began to be contented, and by his improvident weakening of himself, made an open passage to his own ruin. I commend him modestly, more than his brain; neither did he himself, on better considerations, approve his own doings; and therefore he resolved, had he been Victor in Pharsalia, never to have committed the like oversight. So it is, and so it will fall out with thee, O Cesar, if in this action thou propose him to be thy pattern. It is not safe, Agrippa faith, to take the Empire; less safe it is, to refuse it. A ferled and innature vice it is in man, Never to endure that any not above our own rank should over-top us. Rome's second founder Camillus; Scipio, that scourge of Carthage, were disgraced; and M. Coriolanus banished by our Ancestors, only because their worth had lifted them above the ordinary pitch of Subjects. Do not thou hope to fare better than thy Predecessors. Heretofore, perchance, thou mightest have fought the Empire, to satiate thy ambition: The Empire must now be thy refuge and Asylum. Credit me, The Lords of the Senate, after to many years of Obsequies, know not how to Govern; neither canst thou, having to long been a Governor, learn Obedience. True it is, that in matters of domestic business, a man may stop and delist where he will: But in the getting of an Empire, there is no mean between the death of an Emperor and the life of a Prince. Thou hast already gone too far to retire. Now thou must resolve to be Cesar or Nothing. To say more were superfluous. Thine own discretion will suggest unto thee better Arguments. Only this I know, that thou hast in thee too much Julius, not to be an Emperor.

17. AUGUSTUS seemed to incline to this latter opinion, whether moved with Mecenas Oration, especially his instance in Pompey, or that he was before resolved to follow that course is uncertain. Howsoever, seeming with great attention to observe their speeches, and gathering their several reasons and motives together; he made this reply. "A most hard thing it is, for a divided mind to make a well-joy'd Answer. Divided I am, and troubled between two opinions; I both follow either, thence in so doing I must offend one. Yet silence there is a necessity of Resolution. I intend, though I like well of thy advice, Agrippa, to follow follow thine, Mecenas. In doing which, I am but an instrument of the Deities, to put their wills in execution. Often have I heard my Father Octavius report, how Nigidius, famous for his skill in Judiciary Astrology, told him once in open Senate, That he had begotten an Emperor for the Romans. As also, how M. Cicero, so renowned for Wit and Eloquence, dreamed, that he saw Jupiter place me on the top of the Capitol, with a Whip in mine hand. Certainly, if the Powers of Heaven promise me so great an Empire, I will not be wanting to myself; but will add by my industry, to their influence. To further my designs, I do desire you, may I conjure you both, that as you have been ever ready in your Counsels, so you would not now be backward in any necessary Assistance. This said, they presently enter into a new conference, how to manage a business of this weight; what Senators to acquaint with their intent; how to dispose of the Army, not yet calldied: with what Plummets it were best to found the minds of the common people, and to oblige all forts unto him. This Consultation ended, AUGUSTUS continued his assiduity to the People, and respect to the Nobles. An opportunity he had to express himself to both. There was at that time a Famine, which shrewdly raged among the Commons. To the poorer sort, he distributed Corn, gratis; to others, at a mean price. Riches and honours he communicated to both sorts; the better to wipe out of their memories, the ancient freedom. Such parts of the City as were destroyed by casualty of fire, ruined by length of time, or defaced during the Civil-Wars, he re-edified. Houses of Common-assembly he repaired, Temples, consecrated to the gods, he spared no cost to adorn and beautify. And finally, so freely diffused his bounty, that there was no part or member of the City which had not some taste of it. Next, he dismissed his Soldiers, assigning them Lands and habitations in divers parts of Italy: That so the People might conceive his Resignation to be real; and yet, if need were, his forces might be quickly re-assembled. Nor were Agrippa and Mecenas wanting for their parts, to promote the cause, but carefully acquainted some of the Senate with it, who stood well affected to them; and cunningly prepared others, who had stood indifferent.

18. The foundation thus laid, and the Senate fate AUGUSTUS rose from his seat, and spake to this, or the like effect. "When I consider with myself the infinite extent of the Roman Empire; I protest I stand at a maze: marvelling how such, as heretofore have raised combustions in the State, durst undertake the sole administration of it. What Nation in the World hath not either begged their Peace at our Gates, or felt the fury of our Wars at their own? What Countries have we not harried with Fire and Sword? making the rising and setting of the Sun the bounds of our Dominions? It must questionless proceed from an over-weening conceit in them, of their own abilities; who thought themselves so fit to undergo that burden, which none but the immortal gods can carry. Of my self I will not say much: Only, I hope I may say with modesty, that I am not inferior to Cinna, nor to Sylla: Yea have I found in myself, by late experience, how unable I was to manage the affairs of State, even then when I had two Co-adjutors. There is no Astis of strength sufficient to bear up this Heaven, no Star of influence sufficient to animate this Sphere: Nor one form of virtue sufficient to actuate this matter. Neither indeed is it fit, that the Republick which ought to be immortal, should depend only on the life and welfare of one man. There never was, since the beginning of time, a City replenished with greater store of worthy and able men, either to consult or execute. Never was seen so grave and discreet a Consul; Never so many of both sorts, so fit to govern. I have by your directions, and the Valour of your Soldiers, put an end to all home-bred quarrels. I have been your instrument to reduce peace internal and external, to your City; and desire now no other Guerdon or recompence, for any former services, than a quiet and a private life; free from all such dangers and inconveniences, as are inseparably annexed to the Sovereignty. Now therefore, (and may my action be auspicious and fortunate to my Country) do I resign my authority; committing my self, and the Common-wealth into the hands of the Senate and People of Rome.

19. This Oration ended, there followed a soft and silent buzzing in the house. Some supposed this speech not to have much truth, as art and cunning; yet smothered their conceits for fear of after-claps. Others were creatures of his own making, and they hoping to rise in the fall of their Country, would not hear of a Resignation. Some few of the wiser sort thought it not expedient, to put the Reins again into the hands of the Multitude. The rest out of a sluggish and Phlegmatic Constitution, chose rather the present estate with security, than to strive to recover the old with danger. All therefore with a joint-consent proclaim him sole Emperor; and solemnly entreat him to save the Common-wealth, otherwise running to inevitable ruine. He for a while, as vainly denied to accept the Government, as they vainly persisted to desire him. At last, wearied with the clamorous of all in general, and importunity of some in particular; he by little and little yielded to their requests, taking upon him the Empire for ten years: with this proviso, That if before that time expired, he could fully settle and order the present State, he would give up his charge. This he gave out, not with a purpose of performance, (for at the end of every Decennium he renewed his Lease of the Government;) But that the people seeing so nigh a possibility of regaining their Liberties, might not practise against him. Whereas, had he for term of life received the supreme Authority, he had no doubt halsted his own overthrow. For well he knew, that not the Title of Dictator, but the Epithete Perpetual, was the destruction of CÆSAR: And yet a great respect was had also in the choice of the Title. The name of King he refused, as being odious unto the Citizens. Neither would he be called Romulus, though he much desired it; lest they should suppose that he did affect the Tyranny. When the people called him Dictator, he rent his Garments; desiring them to discharge him of a name so hated: and being once called Lord, (Dominus) he forbade all that Title by publick Edict. Princeps Senatus was the only Title he admitted: well knowing, that the like glorious attributes were heaped on his Father Julius by them which least loved him, only to this end, that growing more and more into hatred, he might the sooner be dispatched. Nor was he ignorant, that the Common-people, led more by appearances than truth, discerned names more plainly than execution: and that the only course to make greatness stand firm, was to receive extraordinary power under a Title not offensive. The name also of AUGUSTUS conferred upon him by the Senate, (as if there had been something in him more than mortal) he refused not; as a Title expressing more dignity and reverence than authority. And having pleased himself in the choice of his Title, he next proceeded to the establishment of his power, which he thus pursued.

20. When

20. When first at the hands of the Lords of the Senate, he had for ten years received the Government; there was appointed unto him two Cohorts of Prætorian Soldiers for the guard of his person; to whom the Senate allowed the double wages of a Legionary Soldier, to make them more vigilant and heedful in their charge. Over these he appointed two Prefects or Governors, (Captains of the Guard we may best term them.) To commit the charge to one only, might breed danger, to more, confusion. Agrippa, to settle Nero in the Empire, prevailed with Claudius, to make Burrus, whom he had at her devotion, the sole Captain: and Nymphidius, fallen from his hopes of setting Galba besides the cession; desired the command of the Guard, as the next step to Sovereignty. In choice of these Captains, he observed two Rules: First, he ever chose them, ex ordine Equitum, not Senatorio; lest that, so high a dignity joyned to so high a birth, might trouble their resolutions to some designs against his might. Secondly, he made choice of two such, as were of contrary humours, and so newhat at odds; that so the ill intents of the one (if they should harbour any) might be thwarted and revealed by the other; and both, in a noble emulation, should contend to be most forward in his service. The next course which he took for his own security, was a law he made to curb the wills and attempts of the great ones. For whereas it hath been formerly unlawful to question a Bondman, in matters concerning the life and death of his Lord; AUGUSTUS passed an Act, that all such Bondmen should be first sold to him, or the Commonwealth. By means whereof he kept the Lords, before precluding on the secret of their slaves, from all close and private Conspiracicks against him. Having thus strengthened his person, he assumed to himself the Imperial, Consular, and Tribunitian authority, together with the Sacerdotal dignity. As Emperor and General of the Men of War, he could press Soldiers, raise Taxes, proclaim Wars, make Peace; yea, and put to death the very best and stoutest of the Senators. As Consul, it was in his power to reform corrupt manners, enquire after mens carriages, to take in and put out of the Senate whom he listed; to place and displace the people from a more honourable Tribe, to a less honourable. Yet would he not be called Consul as a name too inferior; but accepted the Prerogatives of it, after the surrendry of Mammius, and his Associate, two men so unfit for that Magistracy, that they could object no crime to old or young, of which themselves were not guilty. The Tribunitian authority enabled him to hinder any thing attempted against his liking. It preserved his person from all contumely and injury; giving him power to punish, as an execrable person, (yea, and without any formality of the Law) whoever had offended him either in word or deed. As for the Pontifical dignity, it made him a little more revered, not more potent. Only it added to his title the title of Pontifex Maximus, or Chief Bishop; and made him of authority amongst the Priests, and in sacred matters, things that concerned Religion. The light of Reason taught him, that it was convenient for him, being a Prince, to have command on all his People: He had been else but half a Monarch, such as some Princes are with us; who quit their Clergie to be governed by a Foreign Head.

21. These several Prerogatives annexed together, seem not yet sufficient; and therefore he so cunningly dealt with the Senators, that they gave him a general Exemption from the Coactive power of the Law. Which once obtained, he seriously bends his thoughts to settle the Common-wealth; and so to settle it, that by uniting all parties, and giving satisfaction to all Interests, it might not be obnoxious to such frequent and tumultuous alterations, as it had been formerly. But herein when he had consulted the ancient Platforms, he found no small difficulty. The form described by Plato, shewed rather how a City ought to be governed, than how it may be. Aristotle, though bred in the Free-States of Greece, was a friend to Monarchy; but his discourses dark, and speculative, and not easily reduced to practice. Solon afforded the People too much Authority, the Nobles too little, the King none. The old Carthaginian Legislators attributed too much to Riches, too little to Vertue. The Persian Law-makers indulged to the King too much, to the Subject nothing. And on the other side, Lycurgus in his modelling of the State of Sparta, ascribed too little to the King, and too much to the Senate. Zaleucus was rather the Author of some particular Laws, than the Framers of a Commonwealth. Phalaris, and Hippodamus, as unimitable altogether as Plato. Seeing therefore that none of the old Patterns did come home to his purpose; and withal considering with himself, that the unmixt Forms of Rule were not equally ballanced, and by consequence subject unto change: he resolved to frame his Common-wealth out of the perfections of the three good Forms, their imperfection being rejected; referring to himself the Supreme Majesty, to the Senate eminent Authority, to the People convenient Liberty, all in a mixt and fit proportion. And to say truth, he did so just the Sovereignty of one, with the Liberty of all; that both the Lords and People, without fear of bondage or sedition, enjoyed their accustomed Freedoms. The Consuls and Nobles of the City assembled as formerly they used; matters of State they handled by themselves; Ambassadors of foreign Nations they heard, and dispatched. The Commons did assemble in the Comitia, to enact Laws and elect Magistrates, as in the free Common-wealth; Yet so that nothing was done without the consent and privacy of the Prince, who for the most part nominated the successive Magistrate, leaving the confirmation of him to the people. So that the change as he contrived it, was not violent and at once, but by degrees, and by the silent approbation of both Estates, as seeming to consist more in the alteration of the Magistrate, than of the Laws.

22. But (to proceed more particularly) the first care he took, was to confirm Religion in the same state in which he found it. I mean Religion, as the Romans used the word, for those particular, though idolatrous Forms of Worship, which to their several gods had been used among them. This, though he might have changed, as the Pontifex Maximus, or Chief Bishop of the City; yet very wisely he forbore it. It is not safe for Princes that are fettered in a long descent of Government, to be too active in such changes: But it is dangerous to attempt it in a green State, and in an Empire not well quieted, and inured to bondage. Men are more sensible of the smallest alterations in the Church, than greater changes in the State, and raise more frequent broils about it. The Romans specially were exceeding tender in this point. The ancient Ædiles formerly received it into their charge, that they permitted no external either Gads or Ceremonies, to be introduced into the City. And by Æmilius law was enacted for a Law, That none should offer Sacrifice in any publick place, after a new and Foreign fashion. Excellent therefore was the counsel which Mecenas gave him when he first undertook the Empire, viz. "That he should follow constantly the Ædiles, which he found established, and compel others also to do the like. For, Foreign and strange Rites (saith he) will offend the people, work many inconvenient alterations."

"alterations in the Civil State; yea and most likely will occasion many both seditions and conspiracies. Words which he spake not to the air, but to a Prince exceeding apprehensive of the best advice. Nor did AUGUSTUS ever shew himself more careful in any one Act of Empire, than he did in this. That which Mecenas noted, we find true in these latter Ages; in times more skillful of obedience, than the most quiet hour of AUGUSTUS Government. No one thing more hath caused so frequent and so general Rebellions in the States of Christendom, than alterations of this nature. I cannot therefore but commend it as a pious resolution in a late mighty Monarch: Better some few corruptions should be suffered in a Church than still a Change.

23. Religion thus established, in the next place the welfare of the whole Empire consisted chiefly in reforming of the City; from which, as from the heart, life was conveyed to all the Provinces abroad. And in the City the corruption was most apparent in the Senate it self. With them therefore he began, well knowing that crimes in men of eminent place end not in themselves; but by degrees become diffused among their Clients and Followers. Now in the Senate were many and desertful men, who had been taken into it during the Civil Wars; as they could court the People, and humour such as were most potent. Of these he expelled none by his own power; but making a speech to them in the Senate, of the ancient order and present confusion of the house, he exhorted them to look back on their former lives, and to judge of their own abilities and merits, for so honourable a room. Then he desired some of them to pick out such among them, as were in disposition factious, and in life faulty, but both to convince to ill of their own actions; which they did accordingly. Yet as it often happeneth, that the great Thief leads the less to the Gallies; and as Commines observed, that after the Battle of Montlberry, Officers were taken from many for lying away, and conferred on such as ran ten miles beyond them: So remained many in the Senate, neither less vicious, nor less violent; only more potent to maintain their doings, than some others whom they had removed. AUGUSTUS therefore joining to him Agrippa, proceeded to a new review: And certainly it much concerned him in the settling of his affairs, that none should have a voice in that famous Council, but such as were of able judgments, honest repute, and well affected to his Service and the Commonwealth. An enterprise which he esteemed dangerous, that he permitted entrance to no Senator till he were searched: himself wearing a Brigandine under his Gown; and being invironed with ten of the most courageous and best beloved of the whole company. Such as he found in either kind inexcusable, he discharged from their attendance: electing such in their places, who were either ennobled for their wisdom, or noted-moderation, or otherwise strong in their dependants. Yet for that greatness of Revenue was esteemed neither a fit Patronage for any, if they were offensive; nor a just cause to challenge interest in the house. Such of them as were rich rather in the gifts of the mind, than those of fortune, he relieved with honourable Pensions; and finally he bestowed himself so resolutely, that all conspired that they had need of such a wife Physician, to cure that old Consumption, wherewith the Commonwealth was fallen.

24. In other things he seldom did proceed against them, as of himself; but when that any of them had conspired his ruin, he referred them to the judgment of their fellows. And this he did partly to reserve unto the Court the ancient Prerogative; partly not to be

Judge and Party in his own cause: but principally following the example of his Father Julius, who counterfeiting a wretches contempt of his adversaries, used, when he was least suspected, under hand, and by public Officers, to work their destruction. Many also of them whom the Senate had condemned he would freely pardon: Conceiving truly, that the questioning of men of high calling, would produce as much terror, though it argued not so much rigor as the punishment. Yet if extremity of law was used towards some few, it was to settle quietness in the whole; and as it were a particular blood-letting for the general health. Those who had followed the Factions of Brutus and Antony, he forgave freely. And not to only, but by manifesting his works by his deeds, and adding trusts and honours to his pardons; he made his Chair of State more settled, and immovable. So Cesar, by erecting the false and broken Images of Pompey, made his own statues stand more firmly. But the chief Act by which he bridled the Nobles, was an Edict by him promulgated, forbidding any of them, his leave not granted, to travel out of Italy. For well he knew, that an Empire unfettered, and Provinces not quietted; the presence and authority of men of that rank, might raise greater troubles, than could be easily suppressed. Examples he wanted not, that especially of Cato; who after the overthrow of Pompey, stirred such a War against Cesar in Africa, that he never bought Victory at a dearer rate. Yet not altogether to imprison them, he licensed them at their pleasure, to visit Sicilia, and Gaul Narbonne; Provinces close to the Continent of Italy, altogether unfurnished for Wars; and indeed such, as by reason of the variety of pleasures in them used, were more likely to weaken their minds, than to arm their bodies.

25. Now to give the Senate some sweet meat to their former fancies; he as much honoured and revered that Order, as ever it was in the Free-state: submitting himself to their judgments and appearing of his own accord, at most of their days of Session. Out of those he chose fifteen alterable every half year, to be of his Privy-Council; but then changing them for others: that so all of them might participate of that honour; and yet none of them be acquainted with too many of his Secrets. At his entrance into the Senate, he used courteously to salute the Lords; and so likewise at his departure. He knew full well that it was noted for great pride in his Father Julius, so much to slight the Lords of that House, as he always did: never making to them any obsequence; no not then, when they came to tell him what honours were decreed unto him. This Reformation of the great Ones, soon made the lower sort more careful; both to observe good order, and to learn obedience. Yet did not AUGUSTUS refer all to Presidents, but somewhat to Precept. The Roman Knights he enforced to yield an account of their lives; a course full of health and wisdom: Idleness being the root of all private vices, and public disorders. To the Commons in their Comitia and other meetings, he prescribed Laws and Orders as himself listed. The old authority of the Tribunes, dashed in the Disturbance of Sylla, he would not restore. He suffered them to intercede for the People, but not to prefer or hinder any Bill, to the advancement or the prejudice of their Estates. Without this Curia, the Common sort would never have suffered him to sit in the Saddle. For had the people had their Tribunes and had the Tribunes had their ancient dignity and power, which they had usurped; there had been little or no hope of altering the form of Government. So different are the ends of the Common-People, especially if nursed in a factious Liberty, from the designs of Sovereign Princes.

26. The

26. The City thus reformed in the principal errors, and defects of its; he again exhibiteth unto them divers pleasures; as shews of Fencers, Stage-plays, Combats of wild beasts, public dancing, with variety of other delightful Spectacles. And this as well to breed in them a good conceit of the change; as (earing left their cogitations, for want of other objects, would fix themselves upon his actions, and the old freedom. And therefore when some of his more severe and rigid Counsellors advised him to interdict all such public pastimes, alleging, that the meetings of the people at those sports, and in so great numbers might at last end in some great tumult and sedition to the endangering of his person, and destruction of his whole Estate; it was thus over-ruled by Mecenas (his most truly Favourite) Expedi tibi, O Cesar, plebem sic occupatam esse, That it best agreed with his affairs, to have the minds of the people taken up with these sports and pastimes; by which being sweetened and appeased, they were the less sensible of the yoke he had put upon them. But as for Horle-races, Tilts, and Turnaments, as he gladly cherished them, so he permitted them only to the Inhabitants of Rome: That so that City, being the Seat-Town of his Empire, might be stored with good Horses, and expert Riders. Such of the Commons as were behind hand, he relieved: and when that many of them had made him Heir to their goods, he well knowing that no good Father did appoint to his Heir any Prince but a Tyrant, presently restoring to the Children of the deceased the whole Patrimony. An action truly worthy of AUGUSTUS; as true a Guardian of Orphans, as a Father of his Country. Such Princes as gave covetously after other mens possessions, seldom enjoy the benefit of their own. The Treasures of Kings are then greatest, not when their own Coffers are full only, but their Subjects rich. Yet one thing more he seemed to leave unto the people, which they thought most pleasing. Liberty of Speech: Wherein sometimes they were so licentious, that they spared not Agrippa himself, so potent with the Emperor. But he, good man never using the Prince's favour to the prejudice of any, seemed not to mark their taunts and slanders: whether with greater moderation or wisdom, I cannot tell. Neither did AUGUSTUS scape their foolish Pasquils and infamous Libels. All which he winked at, knowing that countenances of that nature slighted and contemned, soon vanish of themselves; but if repined and stormed at, seem to beacknowledged. A temper which he learnt of his Father Julius, who was perfect at it. And certainly it was a notable point of Wisdom in both of them. It is the misery of the best Princes, even when they do well to be ill spoken of. And therefore many times such follies are with more policy dissembled than observed, by the greatest Kings.

27. As for this laxity of the tongue, it is a humour that springeth for the most part, rather from a delight in prattling, than any malice of the heart: and they which use it are more troublesome than dangerous. Julius feared not the fat men, but the lean and spare. And so AUGUSTUS thought, that not men liberal of speech, but silent, close, and sparing of their words, were most likely to raise tumults. Moreover, as long as the Common People retained this Liberty of Speech, they were the less sensible of the loss of Liberty in State. Whereas in the days of Dominian, when not only they were prohibited, to commune together, but even their secret sighs and tears were registered, then began they to look back with a serious eye on the old and common Liberty. Neglect is the best remedy for this Talking vein. When the humour is spent, the People will cease on their own accords: till then, no forces can compel them. Tacitus taxeth Virgilium of great folly, for hoping by force to hinder the continual reports of Vespasian revolt; that being the only way to increase, not diminish the rumor. And as much he extolled (I will not say how fitly) the Reign of Prince Nerva; wherein it was lawful for the Subject to think what he would, and speak what he thought.

28. These courses though he took to rectifie the Senate, and content the people, yet he slayed not here. There were too many of both sorts, dangerous and unquiet spirits, who stomached his proceedings; and under pretence of the ancient Liberty, were apt to any bold attempt, and sudden alteration. These as he winked at for the present, so he employed them (as occasion served) in his foreign Wars. Wherein he followed the example of his Father Julius, who when his Souldiers had displeased him, in their Mutinies and Tumults, would lead them presently unto some desperate and dangerous service: So weakening both his Foes which lay next unto him, and punishing those Souldiers which had disobeyed him. For, though AUGUSTUS had thrice shut the Temple of Janus, and cherished Peace, no Emperor more, of so large a Territory; yet when he saw his times, and that mens minds were active, and their thoughts disquieted; he could find presently occasion for some new employment. In this a Body Politick may be compared most fitly to the Body Natural. When we are full of blood, and our spirits boiling, there is not any Physick better than Phlebotomy. But if a vein be broken in us, and we bleed inwardly, our estate commonly is dangerous, and almost incurable. So Princes, when their people are tumultuous and apt to mischief; or that their thoughts are working, and hearkening after action: do commonly employ them in some service far from home; that there they may both vent their Anger, and employ their Courage. For let them stay at home to confirm their practices, and grow at last into a faction, the State will suffer in it, if it be not ruined. We cannot have a fairer instance of this truth, than the proceeding of our fifth Henry, and the times next following: Whose foreign Wars kept us all quiet here at home, waited those humours, and consumed those fiery spirits, which afterwards, the Wars being ended, inflamed the Kingdom.

29. But his main work was to content the Souldiers, and to make them sure. Some of which he dispersed as before I said, all about Italy, in thirty two Colonies; as well for the defence of the Country, as for their more speedy re-assembly, if need should require. Abroad amongst the Provinces were maintained upon the common charge twenty three Legions with their aids: besides 10000 of his Guard, and those which were appointed for the bridling and safety of the City. As to all of them he shewed an excellent thankfulness for their faithful services: so in particular to Agrippa, and to one other, whose name the Histories of that Age have not remembered. This latter had valiantly behaved himself at the battle of Athium: and being summoned to appear before the Lords of the Senate, in a matter which concerned his life, cried to AUGUSTUS for succour, who aligned him an Advocate. The poor fellow not contented with this favour, baring his breast, and shewing him the marks of many wounds; These (quoth he) have I received, AUGUSTUS, in thy service never supplying my place by a Deputy. Which said, the Emperor descending to the Bar, pleaded the Souldiers cause, and won it. Never did Sovereign Prince, or any that command in Chief, lose any thing by being bountiful of favours to their men of War. For this act quickly spreading Princes more willing and desirous not to employ men likely to offend, than by the offence to punish and chastise them for it.

36. Besides his Forces by Land, he also maintained at Sea two invincible Armadae. The one lay at Anchor near Ravenna, in the upper Sea, to awe and defend Dalmatia, Crete, Greece, Cyprus, Asia, &c. The other at Misenum in the lower Sea, to protect and keep under Gaul, Spain, Africa, Egypt, Syria &c. Neither was this the only use of two such puissant Fleets, but in all probability they were to cleanse the Sea of Pirates: to have a care to the conducting of the Tributes and Customs into the Exchequer; and served also for transporting Corn, and other necessary provisions, for the subsistence and relief of the City. In the ensuing Civil Wars, these two Navies proved to be of great importance: The revolt of them giving as great a blow to the one side, as a comfort to the other. The principal assurance of Octo in his Wars, was the immovable fidelity of the Misenum Fleet; and the siding of the other with Vespasian broke the hearts of Vitellius's best followers.

37. Now as he thus strengthened the Provinces in general, so he did cast an especial eye on three particulars viz. Italy, Gaul, and Egypt. Italy founded Rome the Metropolis of the Empire; and therefore he ought to be well assured of its good faith and allegiance to him. Nor was he ignorant, that the Bellum sociale raised by the people of that Country, in the Free State, more shook and endangered the Empire, than the Invasions of Pyrrhus or Annibal. Therefore as formerly he planted in it two and thirty Colonies, of old and truly Soldiers, to keep it sure unto himself, so now he did divide it into eleven Regions, each having peculiar Magistrates and Under-Officers. This not so much to ease the City-Prætor, although he had employment enough at Rome; but because it was thick-set and as it were overlaid with People, whose rising might endanger the Common-wealth. So by his Colony he kept a Garrison upon them, as it were, that they could not revolt; and by his Officers and Justifiers (as I may call them) he set for strait a Watch about them, that they durst not practise.

38. Gaul, now called France, was both a large and fertile Country, stored with a people valiant in all attempts, and in many desperate. A people with which the old Romans fought rather to maintain their own liberty, than to increase their Dominions; a Tribe or Colony of which had sacked the City of Rome, and endangered the Capital. A people finally, with whom the Romans durst not make War, till they had almost all the residue of the World in subjection. The remembrance of their ancient Reputation, and store of money, might occasion many desperate practices against the quiet of the Empire. The readiest way to keep them in obedience, was to keep them poor: for without wealth high stomachs may well feed on the hope of Liberty, but digest it never. Licininus, his Freed-man, was the fittest fellow for such an Office, who is presently made the Task-master of the Province. The Gauls used to pay a Monthly Tribute, which he much ennobled (besides private and petty means of proling) by making fourteen Months in a year. The Soldiers of that people at Rome make complaint to AUGUSTUS. He sometimes yielded unto them, sometimes excused his Freed-man's some things he would not know, many he would not believe, others he dismissed. Licininus, to make up his peace, sent to the Emperor all his Treasure, and that huge Mass of Gold and Silver by those unlawful means heaped up together: which he not only willingly received, but his turn being served, and the Gauls not a little impoverished; he recalled Licininus, and sent Tiberius to settle the Province. So old and common a thing it is with great Princes, to suffer their Vice-Roy, and Under-Officers to suck like Sponges, the Wealth of the Subject, till they are quite full; and then to squeeze them into their own Coffers.

39. But the Province whose tuition and defence he principally regarded, was Egypt not so much for the valour and courage of the Inhabitants, as the natural strength and situation of the place. Alexander of Macedon having annexed it to his Empire, never committed the entire Government and Jurisdiction thereof, to one man; fearing lest he presuming on the wealth of the People, and life of the Country, would settle the possession in himself. And so AUGUSTUS calling to mind as well the multitude, as the levity and inconstancy of the Natives; that it was very rich in coin, and the Roman Granary (as serving the City four Months yearly with Corn) not only trusted not the rule thereof into the hands of any of the Senators, but expressly forbade any of that Order (without his special permission) to sojourn there. It is a principle in State, never to license men of great houses, and credit among the People, to have free access into that Country, whose revolt may endanger the whole Empire. Wherefore it was a weakless doubtless in the Council of King Henry the sixth, to suffer Richard Duke of York, to pass at leisure into Ireland, where he had harbour and relief, and whence he brought supply both of Men and Money. But to return to Egypt Germanicus entering once into Alexandria, only to see the Antiquities of it, and return; stirred such suspicions, and distractions in the jealous head of Tiberius, that he spared not sharply to rebuke him for it. Vespasian also being by the Syrian Legions chosen Emperor, first assured himself of Egypt, as the Key of the Sea and Land; with a small power, against a strong host easily defended. This place he resolved to make his Sanctuary, if his designs succeeded not luckily. And to this place he hastened, after the defeat of the Vitellian Army, that do detain the ordinary provision of victuals, he might by Famine compel the City of Rome to stand at his devotion. The Government of this Province was by AUGUSTUS always committed to some one of the Roman Centurys, as less able, by reason of his low condition, to work against the Princes safety. Neither would he allow his Deputy the glorious attributes of Lieutenant, Legatus, Proconsul, or Prætor; Captain or President of Egypt was their highest Title: there being even in Titles no small motives to Ambition.

40. AUGUSTUS having by these means reduced both the City and Provinces under his absolute command, and being now declining in strength, by reason of a sudden and violent sickness; began to call his wits to Council, how to dispose of the Estate after his decease. Male-child he never had any. His Daughter Julia, a woman of immodest carriage, never made further use of her fathers greatness, than that the satisfied her Lusts with the greater insolence. Marcellus, his Sisters son, and Julia's husband, was a young man of an ingenious disposition, and seemingly capable of the fortunes which attended for him. Him, being yet young, AUGUSTUS preferred to the Pontifical dignity, and Adelship: Yet once upon his sickness, he privately determined to choose another Successor in the Common-wealth, rather than his own Family, and not to leave the Empire to Marcellus, who he held unable to undergo it, but to his companion in Arms, Agrippa, a man daunted neither with adverse, nor altered with prosperous fortunes. This Marcellus afterwards so stomached, that he began to grutch at Agrippa's greatness, and to bear a vigilant eye on his plots and actions. Contrarily, Agrippa unwilling to offend him; under whose future Government he was in all likelihood to end the rest of his days, with much ado obtained leave to retire unto Lesbos: that so his absence either might allay, or remove the displeasure, conceived against him by the young Prince. An action full of wisdom, and magnanimity. For though AUGUSTUS's chief end was, to discountenance the popular dependencies of his Son, by the favours heaped on his servant; yet did Agrippa know, that a Favoured ought to have to him in him of the Perjan Religion, as to worship the Rising Sun also; and that he should resemble old Janus with two faces, with the one looking on the King regnant, with the other on the Prince successor.

41. Marcellus being dead, Agrippa returning, married his Widow, and on her begat two Sons, Caius and Lucius; whose actions afterward afforded such variety for censure that there was wanting neither much reason to commend, nor little to condemn them. On the two, or at least one of them, AUGUSTUS now grown aged, resolves to settle the Estate; and, if they failed, upon such others, as by the liberty of the Laws, he might adopt: In the estimation of the Roman Laws being adopted another Nature. Posterity, whether it be natural, or only legal, is the best support of the Arms Imperial: such as both fortifies the Prince, and assures the Subject. Yet this he did, not without much reluctance, and a great conflict in his mind. 'Sometimes' his thoughts suggested to him, that the designed Successors draw to them all the attendance and respect, 'from the Prince in possession; that they have always a lingering desire to be actually settled in the Throne; that they suppose the life of the present Prince too tedious, not caring by what means it were shortened; that sometimes it is pernicious, yea even to the appointed Successor himself also. On the other side his better thoughts prompted him to consider, in what a miserable distraction he should leave the Empire, if sudden death should take from him an ability to nominate his heir; The fear conceived in the whole City at his last sickness; That Pyrrhus of Epirus, was of all hands condemned, for leaving his Kingdom to the sharpest sword; That the Common-wealth slain into dissensions, could not be settled again without a lamentable War, and a bloody victory; That the people seeing him childless would not only condemn him, but perhaps endeavour to recover the old liberty, though with the ruin of the State; That it was the custom of Tyrants, to desire the eternizing of their deaths, by the downfall of their Countries. His mind thus distracted and perplexed, at last he brake in this manner. 'Thou hast, Octavianus, a Wolf by the ears, which to hold still, or let go, is alike dangerous. Many inconveniences may ensue, if thou dost not declare thy Successor; more if thou dost. The good of the Republick consisteth in knowing the future Prince, Thine own welfare dependeth on the concealment. The Common good is to be preferred before any private; Yet ought Charity to begin at home, No, Octavian no; As thou hast received so few thyself worthy of the title of Pater patriæ. Yea, and perhaps will it profit the people to thine own Estate. For when they shall see a Successor conspire against thee; for what they shall see a Successor at hand, either of thine own body, or thine own appointment, ready to take thy place, and revenge thy wrongs?

42. Thus resolved, he adotheth Caius and Lucius; as desiring, though he made them to the contrary, they should be Consule electi, and called Princes of the Youth. Yet wisely foreseeing the dangers incident to himself, if they should make their abode in Rome; he sendeth them with honourable Charge into the Provinces abroad; as well to exercise them in feats of War, as to take away all cause of faction in the Court, and sedition in the City: which mystery of State as it was anciently practised by most Princes, so at this day by the Grand Seigneur: who always sendeth his eldest Son unto Amasia, as Governor thereof; from whence till the death of his Father, he never returneth. In these journeys, dyed the two young Princes; a misfortune which AUGUSTUS bare nobly; neither banishing grief, with a Stoical Apathy; nor, spending the time in womanish lamentations. Having performed due rites to the dead, he adopted his Wites Son, Tiberius. A man for the convenience and ripeness of his age, not unfit; in feats of Arms, not unskilful; in human learning, not ignorant; but withal suspected to be cruelly given; and possessed with the hereditary pride of the Claudian Family. A strange medley of virtuous and vicious qualities! Tiberius, such was the will of his Father, to establish the Succession with more stays than one, adopted Germanicus, his Brother Drujus's Son; and then commanding over eight Legions in Germany; which done, he speedeth to his charge in Illyricum. This man AUGUSTUS appointed to be his Successor, as it was afterwards (and not improbably) conjectured, neither in care to the State, nor in love to the party; but to win honour to himself; and to make the Roman people again with for him, when they should feel that infinite disproportion in all Royal and Kingly qualities, between the old and new Emperors. A fetch, after imitated by Tiberius, in the adoption of Caius Caligula.

43. The last (though not the least) help of the Emperors establishment, was the long life and reign of our AUGUSTUS: as having ruled the State 16 years before, and 34 years after his confirmation in the Sovereignty, by the Senate and people. All the young men in the City were born after the first Decennium of the Monarchy. Most of the old men, during the Civil Wars: Few had seen what was the ancient form of Government in the Common-wealth: many did not desire it: for at the present, enjoying peace both at home and abroad; and hearing what sad and tragical reports their Fathers made of the former troubles and profcriptions, they contented themselves with the new Government; as more esteeming a secure and happy subjection, than a dangerous and factious liberty. By which long time of Empire, and the policies already recited; besides many others, which I can neither learn by relation, nor gather by presumptions; did AUGUSTUS so firmly settle the Roman Monarchy, that it continued close hundred of years without alteration: though all his immediate Successors were in a manner Monsters, incarnate Devils, and indeed any thing rather than Men. Tiberius, Caius, Claudius, Nero, Galba, Otho, and Vitellius, both by their own Tyranny, and their Bondsmen Extortions, would have ruined any Monarchy not founded by AUGUSTUS.

44. To speak concerning the Domestic affairs of this Emperor, is beyond my Urne. As either how far he suffered himself to be ordered by his Wife Livia; or whether he used variety of women, not so much to satisfy an inordinate appetite, as by so many women to filch out the secret designs of many men. He was too exact a Statesman to be perfect in Soldiery; and in all his Wars was prosperous by Fortune rather than by Valour, or his Captains Valour than by his own. The Common-wealth which he found weak and in Rubbish, he left Adamantine, and invincible. In behaviour he was affable and gracious; in his discourse, contentious to the good, of a most sweet disposition; to the lewd and dishonest, harsh and unpleasant. Friendship he contracted with few, and that slowly; but to them whom he once loved unite both peoples in a mixture of Language, Marriages, and Customs; and partly that he might more easily in War command them, and in Peace correct them. Italy, which before was made a thoroughfare to the barbarous Nations, and quite disordered by the frequent inundations of Luit and Rapine; he reduced to such a peaceable and settled Government, that before his death they had quite lost the memory of their former miseries: instead whereof a general felicity had diffused it self over all the Country. Such Cities as had been formerly defaced, he repaired, strengthened, and beautified. In his Wars he was victorious, temperate in his times of Peace, and in his private carriage discreet and affable. Finally (as Velleius faith of Marcobudus) he was Natione magis quam ratione Barbarus: And went the most judicious way to establish his dominion in Italy, of any of the Barbarous Princes that ever had invaded the Roman Provinces, which he left thus confirmed and settled unto his Successors.

A. Ch. The Kings of the Goths in Italy

- 495 1 Theoderick of whom before; who to his conquest of Italy added that of Ilyricum, as also the appendant Islands to both those Countries; and wrested Provence in France, from the Goths of Spain.
- 527 2 Athalaricus, Nephew to Theoderick by his daughter Amalasynthia, who in the minority of her son managed the affairs of the Goths in Italy. Fearing some danger out of Greece, he restored Provence to the French, and by their aid drove the Burgundians out of Liguria. A Lady skilful in the Languages of all those Nations which had any commerce with the Roman Empire, inasmuch that pro miraculo fuerit ipsum audire loquentem, faith Procopius of her.
- 534 3 Theodatus, the son of Hummelfride, the sister of Theoderick, succeeded on the untimely death of Athalaricus: Who being in War with the Romans, (or rather with the Greek Emperors, endeavouring to recover Italy from the hands of the Goths) and desiring before hand to know his success; was willed by a Jew to shut up a certain number of Swine, and to give some of them the names of Goths, and unto others the names of Romans. Which done, and going to the Styes not long after, they found the Hogs of the Gothish faction all slain, and those of the Roman half unbrutled: and thereupon the Jew foretold, That the Goths should be discomfited, and the Romans lose a great part of their strength; and it proved accordingly. Which kind of Divination is called Oroscopia, and hath been prohibited by a General Council. The loss of this Battle (won by Belisarius Commander of the Armies of the Emperour Justinian) drew on the loss of Rome, and the East parts of Italy, (with the Realm of Naples) and occasioned the death of Theodatus, slain shortly after these great losses by the Goths themselves.
- 537 4 Vitiger, chosen by the Goths, besieged and taken in Ravenna by the said Belisarius.
- 540 5 Isidobaud, Governour of Verona on the calling home of Belisarius, chosen by the Goths, and by them not long after slain.
- 541 6 Ardariens, of whom nothing memorable.
- 542 7 Totilas, a right valiant Prince, recovered all which had been got from his Predecessors, and sacked Rome in the fight of Belisarius, then returned into Italy, as nor able to hinder him vanquished and killed in fight by Narses, in the 11. of his Reign.

- 553 8 Teyas, the last King of the Goths in Italy, who being vanquished by Narses in the fourteenth year of his Reign, submitted himself to the Eastern Emperours: but after breaking out again, he was finally discomfited, and slain by Narses, not far from the City of Nocera. An. 567. After which time, the Goths and the Italians mingled in Blood and Language, became one Nation.

But the miseries of Italy, and those Western parts were not so to end. No sooner had God freed them from the rod of his Visitations, which he had laid upon them in the times of Persecution, formerly remembered; and giving them peace within their dwellings; but they became divided into Schisms and Factions: and after wallowed in those sins; which a continual surfeit of prosperity hath commonly attending on it. Inasmuch that devout Salvian, who lived much about these times, complains of that high hand of wickedness, wherewith they did provoke the patience of Almighty God; the lives of Christians being grown so deplorably wicked, that they became a scandal to the Faith and Gospel. In nobis patitur Christus opprobrium, in nobis patitur læ Christiana maledictum, faith that godly Bishop. So that their fins being ripe for vengeance, God sent the barbarous Nations, as his Executioners, to execute his Divine Justice on the impenitent men, and made them sensible though Heathens, that it was Gods work they did, and not their own, in laying such afflictions on these Western parts. Ipsi faciebantur non sumus esse quod facerent, agnimus se & perirenti divino iussu, as the said godly Bishop doth inform us of them. On this impulsion the Vandals did acknowledge that they first wasted Spain, and then hurried Africa: And at the same time, did Avila the Hun, sent into his Royal Titles the title of Mallens Orbis, and Flagellum Dei's acknowledging thereby his own apprehension of some special and extraordinary calling to this publick service. Nay, as Jornandes doth report, some of these barbarous people did not stick to say, that they were put on this employment by some Heavenly Visions, which did direct them to the work which they were to do. In Prosecution of the which, in less time than the compass of 80 years, this very Italy (though anciently the strength and fear of that Empire) was seven times brought almost unto desolation, by the Fire and Sword of the Barbarians, viz. First by Alarick King of the Goths, who sacked Rome, Naples, &c. 2. By Avila King of the Huns who razed Florence, wasted Lombardy, and not without much difficulty was diverted from the spoil of Rome, by the intercession of Pope Leo. 3. By Gensericus King of the Vandals, who also had the sackage of Rome it self. 4. By Biorgis King of the Alani, in the time of the Emperour Maiorianus. 5. By Odoacer King of the Herni, who drove Augustulus the last Western Emperour out of his estate; and twice in thirteen years laid the Country desolate. 6. By Theoderick King of the Goths, called in by Zeno Emperour of Constantinople to expel Odoacer and the Herni. And 7. by Gundabald King of the Burgundians, who having ranfacked Lombardy, returned home again, leaving possession to the Goths. As for these Goths, being the first and last of those barbarous Nations who had any thing to do under the spoil of Italy, after they had reigned here twenty eight of their Kings, for the space of 72 years, they were at last subdued by Belisarius and Narses, two of the bravest bravest Souldiers that had ever served the Eastern Emperours; and Italy united once more to the Empire, in the time of Justinian. But Narses having governed Italy about 17 years, and being after such good service most despitfully used by Sophia, (never the wiser for her name) the Wife of the Emperour Justinian, abandoned the Country to the Lombards. For the Emperour envying his glories, not only did procure to have him recalled from his Governments; but sent him word, That he would make the Eunuch (for such he was) come home and spin among her maids. To which the discontented man returned this answer, That he would spin her such a web, as neither she nor any of her minions should ever be able to unweave. And thereupon he opened the passages of the Country to Alboinus King of the Lombards, then possessed of Pannonia; who coming into Italy with their Wives and Children, possessed themselves of all that Country which anciently was inhabited by the Cisalpine Gauls, calling it by their own names Lombardia, now corruptly Lombardy. Nor said he there, but made himself Master of the Countries lying on the Adriatick, as far as to the borders of Apulia; and for the better Government of his new Dominions, erected the four famous Dukedoms, 1. Of Friuli at the entrance of Italy, for the admission of more aids if occasion were, or the keeping out of new Invaders; 2. Of Turin, at the foot of the Alpes against the French; 3. Benevent, in Abruzzo, a Province of the Realm of Naples, against the incursions of the Greeks, then possessed of Apulia, and the other Eastern parts of that Kingdom; And 4. of Spoleto, in the midst of Italy, to suppress the Natives; leaving the whole, and hopes of more unto his Successors.

- 744 21. Rachisius. 6.
- 750 22. Astulfus. 6.
- 756 23. Desiderius, the last of the Lombards, of whom more anon. In the mean time, we will look into the story of some of the former Kings, in which we find some things deserving our consideration. And first beginning with Alboinus, the first of this Catalogue: before his coming into Italy he had waged war with Cunimundus, a King of the Gepids: whom he overthrew, and made a drinking Cup of his Skull. Rosamund daughter of this King he took to Wife; and being one day merry at Verona, forced her to drink out of that detested Cup; which he so stomached, that she promised one Helmi-child, if he would aid her in killing the King, to give him both her self and the Kingdom of Lombardy. This when he had consented to, and performed accordingly, they were both so extremely hated for it, that they were faine to flee to Ravenna, and put themselves into the protection of Longinus the Exarch. Who partly out of a desire to enjoy the Lady; partly to be possessed of that mass of Treasure which he was faine to bring with her; but principally hoping by her power and party there, to raise a beneficial War against the Lombards, perswaded her to dispatch Helmi-child out of the way, and take him for her husband; to which she willingly agreed. Helmi-child coming out of a Bath called for drink, and she gives him a strong poyson; half of which when he had drunk, and found by the strange operation of it how the matter went, he compelled her to drink the rest: so both died together. 2. Clephes the Second King extended the Kingdom of the Lombards to the Gates of Rome; but was so tyrannical withal, that after his death, they resolved to admit of no more Kings, distributing the Government among thirty Dukes. Which division, though it held not above twelve years, was the chief cause that the Lombards failed of being the absolute Lords of all Italy. For the people having once cast off the yoke of obedience, and tasted somewhat of the sweetness of licentious Freedom; were never after so reduced to their former duty, as to be aiding to their Kings in such Achievements as tended more unto the greatness of the King, than the gain of the subject. 3. Cunibert the 14. King was a great lover of the Clergy, and by them as lovingly requited. For being to encounter with Alachis the Duke of Trent, who rebelled against him: one of the Clergy knowing that the Kings life was chiefly aimed at by the Rebels, put on the Royal Robe, and thrust himself into the head of the Enemy, where he lost his own life, but saved the Kings. 4. Aribert the 17. King, gave the Coltan Alper containing Piedmont, and some part of the Dutchy of Mailain to the Church of Rome: which is observed to be the first Temporal Estate, that ever was conferred upon the Popes, and the foundation of that greatness which they after came to. 5. The 19. King was Luitprandus, who added to the Church the Cities of Ancona, Narnia, and Humana, belonging to the Exarchates having first won Ravenna, and the whole Exarchy thereof An. 741. The last Exarch being called Eutychius. But the Lombards long enjoyed not his Conquests; for Peppin King of France, being by Pope Stephen III. solicited to come into Italy, overthrew Astulfus, and gave Ravenna to the Church. The last King was Desiderius, who falling at odds with Adrian the First, and besieging him in Rome, was by Charles the Great, Successor to Peppin, besieged in Patz, and himself with all his Children taken Prisoners, An. 774. And so ended the Kingdom of the Lombards, having endured in Italy 206 years. Lombardy was then a Province of the French, and after of the German Empire: many of whose Emperours used to be crowned Kings of Lombardy, by the Bishops of Mailain, with an Iron Crown: which was kept at Modocum, now called Munza, a small Village. This Charles confirmed his Fathers former donations to the Church; and added of his own accord, Marea Anconitana, and the Dukedom of Spoleto. For these and other kindneffes, Charles was by Pope Leo IV. on Christmas day crowned Emperour of the West, Anno 801. whose Successors shall be reckoned when we come to the story of Germany. At this division of the Empire, Irene was Emperess of the East; to whom and her Successors was no more allotted that the Provinces of Apulia, and Calabria, (the East parts of the Realm of Naples) being then in possession of the Greeks. To the Popes were confirmed or given by this Emperour and his Father, almost all the Lands which they possess at this day; though afterwards extorted from them by the following following Emperours, or under colour of their Title : by many several ways and means brought again unto them, as shall be shewn hereafter in convenient place. The Venitians, in that little they then had, remained sui juris. The rest of Italy, containing all the other Provinces of the Kingdom of Naples, together with Tuscany, Friuli, Trevisia, and whatsoever is at this day in the possession of the Dukes of Milan, Manua, Modena, Parma, Monteferrat, and the Duke of Savoy as Prince of Piedmont, together with Liguria, or the States of Genova, was reserved by Charles unto himself, and in his life-time given by him to Pepin his Second Son, with the stile or title of King of Italy. But long it did not rest in the House of France; the Princes of the Lombards wresting it from the Line of Charles, and after weakening and dividing it by their several Factions, till in the end, instead of an united Kingdom, there rose up many scattered Principalities, as shall hereafter be declared. But first we must proceed to the Kings of Italy, of which we shall endeavour as exact a Catalogue, as the confusions of that State can be capable of.

The Kings of Italy, of the French, Italian and German Lines.

1. Pepin, Son of Carolus Magnus, died before his Father.
2. Barnard, Son of Pepin.
3. Ludovicus Pius, Emperour, and King of France.
- 841 4. Lotharius, Emperour, eldest son of Ludovicus. 15.
- 856 5. Ludovicus II., Emperour, eldest son to Lotharius. 20
- 876 6. Carolus Calvus, Emperour, the youngest son of Ludovicus Pius. 11.
7. Caroloman, Nephew to Ludovicus Pius, by Ludovicus his second son, furnished the Antient.
8. Carolus Grassius, or the Fat Emperour, brother of Caroloman, the last King of Italy of the house of Charles, he died Anno 888.
- 888 9. Guy, Duke of Spoleto, contends with Berengarius Duke of Friuli both of the Longobardian Race, of the Kingdom of Italy, and in fine carrieth it against him.
- 894 10. Lambert, the son of Guy, crowned by Pope Formosus.
11. Ludovicus, son of Boson Earl of Ardenne, King of Arles and Burgundy, by some Writers called only Earl of Provence; upon the death of Lambert invadeth Italy; and is made King.
- 917 12. Berengarius, Duke of Friuli, vanquisheth Ludovicus, is made King of Italy; and at last overcome by the Hungarians who having wasted the Country returned back again.
13. Kodolph, Duke of Burgundy Transjane, called into Italy against Berengarius, resigned it in exchange for the Kingdom of Arles and Burgundy to his Cousin.
- 926 14. Hugh D' Arles, King of Arles and Burgundy, who held the Kingdom of Italy upon this resignation; but after many troubles, was at last outed of it by Berengarius, and returned into France.
- 946 15. Berengarius II., son of the former Berengarius, on the retreat of Hugh, received by the Italians as Protector to Lotharius the son of Hugh; besieging Adelbair the next Heir of Italy (on the death of Lotharius) was taken prisoner by the Emperour Otho.
16. Otho, called into Italy by Adelbair, daughter to Kodolph King of Burgundy and Italy; married the Lady, and in her right is King of Italy.

- 974 17. Otho II. son of the former Otho, married Theophania Niece to Nicéphorus Phocas, Emperour of Constantinople, and hath Calabria for her Dowry. 20.
- 984 18. Otho III. Emperour, and King of Italy, in whose minority the Kingdom was usurped by 19. Harduinus, a man of great power in Italy, who kept it all the time of Otho; till being broken with long Wars by Henry the succeeding Emperour, he was forced to quit it.
20. Henry, the second Emperour of that name, having thrice vanquished Harduinus, got the Kingdom of Italy, and left the same unto the Emperors his Successors: the Title of Italy after this time being drowned in that of the Empire; and the Country governed as a part and Member of the Empire, by such Commanders and other Officers as the Emperors from time to time sent thither. But long it laid not in that state. For the Popes of Rome knowing how much it did concern them in point of Policy, to weaken the Imperial Power in Italy, without which their own Grandeur could not be maintained; stirred up continual Factions and Wars against them; and by that means, and by the Centures of the Church which they denounced according as they saw occasion, did so astonish and distract them, that in the end the Emperors were left to lay aside the affairs of Italy, by which they reaped more trouble than the profit came to. Inasmuch that Kodolphus Habsburgensis, a valiant and a politic Prince, finding the ill success which Henry the 4. and 5. and Frederick the 1. and 2. Emperors of more puissance than himself, had found in their Italian actions and pretensions, resolved to rid his hands of that troublesome and fruitless Province; and to that end made as much money as he could of that Commodity, which he saw he was not like to keep. And yet he sold good penny-worths too, to them that bought them; the Florentines paying for their Liberties but six thousand Crowns, the Citizens of Lucca, ten thousand; others as they could make their Markets. And being once required the reason, why he went not into Italy to look to the affairs thereof, as his Predecessors had done before him: he is said to have returned for answer that conceit of the Fox, for his not going to attend (as other beasts did) at the Lion's Den:

*Quia me vestigia terrent,
Omnia se adversum spectantia, nulla retrosum.*

That is to say:

I dare not go, because I track I see
Of any Beast returning towards me.

Which faulty and improvident resolution being followed by too many of his Successors, not only gave the Popes the opportunity they looked for, of making themselves the great disposers of the affairs of Italy; but many petit Princes thereby took occasion of getting all they could lay hold on for themselves, and others. For by this means, the Sealigers made themselves Masters of Verona, the Pessarien of Manua, the Carrarians of Padua, the Baillons of Bononia, and by the same the Florentines got Pistoia, and Ferrara was possessed by the Venitians. And although Henry VII. provoked by these indignities, made a journey thither, reduced many of the revolted Cities

Cities to their former obedience, and was crowned King at Millain with the Iron-Crowns as were all Ludovicus Bavarius, and Charles IV. two of his Successors: yet found they in conclusion such small benefit by the enterprise, as did not quit charge and trouble which it put them to. So in the end Italy was left wholly in a manner to what they could not manage; or otherwise confirmed those men in their usurpations, whom they found already possessed of the Emperors Countries, and bound them by that means the faster to the See of Rome, of which they were to hold their Estates in Fee; the Emperours having nothing left them but the empty Title, nor exercising the Imperial Power there any other way, than by changing Earldoms into Marquises, and Marquises to Dukedoms, which they often did for ready money or reward of Service; or to preserve some shadow of their ancient Interest.

And now we are to look on Italy as under a new face of things; not only in regard of several Principalities and forms of Government; but as replenished with new Colonies or Sets of people, differing from the old in manners as well as language. And though the Soil be now as it was before; yet hath that also found some change in the different production of the natural Fruits, as well as in the Manufactures and works of Art. For now besides their Corn and Wine, which anciently were the staple Commodities of this Country; they supply the rest of Christendom with Rice, Silks, Velvets, Taffeties, Sattins, Grograins, Ruffs, Fustians, Goldwire, Allom, Armour, Glasses, and such like Commodities, which make their Merchants very wealthy; who being for the most part Gentlemen of Noble houses, not only lose not the esteem of their Nobility by following the Trade of Merchandize (as in other places;) but by reason that they are possessed of Estates in Land, which they manage by their Bailiffs and other Servants, they are become the wealthiest Merchants in all Christendom.

Nor do the Country come behind them in all manner of affluence, which can be possibly enjoyed in so rich a Soil. Their Lands they set not at a rent, but at thirds and halves, according as the Soil is more or less fruitful; seldom abiding in the Country, but only for a month or two in the Summer times; but then they entertain themselves with their Music and Mistresses under the fragrant Hedges and shady Bowers, in as much solace and delight as may be desired. The residue of the year they spend in Cities, and places of the most resort, for change of company. But, on the other side, the Country Farmer lives a drudging and laborious life, liable to all the Taxes and Impositions which are laid on the Land; the Landlords part coming in clearly without any disbursements or deductions; inasmuch that it is proverbially, but most truly said, That the rich men in Italy are the richest, and the poor men the poorest, in all the world.

The people generally are grave, respective and ingenious. Excellent men (said once an Hispaniolized Italian) but for these three things; that is to say, in their lusts they are unnatural, in their malice unappealable, in their actions deceitful. To which might be added, that they will blaspheme rather than swear, and murder a man sooner than slander him. But this perhaps may be the fault but of some particulars: it being observed by moderate and impartial men, that they are obedient to their Superiours, to Inferiours courteous, and most desirous full of all Civilities, to Strangers affable, and most desirous by all fair and friendly offices to win their loves. In apparel they are said to be very modest, in the furniture of their houses sumptuous, at their Tables neat, sober of speech, enemies of all ill reports of others; and of their own reputation for exceeding tender, that whosoever slandereth any one of them, if it come unto the parties ear, he is sure to die for it. Of money and expense he is very thrifty, and loves to be at no more cost than he is sure to save by, or receive great thanks for; but otherwise for civil carriage and behaviour, surpassing all the Gentry of the World besides. Only in strictness to their Wives, they exceed all others, of whom they are so extremely jealous; that they shut them up all day from the common view, and permit them liberty of discourse with few or none. The Lock used by a Gentleman of Venice to be assured of his Wives chastity in the time of his absence, is so known a story that it needs no report. But touching the predominancy of this jealous humour in most Southern Nations, we shall speak more hereafter when we come to Spain. And yet if that be true, which is proverbially spoken of the women of Italy, the husbands have more reason for this strict restraint, than other Nations are aware of. For though they be for the most part witty in speech, and modest in the outward appearance, as much as any; yet it is said of them in the way of Proverb, That they are as Magpies at the door, Saints in the Church, Goats in the Garden, Devils in the house, Angels in the Streets, and Syrens in the Windows, not wanting on this ground to set out themselves with all advantages of art, there being few amongst them who use not painting, and other the sophistical helps to fallacious Beauty; and thereupon they have a saying, that if God make them tall and fat, (for the title of a goodly woman is much prized amongst them) they will use it themselves fair.

The Language of both Sexes is very Courteously and fluent, all of them speaking the Courtezan, or Court-language; notwithstanding the diversity of Dialects which is amongst them. For though there be a remarkable difference between the Florentine and Venician, the Milanese and the Roman, the Neapolitan and the Genese; yet it is hard to be discerned by the tone or pronunciation which language any Gentleman is of. But generally it is best spoken in the great Duke's Country, in the Cities of Florence and Siena; but in Florence especially; in which City, Guicciardini the Historian, Boccaccio the Author of the Decamerone, and other great Masters of the Italian Language, did live and flourish in their times.

For other men of note both for Arts and Arms, Italy hath afforded many since the fall of the Empire, viz. Emseu Silvius, afterwards Pope, by the name of Pius the Second; 2. Marcellus Catavinius, a stout defender of the Imperial Rights; 3. Petrarch, the Roman born; 4. Angelus Politianus, the Restorer of polite Literature in Italy; 5. Kodolphus Volateranus; 6. Picus Mirandula, two great Humanitians; 7. Guido Bonatus, a famous Astrologer; 8. Aristotle, and 9. Tasso, the most renowned Poets of their times, and the latter never followed since; 10. Sixtus Senensis one of the best Antiquaries of the Nation and a great Divine; 11. Bellarmino, and 12. Baronius, the Buttrifles and Pillars of the Church of Rome. And then for Arms; 1. Ludovicus Conius, the first Restorer of the honour of the Italian Soldierly; 2. Forti Braccio, and 3. Nicolas Piccinino, two of his training up in the feats of Chivalry; 4. 5. Sforza, the Father, and the Son; of which the Son attained by his valour, to the Dukedom of Millain; 6. Christopher Columbus, a Genese, 7. Americus Vesputius, a Florentine, and 8. Sebastian Cabot, a Venician, the fortunate Discoverers of America; 9. Andrea D' Oria, Admiral of the Navies to Charles

Office of trust, it being the nature of most men, that where they are not trusted, they are never true; and that as long as they lie under suspect and jealousy, they will be apt to entertain some thoughts of their lost condition. And of this kind of dealing with a person Delinquent we have a pregnant instance in the Emperor Otho, who not only pardoned Marius Celsus, one of Gabba's Faction, and a chief one too, but put him in place nearest to him, and made him one of his principal Leaders, in the following War against Vitellius. His reason was Ne hostis metum reconciliationis adhiberet, lest lying aloof as a pardoned Enemy, he might conceive the breach were but bad made up. And on the other side, Marius Celsus proved so sensible of the obligation, that he continued faithful to him to the very last; and lost his life in the pursuit of his quarrel: shewing thereby, that persons of a generous and noble disposition, are more obliged by favours, than restrained by terror. But it is now time I should free my self of these Fœces Candine, and sport my self a while in the Plains of Apulia.

But I must note, before I take my leave hereof, that these two Provinces of Campania and Abruzzo, make up the greatest, richest, and best peopled part of the Realm of Naples. And therefore when the Kingdom was divided between the French and the Spaniards, it was allotted to the French, as having the priority, both of claim and power. The Provinces remaining, although more in number, yet are not comparable to those two for wealth and greatness, and were assigned over to the Spaniards, as lying most conveniently for the Realm of Sicily.

III. PUGLIA is bounded on the West, with Abruzzo; on the East, with Terra d'Otranto; on the North, with the Adriatick Sea; on the South, with Calabria. It contains the whole Country called of old Apulia; from whence the Puglia of the Italians and the Pouille of the French are to be derived.

The whole Country containeth in it, besides villages and Towns unfortified, 126 Castles and walled places, with 13 Cities of good note. The most considerable of which we shall meet withal in our Geography of the several parts, divided anciently by Ptolemy, and since him, by Leander, into Apulia Daunia, and Apulia Peucezia: the former subdivided into the Capitanate, and Pouille the Plain; the later into Bari, and the Land of Otranto. For that the land of Otranto, (though now a Province of it self) did sometimes pass in the account of Apulia, seems to me most probable, in that all the East parts of this Kingdom were held by the Constantinopolitan Emperours (after the coming in of the Lombards: and by no other names than those of Apulia and Calabria: and by no other names than those were assigned over unto Otho II. of Germany, on his marriage with Theophania, Nece to one of those Emperours. And I conceive that it was then laid unto Apulia, rather than to Calabria, first, in regard that the old Inhabitants were the same in both; the Lapyges, Messapians, and Salentini, possessing promiscuously all this Tract from Mount Garganus in Daunia, to the Promontory called Lapygium in the most Eastern Angle of the Land of Otranto. And secondly, in regard that the people of both have a disease peculiar only to themselves, occasioned by the biting of a little Serpent, called a Tarentula, not curable but by Mulek only. This said, we will proceed in our Survey of the parts. And first,

APULIA DAUNIA, is that part hereof which lieth next to Abruzzo, from which parted by the River Phiturnus (now called Forsaro) and so extending Eastwards to the River Aufidus (whom the Italians call it) where it meets with Peucezia. The reason of the name is not yet agreed on. But I find no more probable conjecture of it, than that it should be called thus of Damnus, the Son of Danae by Pilumnus, once the King of this Country; it being reported in the Legends of those elder times, that Danae being delivered of Perseus whom the had by Jupiter was by her Father the King Acrifus, exposed to the mercy of the Seas; by which she was swallowed with her young son to the Coasts of this Province, here taken up by a poor Fisherman, and by him carried to the Court, where the King became so enamoured on her, that he took her to Wife, and by her was Father to this Damnus. But Damnus had not long enjoyed it, on the death of his Father, when either by force or composition, he was fain to leave it to Diomedes King of Ætolia: who at the end of the Trojan War, wherein he was principal Actor, hearing of the libidinous courses of his Wife Egiale, abhorred the thought of living with her's and so came with his people to this Country; where he fixt his dwelling, and built the City of Argyrissa, wherof more anon. But as for Damnus, though he was not able to keep the possession of this Country, yet he bequeathed his name unto it: and afterwards withdrawing into Latium with such of his Subjects as were willing to follow his Adventures, he became there the chief head of the Romuli, and built among them the Town of Ardea, his chief seat at the coming of Aeneas into Italy; betwixt whom and Turnus the son of this Damnus, grew that deadly feud, so celebrated in the Works of Virgil.

In this part hereof is the Lake of Lefina, so called from a City of that name adjoining to it, made of the waters of Phiturnus, and some other Rivers, which there lose themselves; in compass forty miles, and well stored with Fish: the Eels hereof the largest that have been seen. Another Lake called Arduarius, more memorable, though not so great, it being laid hereof by Pliny, that the waters of it are neither diminished by draining, nor increased by land-floods. Here is also the Mount Garganus, known by that name in Virgil, but now called S. Angelo, high, steep, and full of craggy Rocks: twenty miles in compass, but that extent diversified into Hills and most pleasant valleys, well wooded, and well stored with waters: here being one Lake (besides many others) called Lacus Varanus, said to be thirty miles in circuit. A place defensible by nature, and so strong by art, that it is commonly the last piece in the Realm of Naples, which is given up to the Invader: as appears plainly by the keeping of it by the Greeks and Sarazens for many years, after the Normans had possessed themselves of the rest of the Kingdom.

The whole divided by Alphonsus (in his new modelling of this Kingdom) into two parts, the greatest and most flourishing called Pouille the Plain, from the condition of the soil which is plain and level, not so much swelled with Hills as the rest of Apulia: for which cause called Puglia Piana by the modern Italians. Intersected betwixt which and Abruzzo, lieth a small Territory, by the said King Alphonsus called the CAPITANATE, destitute both of Woods and Rivers, and consequently not so populous as the rest of this Province: well furnished notwithstanding with all sorts of Grain, and stored with large and spacious Pastures, which breed such infinite herds of Cattel, that the Tribute there arising was valued at 80000 Crowns per an. in the time of Guiccardine, and by him reckoned one of the best Revenues of the Realm of Naples. Of which tribute when the French could receive no part, by reason that on the division which they made with Ferdinand and the Catholic (spoken of before) this Territory as a part of Apulia, did belong to the Spaniards, they brake out into open War, pretending that the Country appertained to them, (as indeed it lay very near their part) and thereby gave a full occasion to the Spaniards, a more diligent nation, and more intent upon their work, to worm them by degrees out of all the kingdom.

Chief places of the whole Daunia, 1. Luceria, the Nuceria of Ptolemy, and the Rudra of Suetonius; as which is ancient, and honoured with an Episcopal See. 2. Afcoti, of old called Afcular, and sometimes Afcular Savirani, to difference it from another of that name in Anconiana; the title and honour of a Duke; 3. Trivisa, Dukes title also, built by the Eastern Emperours in a place of strength and great advantage to restrain the intolencies of the Sarazens, then infesting this Country. These three in that part of it which is called the Capitanate. Then in the other part called Pouille the Plain. 4. Siponto, once a Roman Colony and an Archbishops See, which honour it enjoyed till destroyed by the Sarazens. 5. Murfredonia, founded near the place of the former, by Murfred the Barbador, King of Naples, the better to assure these parts of his Kingdom. A stately and magnificent City the Seat of the Archbishop of Siponto; beautified with a capacious Harbour for receipt of Ships, and an impregnable Castle for defence thereof. 6. Salpe of great antiquity, but not else observable. 7. Servitine of a newer date, but more rich and populous. 8. As ancient and as famous as the best amongst them, the poor Village of Cannae, situate near the mouth or influx of the River Aufidus; ignobilis Apulie vicus, as it is in Florus; but such as afterwards grew more notable for the great defeat which Annibal there gave to Paulus Æmilian and Terrantius Varro the Roman Consuls, of whose Army he slew 42700 on the very place. Which victory had he husbanded as he might have done, he had utterly subverted the State of Rome: so that it was most justly (as most truly) said by Malerbal General of his Hosts, Vincere scilicet Annibal victoria uti nefas; that he knew better how to get, than to use his victory. 9. But of most note in this part of Apulia was the town Argyria or Argyrissa as some call it, founded by Diomedes in the skirts of Mount S. Angelo towards the Sea, and in that part of this Country, which then (or afterwards) was held by the Lapyges, of which thus Virgil in the 11 of the Æneid.

Vidit Gargani condita Lapygis arvis,*

And being Victor he a City builds Near Garganus in the Lapygian fields,
And called it Argyrippa, by the name
Of some known place 'th Land from which he came.

By which we also may conclude, that it took this name with reference to some Town of Ætolia, which was the native Country of Diomedes. For although I know that many of the ancient Writers suppose it to have been first called Argos Hippium, with relation to a famous Cicerone of that name in Peloponnesus; and after by contraction or corruption to be named Argyrippa; yet those words of Patriæ de nomine Genis, do persuade me otherwise; Diomedes having nothing to do in the Country of Argolis, where that City stood; nor in the whole Demi-Island of Peloponnesus, wherof Argolis was a part or Province. It was called also Diomedea, and urbis Diomedis, because of this foundation, and his Royal Seat, after his fixing in his Country; but at the last it came to be called Argy, and by that name was known in the time of the Romans greatness; Now no where to be found but in the ruins of time, and the Records of Antiquity, unless it be in a poor Village called Sarpy where Niger findeth it.

APULIA PEUCEZIA, extendeth from the Banks of the River Aufidus on the West, to the land of Otranto on the East. So called as some conceive from Peucezia the Brother of Oenotrus; which may be probable enough, this being the first Country at which Oenotrus touched, when he came unto Italy with his people. Bochartus a great Enemy of all Traditions, will have it called Peucezia, and rov mædion, for that great quantity of Pitch which these Countries yield, as the word signifieth in the Greek. But whatsoever was the reason of the ancient name, that of the present is well known and agreed upon from Bari the chief City hereof, being now called Barri.

Places of most importance in it: 1. Barri, seated near the Sea, but without a Haven, yet seated in so rich a soil, and so well inhabited, that it is a fair and wealthy City, and the chief of this part of Apulia, taking name from hence. 2. Barietto, by the modern Latins called Banylum, situate in or near the place of the old Cusumum, an Haven Town, and of so great importance reckoned for one of the four strong holds of Italy, in the middle Ages; the other three being Croton in Lombardia, Prato in Tuscany, and Fabrianum now called Fabiano in Anconitana. 3. Annapolis, a Port town also not very large, but of a neat elegant building; new built, and the title of a Marques. 4. Tramunt, an ancient City, and an Archbishops See, but at this time better built, than peopled by reason of some defects in the Harbour upon which it standeth. These three laid together with Murfredonia in the other Apulia, pawned by the Kings of Naples (when first invaded by the French) to the state of Venice; but recovered from them not long after by Fredinand the Catholic, when possessed of that Kingdom. 5. Bionta, an Archbishops See also, one of which was a notable stickler in the Council of Trent. 6. Pulignano, on a rocky hill, the Honourary title of a Marques, and a Sec Episcopate. 7. Molfette, which gives title to a Prince, but not else considerable. 8. Vigilia, now called Bisigli a Bilpos See, situate near the Adriatick amongst craggy Rocks. 9. Venusia, a strong Place and of great importance; one of the last Towns which held good for the French, in the recovery of this Kingdom from Charles VIII. The Venustum of the ancient Romans, and the Birth-place of Horace, hence called Venusinus. Nothing considerable of these people in point of story, but that confederating with Tarentum against the Romans, as the Calabrians, Bruttii, and Lucani did; they were all forced to submit to the power of Rome at the end of the War, A. V. C. 481. Papyrius Cursor and Sp. Carvilius being the second time Consuls.

IV. TERRA d'OTRANTO, as it is now called, was once the Eastern part of Apulia Daunia unto which it joyneth, from which parted only by a line drawn from Brundisium to Tarentum, of which more anon. Thus called from Otranto the chief Town hereof, the seat and habitation in the elder times of the Salentini, the Lapyges, and the Messapians, and is accordingly intitled in ancient Authors by the several names of Lapygia, Messapia, and Salentina. They were the last people of Italy which held out against Rome, and sunk immediately after the Tarentini, upon whose Fate they did depend, A. V. C. 487. Junius Perra for it. Of these three Nations the Lapyges were of greatest Fame or of greatest infamy. Cretans originally sent in quest of Glauceus the Son of Miner, whom when they could not find, and durst not return without him, they fixed here their dwelling; Lapyx the Son of Deдалios, being their Captain and conductor, and from him denominated.

On the West side of this Calabria, and properly a part thereof, but reaching to the North as far as Apulia, standeth that Mountainous Country, which in the subdivision of these Provinces by King Alfonso, was called the BASILICATE; and anciently the seat of the Lucani, and therefore called Lucania by the elder Latinists. Divided from the Principate, or West parts of Campania, by the River Silarus. A Country heretofore very unfavourable to Travellers, by reason of the difficult ways, and assured company of Thieves, but now reduced to better order. It containeth in it 93 walled places, and nine Towns or Cities, the chief whereof are, 1. Pagindonia, or Poli, a City situate in a pleasant and benign a soil, that Rovers grow there thrice a year. 2. Polycastro on the Sea-shore, and the former is, honoured with the title of a Dukedom. And Diano or Diammi, a more inland City, near which there is a Valley twenty miles in length, and four miles in breadth; which for all manner of delights, and fruitfulness, yields to none in Naples.

VII. THE ISLES of NAPLES are either in the Adriatick, and Tuscan Seas, or in the Bay of Puteoli. In the Adriatick Sea, are the Islands of Diomedes, right against Apulia, where it encountereth with Abruzzo: so called from Diomedes King of Æthiopia, who after the end of the Trojan War, (in which he was so great a stickler) settled himself in some part of Apulia: the principal whereof are, St. Maris, St. Dominico, and Tremisana. 2. The Island of Acate, over against the Town of Gallipoli. 3. St. Andrew in the Bay of Tarentum. 4. And finally, the two Islands of Diolcora and Calypso, over against the Cape of Lecina, now called Calonci, in the upper Calabria. Of all which there is little famous. In the Tuscan or Iyberian Seas, are the Islands of Pantia and Pandataria (now called Palmaria) as little famous as the other: I save that the last is memorable in the Roman Stories, for the confinement of Agrippina the Wife of Germanicus, and Mother of Caligula, by the appointment of the Emperor Tiberius Nero.

Those in the Gulf or Bay of Puteoli are of better note. The principal whereof are, 1. Ischia, heretofore called Oenotris, from its plenty of Wine, wherewith it aboundeth to this day; as also with Allom, Sulphur and most excellent Fruits. It is in compass 18 miles, and so begirt with Rocks and dangerous Cliffs, that it is accessible at one entrance only, and that too fortified with a strong and impregnable Cittadel: and therefore chosen by King Ferdinand for his place of Refuge, when he was ousted of his Kingdom by Charles VIII. Here is also good plenty of Hares and Conies. 2. Procithia, now called Procitha, about six miles in circuit, wherein are very wholesome Baths, good store of Conies, Hares and Pheasants; the Shore replenished with Fish, and the Land with Fountains. John de Procithis who plotted the Sicilian Vessers, was once Lord of this place; but afterwards for a reward of that service, made Vice-Roy of Valencia, a Kingdom of Spain. 3. Caprea, a small rocky Island, having no Haven, nor convenient station for Ships, but of a mild and temperate Air, much beautified by Augustus Cæsar, in regard that an old maple Tree upon his casual landing here, did bud forth afresh. After that, it was much honoured by his retirement from affairs of State; and as much dishonoured by Tiberius his next Successor, who withdrawing hither many times from his Court at Rome, made it the Theater of his Cruelties, and most filthy Lusts. It hath a little City of the same name, having a Fortrefes, and a Bishops See; and another Town called Anacopia, inhabited by Fishermen, and Shipwrights belonging to the Navy of Naples. Into this Island they used to confine Offenders in former times, and sometimes also at this day. 4. Stenaria, a small Island given by Augustus to the Neapolitani in exchange for Caprea, whose before it was.

There are few Nations under the Sun, who have suffered under more changes and alterations of State, than the Inhabitants of this Kingdom. For being at the first a mixture of several Nations, some of them preyed upon the others, till they were all subdued (as hath been shewed before) by the Power of Rome. In the declining of her fortunes, they followed for the most part the Carthaginians, and took part with Annibal; and he being called home, they returned again to their old obedience. When Italy was subdued by the Goths, it became subject to that people, as Stiell, and the rest of those Islands did; and when the Lombards Lorded it in the Roman Provinces, all Naples fell into their hands, except Apulia and Calabria; which the Greek Emperor having conquered from the Goths with the rest of Italy, kept (but with much difficulty) to themselves. In the division of the Empire betwixt Carols Magnus and Irene, these two last Provinces only were assigned to the Constantinopolitans; the rest to Charles, and his Successors: both outed of their several parts by the prevailing Sarazens, under the conduct of Sabbas, and other successful Generals. These partly dispossessed by the Emperor Otho I. and his Almain Forces; challenging a right herein, as King of Italy, that right confirmed and enlarged by the Marriage of Otho II. with Theophania, Nece to Nicephorus Phocas the Eastern Emperor, who brought Apulia and Calabria for her Dowry and Portion. But long the Germans had not held it, when they were again expelled by the Greek and Sarazens, joining together against them as a common Enemy, who afterwards held bitter Wars against one another, for the sole command. During these Wars it hapned that one Drangos, a Gentleman of Normandy, having in the presence of Duke Robert (the Father of William the Conquerour) slain one Reposel, a Gentleman of like quality; to avoid the Justice of the Prince, and the practices of Reposel's Kindred, fled into this Country; attended by such of his Followers, as either did depend upon his Fortunes, or had been medlers in the Fray. Where being come, the Duke Benevent, Vicegerent to the Eastern Emperor, took them into pay. Their entertainment being bruited in Normandy, and a report raised withal, That the Greek hearkened after men of valour and action; caused many private Gentlemen to pass over the Alper, and there to help themselves out a more prosperous fortune than formerly they had enjoyed. The fortunate success of which last Adventures, drew thither also Tancred, the Lord of Hainville; who with his twelve Sons came into Apulia, An. 1008, and in short time not only drove the Sarazens thence, but the Grecians also, as men that had broke Covenant with them in the division of the Booty. For William the Son of Tancred, combining with Meloreo, Governour of Apulia for the Greek Emperor, and with the Princes of Capua and Salerno, men of power and honour, for the conquest of Stiell (which the Sarazens then wholly held) agreed amongst themselves to divide the places conquered by them into four equal parts; one for each Adventurer. But when the Sarazens were driven out, Meloreo having new Supplies sent him out of Greece, seized on the possession of the whole Island in the Emperor's name. Which injury William commonly dissembled, till Meloreo's Forces were dispersed, and then he suddenly fell upon him; first took the City of Melfi, and after by degrees, most of the other Towns and places which the Greek held in Italy: of which both he and his Successors kept possession by the Title of Dukes of Calabria only. Of these (though all of eminent virtue) there were two besides this William, of special fame. 1. Robert Guiscard, the third Son of Tancred, the most vallant Captain of his time, and chief establisher of the Normans power in Italy, to which he added in conclusion the Isle of Stiell, together with the City of Naples itself, and all the Lands which lye betwixt it and Rome. 1. Bohemund, the eldest Son of this Robert, who going with Godfrey of Bouillon, and others of the Western Christians to the Holy Land, was for his signal merit invested with the Kingdom of Antioch; inherited by his Children after his decease.

But to proceed: This Guiscard at his death, (but not without some wrong to the Children of his Brother William, whom he had dispossessed of all by the Pope's Authority) gave Stiell, with the Title of Earl, to his Son Roger; and his Estates in Italy to his other Son William: who going to Constantinople to marry with the Emperor's Daughter, was ousted of his part by his Brother Roger, made not long after, by the Pope the first King of this Family.

The Kings of Naples of the Norman Line.

- 1125 1. Roger, Earl of Stiell, created by Pope Anacletus II. King of both the Sicilies, at the Town of Benevent; which City in requital of so great a favour, he restored again unto a right Church, from which it had been taken (after the first Donation of it) by the German Emperours. 24.
- 1140 2. William, the Son of Roger, who to assure himself of his Kingdoms, was content to take them as a gift from the hands of Pope Adrian IV. to be held for ever in Fee of the Church of Rome. 21.
- 1170 3. William II. Son of the former William, who left a Daughter called Constance, who became a Nun. 26.
- 1196 4. Tancred, the base Son of William II. excluded his Sister from the Crown, but was eventually deposed by Pope Celsine III. who had an aim to get the Kingdom for himself. But when he saw that Tancred was too strong for him, out of meer spite to be defeated of his purpose, he called in the Germans, the ancient enemies of his See; and gave the Lady Constance, then almost fifty years of age, in Marriage unto Henry VI. 2.

The German Line.

- 1198 5. Henry, the sixth of that name, Emperor and Duke of Schomaben, succeeded on his Marriage with the Lady Constance. 4.
- 1202 6. Frederick, Son of the Emperor Henry and Queen Constance, crowned at the age of three years, afterwards Emperor by the name of Frederick II. He had to wife the Daughter of John de Bren, the titular King of Hiersusalem, of which the Kings of Naples have ever since had the title of Kings; and in the rights of this Kingdom, the Kings of Spain.
- 1250 7. Conrade, the Son of Frederick, King of Naples and Stiell, as also Emperor and Duke of Saravie, or Schomaben; poisoned (as it was conceived) by his base Brother Manfred. 4.
- 1254 8. Manfred, the base Son of Frederick, Duke of Benevent, first governed the Kingdom as Protector unto Conradine, the Son of Conrade; but after took it to himself against the will of Pope Urban IV. who being weary of the Germans, called in Charles Duke of Anjou, and the Earl of Provence, Brother to Lewis X. of France: It being usual with the Popes (as Machiavel very well observeth) to call new men into Italy, and stir up new Wars for their own ambition; not suffering any to possess that long which themselves (through their weakness) could not hold; and practising the overthrow of those very men, whom themselves had raised to power and greatness.

The French Line.

- 1261 9. Charles, Earl of Anjou and Provence, overcame King Manfred, and was after Crowned by Pope Urban IV. who conditioned with him, that neither he nor his Successors should assume the Empire; and that they should pay fifty thousand Crowns per annum as a Rent to the Church. This Charles did also vanquish Conradine the Son of Conrade, the last of the Royal House of Saravie, whom he caused to be beheaded at Naples. After which bloody Act, neither he nor any of his posterity, did either quietly or long enjoy these Kingdoms. For in his own time Peter King of Aragon, claimed the Kingdom of Naples, in right of Constance his Wife, Daughter of Manfred: betwixt whom and Charles, a single combat was appointed to be fought in Bordeaux, before King Edward I. of England, to decide the Controversie. But whilst Charles there expected him, he seized on Stiell, Anno 1281. This Charles reigned three and twenty years.
- 1284 10. Charles II. Son of Charles I. formerly Prisoner in Stiell to Peter of Aragon, was ransomed by the procurement of K. Edward above named for 30000 Marks. By Mary, Daughter of Stephen, King of Hungary, he had fourteen Children: the most pertinent of which (to our purpose) were Charles furnished Martell, King of Hungary in right of his Mother; Robert King of Naples; John of Durazzo, and a Daughter (whose name I find not) married to Charles, Earl of Valois, who in her right obtained the Earldom of Aijun. 26.
- 1310 11. Robert, the second Son of Charles II. 22.
- 1342 12. Jane, the Nece of Robert by his Son Charles, first married Andrew, the second Son of Charles King of Hungary, whom he hanged at her window for insufficiency; and for her second husband had Lewis, Prince of Tarentum, who over-training himself to satisfy her carnal appetite, died. Her third husband was James, Prince of Majorca, a gallant young Gentleman, whom she beheaded for lying with another woman. Her fourth, Otho of Brunswick, a tough Soldier, who had the good fortune to out-live her. She was twice driven out of her Kingdom by Lewis King of Hungary, brother of Andrew her first Husband: restored the first time by the power of Pope Clement the sixth; but at the second time taken and hanged at the same window where she had hanged her first Husband. But first, out of an hatred to her next Heirs of the House of Hungary, she adopted Lewis Duke of Anjou, descended

The Hungarian Line.

- 1371 13. Charles III. Son to Lewis, and Nephew of Prince John of Durazzo before mentioned, by the power of Lewis, King of Hungary, and the favour of Pope Urban V. was made King of Naples. He overthrew and killed in Battle Duke Lewis of Anjou, his Competitor, and after the death of King Lewis of Hungary, succeeded in that Kingdom also; but long he had not reigned therein, when poisoned (as it was supposed) by the old Queen Mother, to advance her Daughter to that Throne, 15.
- 1386 14. Ladislaus, Son of Charles III. having a quarrel with the Pope, made a voyage Royal unto Rome, where he forced his entry, and was there triumphantly received: on which displeasure the Pope called in Lewis II. Duke of Anjou, who gave Ladislaus a great overthrow. Informing, as Ladislaus used to say, that if Lewis had followed his Victory the first day, he had been master of his Kingdom and Person too; if the second, of his Kingdom, but not of his Person: but not pursuing it till the third day, he failed of both. So in the end he was compelled to flee to Rome, and give over the enterprise, 29.
- 1415 15. Joane II. Sister of Ladislaus, of as much levity, but not altogether of so ill a fame as the former Joane: observing the unprosperous successes of the House of Anjou the adopted for her Heir, Alfonso V. of Aragon; who had some claim unto the Kingdom as the direct Heir of Pedro, or Peter III. and Constance the Daughter of King Manfred, spoken of before. But finding him to stand too much on his own right, and to be too forward in taking a possession of it, before her death she revoked that Adoption, and made a new grant of that Estate to Lewis IV. Duke of Anjou, and after his decease to his brother Rene, or Renato: both vanquished by the Aragonians.

The Aragonian Line.

- 1434 16. Alfonso King of Aragon, partly by Conquest, and partly by Adoption, having got the Kingdom, left it well settled unto Ferdinand, his natural Son, 24.
- 1458 17. Ferdinand, the late Son of Alfonso (the lawful Sons inheriting the Realm of Aragon, Sicily, &c.) succeeded in the Realm of Naples, 36.
- 1494 18. Alfonso II. Son of Ferdinand, in whose time the French began to aim at the Realm of Naples. This King and his two Predecessors were of the order of the Garter.
- 1494 19. Ferdinand II. Son of Alfonso II. outed of his Estate and Kingdom by Charles VIII. Son of King Lewis XI. of France, whom Rene the last Duke of Anjou had made the sole Heir of all his Titles and Possessions. And though Charles upon his Conquest was solemnly Crowned, yet posting back again into France before he had settled his affairs in this Kingdom, and having much discontented ted the chief men of the Ajouin Faction; he lost it suddenly to the same Ferdinand; from whom he had so suddenly won it.

- 1497 20. Frederick II. Brother of Alfonso II. and Uncle of this last Ferdinand, succeeded him in Estate, and was the sixth King that had reigned in Naples. within the compass of three years: that is to say, Ferdinand I. Alfonso II. Ferdinand II. Charles of France, the second Ferdinand again, and then this Frederick. Finding himself betrayed by the Spaniards, he submitted himself to Lewis XII. King of France, and yielded up his Kingdom to him. And indeed what else could that poor Prince do, when he saw his own blood, and such as had taken his Realm into their protection, conspiring against him?

For when Charles made his passage towards Naples, Ferdinand the Catholic, sent Gonzalo, (who was afterward for his valour surnamed the Great Captain) with some Forces to resist the French Invaders. But when the French were expelled, Gonzalo would not leave the Country, because his Master had not as yet sent for him. In the mean time it was agreed between Lewis of France, and this Ferdinand, that they should jointly set upon the Kingdom of Naples: That having won it, the French should possess Abruzzo, and Lavoro; the Spaniards, Puglia, and both Calabria: That the first should be entitled King of Naples; the other, Duke of Apulia. This Confederacy was kept secret till the French Forces were come to Rome; and Gonzalo possessed (under pretence of defending it) of all Calabria: So that it was no marvel that they made themselves Masters of the Country. An action in which the French dealt very unadvisedly, in bringing into Italy where he was before the sole Moderator, another King as great as himself, to whom as to his Rival, his Enemies might have recourse on all occasions; and the Spaniards as unnaturally, in betraying for the moiety of a Kingdom, a Prince of his own blood, under pretence and promise of succours. But the two Kings did not continue long in good terms of Partnership. For the Spaniards being more intent upon their advantages, soon picked a quarrel with the French, within two or three years drove them out of all, and to this day keep it; though both this Lewis, and his Successors Francis I. and Henry II. have divers times, and with great effusion of blood, attempted the recovery of it.

The Spanish, or Castilian Line.

- 1503 21. Ferdinand III. surnamed the Catholic, King of Castile, Aragon, &c. and Naples, 1.
- 1516 22. Charles V. Emperor, King of Spain, and the IV. of that name in Naples, 43.
- 1558 23. Philip II. of Spain, and the first of Naples, 40.
- 1598 24. Philip II. of Naples, 3. of Spain, 22.
- 1621 25. Philip III. of Naples, 4. of Spain.
- The Arms of this Kingdom are Azure, Some of Flowers de Luce, Or, a File of three Labels, Gules.
- The Revenues of it are two Millions and a half of Crowns; whereof 20000 are due to the Pope for Chief-Rent; and the rest so exhausted in maintaining Garrisons upon the Natives, and a strong Navy against the Turks, that the King of Spain receiveth not a fourth part de claro.

The

The Kingdom of SICILIA.

BEFORE we can come into the Isle of Sicily, we must first cross that branch of the MEDITERRANEAN Sea, which is called the Fare, or Strait of Messina; where the passage is so strait and narrow, that it exceedeth not in breadth a mile and a half. In other parts, as the Sea grows wider, it is distant from the main land of Italy near 300 miles; that is to say, from the Town of Drepanum in Sicily, to the City of Naples. As for the Mediterranean Sea, it is so called because it interlaceth the midst of the earth; extending from the Straits of Gibraltar on the West, to the coast of Palestine on the East; and so dividing Africk both from Europe and Asia minor. In the Scriptures, Job. 1. 4. it is called by the name of Mare magnum, or the great Sea: great in comparison of the dead Sea, and the Sea of Galilee, lying on the other side of the land of Palestine; but small enough if compared to the Ocean, with which in probability the Writer of that Book might have no acquaintance. Besides which general name of the Mediterranean, it hath also many particular names, as the Adriatick, Egean, Ionian, and Carpathian Sea, where it bordereth upon Greece, and Anatolia; Mare Lilybeum, where it runneth by the shores of Africk; with reference to Italy called in some parts Mare Tyrrhenum, in others Mare Ligustum; in some parts Mare Siculum, and in others Mare Sardinum, &c. And as the Camelion is said to apply it self to the colour of the nearest adjacent body: so this Sea taketh its particular denominations from the nearest shores. These Seas are also called by the some modern Writers, in imitation of the French, by the name of the Levant, or the Seas of the Levant: because in respect of France, Spain, Britain, Germany, &c. they in towards the East; the word Levant signifying in the French, a rising up, and more especially the Sun-rising. The principal Island of this Sea which relate to Italy (for of others we shall speak in their proper places) are those of Sicily, Sardinia, Corsica and some Isles adjoining unto these.

SICILY, environed round with the lower or Tyrrhenian Sea, contains seven hundred miles in compass; and is supposed to have been joined to Italy in former times, being then a Peninsula, or Demi-Island, such as Peloponnesus; and joined to the Continent by as narrow a Isthmus. The reason of that name we shall see anon.

The separating of it from the main Land of Italy, is by the Poets ascribed to Neptune, who with his three forked Mace, or Trident, broke it off from the land, in favour of Jove the son of Saturn; that so he might inhabit there with the greater safety, being environed with waters. Which though it be a Fable or Poetical fiction, yet with some help from the Mythologists, may be made a story. For if by Jove and Neptune, we understand the Winds and Seas, it intimates that it was divided from the rest of Italy, either by the fury of the Waves, or by the violence of some Earthquakes, to which this Island is still subject, which might in time consume and wear away the Earth. Nor wants there very good reason for this supposition; as, 1. The narrowness of the Strait, exceeding not a mile and a half; inasmuch as at the taking of Messina by the Carthaginians many of the people saved themselves by swimming over this Strait, into the opposite parts of Italy. 2. The shallowness of it, being found upon a diligent sounding, not to be above eight fathom deep. Thence 'tis observed, that the land on both sides is very brittle, full of Caves and chinks made in it by the working of the Sea; on this separation; and that on the Italian coast where the Strait is narrowest, there stands a City old called Rhegium, which signifieth a breach or cutting off, from the Greek word ῥήγνυμι, which signifies to break off, or violently to pull asunder; and is supposed to be so called upon this occasion. And indeed the violence of the Sea is so great and dangerous in this narrow Channel, so subject unto blustering winds issuing out of the hollow caverns of the earth; that the breaking off of this Island from the rest of Italy, is a thing most credible. Which dangerous nature of the passage, being also full of Rocks, and unsafe by reason of the Whirl-pools occasioned it to be called by Florus the Historian, Periculosus infame monstris fretum; chiefly so called with reference to Scylla and Charybdis, of which many fabulous things are reported by the ancient Poets. Of these Charybdis is a Gulf or Whirl-pool on Sicily side, which violently attracting all Vessels that come too nigh it, devoureth them, and casteth up their wracks at the shore of Tauranum, not far from Catania. Opposite to this in Italy, standeth the dangerous Rock Scylla, at the foot of which many little Rocks shoot out, on which the water strongly beating, making that noise, which the Poets feign to be the barking of Dogs. The passage between these two being to unskilful Mariners exceeding perilous, gave beginning to the Proverb;

Incidit in Scyllam cupiens vitare Charybdim.

Who offends Charybdis for to shun,
Doth sometimes on Scylla run.

But there are other things which made Sicily famous in old times, besides these two, as viz. the punishment of the Giant Enceladus, for his attempt against the gods: the frequent burning of Aëna (under which he is tumbled to be shut up) being supposed to proceed from his sulphurous breath. Secondly, the birth of Ceres in this Isle; and thirdly, the Rape of Proserpine. To these two last the Isle was consecrated in those days: to Ceres in regard the first taught the people to sow Corn; whence the word Ceres is often used in the Poets to signify Bread, and other necessary provisions for life, as Sine Cere & Baccho friget Venus, to Proserpine, because bestowed upon her by Pluto, to please her after the Ravishment committed on her.

It is situated under the fourth Climate, the longest day being 13 hours and a half. And was once called Trinacria, because it shoots forth into the Sea with three Capes or Promontories: viz. 1. Pelorus, now Capo de Foro, to the North; 2. Pachynus, now Capo Passaro, to the West; and 3. Lilybeum, now Capo Boi, or Capo Caro, to the South. This last looketh towards Carthage, and the shores of Africk, from which distant 180 miles. And of this Strabo doth affirm, that a man of quick and strong sight getting up into a Watch-tower that stood in this Cape, descryed a Fleet setting sail out of the Haven of Carthage; and told the Lilybeans their signals and number. That this is true, I dare not say; for besides the unlikelihood of kenning at so great a distance; we are taught by Philosophy, that the Sea being of an orbicular form, swelleth it self into the fashion of a round Turret or Hill, till it put bound to the eye-sight. From these three corners, this Country was (as we have said) called Trinacria, or Trinacria, according to that of Ovid.

Trinacria; postquam, nomen adeptus, loci.*

An Island with three corners braves the Main,
And thence the name of Trinacris doth gain.

The first Inhabitants that we find to have dwelt in this Country, are the huge Giants so often mentioned in the Odyssey of the divine Poet Homer, called Lagrigians and Cyclopes; of which last rank was the so much famous Polyphemus, who with so much humanity entertained Ulysses, and his companions. These were afterwards rooted out by the Sicani, a people of Spain, who called it Sicania. As for the name of Sicilia, some derive it from Siculus, a supposed King of Spain, who is fabled to have conquered this Country. But the truth is, it came from the Siculi, who being by Evander and his Arcadians driven out of Latium, came into this Island: to which having mastered the Sicani, and driven them from the West and the Northern part, to the East and South they left their name. At their first landing they built the City of Zancle, called afterwards Messana, together with Nice, Hybla, Catana, and Leontium. After them came another Italian people named the Morgertes being driven thence by the Oenonians and late down in that part of the Island where stood the City of Morgentium, built by them at their first arrival. The first of all the Greeks who set foot in it (not to say any thing of the coming of Moses hither in the pursuit of Dadalus, having more in it of the Fiction than Historical truth) where the Chalcidians, a people of the Isle Euboea, now called Negropont; who built the City of Naxos; and after them Archias of Corinth, with his fellow adventurers, by whom Syracuse was either first built, or very much beautified and repaired. Next them the Rhodiens and Cretans sent some Colonies hither, the first Founders of Gela; and after of the renowned City of Agriguntum: And not long after a new Plantation sent from Sparta built Heraclea. The Citizens of Megaris, another state of Greece, sent a Colony also, who built Selinus. And did those of Messene also, who taking the Town of Zancle from the Siculi, new built or beautified it, and gave unto it to repair the name of Messana. Nor is it to be thought, that the Tyrrians and Phoenicians, being so great undertakers of publick business, and very powerful in shipping, would sit still, when so fair a booty did invite their industry: who seizing on the Promontories of Pachynus and Lilybaeum, and some of the adjoining Islands; did fortify them for the better securing of the Trade which they had in Sicily. But all these several Adventurers having several interferences, joined not together in the work of an absolute Conquest; but planting themselves only on the Sea shores, altered not the state by which they found it called at their coming Sicilia.

The people are ingenious, eloquent and pleasant, but without very unconstant, and so full of talk, that from thence came the Proverb, Gerre Siculae. They are also said to be of a very envious, suspicious, and distrustful nature, incapable of injuries, and vehement in pursuit of revenge, as appears by that great slaughter which they made of the French; yet without courteous enough to strangers and Parasitical enough to their superiors. They have been famous heretofore for many notable inventions, Archimedes ascribing to them the Art of Oratory, and first making of Palatal Elegances, Pliny of Clocks (or rather of Hour-glasses; for Clocks were but a late invention, and that of the Flemmings); and Plutarch of Military Engines; which last were brought by Archimedes under great perfection.

The Christian Faith was first preached here, by some of the Disciples of St Peter, whom he sent hither at his first coming to Rome; of which Pancratius (whom we call commonly St. Pancrace) is said to have been the first Bishop of Tauranum, and Marianus of Syracuse. They are now generally of the Religion authorized by the Popes of Rome; that of the Greek Church being rather connived at than allowed of; in the Communion whereof here are thought to be ten thousand souls, but looked on by the rest as schismatical people. For the most part they use the Italian Language, but very much altered, by the Greek, Arabian, Norman, French and Spanish tongues; to which Nations they have been severally subject, since the time of the Romans. The total number of the people is thought to be about a Million and a half.

The soil is incredibly fruitful in Wine, Oyl, Honey, Minerals of Gold, Silver, and Allom, together with plenty of Salt and Sugar; which last commodity the Natives sell in Canes unto the Venetians, and buy it again of them when it is refined; and thereby letting strangers go away with the best part of their gains; as generally they do in all other Merchandize; which they permit to be exported, rather than put themselves to the trouble of Trafficking abroad in Foreign Nations. There are also Gems of Agates, and Emeralds. It yieldeth also great store of the richest Silks, which grow plentifully about Messana; variety of most excellent and delicious fruits, both for taste and colour: with such abundance of all sorts of Grain, that it was called in old times Horreum Romani populi, or the Granary of the Roman Empire; and doth now furnish some parts of Italy, Spain, and Barbary, besides Malibus and the adjacent Isles, with that which he can spare of her superfluities. Nay, Tully doth not only call it the Granary and Store-house of the City of Rome, in regard of Corn, but adds that it was accounted a well furnished Treasury; as being able of it self without charge of the State, to cloath, maintain and furnish the greatest Army, with Leather, Corn and apparel. And if Diodorus Siculus may be credited into, he telleth us, that about Leontium and some other places, Wheat did grow of it self, without any labour of the Husbandman. At this day in some parts of the Isle, the soil is so exceeding fruitful, that it yields unto the Husbandman an hundred measures of Corn for one. And certainly the Corn of this Country must needs yield a wonderful increase, the King of Spain receiving an hundred thousand Crowns yearly for the Custom of Wheat. In this Country is the Hill Hybla, so famous for Bees and Honey; near which there was a City of the same name also, which afterwards was called Megara. And here is also the Hill Ætna, now called Monteiboli, which continually sendeth forth flames of Fire, to the astonishment of all beholders. The most famous Conflagrations in the former times were presently before the breaking out of the War in Sicily, which the Roman Writers call Bellum Ierile, not pacified but by the slaughter of 70000 of the Slaves which had taken Arms against Rome; and shortly after the death of Julius Cæsar, portending those profligations and Bloody Wars, which did after follow. And to this day such extraordinary eruptions of it are accounted ominous. The Hill it self is of that height, that it is ten miles from the top to the bottom, and may be easily discerned by Sailors at an hundred miles distance; the lower parts thereof being very fruitful, the middle shaded with Woods, and the top covered with Snow, a great part of the year, notwithstanding the frequent vomiting of flames and cinders. But these eruptions of fire are not now so ordinary as they have been formerly; the matter which gave fuel to it being wasted by continual burnings; so that the flames which issue hence are hardly visible but by night, night, though the smook shew it self the most part of the day. And when it doth break out, which is commonly once in three or four years; it falleth in great flakes on the Wales adjoining; to the destruction of the Vintage, and great loss of the Country. But that, they say, is recompensed by the plenty of the following years; the ashes thereof so bathing and enriching the soil, that both the Vines and Corn-fields are much bettered by it. And this report I am the apter to believe, in regard we find by late experience here amongst our selves, that the Turks taken from the ground and burnt to ashes, and very spread on land and ploughed into it, doth yield a very great improvement, even to barren soils. Which kind of Husbandry is called the Despoiling of land, because there first used; but in Hungary it was called, as I remember (having been unfortunately too long a stranger there) by the name of burning and beeking. But to return again to Ætna, into this fiery Furnace the Philosopher Empedocles cast himself that he might be reputed a God.

— Deus immortalis haberi

Dum caput Empedocles, ardentem fervidus Ætnam Influit.

As Horace, in his Book of Arte Poetica.

Empedocles to be a God desires,
And casts himself into th' Ænean fires.

The reason of these fires is the abundance of Sulphur and Brimstone, contained in the bosom of the Hill; which is blown by the wind, driving in at the chaps of the Earth as by a pair of bellows. Through these chinks also there is continually more fuel added to the fire, the very water adding to the force of it as we see that water cast on coals in the Smiths Forge, doth make them burn more ardently. The reason of this flame is thus set down by Ovid.

Illa bituminea rapiunt incendia vires
Lutaque exiguis ardeant sulphura flammis.
Atq; ubi terra cibor alimentaq; debita flammæ
Non dabit, assumpta per longum viribus ævum,
Naturæq; suum nutrimentum decit edaci.
Non foret Ætna famem, desertaq; desertæ ignis.

A frozen mould these fiery flames begin,
And clayie brimstone aids that fire within:
Yet when the slimy soil consumed, shall Yield no more food to feed the fire withal,
And Nature shall restrain her nourishment,
The flame shall cease, having all famishment.

Under this Hill some Poets feign the Giant Enceladus to have been buried, as before is said, whose hot breath fired the Mountain lying on his face. Others suppose it to be the Shop of Vulcan, and the Cyclops; and the great Papists take it for the place of Purgatory; all alike unfeasible.

The principal Rivers herof, 1. Taretia, anciently called Torus. 2. Himera, neigbouring by Mount Hybla, much famed for Honey. 3. Jicantus. 4. Hybla. 5. Asius, of great note for its precious Stones. None of them much observable for length or breadth, but that defect supplied by the commodiousness of Bays and Creeks, which are very frequent in this Island, and by the benefit of Fountains and fresh-water Lakes. Most memorable amongst these, 1. The Lake called Palæstra, (now Napthia) which for three months doth cast forth water very hot, but of very ill smell; of which, there is mention made in Pliny, by the name of Epiphitis. 2. A Fountain near the foot of Ætna, the water whereof is sharp like Vinegar, and sometimes boylth; into which a piece of cloth cast, being before steeped in water mixed with Gall, becomes suddenly black. 3. Another Fountain near Drepanum, the water of which, as soon as drunk, provoketh loins. All which effects proceed from that sulphureous and bituminous matter, of which the whole Island is exceeding full. 4. Arctus, of greater fame among the Ancients than all the rest; especially in that the River Alpheus (a River of Greece) having swallowed up one hundred and forty lesser streams, and losing it self under the ground, is thought to empty it self into it. The thing affirmed by Seneca and Strabo both; and seems to be sufficiently proved, by the several instances of a wooden dish or cup lost in the River Alpheus, and found rising up in this River; and by the leaves of certain trees growing on the banks of that Greek River, and swimming on this in great abundance; there being none of these trees in all Sicily. Deiuri Alpheus (saith Mela) se non consociare pelago; sed subter maria, versasq; depressas, bene agere alveum, atq; hic se rursus excolere.

This Island is famous for the worthy Scholars (once produced, viz. Æschylus, the first Tragedian of fame; who being bald through age, once walked in the fields, where by chance an Eagle taking his bald pate for a white Rock, let a Shellfish fall on it, of that bigness that it beat out his Brains. 2. Diodorus Siculus, that famous Historian. 3. Empedocles, the first inventor of Rhetoric; and his fellow Gorgias. 4. Euclid, the textuary Geometrician, who taught in Megaris. 5. Archimedes, a most worthy Mathematician, the first Author of the Sphere; of which Instrument he made one of that art and bigness; that one standing within, might easily perceive the several motions of every Celestial Orb. He made also divers Military Engines, which in the reign of Syracusa forely vexed the Romans, and was at last slain in his study by a common Soldier in the sack of the Town, to the great grief of the General Marellus. 6. Epicharmus, the first Inventor of Comedies; and 7. Theocritus, the first Author of Pastoral Elegies. In the latter times, Nicolaus, Abbot of Palermo, a learned Canonist, and Cardinal of the Church of Rome, commonly called Panormitanus, was of greatest fame.

In Plinius time there were reckoned in this Island seventy two Cities, of which only twelve are now remaining. The whole divided at this time into three small Provinces, that is to say, 1. Val de Noto, 2. Mazara, and 3. Mona; to which the Isles adjoining may add a fourth. 1. VALLIS DE NOTO taketh up the Eastern parts of the Island. The chief Cities of which are 1. Syracusa, once the Metropolis of the whole Island, and a most flourishing Common-wealth; it was (as Tully reports) the greatest and goodliest City of all that were possessed by the Greeks; for situation very strong; and of an excellent prospect, from every entrance both by Sea and Land. The Port thereof which had the Sea on both sides of it, was for the most part environed with beautiful buildings; and that part of it which was without the City, was on both sides banked up, and furnished with very fair Walls of Marble. Nor was it only the goodliest City of the Greeks, as Tully tells us, but one of the greatest also in the World, as is said by Strabo; by whom it is affirmed, that without the outmost Wall thereof, (for it was environed with three Walls) it contained one hundred and eighty Furlongs in compass, which of our measure cometh to eighteen miles. It was compounded of four Towns made up into one, that is to say, Isula (or the Isle) Acradina, Neapolis, and Tyche, besides the Fort called Neapolis, which commanded the rest; the greatness of all which, the ruins and foundations of it do still demonstrate. It standeth North of the Promontory called called Pachynus, and was built by Archibis of Carthage about the time of Jehoram King of Judah who being for an unnatural Rape, committed on a young Gentleman, banished his Country, together with his friend and companion Misellus conspired with the Oracle at Delphos, how and in what place they should dispose of themselves. The Oracle demanding whether they most affected wealth, or health: Misellus answered health, and Archibis wealth; and thereupon the former was directed to settle himself at Crotone in Italy, and the other here. Nor did the Oracle deceive him in his expectation; this Town by reason of its beautiful and commodious Port, proving of greatest trade and wealth next to Carthage it self, in those times of the World. It was the custom of this Town, when any of the Citizens grew too puffed up, to write his name in an Olive-leaf; which being put into his hand, did without more ado condemn him to banishment for five years, and was called Petalifera, from the Greek word πέταλον, signifying a Leaf. Yet could not this device so well secure them in the possession of their so much desired freedom, but that this City fell often into the power of Tyrants, than any one City in the World. That which is now remaining of it is the work of Augustus, who after a second destruction of it in the time of Pompey, sent a Colony hither, and built upon the Isle and the parts near unto it. But now the whole Isle (Orygia the Ancients called it) is taken up with a very strong Castle, and the whole City also being very well fortified, and held by a Garrison of Spaniards. 2. Notus, which gives name to this whole Division. A City which heretofore contended with Syracuse in point of Greatness: situate on a very high Rock, inaccessible on all sides but by one narrow passage; and having under the Cape of Puffuria a very fair and capacious Harbour, the Key of Sicily on that side. 3. Augusta, situate on the shore also, and of so large a Haven that it could never be fortified. 4. Castro Giovannini, a Town of about four thousand Families, situate in a wholesome air, and a fruitful soil, which they hold to be the very Navel and exact middle of the Island. It is also much prized for Mines of most excellent Salt. 5. Leontini, famous for its Lake, whose fishing is farmed for eighteen thousand Crowns yearly: It was anciently called Leontium, and stood somewhat North of Syracuse; with which continually in War, either to preserve their own Liberties, or get the Sovereignty of the other. 6. Enna, a midland Town, whence Pluto is said to have ravished Proserpine: In after-times the dwelling of that Syrus Ennus, who stirred up the Roman slaves against their Lords and having broke open the common Prisons, and received all such as came unto him packed up an army of forty thousand. This War the Roman Writers call Bellum Servile, ended at last but with no small difficulty, by the valour and good fortune of P. Rutilius.

2. MAZARACA containeth all the West parts of the Island. The chief Cities thereof, 1. Aggrigentum, now called Gergenti, famous for Phalaris the Tyrant, and his torturing Perillus in a Brazen Bull, which he had made for the destruction and torture of others. Of which aptly Ovid, Nec enim lex injuria nulla est,

Quam uicis Artifices arte perire sua.

Most just it is, a man should be tormented
With that, which first his cruel Wit invented.

It was said anciently of the people of this City, that they built it as if they should never die, and eat as if they were sure to live no longer. 2. Palermo, anciently called Panormus, and then a Colony of the Phoenicians; now the chief City of Sicily, and the Seat of the Spanish Vice-roy. Situate on the West Cape of the Island looking towards Sardinia, beautified with large Streets, delicate Buildings, strong Walls, and magnificent Temples. It hath no natural Port appertaining to it (Drepanum serving anciently as the Port thereof) but of late there is an Haven forced out by a mighty Pierre, a work of vast expence, and worthy of the greatness of Rome. It is also an Archbishops See, and an University. 3. Monreal, commonly called Marreal, famous for the Church, the Archbishops See. It is called in Latine, Mons Regalis. 4. Drepanum, now called Trepani, situate on a Promontory thrusting into the Sea, not far from that of Lilybæum, a Town well fortified in regard of the ill Neighbourhood of the Moors, who do often pillage the Coast; and having the command of a very fair Port. The Inhabitants of this place are said to be the best Seamen of Sicily. 5. Mazara, which gives name unto this Vale, situate South of Lilybæum, and not far from Scyllium. 6. Eryx, situate on a Mountain over-looking the Sea, said by the Ancients to have took this name from Eryx the Son of Venus, slain here by Hercules: memorable in those elder times for being the Seat of King Aeetes, who so kindly entertained Aeneas, and his wandering Trojan; and a magnificent Temple, in which Venus was worshipped, and from thence was called Erycina, as, Stetit major Erycina ridens, in the Poet Horace. This was the last Town which the Carthaginians held in Sicily. On the surrendry whereof by Amilcar the Father of Annibal; at the end of the first Punic War, it was conditioned by the Romans, amongst other things, that the Carthaginians should relinquish all the Claim or Title which they had to any part of this Island; which therefore fell unto the Romans (the State of Syracuse excepted only) who, whatsoever colour they were pleased to put upon that action, were principally tempted to it by ambition and covetousness. And therefore in my mind Florus takes it rightly, who saith, that it was undertaken specie quidem juvenadi Socios, res autem sollicitante Præda; i. e. under pretence of aiding the Mamertines, who had put themselves into their protection, but in plain terms to get possession of the Island which lay fit for Italy. Now, and long since a ruin only, the place on which it stood being called Mons St. Julian. 7. Segesta, on the Sea-side, not far from Eryx, near unto which the Trojan Ladies weary of their many long and dangerous voyages, and fearing to go again to Sea, burnt the Fleet of Aeneas on which occasion it was built. Peopled at first by the more old and feeble Trojans, (Longæque senes, & fessas æquore matres, as the Poet hath it) who chose rather to fix their dwelling here, than to follow the fortunes of Aeneas, in his quest of Italy. Called then Aeolian in honour of King Aeetes, spoken of before, part of whose Kingdom it was made; afterwards Egeia from Aegistis one of Trojan Race, born here, by whom it was repaired and beautified; and at last Segesta.

3. MONA lieth on the North-East of the Island, opposite unto Vallis de Notis. The chief Towns of it, 1. Nicozia, in the mid-land. 2. Milase, on the Northern Promontory. 3. Messana, a City of great strength and beauty just opposite to Rhevo in Italy. It was the first Town which the Romans had in this Island, being put into their hands by the Mamertines, a Troop of Soldiers brought thither out of Campania for the defence of the City; who finding themselves too strong for the Citizens, made themselves Masters of the place; but being with all too weak to hold it, chose rather to surrender it to the Romans, than to its true and proper Owners. Hence the beginning of the first War betwixt Rome and Carthage. A City it is at this time, of the most beautiful beautiful building of any in Sicily; and peopled by the wealthiest sort both of Merchants and Gentlemen, who live here in great pleasure (if not voluptuousness) as having plenty of all necessary provisions, Fruits of all kinds, delicious Wines, and Snow to moderate and equalize the heats thereof, at cheaper rates than any elsewhere in the Country. On the West side there stands where in the Citadel, highly mounted, and well Garrisoned, which commands the Town; and not far off a very high Lantern where Lights are kept burning all night long, for the direction of such Mariners as are to pass those dangerous Straits; which from this Phare or Watch-Tower, is called commonly the Phare of Messana. The Haven of this Town is the fairest of Sicily, whole entrances are so strongly fortified and bulwarked, that the people are so strongly incensed in the defence of the Turky stand alone let their Gates (in derision of the Turky) stand always open. It is also an Arch-Bishops See. 4. Catania, so often vexed by Diomyss the Tyrant of Syracuse; more ancient than beautiful: feared on the North side of a great (but hollow) Bay, not easily approached by Ships, and therefore neither held by any Garrison, nor much traded by Merchants; the riches of the place consisting principally in the fruitfulness of the soil, the habitation of many of the Country; and by being a small University. It was once a Colony of the Naxians. And so was also Taurromenium, the fifth Town of note in this part of the Island, called sometimes from its Founders Naxos, but now Thermino; a ruin only of what was in the former days: a place by nature of great strength, but over-topped by Syracuse of a more formidable nature. It was in this part of the Country that the Cyclopes dwelt, there being three little Rocky Islands (now not inhabited) not far from this Town, which for a long time were called Cyclopes Scopuli.

4. On the West part of Sicily lie the ÆOLIAN or Vulcanian Islands, heretofore only seven, and all almost of equal bigness: now eleven in number. The first name derived from Æolus, once Lord of them, who being well skilled in divining from what coasts the Winds would blow, (which he conjectured by the smoke ascending from them) occasioned the Poets to make him the God of the Winds. The other is derived from Vulcan the God of fire; by reason of the continual flames of fire from thence evaporating in those elder days. But now the matter of those flames being waited in long tract of time, there is only one of them which burneth, now called STOMBOLO; by some Writers Strongyle, from the roundness of it. An Island of about ten miles compass, but such as seems to be no other than a large round Mountain. Out of the top whereof issue continually a flame like a burning Beacon, easily discernable far off, but at nights especially: a place so full of horror to the neighbouring Islanders, that they and many others of the Romish Catholics conceive it to be Hell it self. And yet in those parts where the rage of the fire offends not, it is of a very fruitful soil, and apt for tillage.

2. But the fairest and best peopled of those Islands, is that of LIPARA, some ten miles in circuit, (from whence the rest are called the Liparan Isles) so named from Lipara the chief Town, said to be built in the time of Jehoshaphat King of Judah: the See of a Bishop, under the Arch-Bishop of Messana. The Island generally fruitful, well furnished with Allum, Sulphur, and Bitumen, and with some hot medicinal Baths, which are much frequented, and from whence called Thermusa, by the ancient Writers. It was formerly of so great wealth, that falling into the displeasure of Agathocles (then the Tyrant of Syracuse) they were able to buy their peace of him, at the sum of one hundred Talents of Gold; which sum they had no sooner paid, but the Tyrant for a farewell, robbed their very Temples. Unprosperous in his Actions always after that adventure. Nor sped it better with the Turky, who in the year 1544, laid the Country desolate; in which condition it remained, till Charles the fifth replenished it again with Spaniards, and fortified it very strongly against all invasions.

3. Not far off lieth another of these Islands, now called FAROGRANA, or Fanciana, but anciently Egeia, conceived to be the same which Livy and Plorus call Egæto; in which there is a fair and capacious Bay, able to receive the greatest Navies; and near to which Leontium the Consul gave the Carthaginians their last blow at Sea, which drew along with it the surrender of Eryx, and the loss of Sicily. Dionysius, Eriose, Eunymus, and Phoenice, four other of these Islands, but of lesser note, I pass over willingly; and make halt to.

4. HIERO, the seventh and last of these Islands of any consideration, and the eighth in tale, called also Vulcania, in which Vulcan was worshipped as if he had first appeared above the water at such time as Scipio Africanus died. A barren, stony, and uninhabited place, by reason of the fires which formerly have flamed so hideously. (Especially in the year 1444,) that it made not only the rest of these Islands, but all Sicily tremble. Near unto this Isle was fought the first Naval fight betwixt Rome and Carthage. Before which time the Romans had never used the Seas, as being totally employed in the conquest of Italy, inasmuch that when they had built their Gallies, they were fain to exercise their men in rowing, by placing them on two Seats near the water, with Oars in their hands. Which notwithstanding, having devised an Engine like a grappling hook, they so fastened the adverse Fleet unto them, that the whole light seemed a Land-battle fought upon the Sea. The victory fell unto the Romans, C. Duilius the Consul then commanding in chief, and honoured with the first Naval Triumphant that was ever solemnized at Rome.

After this Island was once known to the Greeks, they sent from all their chief Cities several Colonies, who planted in the Sea-coasts of the Country as before noted. But so as they never united themselves in a body together, but had their several estates and particular ends; whereby they came to be divided into many factions, and at last made themselves a prey to as many Tyrants. Phalaris Lording it at Aggrigentum, Panæius at Leontium, Gelon at Syracuse, Cleander at Gela, and when one Faction grew too weak to resist the other, they called in several Foreign Nations to abet their quarrel. For on this ground the Carthaginians were first called into Sicily by the Messanians, against the Aggrigentines. And on the same was managed here a great part of the Peloponnesian Wars; the Athenians siding with the Leontines, and the Spartans with the Syracusan; in which the whole power of Athen was broken by Sea and Land; and their two Generals Nicias and Demosthenes, murdered in prison. But because Syracuse was a City of the greatest Authority, and of greatest influence over the rest of Sicily, we shall more punctually insist on the State-affairs thereof. As it was in Government of which at first was popular; as it was in most of the Greek Colonies, according to the platform which they brought from home; and was but newly altered to the Aristocratical, when Gelon made himself King of it, about 26 years after the expulsion of the Tarquinians at Rome; whom with as many as succeeded in the Royal dignity; take along as followeth.

The Tyrants, or Kings of Syracuse.

A. M.

1. Gelon the Prince or Lord of Gela taking advantage of the quarrels in Syracuse, betwixt the Magistrates Tigellius a Sardinian born, faith of him, that he was more peltent than the Country which bred him.

The Soil is very fertile in respect of Corn, but barren if compared with Sicily, which yet may rather be imputed to the want of good manuring in the Husbandman, than any natural defect in the Soil it self. Well stored with all sorts of Cattel, as appears plainly by that plenty of Cheese and Hides which are sent hence yearly into Italy and other places. The Horses hereof, hot, head-strong, and hard to be broken, but will last long. The Bullocks naturally amble, so that the Country-man rideth them as familiarly as they do in Spain on Mules and Asses. Here is also the best called Muftrons, or Muftrions, found in Cornica also, but in no other part of Europe; somewhat resembling a Stag, but of so strong an hide, that it is used by the Italians instead of Armour: Of the skin of which carried to Cordova in Spain, and there dressed, is made the right Cordovan Leather. Finally there is an Herb, of which if one eat, it is said he will die with laughter: whence came the Proverb, Risus Sardonius. The truth of which report I shall not dispute, though it be by others more probably conjectured, that the Herb being of a poysonous nature, causeth men to die with such a Convulsion or attraction of Sinews, that they seem to grin or laugh at the time of their death.

The people are small of stature, of complexion inclining unto swarthy, and that either by reason of the heat of the Sun, or more probably from their African extraction: their behaviour much participating of that people also. So slothful in the times of the Romans, that they were grown into a Proverb, and a Law made to compel them to work; but now esteemed a very painful and laborious Nation. Much given to hunting, and so prone to Rebellion that the Spaniards permiteth no Cutler to live among them; yet peaceable among themselves, and in some measure courteous unto Strangers also. Their Language a corrupt Catalanian; their diet on meats common and gross; their apparel in the Towns (especially that of the women) gorgeous, in the Villages fordid.

In matters of Religion they are little curious. That which they make most shew of, is according to the Rites and Doctrines of the Church of Rome; which both their Neighbourhood to the Pope, and their subjection to the Spaniards, have imposed upon them. But in their practice of it they are loose enough, going to Mass on Sundays and Saints days; which done they fall a dancing in the midst of the Church, singing in the mean time songs too immodest for an Ale-house. Nay, it is thought that their Clergy it self is the most rude, ignorant, and illiterate of any people in Christendom; saying their Mass rather by rote, than reason, and utterly unable to give any account of their Religion.

It is divided commonly into two parts, viz. Cape Linguaduri, toward Cornica; and Cape Cagliari, toward Africa: the first the least, and withal mountainous and barren; the last the larger level, and by much more fruitful. Chief Cities of the whole, 1. Calari, first built by the Carthaginians, and situate in that point of the Island which lieth nearest to Africa; which from hence took the name of Cape Cagliari, by which it is at this day called. A City of such fame, when it was first taken by Gracchus, for the use of the Romans, that it is called by Florus, Urbs urbinis; and was destroyed by the said Gracchus, the better to disable the Natives from rebelling against the Conquerors. Being new built again in more fortified times, it was a second time destroyed by the Sarazens; and finally re-built and beautified by the Pisans, at such time as they were Masters of this part of the Island. Very well fortified by Nature, as seated on the top of an Hill; and hath under it a spacious and goodly Haven, much frequented by Merchants. The Town it self adorned with a beautiful Temple, being the See of an Arch-Bishop, many fair Towers, and the constant residence of the Vice-Roy: from whose authority it is exempt by especial privilege, as to the legal Government of it; and ordered by a Common-Council of its own Citizens. 2. Bassa, on the West side of the Island, another Arch-Episcopal See. 3. S. Reparata, on the North, looking towards Cornica. 4. Aquileira, on the Western shores. 5. Saffary, a Town of consequence, where they have an Aqueduct twelve miles long reaching from thence unto S. Gavini. 6. Algher, a good Town situate in a wholesome air, and a fertile Soil, and having a fair Haven of six miles in length, in which the Ships of Genoa and Catalonia do most commonly ride: 7. Oreffague, a large Town, but very ill peopled, by reason of a bad air which proceeds from the Fens; the Country about which gives title to the Marquis of Oreffague. 8. Turris, once a Roman Colony, now little better than a ruin; yet giving title to the third Arch-Bishop of this Island, who is called in Latine, Turritanus. Here are also in divers parts of this Island the remainders of sundry Towers and Forts which the people call Noracy from Nora, one of the Sons of Geryon, who (as they think) came into this Country, and built the first dwelling or mansion in it. And this Tradition of the Vulgar hath so much in it of Historical and undoubted truth, that certain Colonies from Spain came and planted here, under the conduct of one Nora somewhat before the expedition of the Atticks under Isalus, as Plutarchus testifieth.

This Island taken by the Romans from the Carthaginians, as before is said, was first under the immediate Jurisdiction of the Præfect of the City of Rome; but after by Julianus was made a Province of his new Dioecesis of Africa; and as a part thereof or rather an Appendix to it, was challenged, invaded, and finally conquered by the Sarazens, Anno 807. From them recovered by the joint-forces of the Pisans and Genoese, who divided it betwixt them: the Southern part, called Cape Cagliari, being allotted to the Pisans, and the Northern towards Cornica, to that of Genoa. But the Genoese not content with the partition, (their portion of the Island being less in quantity, and worse in quality) began to quarrel with the Pisans, and at the last to break into open Wars. To that the Fray, Pope Boniface VIII. bestowed it on James King of Aragon, who driving thence the Genoese, Anno 1324. became Master of it. The Aragonian before that did pretend some Title to it, in right of the Kingdom of Sicily, then in his possessions to come preceding Kings whereof it had once been subject: and having backed that Claim by the Pope's Donation, who challenged it as a part of St. Peter's Patrimony; incorporated it for ever to the Crown of Aragon. Once indeed it was offered unto Anthony of Bourbon, in exchange for his Title to Navarre, but without any purpose of performance, that being only a device to fetch him off from the party of the Reformed in France, to which he formerly adhered: and was as suddenly laid by, as if it had done the feat intended in the Proposition.

The Government hereof is by a Vice-roy, who resides at Calari; and must of necessity be a Spaniard, under whom are two Deputy Governors, Spaniards also; the one for Cape Cagliari, the other for Cape Linguaduri. Inferior Officers of Command may be of the Natives. What profits arise hence to the Crown of Spain, I have no where found. The Arms hereof are said to be Or, a Cross Gules, betwixt four Sarazens heads Sable, curled Argent.

Argent. Which Arms were given upon the taking of it from the power of the Moors: but first taken (as some say) for the Arms of Aragon, on occasion of the heads of four chief Princes of the Moors which were found severed from their bodies in the Battle of Alcoraz, Anno 1094. won by Don Pedro, King of Navarre and Aragon.

There are divers small Islands about Sardinia, as 1. Isla Ruffa, heretofore called Phintanis. 2. the Ille of Hercules, now called Alfinaria. 3. St. Peters, anciently Hieracum, or Acipitrum, with others of as little note: all which as the Appendants of Sardinia, do belong to the Spaniard.

There are in this Island,
Archbishops 3. Bishops 15.

The Land of the CHURCH.

WEST of the Realm of Naples, lieth the LAND OF THE CHURCH, extended North and South from the Adriatick to the Tuscan Seas. Bounded on the North-east with the River Turan, on the South-east with the Asopenus, by which two parted from that Kingdom: as on the Northwest by the River Po, and Fiore, by which separated from the River Pisus, by which it is divided from the Modern Tuscany, or the State of the Florentine.

By this Account the Pope's Dominion taketh up the whole middle of Italy; having in breadth from the one Sea unto the other above two hundred miles, and in the length along the Adriatick to the furthest parts of Romandiola, above three hundred. By which advantages it lieth most fitly for the command of all the rest, it being very easy for the Popes to convey their Forces by Sea or Land, unto what part thereof they please. And were it not that the Popes commonly are of several Factions; and that the Successor pursueth not the designs of his Predecessors, but hath his own ends to himself, which for the most part are driven on without consideration of increasing the publick Patrimony; it is not possible, but that the Pope long before this time, had been Lord of all. And this may be conceived the rather, considering the extraordinary fertility of the Soil, able to spare provisions for the greatest Armies; the multitudes of people which it may afford, in regard they are so seldom consumed by Wars; and that the men of this Dominion (who chiefly those of Rome, and the parts adjoining are conceived to be the best Soldiers of Italy, as retaining some sparks of their Ancestors valour, together with their gravity, magnificence, and a certain greatness of courage, which seems to be particular to this Nation. And they preserve also to this day so much of the ancient Roman, as to prefer any kind of life, before Trades or Merchandize. For though their Lands be very well tilled, and their Vines well dressed, and all things done exactly in the way of Husbandry: yet for their Manufactures they are brought from other places, as Venice, Naples, Florence, Genoa. And though they have the Sea on both sides, and the advantage of many fair and commodious Rivers and Havens, which with little cost might be made very useful; yet do they no way improve their fortunes, or the publick Patrimony in the way of Traffick; which is the main defect of the Papal Policy, and fillth a rich Country full of poor and indigent persons. But to proceed to the description of the Pope's Estate: it containeth the Provinces of 1. Romandiola, 2. the Territory of Ferrara. 3. The Estate of Urbino. 4. Marca Anconitana. 5. Ducato Spoleitano with Sabinia. 6. St. Peter's Patrimony, and 7. Compagna di Roma.

1. ROMANDIOLA extendeth from the River Isurius (now called Foglia) by which parted from the Dukedom of Urbino on the East, to the Dukedom of Parma, on the West, from which parted by the River Parana, called of old Sentenna; and from the Apennine on the South to Fadus, and the Adriatick, on the North. It was called anciently Flaminia, from Flaminius the Roman Consul, who having won it from the Gauls planted Colonies in it, and had the honour (though he pursued this War against the will of the Senate) to have it called by his own name: and for the better passage betwixt Rome and this, made a very large Causeway, which for a long time was called Via Flaminia. Chief Rivers hereof, besides those spoken of already, which are only borderers; 1. Ariminum, now called Marechia; and 2. Rubicon, now called Pissatello, betwixt Ariminum and Ravenna, of which more anon.

The chief Cities of it are, 1. Bononia (or Boulogne) seated in a spacious Plain near the Apennine Hills, a very populous City, of a round form, and a great circuit: the building Antique, seeming for the most part to be the work of the Lombards, the foundation of the houses of Free-stone, the rest of Bricks; built with arched Cloysters towards the street, under which one may walk dry in the greatest rain. A City honoured with many Palaces of the neighbouring Nobles, the chief University of Italy, and the retiring place of the Popes. The Civil Law is much studied here, inasmuch that from hence proceeded the famous Civilians Johannes Andreæ, Alex. Bartolus, and Sociinus. I believe they have built Castles in the air, which ascribe the founding of this University to Theodisius II. The Charter of whose foundation dated, Anno 423. is an idle and foolish thing. For there it is said that at the institution there were present Gualter Earl of Posseis, Embsador for the King of England; and Baldwin Earl of Flanders, for the King of France: when at that time, neither those Earldoms, or those Kingdoms were in verum natura. It is situate on the River Apofa, and was by former Writers called Felsina. Near unto this Town in a Demy-Island called Forelli, was that meeting between Augustus, Anthony, and Lepidus; wherein they agreed on the Triumvirate, dividing the Empire and City of Rome among themselves: which combination was confirmed by the ensuing Proscription; wherein, that they might be revenged on Cicero, Lepidus proscribed his Brother; Antony, his Uncle. 2. Rimini, anciently called Ariminum, seated on the mouth of the River Ariminum, of no great note, but for giving name unto this City, and now called Marechia. The City large, and seated in a plentiful and pleasant Soil, abundantly productive of wines, Figs and Olives; wealthy withal, the trade which formerly enriched Ravenna, being for the most part managed here. Divided by the River into the City and the Suburbs, but joynt together by a fair and stately Bridge built over it by Augustus Cæsar, who also erected in the City a Triumphal Arch. It is situate somewhat East of the River Rubicon, which in those times divided Italy from Gaul: upon the Bank whereof, looking towards this Town, there was an old Marble Pillar, having on it a Latine Inscription to this purpose, viz. Leave here thy Colours, and lay down thine Arms, and pass not with thy Forces beyond Rubicon: whosoever goeth against this command, let him be held an enemy to the people of Rome. Which Rule when Cæsar had transgressed, and surprized this City, he so frightened Pompey and his Faction, that they abandoned Italy and Rome it self, and withdrew themselves themselves into Epirus. It is said that Cæsar dreamed the night before, that he carnally knew his own Mother: whereby the Soothsayers gathered that he should be Lord of Rome, which was the common Mother of them all. Which dream, and several prodigies hapning at the same time with it, did to encourage him in his enterprise, that he is said, at the passing over Rubicon, to have said these words, Eamus quid nos Deorum glæna, &c. Let us go whither the fims of our Enemies, and the Prodiges of the Gods do call us. In memory of which venturous, but fortunate action, he caused a monument to be erected in this City, with his name and titles. It was anciently a Roman Colony, and in the battles hapning betwixt the Pope and the Emperour, was seized on by the Malatstii, as Bononia was by the Bentivoli, two potent Families of these parts; who held them in defiance of the Popes of Rome, till they were reduced again unto the Church, by Pope Julio the Second. 3. Cervia, on the Adriatick Sea, where there is made so much Salt, that they furnish therewith all their neighbours of Marca Anconitana, and a great part of Lombardy: the Pope receiving for his Customs of this one Commodity, no less than 60000 Crowns per annum. 4. Furlii, (called of old Forum Livii) one of the Towns belonging properly to the Exarchate of Ravenna, seated in a very pleasant air, and a fruitful soyl, betwixt two fresh streams; of which the one is called Ronche, and the other Montonus. 5. Faventia, now called Faenza, on the banks of Anenus, a calm gentle River; an ancient City, but well peopled: much benefited by the Flax which growth in the adjoining fields, and the Earthen vessels which they vend to most parts of Italy. It was first given unto the Popes by Desiderius the last King of the Lombards, whom they but forcibly required for so great a courtesie. 6. Sarfina, an old City, seated at the foot of the Apennine, the birth place of Plautus the Comedian; 7. Imola, anciently called Forum Corneliæ, and 8. Cesena, Cities both of them of no small Antiquity; but this last the fairer built, the better peopled, and the more strongly fortified: there being a strong Castle on the top of an Hill, the work of Frederick II. Emperour and King of Germany. This Town, with that of Sarfina, spoken of before, seem to be seated on the banks of the River Rubicon, now called Pissatello. 9. Ravenna, situate in the embracements of two Rivers, called Montanus and Ronchus: by the confluence whereof at their fall or influx into the Adriatick, it was once beautified with one of the fairest Havens in the World, and for that cause made the Road of one of the two Navies, which Augustus always kept manned to command in Campania. This of Rome: the other riding at Misenus in Campania. This of Ravenna, being in the upper Sea, awed and defended Dalmatia, Greece, Crete, Cyprus, Asia, &c. the other at Misenus, in the lower Sea, protected and kept under France, Spain, Africk, Egypt, Syria, &c. The Walls of this City are said to have been built or repaired by Theodoricus Cæsar; the whole City to have been much beautified by Theodoricus King of the Goths, who built here a most stately and magnificent Palace; the ruins whereof are still easily discernable. The private buildings are but mean, the publick ones are of a grave, but stately structure. Of which the principal heretofore was the Church of St. Mary the Round, whose roof was of one entire stone, and honoured with the rich Sepulcher of the said King Theodoric: which the Soldiers (in the sack of this City by the French, Anno 1512) pulled down together with the Church it self, only to get the Jewels and Medals of it. The principal at the present is the Church of St. Vitalis the Pavement hereof is all of Marble; and the Walls all covered with precious stones of many sorts, but unpolished as they were taken out of Mines; which sheweth as well the Magnificence as Ahtiquity of it. The Patriarchs of this City, in regard it was so long the Regal and Imperial Seat, have heretofore contended for precedency with the Popes themselves: not brought to yield the place to those proud pretenders, till Damus II. In the short time of his Papacy about the year 975. did in fine prevail. And this they did upon good reasons, this City having been anciently the Metropolis of the Province called Flaminia, afterwards honoured with the Seat of the Emperour Honorius, and his Successors; next of the Goths Kings, then of the Exarchs, and last, of its Patriarchs. And it was chosen for this purpose, because of the plentiful Territory, since covered with water; and the conveniency of the Haven, at this day choked: though lately by expence of a great deal of treasure, the Fens about the City have been very much drained; and the Bogs in some places turned to fruitful fields, to the great benefit heretofore both for health and pleasure.

As for the fortunes of this Country, it was anciently together with the Territories of Ferrara, and some part of Trevigiana, the habitation of the Baii, who with the Senones, the Insubres, and the Comani, made up the whole body of the Cisalpine Galls, of whom more hereafter. Finding the Romans grown too near them, by whom the Senones their next neighbours had been rooted out, they thought it was high time to besite themselves, especially after the defeat given them by the Consul Minutius, who carried the War home unto them; which never any of the Romans had done before. For after this, under Caracallus their King, they let upon Marcellus the Consul, killing 3000 of his men, but vanquished and subdued by him in a following Battel. Vanquished again not far from Mutina by Cornelius Merula, with the loss of 14000 of their men, they called both the Insubrian and Transalpine Galls to come in to aid them. But being then vanquished also at the Battel of Telamon of which more in Lombardy A. V. C. 528. they were followed home, and utterly subdued by the Consul Flaminius, as before was said: after which times this Country following the same fortunes with the rest of Italy, became subject to the Goths, as a part of their Italian Conquests: whose Kingdom here was no sooner destroyed by Narses, but the Lombards entered. To give a stop to whose successes, and preserve so much unto the Empire as was not already conquered by them; it was thought good by Justin II. to send thither an Imperial Officer of principal command and note, whom he honoured with the title of Exarch. His residence settled at Ravenna, as standing most commodiously to hinder the incursions of the barbarous Nations; and withal to receive such aids from the Eastern parts as his occasions did require. These Exarchs having divided Italy into many Governments, appointed over each some Supreme Commander, dignified with the name of Dukes. And even the City of Rome it self (so far then was it from being subject to the Pope in Temporal matters) had a chief Officer of this kind (accountable to the Exarch, and subordinate to him) whose Government was called the Roman Dukedom: That which they kept unto themselves as their own peculiar, contained the Cities of Ravenna, Rugimin, Mutina, Bononia, Claffi, Forli, Forlimpopoli, Sarfina, Parma, and Placentia: which ten Cities with the Territories belonging to them, made up that District which properly was called the Exarchate of Ravenna; much mentioned in the Histories of the middle times, by reason of the continual Wars which they had with the Lombards, but newly entered when this Misgritacy had its first beginning. The names of these Exarchs are as followeth.

 687 12 Joh. Plotina 15.
 702 13 Theophylactus 25.
 727 14 Paulus.
 728 15 Eutichius 12. In the days of this Exarch,

Ravenna was taken from the Empire, by Luiprandus King of the Lombards, An. 740. But regained by Charles the Great, and by him given to the Bishops of Rome, together with Anconitana and Spoleto, as a requital for the Kingdom of France, confirmed unto King Pepin his Father, by the content and authority of the Popes. The donation of this Exarchate to the Popes, partly to blot out the memory of the Exarchs, and partly to make the people obedient to those Prelates, changed the name of the Country from Flaminia (by which name it was formerly known) to Romandolia, and now to Romagna. Notwithstanding which Donation, or Original Grant, the Popes enjoyed not long the possession of it: The Emperors of Germany, and their Vice-gerents in Italy, wresting it by strong hand out of the possession of the Church; and giving it to such as deserved well of them, and were most likely, or most able to uphold their Faction. And so it stood, till the late Popes conspiring with the French King, Lewis the 12, and Francis the first, brought them into Italy, Anno 1509. by their aids, and by the censure of the Church, so prevailed in fine, that they extorted Ravenna, and some other places out of the hands of the Venetians, ejected many pious Princes out of other Cities, which they pretended to belong to St. Peter's Patrimony; and thereby got possession of all those Territories, which lie betwixt the State of Venice, and the Marches of Ancona.

The Territory of FERRARA lieth in the very skirts of Romandolia towards the Venetian, extending one hundred and sixty miles in length, and about fifty in breadth: the soil thereof exceeding rich, but subject to the overflowsings of the River Po; which makes the air in many places to be somewhat unwholsome. And though as well the former Dukes as the Popes, who are now Lords hereof, have been at great charge in raising high Banks and Ramparts to keep in the Waters; yet could not this resist the violence of the River, falling from so high a Springs, and seconded with so great Land-floods (as sometimes it is) but that it makes many breaches in them, do what they can. The places of most note herein, are 1. Grassano in the borders of Tuscan, near the Apennine. 2. Carpi, a place of great importance, seated in the midst of this Dukedom; belonging heretofore to the house of the Pici. But partly by exchange made with Marcus Picus, partly for one hundred thousand Crowns in ready money, given unto Lionel Pico, once the Lord hereof; it was by Charles the 5. incorporated into this Estate. 3. Comacchia, seated in the Marshes of the Adriatick, from which the Princes of this Family of Este, were at first called only Lords of Comacchia; a place which yielded great profit to the former Dukes, by the fishing of Eels. 4. Saxole, given by Duke Alphonso in exchange for Carpi. Here is also the Territory and Lordship of the Polefin, the cause of so many quarrels and contentions between the ancient Dukes of Ferrara and the States of Venice. But the chief honour of this Dukedom is in the Capital City that which denominates the whole. Ferrara a City of five miles in compass, so called from the Iron Mines which are about it; commodiously seated on the River Po, which by reason of its breadth, depth and violent swiftnes of the current, is a sufficient rampart to it on that side; the other sides being fortified with a strong wall, and a spacious mote. In the middle of the City is a fair and spacious Market-place, into which do open on all sides about twenty Streets, all of them half a mile in length; and all so straight and evenly built, that the furthest end of each of them may be easily seen. Near to this Market-place is a little Island, in which the former Dukes had a stately Palace, called Belduere, from the fair Prospect which it had or gave to the whole City; and on the North-side of the City a large Park for pleasure. The other houses are for the most part built of fair Free-stone, not joining unto one another as in other Cities, but at pretty distance with neat Gardens between. Ariosto, the Author of that ingenious Poem called Orlando Furioso, and Hierome Savonarola the Propheticall Father, were both of them natives of this place: of which the first lieth here entombed, the last for preaching against the Pope, was burnt at Florence.

In the declining of the Power and Empire of the Lombards, this City together with Faenza was given by Desiderius their last King, to the Church of Rome, the better to oblige the Popes by so great a benefit. But being taken from them by the Emperors of the house of Schweben, it was again recovered by the prowess of the Counts Matthildis An. 1107 who took it, with many other Towns in Italy, from the Emperour Henry the fourth, and at her death conferred the same upon the Church. The Popes once more possessed hereof, and not able to hold it, gave it in Fee for ever unto Azo of the house of Este, a man of great sway in the affairs of Italy, who valiantly had defended it against Ezelinus, Vicegerent of Frederick the second. This was the first of this Family who had Ferrara in propriety: His Ancestors being called before, the Marquesses of Este, and sometimes Marquesses of Ferrara, (but in title only) as Governors hereof in behalf of the Pope of Rome. Obizzo the Grandchild of this first Azo, obtained of Rodolphus the first, (who was willing to make what money he could of his Lands in Italy) the Cities of Rugimin and Modena; that Grant confirmed by Guido Legate of Pope Benedict the ninth, with the Popes consent. Anno 1304. Other improvements there were made by the following Princes, according to the chance of War, but none of them continued constant in their possession but these three Cities and the Territories adjoining to them. As for this Family de Este (Familia Austina, it is called in Latin) it took this name from Este, or Astis, a small Town in the Sieignery of Venice, conferred upon the Ancestors of this Azo, by Charles the Great. And for the Chiefs, or Princes of it, they have been of great authority and power in their several times, commanding sometimes the Venetian Armies, and sometimes the Popes: great favourers of Learned men, and advancers of Learning; inasmuch that the Reinaldo's and Rogero's of Este, make up a great part of the Poems of Ariosto and Tasso, two of the greatest Wits of Italy; and finally allied to many of the best Houses of Christendome. The Catalogue of whom, since they were made the Hereditary Lords and Princes of this noble City, I have here (subjoyned).

The

The Dukes and Marquesses of Ferrara.

- 1236 ¹ Alfius, or Azo de Este, the ninth of that name, but first Hereditary Marquis of Ferrara, by the Grant of the Pope.
- 1264 ² Obizo, the sixth of that name, Grandson to Azo by his Son Reinaldo, second Marquis of Ferrara.
- 1293 ³ Azo the tenth of Este, and II. of Ferrara, Son to Obizo.
- 1308 ⁴ Francisco, Brother to Azo the 2. after whose death, Anno 1312. Ferrara for a time was under the command of the Popes.
- 1312 ⁵ Alabrandinus, Brother of Francisco, who had the Title to, but not the possession of Ferrara.
- 1315 ⁶ Reinaldo the 3. of Este, and the first of Ferrara, recovered Ferrara from the Pope, and cast out his Garrisons. 1317.
- 1335 ⁷ Obizo II. Brother of Reinaldo.
- 1352 ⁸ Alabrandino II. Son of Obizo.
- 1361 ⁹ Nicolas the 2. of Este, and first of Ferrara, Brother of Alabrandino, whose children being young he disposed of the Estate.
- 1388 ¹⁰ Albertus, Brother of Nicolas, the Founder of the University of Ferrara, Anno 1392.
- 1382 ¹¹ Nicolas II. base son of Albertus.
- 1441 ¹² Leonius, the base son of Nicolas, in the minority of his Brother Hercules, begot in lawful Wedlock, invaded the Estate, and held it.
- 1450 ¹³ Borcius, another of the base sons of Nicolas 2. succeeded Leon in the Estate; who being made Duke of Modena by Frederick the 3. was by Pope Paul created Duke of Ferrara also, Anno 1470.
- 1471 ¹⁴ Hercules, the lawful son of Nicolas the 2. made Knight of the Garter, by King Edward 4.
- 1505 ¹⁵ Alphonso, the Son of Hercules.
- 1534 ¹⁶ Hercules II. Son of Alphonso.
- 1559 ¹⁷ Alphonso II. who dying without lawful issue, Anno 1595. Pope Clement 8. challenged this Estate in the right of the Church; and partly by force, partly by composition (whereof we shall say more when we come to Modena) united it for ever to the See of Rome.

The yearly Revenues of this Dukedom were heretofore two hundred and fifty thousand Crowns; now not so much worth unto the Pope, by reason of the Alienation of Modena and Reggio; of which more hereafter.

The Arms of these Dukes (which for the honour of this noble and illustrious Family, and for the strangeness of the Coat, I shall here put down) were Pale-wife of three pieces, 1. Partie per Fesse, in a chief Or, an Eagle displayed Sable, membered, langued, and crowned Gules; and in base Azure, three Flowers de Lys Or, within a border indented Or and Gules. 2. Gules, two Keys in Saltire, the one Or, the other Argent, supporting an Eagle of the third, membered and crowned of the second. Over all in chief a Papal Crown Or, garnished with sundry Gems Azure and Purple. The 3. as the first Counterplaced. Which Coat upon the falling of the House of Ferrara, doth now belong to that of Modena and Reggio, as descended of it.

3. From the Territory of Ferrara proceed we to the Estate of Urbine; both Dukedoms and distinct Estates till these later times: this last the younger of the two, and consequently (as in the ordinary course of Nature) the survivor also; but swallowed at last into the Pope-dom as the other was. Bounded on the West with the River Isaurus (now called Foggia) by which parted from Romandiola, on the East from Marca Anconitana, on the North with the Adriatick, and on the South with the Apennine Hills, by which parted from Tuscany. So called from Urbine the chief City of it, and the Ducal Seat. It is in length about 60 miles, 35 in breadth: Some places and Estates belonging anciently to the Church, lying intermingled with the Lands and Seigneuries which belonged to the Dukes.

The soil is very fruitful of Corn, Wine, and Oyl, plentiful of Figs and other fruits of most pleasant taste; and in a word, affording all things necessary for the life of man. But the air is generally unwholesome, especially about Pesaro and Fossombrone, by reason of the low flats and overflows of the water. The principal Commodities which they vend abroad, are the Wines of Pesaro, fold in great abundance to the Venetians; and dried Figs, which they vend unto Bologna, and other places.

The most famous River is Metaurus, (now called Me-tre) and a famous one it is indeed, by reason of that great Battle fought on the banks thereof, betwixt Adriano the Brother of Annibal, and his Carthaginians; and the two Consuls Livius and Cl. Nero: in which, after a long and hot dispute, the victory fell unto the Romans; there being 56000 of the Carthaginians slain, (as Livy writeth) and 5400 taken prisoners. Polybius speaks of a less number both slain and taken; and like enough it is that Livy, to advance the honour of that Family, might enlarge a little. But whatsoever was the truth in this particular, certain it is, that this victory turned the tide of the Roman Fortune, which from this time began to flow amain upon them: the Citizens of Rome beginning at this time to trade and traffick, to follow their affairs, and make contracts, and bargains with one another, which they had long forborn to do; and that with as secure a confidence, as if Annibal were already beaten out of Italy. This famous River riseth in the Apennine Hills, and passing by Fossombrone, a Town of this Dukedom, falls into the Adriatick.

There are reckoned into this Dukedom seven Towns or Cities, (four of which are Episcopall Sees) and three hundred Castles. The principal of which are, 1. Urbine, one of the most ancient Cities of Italy, which both Tacitus and Pliny mention; a fair Town, well built, and the Duke's ordinary seat in Summer. It is seated at the foot of the Apennine Hills, in a very rich and pleasant soil, built in the falshion of a Miter, and therefore called Urbinas, quod urbes binas continere videbatur. Francisco Ubaldo the first Duke, built here a very sumptuous Palace, and therein founded a most excellent Library, replenished with a great number of rare Books, covered and garnished with Gold, Silk, and Silver; all scattered and dispersed in the time that Cesar Borgia seized on the Estate. Polydore Virgil, the Author of the History of England, which passeth under his name, was a Native here; an History of worth enough as the times then were, except only in such passages as concern the Pope (the Collector of whose Peter-pence he was then in England) whose credit and Authority he preferreth sometimes, before truth it self. 2. Pisaurum, now called Pesaro, the strongest Town of all the Dukedom, two miles in compass, and fortified according to the modern Art of War: the fortifications of it being first begun by Francisco Maria, and perfected by Guido Ubaldo, his Son and Successor; the ordinary seat of the Duke in Winter, well Garrisoned, and therefore trusted with the publick Armory. It is seated near the shore of the Adriatick, at the mouth or influx influx of the River Isaurus, which parts it from Romagna: populous, of handfom buildings, and a very strong wall, the soil exceeding rich, but the air so bad, that partly in regard of that, and partly by their eating too much fruits, nothing is more frequent here than Funerals, especially in the month of August; few of the Inhabitants living to be fifty years old. 3. Senigallia, called anciently Sena Gallica, (Gallica being added to it to difference it from another of that name in Tuscany) a strong and well fenced City near the River Metaurus, over which there is a Bridge consisting of eighty Arches, made of that length, not so much in regard of the breadth of the Chancel, as the frequent overflows of that turbulent Water. 4. Fossombrone, called in old Authors Fo-brum Sempronius, for air and soil of the same nature with Pisaurum; bought by D. Frederick of Galacazzo Malatesta for thirteen hundred Florins of Gold. 5. Cabo or Cagli on the Sea. 6. S. Leon, a good Town and the chief of the Countries of Montefeltre, which is a limb of this Dukedom. 7. Fano, not far from the Sea, an Episcopall City, and anciently belonging to the Church of Rome: of old times called Fanum fortune, for a Temple there erected to Goddess Fortune (Te facimus Fortuna deam, as the Poet hath it.) 8. Eugubium (now called Angunia) a Town belonging to these Princes, but properly within the bounds of the Spoletan Dukedom; and there we shall hear further of it. Of the Castles the principal are Mariola, and the Rock of S. Leon, which are the last that held good for Duke Guido Ubaldo against Cesar Borgia, Duke of Valentinus, Son to Pope Alexander the sixth; and the first which did return again under his obedience. For which cause when he fled the second time from the said Borgia, he dismantled all his other Castles, as being more likely to admit than resist the Invader; and these two last being very well fortified, he left to keep possession of the Country for him.

Here is also within the limits of this Estate, the Dukedom of CAMERINO, an ancient and well peopled Town, of a strong natural situation amongst the Hills: an Estate holden of the Church by the noble Family of Ferrea till the time of Pope Paul the third; when Julia di Verana the heir thereof, conveyed it by marriage unto Guido Ubaldo Duke of Urbine. But the Pope pre-tending an Escheat for want of heirs males, made him self Master of it by force of Arms: and gave it to his Son Piero Farnesi, whom afterwards with the consent of the Colledge of Cardinals he made Duke of Parma; and settled Camerino on the Church, as it still continues.

As for the fortunes of this Country, it was anciently the habitation of the Senones; a Nation of the Cisalpine Galls, who only had the honour of sacking Rome, to which City it continued subject, till the declining of the Empire in the time of Honorius. They being rooted out at last (of which more in Lombardy) and the Country peopled with Roman or Latine Colonies, it followed the same fortunes with the rest of Italy, till the time of Conradine, the last Duke of the Imperial House of Swabia, when Urbine was first subdued by the Earls Montefeltre, whose Successors increasing in power, added the Town and Territory of Eugubio to it. And in the bullets betwixt Lewis of Bavaria the Emperor, and Pope Clement the sixth, Anno 1345. Gelasio de Montefeltre held it by no other Title, but as the Emperor's Viceroy. This Family enjoyed it till the year 1444. by the Title only of Earls of Montefeltre, and Lords of Urbine when Frederick Ubaldo, for his singular and surpassing valour, was by Pope Eugenius the fourth, created the first Duke heretofore to hold as Feudatories of the Church, and paying 22400 Crowns for an Annual quit-rent. A man of such repute for all gallant qualities, that he was by King Henry the sixth, made Knight of the Garter; in recompence of which honour, the English to this day enjoy many privileges in these Dominions. Guido Ubaldo this Duke's Son lost his Estate to Cesar Borgia; after whose death he did recover it again by the power and favour of Pope Julio the second, to whom succeeded Francisco Maria di Rovero, his Sisters Son, in whose Family it continued till now of late, as will appear by this ensuing Catalogue of

The Dukes of Urbine.

- 1444 ¹ Frederick Ubaldo, of the ancient Family de Montefeltre the first Duke of Urbine, and one of the Knights of the honourable Order of the Garter.
- ² Guido Ubaldo, Son of Frederick, for a while out of this Dukedom by Cesar Borgia. He was Knight also of the Garter.
- ³ Francisco Maria di Rovero, Sisters Son and next heir to Guido Ubaldo, was in his own right Lord of Senigallia, and had Pisaurum from the Pope in reward of his many services done unto the Church; diffided to a while by Pope Leo the tenth.
- ⁴ Lawrence de Medices, Father of Catherine de Medices the French Queen, and of Alexander the 1. Duke of Florence; was for a while made Duke of Urbine by Pope Leo the 10th. (being of that Family) but lost it shortly after to Duke Francisco, who after the death of Pope Leo, recovered his Estate again; and died possided of the Dukedom.
- 1538 ⁵ Guido Ubaldo II. Son of Duke Francisco.
- ⁶ Francisco Maria II. Son of Guido the 24. whose line expired, it escheated not long since (for want of heirs males) to the Church of Rome.

The Revenues of this Dukedom were reckoned to have been 100000 Crowns per annum; but might have been raised to a greater fund, had not the Dukes preferred the love and ease of their Subjects, before the filling of their own Coffers. He was able to raise 1200 good Souldiers out of this Estate: and more the people would supply, if they had occasion. The Arms heretofore of Azure a Tower Argent, environed with Flower de Lycies Or.

4. MARCA ANCONITANA is bound on the West with the State of Urbine; on the East with the River of Tronto, or Drunent, by which it is parted from Abruzzo; on the South with the Apennine Hills, by which parted from the Spoletan Dukedom; on the North with the Adriatick. The reason of the name we shall have anon.

It was formerly the dwelling of the Piemter, who possessed all these parts on the Coasts of the Adriatick, from the River Rubicon on the East, to that of Asidum on the West. For aiding the Tarentines their Allies, in their War against Rome, they were invaded and subdued by the Romans A.V.C. 485. which was about five years before the first Punic War, under the conduct of Sempronius; at which time they were so great and multitudinous a Nation, that they were numbered to amount to 360000 which were then brought under the Command and Vassalage of the Roman Empire. When Italy was divided into no more than eight Regions, these Piemter only made up one; so did they also when divided into eleven. Afterwards, in the time of the Antonins, they made up one of the sixteen Provinces, into which Italy was divided by those Emperors; and the same repute it held in the time of Constantine, Piemter making always one. Al-culum caput gentis, as Florus calls it, which was the head of their nation, being the Metropolis of the Province, Called in those times Picenum Anconarium, partly by reason of the abundance of grain which it did produce; and partly to distinguish from the dwelling of the Picentini, which from its nearness unto Rome, had the name of Picenum Suburbicarium; that part of Campania at this time, which is called the Principate. In the declining of the Empire, it was first called Marca Farniana, from Firmo: once a Roman Colony, and at that time of most importance in the Country; but by transferring the chief seat from Firmo to Ancona, in the time of the Lombards, it came to have the name of Anconitana. The chief Rivers, besides those named already, which are only borders, are, 1. Chienti, 2. Sentinu, and 3. Potentia, all rising in the Apennine, and passing with a sweet course to the Adriatick Sea.

The chief Towns, 1. Ancona, seated on the Hill Cimmerius, shooting into the Sea, glorying in giving name to the Province, and her Haven built by Trajan the Emperor; one of the fairest of the World, not so much for capacity, as the pleasantness and beauty of it: the descents down unto the Water being made of Marble, and very delectable walking on all sides of it. The City it self is begirt with Hills, on one of which Pope Clement the seventh built a very strong Castle. Anno 1532, under pretence of defending the Town against the Turks, but indeed to keep the people in more full subjection, who till that time, did yearly choose their own Magistrates, and lived according to their own Laws, like a Commonwealth. 2. Recanati (heretofore Alia Regina), seated upon the banks of the River Musio, renowned for the great concourse of Merchants from all parts of Europe, at her Annual Marts; and a Vein of the most excellent Wines. 3. Firmo, furnished the Strong: in former times of most esteem in all the Province which was hence called Marca Farniana; and to this day, a place of great strength and consequence; and an Archbishop Sec. 4. Macerata, now of most credit, by reason that the Popes Leontius keeps his residence there, and with him the Chancellor at his Marquise. 5. Loreto, called in Latin Laurerana, a little City betwixt Recanati and the Sea; well fortified against the Turks, and other Pirates who once spoiled the same, and might be easily tempted thither on the like occasions: The Church here being admirable rich, and frequented by Pilgrims from all parts, to pay their devotions unto our Lady of Loreto, and behold her Miracles. Concerning the removal of whose Chamber hither, on our description of Palestine, you shall meet with a very proper Legend. 6. Acoli, furnished the Fair, seated at the influx of the River Druentis, and on the furthest side of it towards Abruzzo, to which by some it is ascribed. Anciently the chief City of the Piemont, as before is said, and then called Asculum, conquered by the Romans, under the conduct of Sempronius, A.U.C. 485. Nigh unto this City, was fought the second Battle between C. Fabricius and the Romans on the one side, and Pyrrhus with the Epirians on the other; wherein the Victory (as Plutarch telleth us) fell to the King, having slain 6000 of his Enemies; but yet with such loss on his side, that he affirmed to some of his Friends and followers, That such another Victory would quite undo him; and with such apparance of valour and virtue in the Romans, that he could not but break forth into this acclamation: O quam facile esset orbem vincere, aut mihi, Romanis militibus, aut me rege, Romanis! This Town also was the seat of the War called Bellum sociale, raised by the people of Italy against the Romans; Pope Sixtus being both Author of the Rebellion, and Captain. They for a while freely shaked the state of Rome; but at last were vanquished, and this Town by Strabo Compeium forced and spoiled. 7. Adria, now not otherwise famous, than that it gave denomination to the adjoining Sea, and the Emperor Adrian. 8. Humana, which together with Ancona, was given to Pope Zachary, by Luitprand King of the Lombards, about the year 741. The succeeding Popes after the giving of this Inch, took the whole Ell.

5. Having surveyed the Provinces of the Church along the Adriatick, we must next cross the Apennine, which parts the Marches of Ancona from the Dukedom of SPOLETO (DUCATO SPOLETANO the Italians, call it) which takes up the Western part of that Province, which the old Romans called Umbria: and therefore before we come to the description of this, we must a little look on the state of that. A Country bounded on the East with the River Aniene, dividing it from the East parts of Latium; on the West with Tuscia or Hetruria; on the North, with the Apennine; on the South, with the reaches or windings of the Tiber, the main body of Latium, and with that part of Tuscia which is now called St. Peter's Patrimony. So called, because being situate under the shade of the Apennine Hills, it was Regio Umbrosa. Some give another reason of it, and think that the Inhabitants were called Umbri, quasi Umbra, as men that had escaped the Deluge; because so ancient a people, that no body could tell the Original of them.

But whatsoever was the reason of the name, they were a stout and valiant people, and gave the first check to Annibal's career, after his great Victory at Thrasymene, repelling him with loss and shame from the Walls of Spoleto: yet not of power sufficient, for all their valour, to preserve their Country from the Tuscan, who are said to have destroyed in it 300 good Towns. Made by that means, if not plainly subject, yet so obnoxious to the will and pleasure of the Victors, that at their instance or command they sided with them in a War against the Romans (whom formerly they had found very quiet neighbours): and by the Romans were subdued together with the rest of the Confederates then in Arms against them, A.U.C. 458. Decius and Quintus Fabius then the fifth time Consuls, which was about 77 years before Annibal fell into their Country. After which time in such esteem, that it was one of the eleven Regions into which Italy was divided by Augustus Caesar; and finally, together with Tuscia, made up a Province of the Empire.

As for the Dukedom of Spoleto, it taketh up the Western parts of the Province of Umbria, as before was said, included betwixt the Apennine, the Tiber, and the River Nar, by which last (now called Neas) it is divided from Sabinia, or the Land of the Sabiners. The Country of a mixt nature, equally composed of very rough Hills, and yet most delectable Valleys; exceeding plentiful of all necessities, and much commended heretofore for the extraordinary fecundity of the Women. The Wine hereof is much commended by Martial, as the best of Italy.

Maluerit, quam si Musia Falerna bibas.

That is to say,

If with Spoleto bottles once you meet,
Say that Falerno Must is not so sweet.

Places of great note herein, 1. Spoleto, built partly on the Hill, and partly on the lower ground; the residence heretofore of one of the four Dukes of the Longobardians, who governed as Vice-roys, or Lord Presidents, of the remoter parts of that Kingdom: from whence whence the Country round about it, was called Ducato Spoletanum. It is still a Town of good esteem, populous, and of handsome building; and hath a strong Fortrefs for defence thereof, built upon the ruins of an old Amphitheatre: to which men pass over a great Bridge of stone, upheld by 24 great Pillars, which joins two Mountains together: having between them a deep Valley, but narrow and without any Water. Theodorick the Goth built a fair Palace in this City, rebuilt by Narses but since ruined. 2. Engubium (now called Anguino) seated on the foot of the Apennine; in or near that place where anciently stood that City which Pliny calls Fugium; Enclonius Istrum; utterly subverted by the Goths. A Town well seated in a fruitful and wealthy soil, and blessed with an industrious people; acknowledging the Dukes of Urbine for Lords thereof, till that estate was swallowed up into the Popeedom. 3. Nucerina, (now Nocera) in Pliny's time called Alfatina, at the foot also of the Apennine; the people of which in former times much traded in their wooden vessel. 4. Assisum, or Assisi, destroyed almost to nothing in the Civil Wars of Italy, and only famous at this time, for a See Episcopal, and being the birth-place of St. Francis; the founder of the Franciscans, or Cordeliers, as the French call them, but we in England the Gray-Friars. 5. Citta de Castello, anciently Thiberidum, on the banks of Tiber. 6. Tuderum, now called Todi, seated near the Tiber, on the declivity of a rich and fruitful Hill.

The rest of Umbria towards the East, not being within the compass of the Spoletan Dukedom, but under the command of the Popes of Rome, is by late Writers called SABINIA, because the dwelling in times past, of the ancient Sabini: who being taken into Rome, and made Free Denizens of that City in the time of Romulus, upon the League concluded betwixt him and Tatius, then the King of this people, for a long time lived under the protection of that mighty City. But after joining with the Latins in a War against it, they were subdued by Curius Dentatus the Roman Consul, and made a subject Province of that common-wealth, A.U.C. 465. But though the Sabini, at this time bear away the name, yet were they not sole Masters of it in these elder times; the greater part thereof being possessed by some Nations of the Umbri, whom by a general name they called Vilumbri (the Sabines interjected betwixt them and Rome) and as a member of that body, subdued together with the rest of Umbri by the conquering Romans. Afterwards in the division of Italy made by Antoninus, it was called Nursia; and in that made by Constantine, it was contained within the new Province of Valeria; Reate being the Metropolis, or head City of both. A Territory of no great circuit, but abundantly fruitful in Oyl or Olives, Vines and Figtrees: watered with the River Farfarum, which cutteth through the very midst of it; and with the Lake called anciently Lacus Velinus (now Lago di Pedulano) esteemed to be the Centre or Navel of Italy by some ancient Writers: the waters of which are of such a nature, that in short time they will cloath a piece of wood with a coat of stone, and yet yieldeth excellent Trouts, and most good Fish. The Towns and Cities of most note, are, 1. Reate (now called Reice) an ancient City, and the Metropolis heretofore of all this Tract; as well when it was called Nursia, as when it was under the name of Valeria. 2. Nursia, a City no less ancient, seated among the Hills, which for the most part are covered with snow; from which Town, being heretofore of more reputation, the Province of Nursia, spoken of in the Itinerary of Antoninus, took denomination. 3. Magliano, a pleasant and well-peopled Town, at this time the principal of this Territory.

4. Oriculum, built amongst many fruitful Hills, a mile from Tiber. 5. Narnia, the Country and Birth-place of the Emperor Nerva, the first of all the Emperours not born in Rome, as after him there were few born in it. The soil about it is of so different and strange a nature, that it is said to be made dirty by the Sun and Winds, and dusty by Rain: the City well-peopled, and a Bishops See, seated upon a very steep and craggy Hill, not far from the River Nar (now Negro) from which perhaps it took the name. A City given unto the Church of Rome by Luitprandus, King of the Lombards; of which the Popes of Rome having got possession, never left praetising till they had got into their power all the rest of the Country. Little else famous in the whole Region of Umbria, but that in the Western part thereof, is the Lake called Lacus Vademonius, near to America, now called Amelia, a Town of the Dukedom, where Dalabella overthrew such of the Senones, a valiant Nation of the Gallii, as had escaped the Sword of Camillus, Quintilius, Curius; and other fortunate Commanders in the Wars against them: Ne quis extaret in ea gente (saith the Historian) qui incensam à se Romanam gloriaretur: a former slaughter being made of them by Camillus, on the banks of Aniene, the Eastern limit of these Umbri.

5. S. PETERS PATRIMONY, properly and specially so called, is that part of Tuscia which appertains unto the Church; bounded upon the East with Latium, which divides it from Latium, or Campagna di Roma: on the West, with the River Pisio, which falleth into the Sea near the Mountain of Argentario and parteth it from the estate of the great Duke of Tuscia; on the North, with the Apennine and the Spoletan Dukedom, on the South with the Tuscan or Tiberian Sea. It took this new name presently on the donation of the Countess Mathildis, who gave it for ever unto the Church, An. 110. (Paschal the second sitting in the Chair of Rome) to be the Patrimony of S. Peter, and his successors in that See. A Country not inferior unto any in Italy, for the fertility of the soil: but for the most part of an unhealthy Air, by reason of the frequent overflowings of Tiber, and the thick woods which hinder that the winds cannot purge and cleanse it.

The principal Cities, and places of most observation, are 1. Perugia, formerly called Perusia; a famous Town; in which Augustus besieged L. Antonius the brother, and Fulvia the wife of M. Antony the Triumvir, who when they had in vain attempted to seduce Rome from his party, repaired to this City; which also at the last, yielded to the more fortunate Emperor. Augustus afterwards, having much adorned and beautified it, caused it to be called Augusta; but it returned not long after, to its ancient name. It is seated very pleasantly on the banks of Tiber, not far from the Apennine, in a very rich and fruitful soil; well built both for the publick and private structures; a Bishops See and made an University, An. 1090. In the distractions of Italy betwixt the Emperours and the Popes, this City was seized on by the Baillons, who held it as Vicars of the Church. The Ordines, an opposite faction to them, having got together a strong party of Male-contents, so suddenly entered one night into the City, that the Baillons began to fly: nor was there any thing to hinder them from being Masters of the Palace, but the Chain which was drawn cross the Gate. One of the Soldiers going about to cut this Chain, and wanting room to wield his arm, cried aloud Give back; which words being heard, but not well understood by those furthest off, put them to their heels; and the foremost, which thought they fled not for nothing, ran away too. So the City was saved. 2. Orvieto, seated on so high a Rock, that it is no small Ter-

If we should add their Wives, Children, and Servants, we cannot probably conjecture them to have been fewer than three or four Millions: and so Lipfius is of opinion, in his Tract de Magnitudine Romana. The most memorable buildings of it, were first the Capitol, founded by Tarquinius Superbus, and beautified with the spoils of their conquered Neighbours; saved from the fury of the Galls by the cackling of Geese. Tacitus calleth this house Sedem Jovis optimi maximi, aufpicato a majoribus pignus imperii conditum. It was twice burnt, once in the Wars of Vefpafian and Vitellius. In the third building of it, Vefpafian carried the first basket of Earth; after him the Nobility did the like, to make the people more forward in the service: and perhaps the custom of laying the first stone in a building, or driving the first nail in a timber-work, by him whose edifice it is; hath, from hence, if not beginning, yet growth. 2. Here was the Temple of Janus open in the time of Wars, and shut in the time of peace; which, during all their Monarchy, happened but thrice: namely during the reign of Augustus, after the first Punic War, and in the time of Numa. 3. Here was the Bridge called Pons Sublicius, on which Horatius Cocles resisted the whole Army of King Porfena, Tarquinius, and the Tyfcans; till the Citizens behind had broken down the bridge, received him swimming to the bank with joyful acclamations and saved their City from present ruin. Here lived the famous Writers, so much renowned in the stories of elder times; here flourished the exact Martial discipline, fo memorized by ancient Historiographers: and finally, here were laid up the spoils and Trophies of all Europe.

ROMES, as now it standeth lower on the bank of Tiber upon Campus Martius, (where it was built after the inundation of the Goths and Vandals) is in compass about eleven miles. within which compass is not a little waste ground. The Inhabitants of all sorts reckoned to amount to 200000, two parts whereof are Clergymen and Courtiers; that is to say, such as have their dependance on the Court of Rome, either by holding Offices and places of employment under the Popes, or by attending on his person, or waiting on the Cardinals and eminent Prelates who are there abiding; or otherwise being of the retinue of such foreign Ambassadors as are always commorant in the City, to follow the Negotiations of their several Matters; all which must needs amount to a very great number. It was first built on the East-side of the River in the Territory of Latium, but now there is little left of the old City but the goodly ruins & here and there some Churches and scattered houses (except it be a little on the North-East of the River, from the Gate called Del populo, to the Island of Tiber;) the rest, especially towards South, being taken up with pastures and fields of Corn. The main body of the City, as now it stands is on the West-side of the water, and the Holy Island, consisting of three distinct parts or members. Of these the least is that which they call La Isola, but anciently the Holy Island; first made an Island by the Corn, Straw, and other goods of the Tarquinius, which the Senate not vouchsafing to convert to any publick or private use, commanded to be flung into the River; where it sunk and settled to an Island, called afterwards the Holy Island, from a Temple herein built unto Esculapius, brought hither from Epidaurum, in the shape of a Serpent. This Island is not above a quarter of a mile in length, and hardly half so much in breadth: but full of stately Churches and beautiful houses. Next to this is that which they call Trastevere, or Trans-Tiberina; but of old Janiculo, from the Mountain of that name included in it: Called also Civitas Raven- natum, or the City of the men of Ravenna, of the Soldiers which Augustus kept at Ravenna against Antonia; and after placed in this out-part of the City, which by reason of the unwholesomeness of the air, is inhabited only by Artizans and poor people; yet compassed about with walls, except on that side next the water, and adorned with many goodly Churches and some handfom buildings. But the chief glory of the City consisteth in that part of it which is called Il Borgo, lying on the North-side of the other, but dis-joyined from it compassed about with walls by Pope Leo the 4. and from thence called Civitas Leonina. For in this part there are, 1. The Church of S. Peter, which was it once finished, would be one of the rarest buildings in all the World. 2. The Castle of S. Angelo, impregnable unless by Famine. 3. The Popes Palace, called Belvedere, which with the Gardens thereof was compassed about with a very high wall, by Pope Nicolas the fifth. And had his name from the fair prospect which it hath: in the same fence, as Belvoir Castle here in England, the Barony and Manfion of the Earls of Rutland. A Palace of magnificence and receipt enough. 4. The Library of the Hill Vatician, properly called the Palatine, but more commonly the Vatican Library: a Library first founded by Sextus the fourth, who not only stored it with the choicest Books he could-pick out of Europe: but also allowed also a large revenue for the perpetual augmentation of it. Bibliothecam Palatinam in vaticano, ius terrarum urbe celeberr, aduictis ex omni Europa libris confectis; presentisq; cetis, &c. So Onuphrius. When the Duke of Barbon sacked Rome, Anno 1527. it was much defaced and ransacked; but by the succeeding Popes it hath been again recovered to its former fame, and beauty. Rome is now an University, which was founded by Urban the fourth, at whose request Thomas Aquinas professed here. Pope Nicolas the fifth was a special benefactor to the same; and after him, Leo the tenth, who revived the Greek Learning and Language, which were in these parts almost forgotten. And finally, to this place are brought all the treasures of those parts of Christendom subject to the Popes authority: partly for the expence of strangers, which do there remain on their several pleasures or occasions; and partly for the expeditions which are there obtained, for the Investitures of Bishoppicks, and Bulls of Benefices, Indulgences and other matters of Court-holy-water; and partly in the Penfions, which are paid there to the Cardinals and other Ministers of those Kings and Princes, which know best how to make their ends of the Popes ambitions. So that it may be truly said, there came not more Tributes into old-Rome from the conquered Provinces, than hath been brought into the New from the subject Churches, which have submitted to the power of the Roman Prelates: and that they have as great command now under the pretence of Religion, as ever they had formerly by force of Arms. So truly was it said by Proper of Aquinane, (if memory fail not)

Roma caput mundi, quicquid non possidet Armis, Religione tenet.

That is to say,

What Rome subdu'd not with the Sword.
She holds by colour of the Word.

But yet there wants the Genius of the ancient City, the power and natural courage of the old Inhabitants, which held the same against the bravery and assaults of all foreign Enemies: this City during the time of the ancient Romans, being never took but by the Galls; but since Pontifical, it hath been made a prey to all Barbarous Nations and never was besieged by any that did not take it. In a Word, the City of Rome as now it standeth, is but the carcass of the old, of which it retains nothing but the ruins and the cause of them, her fins.

The Popes do much brag of the foundation of their Church, and the authority of St. Peter; whose being there is indeed constantly attested by most ancient Writers; inasmuch that Calvin, though no friend to the Popes of Rome, yet proper Scripturam confutum, in regard of the unanimous consent of the primitive times, did not think fit to controvert it. The silence of the Scriptures is a Negative Argument, and concludes nothing to the contrary; against fo great a Cloud of unquestioned Witnesses, as soberly and positively have affirmed the same. And yet I would not have it thought by the captious Romanists, that I conceive that it makes any thing at all for the Pope's Supremacy, because he sits in Peter's seat: no more than it did make for Vibius Rufus (as Dion doth relate the story) to attain Tully's eloquence, or Cæsar's power, because he married Tully's Widow, and bought Cæsar's Chair: though the poor Gentleman did beset himself with this opinion, that he should be Master of them both. Of which see Lib. LVII. And yet the Popes rely so much upon this fancy, of being the direct heirs of St. Peter, and all his preeminencies, that all things which they say or do, must be intitled to St. Peter. Their Throne must be St. Peter's Chair, their Church St. Peter's Ship, their Lands St. Peter's Parimony, their Tributes and Exactions must be called St. Peter's; and all their Bulls and faculties sealed Anulo Piscatoris, with St. Peter's Signet. Nay, they went so far at the last, that Pope Stephen not being contented to be Peter's Successor, did take upon him in plain terms to be Peter himself. For being distressed by Alfuphus King of the Lombards, he sends for aid unto King Pepin in this following stile. Petrus Apostolus JESU CHRISTI, &c. i. e. Peter the Apostle of JESU CHRISTI, to you the most illustrious King Pepin, and to all Bishops, Abbots, &c. I the Apostle Peter, whose adapted sons you are, admonish that you presently come and defend this City, &c. And doubt you not, but trust assuredly, that I my self, as if I stood before you, do thus exhort you, &c. And that I Peter the Apostle of God, will at the last day yield you mutual kindness, and prepare you Tabernacles in the Heavens. Baronius who records this Letter, Anno 755. numb. 17. was it seems, pretty well perwaded of it, that the Pope and Peter were all one. For in his Exhortation to the State of Verone, being then upon some differences with Pope Paul the fifth, he stileth him in plain terms thus, Paulus Idemque Petrus Christi agens in terra, i. e. Paul, who is also Peter, and Christis Vicegerent, &c. But leaving these imaginary claims and challenges of St. Peter's privileges, though they did really advance the reputation of that See in the darker Ages, two things there were which did exceedingly conduce to the improvement of their power, in the more knowing and discerning times of Christianity. Of which the principal, was, the Orthodoxy of the Bishops or Popes of Rome, their eminent and sincere profession of the Faith of Christ: when almost all the other Churches were either torn in pieces by the fury of Schism, or waited and subverted by the fraud of Heresie. In which regard, Appeals were frequently made to the Church of Rome, as a more competent Judge of the truth of Doctrine; the communion of it much desired by all true Christians; and a repair thither for relief and shelter in the times of trouble, made by the Orthodox Professors under persecution. And of these times, and this condition of that Church, we are to understand such passages of the Ancient Writers, as magnifie the Faith of the Church of Rome, and set it above all the batteries and assaults of Heresie. Such is that passage of St. Cyprian, Romanos esse ad quos presidia non potest habere accessum, lib. 1. ep. 3. and that of Hierome, Romanam fidem (i. e. Romanorum fidem) Apostolica voce laudatam, ejusmodi prestigis non recipere, in Apol. com. Ruffin and many others of that kind. Which passages it were as foolish and ridiculous to apply to all following times the condition of that church being different from what then it was; as to accommodate all those Elogies and commendations to the present City of Rome; which the Orators and Panegyricists of the elder times have hyperbolically ascribed to old Rome in her greatest glories. The next was the fixation of the Popes in the Metropolis, or Imperial City; which drawing to it such a multitude of suiters and attendants from all parts of the world, could not but add much to the power and reputation of those Prelates, who had the happiness and honour to be resident there: and thereby opportunity to gain more Disciple, to solve more doubts of conscience, and decide more controversies than any other could expect. And so we are to understand that passage in St. Irenæus, in which he saith, Ad hanc Ecclesiam propter potentiorum Principatum, necesse est omnem convenire Ecclesiam, i. e. eos qui sunt undique Ecclesie. And so they did as long as Rome enjoyed the honour of a more potent Principality than other Cities. But when that more potent Principality failed to beat Rome, by the removal of the Imperial See, first to Constantinople, and afterwards unto Ravenna, then did the Bishops of Constantinople and Ravenna, dispute with those of Rome for Superiority: the chief feat of Religion most commonly following the seat of the Empire. And in this claim the Patriarch or Bishop of Constantinople prevailed so far, that with the permission Mauritius the Emperor, he took upon him the title of Universal Patriarch. Gregory the Great (of whom it is said that he was the worst Bishop of all that went before him, and the best of all that came after him) was at that time Bishop of Rome: who sharply inveighed as well against the Emperor, as the Patriarch of Constantinople, for this Title, and plainly maintained, that whosoever called himself Universal Bishop, was the forerunner of Antichrist. As for himself it is probable that he took the title of Servus Servorum Dei, more in opposition to him of Constantinople, than with an intent to be so truly. To which though those of Rome reply that Gregory did not absolutely condemn this Title, but only blamed John the Constantinopolitan Patriarch for assuming to himself that attribute, which properly belonged to the See of Rome; yet this cannot be: For then either in the old Bulls of the former Popes, we should find mention of this Title; or else Pope Gregory would have assumed it to himself, that the world might take notice to whom of right it did belong. But Boniface, who next but one succeeded Gregory, having further aims applied himself to Phocas that bloody Tyrant; who having murdered the Emperor Mauritius, his Wife and Children, and thereby got the general hatred of all the good Subjects of the Empire, the better to assure himself of Italy, whose revolt he feared, declared this Boniface, to be the Oecumenical Bishop, and Head of the Church: To such a good beginning, such a gracious Patron do the Popes stand indebted for that power and Empire, which now they challenge to themselves over all the Church.

Now as the Bishop of Constantinople, and Ravenna, did challenge a priority or precedency of the Popes of Rome; by reason that they were respectively honoured with the Seat Imperial; so were there divers other Bishops, as Antioch, Alexandria, Carthage, Milain, which claimed claimed an equality with them; and would by no means yield them any superiority. For trial of whose claim, we must look back on somewhat which hath been said before; where it is shewn that the Roman Empire was divided into fourteen Dioeceses; each Dioecesis being subdivided into several Provinces; each Province comprehending many several Cities: then, that in every of those Cities, where the Romans had their Defensores, the Christians also had a Bishop: in the Metropolis of each Province, which commonly was the seat of the Roman Præfatus, the Christians had their Metropolitan; and that in each principal City of each several Dioecesis, wherein the Vicar of that Dioecesis had fixed his dwelling, there did the Christians place a Primate. And this was done according to that famous Maxim of Optatus Republica non est in Ecclesia, sed Ecclesia est in Republica, that the Church is in the Common-wealth; and not the Common-wealth in the Church. Upon which foundation the Fathers in the Council of Chalcedon, raised this superstructure, Ἐκκλεσιᾶς τὴν πόλιν ἔχει, &c. that the Honours of the Church should be accommodated unto those in State. So that according to this Platform, the Primates of the Church were of equal power, each of them limited and restrained to his proper Sphere; out of the which if he presume once to act, he moved irregularly, and in his Ecclesiastical, And for those Primates, I shall give you once for all, this general Muster, that is to say the Patriarch or Pope of Rome, for the Dioecesis or Prefecture of that City; the Primate or Archbishop of Milain, for the Dioecesis of Italy; of Syracusa, for that of Syria; of Lyons, for that of France; of Tor, for Britain; Toledo, for Spain, and of Carthage, for Africa. Then for the East parts of the Empire, there was the Patriarch of Alexandria, for the Dioecesis of Egypt; of Antioch, for that of the Orient; the Primate or Archbishop of Ephefus, for the Dioecesis of Asia; of Nicomedia for that of Pontus; of Bizantium, for Constantinople for that of Thrace; of Istanbul, for the Dioecesis of Greece; and of Justiniana prima, for that of Dacia. Amongst all which there was a mutual correspondence and Co-ordination, for the general Government of the Church; maintained by Letters of intercourse, which they called Litteras formatas, and Communicatorias; but no subordination, and much less subjection, unto one another, as doth appear most evidently by the Canons of the Council of Nice, assigning to the three great Patriarchs their peculiar bounds, according to the custom of the former times. As for the Dioecesis or Patriarchate of the Popes of Rome, it contained in it those ten Provinces, which were immediately subject to the Prefect or Provoost of that City (an Office first instituted by Augustus Caesar) that is to say, the Provinces of Tuscia and Umbria, Picenum, Suburbicarium, Campania, Apolia and Calabria, Valeria, Sammium, Lucania and the Bruttii, in the main Land of Italy; and the three Islands of Sicily, Corfica, and Sardinia. In which regard, (I mean as to the immediate Government of those Provinces by the Prefect of the City of Rome) as they are called Regiones Suburbicarie, by Ruffinus an Italian Writer, so anciently the Pope himself was called Urbanus, or the City Bishop, as appears plainly by Optatus, who calleth Pope Zephyrinus, Zephyrinus Urbanus. But the Popes were not long content with that allotment, growing up daily by a steady and constant watchfulness upon all occasions, to increase the Grandeur of that See; and taking to themselves the honour to be Vindictæ Canonum, the strict and punctual preservers of the ancient Discipline, which took extremely well with all sorts of people. Till in the end from being Vindictæ Canonum, they came to be Interpreters, and at last the Rulers, or rather the Over-rulers of the Canons; and from the chief Labourers in the Vineyard, they became the Landlords: which was the honour aimed at, and at last obtained by the forefaid Baniface, whom that cruel and butcherly Tyrant Phocas made the Head of the Church, the sixty sixth Bishop and first Pope of Rome: the Latin word Papa coming from the old Greek πάππας, signifying a Father. A title at the first common unto other Bishops, as is evident to any one, who hath read the Fathers; but after this appropriated unto those of Rome. Of these Popes, their Succession, and times of Government, our Chronologers are very uncertain: not one of them that ever I had the luck to see, agreeing exactly with another. The reasons whereof, I conceive, are, 1. The frequent Vacancies; and 2. the many Schisms which have happened in it; and 3. the Anti-Popes in them created: The Writers of those times accounted him only among the Popes, to whose faction they were most devoted. This Catalogue ensuing I have collected principally out of the Tables of Helveticus, Freigius, Belarmine, and Omniprius, whose differences I have reconciled as well as possibly I could: premonishing the Reader, that where the number of years which every Pope is found to fit in the Papal Chair, makes not up the full number from his first admission, to the coming in of his Successor; it must be understood by some Schism or Vacancy, happening in the Interval, by which the tale is to be made up. And for the difficulties which occur amongst the Ancients, in the first succession, some placing of them thus, Linus, Cletus, Clement; some Linus, Clement, Cletus; and finally some putting Clement the first, I know no better way to compose the same then to affirm (as many of the Fathers do) that St. Peter and St. Paul were Co-founders of the Church in Rome; St. Peter of the Church of the Circumcision, and St. Paul of the Gentiles; each of them being Bishop of the Church of his own foundation: and then to draw down the Succession in this manner following.

The Bishops of Rome.

- A. Ch.
44 1 St. Peter, Bishop of the Churches of the Circumcision.
70 2 Cletus, or Anacletus, Successor to St. Peter in the Churches of the Circumcision. 23.
59 1 St. Paul, Bishop of the Churches of the Gentiles.
70 2 Linus, Successor to St. Paul in the Church of the Gentiles. 11.
81 3 Clements having succeeded Linus first in the Church of the Gentiles, did after Anno 93. succeed Cletus also in the Church of the Jews, reckoned by some the next Successor to St. Peter, because the next who after him had the charge of the whole; the Church of the Gentiles not being founded, or not distinguished from the others, till some years after Peter's coming.

Apostles of the Irish Nation, very much honoured by that people to this very day. Of whom there is remaining in Messingham collection of the Irish Saints, a certain number of Motors, in the Latin tongue; agreeable to the nature or chief accidents of as many Popes successively to one another, according to the order of those several Motors: and there unto this Prophetic annexed, that when so many Popes had late in St. Peter's Chair, either the World should end, or the Popedom fail. The Book was shewed to me by the Author, when I was at Paris, and the Pope's names in order joined to every Motto, as far as the time of Urban, who last deceased; which I compared as well as memory would serve me, and found the Mottos and the Popes to be very answerable. The Motto for Pope Urban, which I took most notice of, was, Litum et Rosa: a Motto very suitable to the principal Action which was like to happen in his time, being the conjunction of the English Rose, and the Fremb Lilly in the marriage of Charles King of England, and Madam Henrietta Maria the Princess of France; which that Pope earnestly promoted, in his speedy and cheerful granting of the Dispensation. And to take from me all suspicion of imposture, this Maffingham shewed me an old Book written by one Wion a Fleming, and printed near 200 years before his Collection; in which the Mottos stood as in his they did, and comparing the Mottos with a printed Catalogue of the Popes, I found the name of Urban, and that Motto to jump even together. From Urban downwards there remained (as I now remember) 36 Mottos more to come; by consequence, if this Malachi was as true a Prophet as one Malachi was, just to many Popes, and then the Popedom to be ruined, or the World to end. But I hope God for his Elders sake will abridge those days, and not permit the superstitious and the corruptions of that Church to endure so long; nor so many Assertors and Defenders of those Roman Heterodoxies, to be added to the former number. Out of the stories of all which (premitting many things of less consideration) I will only select some few passages, for the better understanding of their fate and story.

1. Pelagius the first, ordained that Heretick and Schismatick should be punished with temporal death; which severity continueth still: and that none should be preferred to Ecclesiastical dignities by Gifts, and Bribes; which pious order is long since antiquated.

2. Vitalianus, first brought Organs into the Divine service of the Church of Rome; to be used with the singing or vocal Musick formerly in use; which afterwards was brought unto more perfection by the Popes succeeding.

3. Constantine was so generally beloved of all men, that going to Constantinople, Justinian the second kist his feet in sign of honour, which some of the ambitious Popes in times succeeding, drew into example, and at last brought into a custom, as it still continueth.

4. Paschal the first, caused the Priests of certain Parishes in Rome, by reason of their nearness to his person, their presence at his Election, and to honour them with a more venerable Title, to be called Cardinals. Now mates for Kings, and numbered about 70, but more or fewer at the sole pleasure of the Popes.

5. Eugenius the second, took to himself within the Territories of the Church, the Authority of creating Dukes, Earls and Knights; as the Exarch of Ravenna had used to do.

6. Sergius the second, was the first that changed his name. For thinking his own name, Bocca di Porco, or Swine-mouth, not consonant to his dignity, he caused himself to be called Sergius; which precedent his Successors following, do also vary their names. So that if one be a Coward he is called Leo; if a Tyrant, Clement; if an Atheist, Pius, or Innocent; if a Rustick, Urbanus; and so for the rest.

6. John the eighth, is by most men confessed to be a Woman, and is usually called Pope Joane. To avoid the like disgrace, the Porphyry Chair was ordained; ubi ab ultimo diacono, &c. so that both in a literal and mystical sense, this Woman may not unfitly be called, The Where of Babylon. The name of this Female Pope, the Romish Chronologists have not inserted into the Catalogue; the reason, as Marianus Scotus giveth it, propter turpitudinem rei, & solum muliebrem. And from hence it is that in the common Catalogues, these Popes that have called themselves John, are so ill ordered; some making that John which succeeded Adrian the second, An. 872, to be the 8th and others the 9th, Platina only of all the Pontificatus reckoneth Pope Joane as the 8th of the Johns, and so forward: in which particular I have followed his authority. And it is probable enough that God might suffer that proud Sec to fall into such an infamy, the better to humble the ensuing Popes, in the times of their greatest ruff and flourish; or to prevent the brag of that continued Succession, they so much pretend to. More of this Argument, (as to the truth of the story in matter of Fact) he that lists to see, may satisfy himself in Mr. Cock Book of Pope Joane; who most indolently hath answered all objections, which hath been made against it by those of Rome.

8. Nicholas the first, the better to fasten the Clergy to the See of Rome, and make them the less obnoxious to their natural Princes, was the first who did by law restrain them from Marriage; saying, that it was more honest to have to do with many Women privately, than openly to keep a Wife: and some of his Successors followed it so close, that a Priest of Placentia being accused to have Wife and Children, was deprived of his Benefice; but upon proof made, that she was the Wife of another man, and his Strumpet only, he was again restored to it.

9. Adrian the third, ordained, that the Emperor, from thenceforth should have no more to do with the Election, or confirmation of the Pope, but that it should be left wholly to the Roman Clergy.

10. Formosus was so ill beloved, and of such a general distaste, that Pope Stephen the seventh caused his body to be unburied, all his Acts reversed, two of his fingers to be cut off, and then the mangled carcase to be again interred among the Laitie. And though these Acts of Stephen were adjudged illegal, both by John the tenth, and Pope Romanus, two of his Successors; and the doings of Formosus justified: yet Sergius the third caused his corrupt and putrid body to be taken once more out of the grave; and his head to be cut off, as if still alive. So little did the infidelity of S. Peter's Chair preserve these Popes from falling into grots and irreconcilable contradictions.

11. John the twelfth, was the next after Sergius the second that changed his name; a very wicked, cruel and libidinous man: who coming to that place by his Fathers greatness, cut off the nose of one Cardinal, and the hand of another, for that they had signified to the Emperor Otho the first, what a scandal all the Church did suffer by his detestable life; and finally, being taken in Adultery, was slain by the husband of the woman.

12. Gregory the fifth, finding power of the Emperor, as long as it continued in a way of succession, not likely to be over-born by that of the Church; and being withal incensed against the Romans, who, till that time retained some shadow of an Empire; projected the election of the future Emperors, by the Princes of Germany; by which the Germans were distracted into Factions, and the Romans weakened; and so a door left open to the Popes of Rome, to make their ends upon them both.

13. Stephen the tenth, brought the Church of Milan to be under the obedience of the Popes of Rome, which till that time had challenged an equality with them; as before before Pope Domnus had done the Church of Ravenna, which for some time had challenged the predecency of them.

14. Gregory the seventh, commonly called Hildebrand, a turbulent and unquiet man, who first adventured to draw the Premist laid down by some of his Predecessors into a conclusion: Excommunicating the Emperor Henry IV, for meddling with the Investitures of Bishops, and causing Rodolph Duke of Swevia to rebel against him. A man, much favoured against the Princes of her own house by the Countess Matilda; who is said to be so much his friend, that for his sake he left the company of her Husband, and disherited her right Heirs, settling her whole Estates in Italy on the See of Rome. And though the Emperor had the better of this Pope, and made him flee out of Rome, and die in exile; yet he was fain at last to submit himself to Pope Paschal the second, (who had Armed his own Son against him) to attend bare-foot at his own door, and cry peccavi.

15. Sergius the third, ordained the bearing of Candles in the Feast of the Purification of the Virgin Mary, thence called Candlemas day.

16. Sergius the fourth, was the first that on Christmas night, with divers Ceremonies did consecrate Swords, Roses, or the like; to be sent as tokens of love and honour to such Princes as deserved best of them, or whom they desired to oblige. Thus Leo the tenth sent a consecrated Rose to Frederick Duke of Saxony, requesting him to banish Luther; and Paul the third an hallowed Sword to James the fifth of Scotland, to engage him in a War against Henry the Eighth, who had then withdrawn himself and his Kingdom, from the Pope's commands.

17. Nicholas the second took from the Roman Clergy the election of Popes, and gave it to the College of Cardinals.

18. Celestine the second, was the inventor of that mad manner of cursing, or Anathematizing, by Bell, Book, and Candle.

19. Alexander the third, pursuing the desperate course of Gregory the seventh, excommunicated the Emperor Frederick I, and by railing War against him in every place; brought him to that exigent, that he was fain to prostitute himself at his feet: when the Pope treading on his neck, said aloud, Super Aspidem & Basiliscum, &c. profanely applying those words to the present occasion. And when the Emperor, to put the better colour on his disgrace, meekly replied, Non tibi sed Petro; the Pope not willing to lose his part of so great a glory, subjoined as angrily, Et mihi sed Petro.

20. Innocent the third held a Council in Rome, in which it was decreed that the Pope should have the correction of all Christian Princes; and that no Emperor should be acknowledged, till he had sworn obedience to him. Which bringeth into my mind that jolly humour of the great Cham of Tartary; who when he had kind commands his Trumpeters to found, and make proclamation, that now all other Kings and Princes may sit down to dinner. He brought in the Doctrine of Transubstantiation, and ordained that there should be a Pie made to cover the consecrated (but now Transubstantiated) Bread, and a Bell to be rung before it. He is also said to have first imposed Auricular Confession upon the people.

21. Nicholas the third, was the first Pope who practised to enrich his kindred, intending to make one of them King of Lombardy, another King of Tuscan; and to raise the rest to great Advancements out of the Lands of the Church. Before which time (as Machiavel very well observeth) as there was no mention of the advancement of any of the Pope's kinsfolks or posterity, so afterwards they studied no one thing more than to prefer their own blood; inasmuch that they have not only laboured (as he faith) to make them Princes, but if it were possible would procure the Popedom to be made hereditary. So he, with probability enough. For so dearly do they love their Nephews (by which name they use to call their Bastards) that it was very justly Gaid by Pope Alexander the third, The Law forbids us to get Children, and the Devil hath given us Nephews in their stead.

22. Boniface the eighth, of whom it is said, That he entered like a Fox, reigned like a Lion, and died like a Dog; by his general Bull exempted the Clergy from being chargeable with Taxes and Payments unto Temporal Princes. Which being complied with by the Clergy of England, King Edward I, put them out of his protection; and so the Popes Bull left roaring here. He caused the Book of the Canon Law, called the Decretals to be first let out; and instituted the Feast of Jubilee, to be held in Rome every hundredth year; but by Clement the sixth it was brought unto the fiftieth year, and since reduced to the five and twentieth. This is that Boniface, who in that great concourse of people which repaired to Rome, to observe his new Feast of Jubilee, (to which every one that did repair was to have a plenary remission of all his sins) shewed himself one day in the habit of a Pope, and the next day in that of an Emperor; and caused two Swords to be born before him every day, in sign that all Power Ecclesiastical and Temporal did belong unto him.

23. Clement the fifth, was the first that made Indulgences and Pardons saleable. For seeing (said he) that our Lord of our Saviour's blood had been enough to have saved all Mankind, and yet that all his blood was shed, the over-plus was left to the Church as a standing Treasure, to be disposed of by St. Peter and his Successors. And hereunto, to make his Treasure the more inexhaustible, he added the Merits of the Virgin Mary, and all other Saints. Being wearied with the infidelities of the people of Rome, he removed the Papal See to Avignon in France, where it continued for the space of Seventy years.

24. Clement the sixth had an ill time of it. For in his Papacy the Emperor gave freely all Lands belonging to the Church, to such as formerly had usurped them; to be holden by them of the Empire. Upon which title the Mastros became Lords of Rimini, the Ordelschi of Forli, the Varenti of Caracine, the Bentivogli of Bononia, the Manfredi of Faenza, &c. Which Estates were never recovered to the Church, till the time of Pope Julius the second, though conquered from the present owners in the time of Alexander the sixth, by Cesar Borgias his Son; who had an aim of setting them, and perhaps the Papacy it self, on the Borgian Family.

25. Gregory the eleventh, returned the Papal Chair again to the City of Rome, whither he conveyed himself by Sea in private, for fear of being withheld by the French; and being come thither, found the chief parts of the City to over-grown with briars and bushes, and the principal buildings of it so decayed and ruinous, that a little longer absence would have made it desolate.

26. Paul the second, endeavoured to encrease the Majesty of the Popedom by Arms and Avarice, and exceeded all his Predecessors in pomp and shew: causing his Miter to be enriched with Diamonds, Sapphires, Emeralds and other Stones of great price; and augmenting the splendor of the Cardinals with a Scarlet Gown, whom Innocent the fourth had graced with Red Hats before. He brought the Jubilee from fifty years to twenty-five.

27. Sixtus the fourth ordained a constant Guard to attend his person. He very much beautified and repaired the City of Rome, and was the first founder of the Vatican Library. But on the other side he is said by some, to have set all Offices and Preferments to sale, and to have builded in Rome Stews of both sexes, to bring in Beads, and to authorize our Ladies Psalter.

28. Alexander the sixth, setting aside all modesty, was the first that openly acknowledged his Nephews (as they call their Bastards) to be his Sons. By one of which, the Cesar Borgia before named, he recovered Forli, Imola, the Cesar Estates from the present owners, on a and many other Estates in his own Family, as before is design, of selling them in his own Family, as before is said, and to that end called in the French, who after made such foul work in Italy.

29. Julio the second had more in him of the Soldier, than the Priest; recovering many Towns unto the Church, which had been formerly usurped, being taken from the Occupants by Cesar Borgia; and keeping Italy in his time in continual Wars. This is the Pope who, passing over the Bridge of Tiber, brandished his Sword, and threw his Keys into the River; saying that if Peter's Keys would not serve his turn, then Paul's Sword should do it.

30. Leo the tenth was indeed a great Favourite of Learning, but of great prodigality, and vast expence. For maintenance whereof, he sent his saleable Indulgence into France and Germany: which business being indirectly handled by his Ministers, occasioned Luther in Germany, and Zuinglius among the Swissers, first to write against them; and afterwards to question many points of Popish Doctrine. In pursuance of which quarrel, the Pope of Rome burnt Luther's Books, whom he declared for an Heretic; and Luther did the like at Wittenberg with the Pope's Canon Law, whom he declared to be a Persecutor, a Tyrant, and the very Antichrist. Which flame increased so fast and enlarged so far, that it burnt down a great part of the Papal Monarchy.

31. Pius the fourth, continued the Council formerly called at Trent by Pope Paul the third, but interrupted and laid aside from one Pope to another, and having brought it to an end, and thereby settled and confirmed the Interest of the Church of Rome, caused it to be received as Oecumenical: though the Italian Bishops being most of them the Pope's Creatures, did more than double the number of all the rest: and yet some of the rest also were but merely Titulars. He added also a new Creed consisting of twelve Articles to be added to that of the Apostles, by all who lived in the Communion of the Church of Rome. But of the words and actions of these Ghottly Fathers we have said enough, if not too much. I will therefore end with that of the Painter, who being blamed by a Cardinal, for giving to St. Peter's Picture too much of the Red, replied, That he had made him Jo, as blushing at the Lies of those who were called his Successors.

As for the Temporal power and greatness of the Popes of Rome, there is a pretended Donation of the Emperor Constantine, by which the City of Rome it self, most part of Italy, and Africa, and all the Islands of those Seas are conferred upon them: the forgery whereof is very learnedly shewn by our learned Græcanbury, in his Discourse upon that subject. But that Donation might most justly be suspected of Fraud and Forgery, though no body had took the pains to detect the same; considering how fearful the Popes are grown to have the truth thereof disputed: inasmuch that many leaves are razed out of Guicciardin by the Inquisition, where it had been questioned, For in that place the Historian not only denieth the said feigned Donation, but affirms that divers learned men reported, That Constantine and Sylvester (to whom it is said to have been made) lived in divers Ages. This sheweth, how base and obscure the Authority of the Pope was in Rome it self, during the time that the barbarous Nations made havock of Italy.

2. That in the institution of the Exarchate, the Popes had nothing to do with the Temporal Sword, but lived as subject to the Emperors. 3. That they were not very much obeyed in matters Spiritual, by reason of the corruption of their manners. 4. That after the overthrow of the Exarchate, the Emperors now neglecting Italy, the Romans began to be governed by the advice and power of the Popes.

5. That Pepin of France, and his Son Charles having overthrown the Kingdom of the Lombards, gave unto the Popes the Exarchate, Urbine, Ancona, Spolito, and many other Towns and Territories about Rome. 6. That the Popes in all their Bulls and Charters, expressed the date of them in these following words; Such a one our Lord the Emperor reigning. 7. That long after the translation of the Empire from France to Germany, the Popes began to make open pretestation, that the Pontifical dignity was rather to give Laws to the Emperors than receive any from them. 8. That being thus raised to an earthly power, they forgot the salvation of souls, sanctity of life, and the Commandments of God, propagation of Religion, and Charity towards men: And that to raise Arms, to make War against Christians, to invent new devices for getting of money, to prophane sacred things for their own ends, and to enrich their kindred and children, was their only study. And this is the substance of Guicciardin in that place: an Author above all exception. He was a man whom the Popes employed in many businesses of principal importance; so that no hate to them, but love to the truth, made him write thus much. As for the City of Rome, so unlikely it is to have been given by Constantine, that neither Pepin nor Charles his Son, (though most beholding to the Popes than that Emperor) could be induced to part with it.

Lewis surnamed Pius, is said to have been the first Donor of it, and a Copy of his Donation is found in the third Book of Valarterran, subscribed by the Emperor, his three Sons, ten Bishops, eight Abbots, fifteen Earls, and the Pope's Library-keeper: yet notwithstanding it is thought, by many very learned and judicious men, that really there was no such matter; but that all this was forged by Anastasi the Pope's Bibliothecary, or Library-keeper, who is cited as a witness to the Donation. And yet to put the matter further out of question, let us next hear what that great Politician and Statesman, the Recorder of Florence, Nic. Machiavel, hath observed in this case. Rome (saith he) was always subject to the Lords of Italy, till Theodorick, King of the Goths removed his Seat to Ravenna; for thereby the Romans were enforced to submit themselves to the Bishops, An. 430, or thereabouts. And talking of the estate of the Popedom, An. 931, he states it thus. In Rome were elected yearly out of the Nobility two Consuls, who according to the ancient Custom ruled that City. Under them was appointed a Judge to minister justice to the people. There was also a Council of twelve men, which gave Governments unto the Towns subject to Rome. And for the Pope, he had in Rome more or less Authority, according to the favour which he found with the Emperors, or others then most mighty; but the leaving of Italy by the German Emperors, led the Pope in a more absolute Sovereignty over the City. And yet it seems they were not of such absolute power, but that the Romans tugged hard with them for their Liberties. Concerning which he tells us in another place, That the ambition of the people of Rome did at that time (viz. An. 1010.) make much War with the Popes; and that having helped the Pope to drive out the Emperors, and altered the Government of the City as to them seemed good, suddenly they became Enemies to him; and the Popes received more injuries at their hands, than at any other Christian Princes; and that even in those days when the Censures of the Popes made all the Welt of the World to tremble, yet even then did the people of Rome rebel, and both the Popes and the people studied for nothing so much, as how one of them might overthrow the Authority and Estimation of the other.

But for the Method and degrees by which the Popes ascended to their temporal greatness, take here an extract of the Story taken out of the best Authors, by the most Reverend Father in God the late Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, in his learned and laborious work against Fisher the Jesuit. 'The Pope (saith he) being chosen anciently by the Clergy and people of Rome, chosen always to receive from the Emperors hands a ratification of that choice: inasmuch that about the year 579, when all Italy was on fire with the Lombards, and Pelagius the second constrained through the necessity of the times, to enter upon the Popedom without the Emperor's leave; St. Gregory then a Deacon, was shortly after sent in an Embassy to excuse it. But when the Lombards grew so great in Italy, and the Empire was so infected with the Saracens, and such changes hapned in all parts of the World, as that neither for the present the Homage of the Pope was useful to the Emperor; nor the Protection of the Pope was the Bishop of Rome left to play his own game by himself. A thing which as it pleased him well enough, so both he and his Successors made great advantage by it. For being grown to that eminence by the favour of the Emperors, and the greatness of that City and place of his abode, he then found himself the more free, the greater the Tempest was that beat upon the hearts of the first he set himself to alienate the hearts of the Italians from the Emperor, in which he did prevail so far, that Theophylact the Exarch coming into Italy, was opposed by the Soldiers, who wished better to the Pope, than to the Emperor; and the Emperor's own Governour was fain to be defended from his own Soldiers by the power of the Pope, who had gotten an interest in them against their own Master. Next he opposed himself against him; and about the year 710, Pope Constantine the first did openly affront Philippicus the Emperor, in defence of Inagers, as Onuphrius telleth us. After him, Gregory the second and third, took up his example, and did the like by Leo Harvius. By this time the Lombards began to pinch very close, and to vex on all sides not only Italy, but Rome too. This drives the Pope to seek a new Patron, and very fitly he meets with Charles Martel in France that famous Warrior against the Saracens. Him he employeth in the defence of the Church against the Lombards; and the Address seems very advantageously taken, it proved so fortunate to them both. For in short time it dissolved the Kingdom of the Lombards, having then stood Two hundred and four years, which was the Pope's security: and it brought the Crown of France into the house of Charles, and shortly after the Western Empire. And now began the Popes to be great indeed. For by the bounty of Pepin, the Son of Charles, that which was taken by him from the Lombards, was given to the Pope; that is to say, the Exarchate, and all that lay betwixt the Apennine and the River of Po. So that now he became a Temporal Prince. But when Charles the Great had set up the Western Empire, then he resumed the Ancient and Original Power, to govern the Church, to call Councils, and to order Papal Elections. And this power continued for a time in his posterity; for Gregory the seventh was confirmed in the Popedom by the same Henry the fourth, whom he afterwards deposed. And it might have continued longer, if the succeeding Emperors had had Abilities enough to secure, or vindicate their own Rights. But the Pope keeping a strong Council about him, and meeting with some weak Princes, and those oft-times distracted with great and dangerous Wars, grew stronger till he had got the better: yet was it carried in succeeding times with great changes of Fortune, and different success; the Emperor sometimes plucking from the Pope, and the Pope from the Emperor; winning and losing ground, as their spirits, abilities, aids and opportunities were; till at last the Pope settled himself on the grounds laid by Gregory the seventh, in that great power which he now useth in and over these parts of the Christian World. A power first exercised (saith he in another place) by this Pope Gregory the seventh, and made too good upon the Emperor Henry the fourth, as by Pope Adrian the fourth, Alexander the third, with some others, upon Fredrick Barbarossa. And others of the Emperors were alike served when they did not submit. And for this, I hope his Holiness was not to be blamed. For if the Emperor kept the Pope under for divers years together, against all reason; the Pope, as Bellarmine affirms, being never subject to the Emperor, and wanting force to stand on his own Prerogative: I hope the Pope having now got power enough, may keep the Emperors under foot, and not suffer them any more to start before him.

Having thus a little glanced at the means, by which the great power of the Church of Rome was first obtained; let us next consider of those policies; by which this Papal Monarchy hath been so long upheld in esteem and credit. We may divide them into three heads. 1. Those by which they have insinuated and crept themselves into the affections and affairs of the greatest Princes. 2. Those by which already they have, and by which they will hereafter be able to secure their estate: And 3. those by which they keep the people in obedience and ignorance.

1. Concerning the first. First, the Donation of several Kingdoms to them which have no right nor title, but by these Grants of the Pope, cannot but bind them fast to uphold that power, without which they could lay no claim to that which they are possessed of. Of which sort was the confirmation of the Kingdom of France to the house of Pepin; of Naples to the house of Swabians, and Anjou; of Navarre to the Spaniards. 2. The readiness of their Ministers to kill such as resist them, cannot but necessitate Princes to seek their friendship, and hold fair with them: especially since by a Write of Excommunication, they can arm the Subjects against their Sovereigns; and without the charge of leaving one Soldier, either destroy him utterly, or bring him to conformity. The frequent Wars raised by them against the Emperors of Germany, and that against King John in England, by these Papal fulminations; only the poisoning of the said King John by a Monk of Swinehead, and killing of King Henry the third of France, by Jacques Clement are full proofs of this. 3. Then followeth their allowance of Marriages prohibited both by God and Nature; the issue of which cannot but uphold the Popes Authority, without which their birth would be illegitimate, and consequently themselves incapable of the Estates they are born unto: And by this means they do more strengthen themselves by the unlawful Marriages of others, than ever Prince could do by the lawful Marriages of his own. Nothing more fained Queen Mary of England to the See of Rome, than the question that was raised about the Marriage of her Mother to King Henry the eighth: the lawfulness of which depended chiefly on the dispensation of Pope Julius the second. 4. Then cometh in their dispensing with the Oaths of Princes, when they conceive themselves induced upon reason of State, to fly off from those Leagues and break off those Treaties, which have been solemnly made and sworn betwixt them and their Neighbours. By means whereof, such Princes think themselves not perjured, because dispensed with by the Pope; and commonly get something in advantage, or point of profit, for which they cannot be unthankful unto the Papacy. Examples of this kind are obvious in all times and stories. 5. Next comes the choosing of the younger Sons of great Princes into the rank of Cardinals; which obligeth the whole Stock or Family to the Papal Throne: that being a means whereby young Princes are preferred without charge to their Fathers, or any diminution of the Regal Patrimony. 6. And as by these courses he holds in with all Christian Princes generally, which are of the Religion of the Church of Rome; so hath he fastened more particularly on the King of Spain; whereof we shall speak further when we come to that Country.

2. Concerning the second: 1. So it is that their Estate hath the himself foundation of any, as being built on the Consciences of men possessed with an opinion of their Infallibility, and that undoubted power they pretend unto, not only in Heaven and upon Earth, but also over Hell and Purgatory. 2. Then comes the innumerable Preferences at their disposing, for men of all humours and affections; as having in their power the disposing of almost all the Benefices and Bishopricks in Italy, half of those in Spain, divers in Germany and France: which keepeth the Clergy, and all such as are that way studied, in a perpetual dependance upon that See; especially injoying by it many notable Privileges, which those of the Temporality are not capable of. 3. Consider next the multitude of Munk and Friers, whose very being depends wholly upon his Authority; every Monastery and Convent being a Garrison (as it were) to defend the Papacy, and train up a Militia of Spiritual Janizaries; men most affectionately devoted to his See and Service. Of these it is conceived that there are no fewer than a Million, one half whereof at least may be fit for action; and all maintained at other men's cost, themselves not disturbing one penny towards it. 4. Their Pardons and Indulgence are a great increase to their Revenue: some of them as unlimited as that of Pope Boniface the eighth, which was for 82000 years to all that could say such a Prayer of St. Augustine; and that for every day, Totes quater. 5. Their practising on Penitents, whom they persuade in the very agony of their Souls, that there is no salvation for them, but by giving part of their Estates unto the Church. 6. Nor have they found any small advantage to their Power and Patrimony by the invention of Spiritual Fraternities, which are appurtenances (as it were) to the orders of Friers, and may in number perhaps equal them. Into these the Lay-people of all sorts, men and women, married and single, desire to be enrolled; as hereby injoying the spiritual prerogatives of Indulgences, and a more speedy dispatch out of Purgatory.

3. Concerning the third. 1. They deter the people from reading the Scripture, alledging unto them the perils they may incur by mis-interpretation. 2. They breed an Antipathy between the Papists and the Protestants; inasmuch that a Papist may not say Amen, unto a Protestant's Deo Gratias. They debar them from all sound of the Religion, in prohibiting the Books of the Reformed Writers; and hiding their own Treasures, in which the Tenet of the Protestants is recited only to be confuted; inasmuch that in all Italy one shall seldom meet with Bellarmines works, or any of the like nature to be sold. 4. They have under pain of Excommunication prohibited the Italians from Travel and Traffic with Heresical Countries, or such places, where those contagious sounds and fights (as they term them) might make them return infected. 5. The Severity, or Tyranny rather of the Inquisition, (of which we shall speak more at large when we come to Spain) cruellest not only the beginnings, but the smallest suspicions of being this way addicted. And 6. the people thus restrained from Travel, are taught to believe that the Protestants are Blasphemers of God and all his Saints; that in England Churches are turned to Stables, the people grown barbarous and eat young Children; that Geneva is a professed Sanctuary of Roguery, and the like. We have yet two latter Examples of their dealing in this kind. First, the gross slander of the Apostasy (or, as they call it the Reconciliation) unto their Church, of the Right Reverend Father in God Dur King, not long since the Lord Bishop of London, a Prelate of too known a faith and zeal, to give occasion for such a calumny. The second, a Book by them published, and commonly sold in Italy and France, containing a relation of God's judgments, shewn on a sort of Protestant Heretics, by the fall of an house in St. Andrews Parish in London, in which they were affirmed to be a General Lecture, Octo. 26 A.D. 1623. By which dealing the simple people are made to believe that to be a judgment on us of the Protestant party, which the Authors of that Pamphlet well know to be a calumny in regard of us and a sad chance (I will not say a judgment) which befel their own, by the fall of a Chamber in Black-Fryers, where they were met to hear the Sermon of one Duray a Papist Priest, and that too on the fifth of November in their own account, being the 26 of October before mentioned.

The Popedom being thus cunningly and strongly founded, it cannot be if the Popes had been chosen young, or of the same Family, (so that the Successor had not often crossed the designs of his Predecessor) but that this new Monarchy had been greater and better established, than ever the old Roman Empire was in her greatest glory. And to say truth, I have wondered with my self, that some of the more active Popes especially such as were chosen young, and had the happiness to descend of Noble Families, did never seek the settling of this Estate in their own Posterity: especially considering the good Precedents which they had before them, both in sacred and in civil histories. The High Priesthood in the Church of Jewry went from Father to Son; and why should any man think it inconvenient to follow the example of Almighty God, in making the high Priesthood in the Church of Christ to be also hereditary, not elective? The Saracens who were as great Masters for Wit and Policy, as any those Ages did produce, pursued that Precedent; governed by Hereditary Caliphs many years together, until the Sultans their Visgerents (ambitiously affecting the Supreme Command) rooted out their races. And if the same obligation lie on the Masters of Religion or mixt Orders, for preserving the Rules and Statutes of their foundation; as is upon the Pope by the fundamental mental Ordinances of the Conclave, as it seems to do so why might not the Popes as well dispense with those Constitutions, and turn the Popedom into an Hereditary Estate; as Albert of Brandenburg, and Goardus of Denmark, Masters of the Dutch Knights in Prussia and Livonia, in their times have done? Nor can I see, but that such an alteration as I speak of, might be altogether as contenting to the Princes of Christendom, as the like change from an unfetled popular Government to an Hereditary Monarchy, was formerly unto the Provinces and People of the State of Rome. Of which it is affirmed by that noble Historian and Statesman Tacitus, Neque Provinciae solum verum statum amabant, suspecto Senatus populiq; imperio ab certamina Potentium, & avaritiam Magistratum; invalido Legum auxilio, quæ vi, ambitu, potestatem pecuniâ turbabantur. The Provinces (saith he) disliked not the alteration, to whom the Government of the Senate and People had been long distastful, by reason of the factions of the great Ones, and covetousness of their Officers: the Laws affording no security at all as being way'd up down by force, ambition and corruption. The Popedom settled in one house, would prove more constant in the preservation of all Leagues and Treaties, more useful to preserve the Interest of their Estate, more useful to the Confederates and Allies thereof upon all occasions, than it is at present; where the Popes so often change their sides, and shift their factions; the Successor many times esteeming it his greatest glory to rescind all the Acts of his Predecessor. And possible enough it is that Cesar Borgia the Son of Alexander VI. might have some such ends, when it was covenanted betwixt him and Lewis XII. of France, that being declared General of the Churches Forces, and giving his helping hand to that King in the Conquest of Milain; he should be aided by him in recovering all the Lands of the Church, which the Dukes of Urbine and Camerine, the Families of the Malatufi, Bailiols, and Bentivogli, with divers others of less note, did possess in Italy. Which having got into his hands, had not his Fathers sudden death, and his own dangerous sickness happening at the same time, cut off his design; it had been a matter of no great difficulty (if of any at all) to have made himself absolute Master of Rome, and of all the Lands of the Church, and to have left the same established in the Borgian Family. It is true that such an alteration would be very distastful to the ambition of the Cardinals, who by the deaths (natural or violent, it matters not) of the present Pope, aspire by all means both of love and money to that high dignity. But for my part, I cannot see how all the wit in the Conclave had been able to hinder it, if Alexander, on a purpose to supply some of that number whom he had invited to a supper, by a mere mistake of his Cup-bearer, had not poisoned himself, (evening the very heat of the business than almost effected) and so made frustrate the device.

But passing by this imagination of an Hereditary Popedom, let us behold it as Elective, and look upon the form and order observed in it. Now the Election of the Pope is made most commonly in this place, and manner. In the Popes Palace on the Hill Patican, are among other Buildings five Halls, two Chappels, and a Gallery seventy foot long. The Gallery is appointed for Conference, one Chappel for the Mals, and for the Election; the other with the Halls are for the Cardinals Lodgings. Every Hall hath two rows of Chambers, which are purposely for the time, made of green or Violet cloth. To each Cardinal is allowed four servants, to lie in his Chamber. They that are once within, are compelled, unless they be sick, still to continue there; and such as are once out, are no more permitted to go in, left by that means, the Cardinals should maintain intelligence with any foreign Princes. To this Conclave (for by this name the place of the Election is called) is but one door, to which be longed four Locks, and as many Keys. One Key is in the keeping of the Cardinals; one, of the City-Bishops; one, of the Roman Nobility, and one, of the Master of the Ceremonies. There is in this door a Wicket or Hatch, which is opened only at Dinners and Suppers, whereof the Master of the Ceremonies keepeth a key. At this hole the Cardinals servants receive their meat; every dish being first diligently searched, lest any Letters should be conveyed in them. As for the Lodgings they have neither holes nor windows to give light; so that there they make day of Wax-Candles. And lest the Pope should be made by force, both the City and Conclave are strongly guarded. When the Cardinals are going to Election, the Privileges of the Cardinals are recited, which every one sweareth to observe, in case he be chosen Pope. Then the Master of the Ceremonies ringing a Bell calleth them to Mals: which ended, there is brought to every Cardinal a Chair, and therein a Scroll of all the Cardinals names. Before the Altar is set a Table covered with a Purple Cloth, whereupon is set a Chalice, and a Silver Bell, and about it six Stools, on which sit two Cardinal Bishops, two Cardinal-Priests, and two Cardinal-Deacons. Every Cardinal writeth his voice in a piece of paper, goeth to the Altar, prayeth God to guide him in the Election, putteth his voice into the Chalice, and departeth to his Seat. The first Bishop taketh out all the Papers, and delivereth them to the first Deacon: who unfoldeth each of them, readeth (without mentioning the name of the Election) the name of the Elector: and every Cardinal in his particular Scroll, noteth how many voices every one hath. The account being made, the first Priest having the like Scroll, pronounceth which hath most voices: which done, the Priest ringeth a Silver Bell; at which call the Masters of the Ceremonies bringeth in a Pan of Coals, and burneth all the little Papers, wherein the names of the Electors were written. He that hath the most voices (so that his votes exceed the proportion of two parts of three) is acknowledged Pope, and adored by the rest of the Cardinals: but if they exceed not this number, they must begin all anew. If in the space of thirty days the Election be not fully ended, then must the Cardinals be kept from fire, light, and victuals, till they are fully agreed. The Wicket which we before mentioned, is called the Golden Gate, at which stand an infinite number of poor people; on whom the new Pope, having opened that Gate, bestoweth his Fatherly Benediction, and remitteth to them all their sins. Then striketh he continually on the same door with a Golden Mallet, which whilst he is doing, workmen without break it open. The Chips, Stones, Duff, and Dirt which falleth from the Gate, while it is opening, are gathered and preserved as choicest Reliques; and the Golden Mallet is usually given to that Cardinal, who is in most grace with the new Pope.

This is the ordinary way of the Popes Election, but subject to much faction and division among the Cardinals, and that in times of less deceit than the present are: Inasmuch as after the death of Pope Clement IV. the differences among them held for two years and more. Which gave occasion to one of them to say fit scorn, that they might never the roof of the house to make way for the Holy Ghost to come upon them. And there is now much more corruption and abuse in it, than ever formerly, as buying of Voices, setting up some for states and tearing Scrutinies, every Cardinal desiring to have a Pope of his own, or his Prince's Faction. So that we find it written of an old Stellian Cardinal, who after long absence came to the Election of a Pope, where he expected that incessant Prayers, as in times of old, should have procured some fit man to be pointed out to them for the Vicar of Christ: that, finding nothing but canvassing, promising rewards, and threatening for Voices in the choice; Ad huc modum (faith he) fuit Pontifices Romani & so returned unto his Country, and saw Rome no more.

The ordinary Temporal Revenue of the Papacy arising out of Land-rents, Imposts upon Commodities, and sale of Offices, Boterum maketh to be better than two Millions of Crowns; but the extraordinary, and Spiritual, to be far beyond. For it is said of Pius Quintus, who late Pope fix years only, that he got from the Spanish Clergy 14 Millions. And though he was a very great Builder, which spent him a great deal of money, yet he so managed it, that he laid up four Millions of Crowns in the Castle of St. Angelo. Sixtus V. took from the Jesuits at one clap 20000 Crowns of yearly rent, (because they were too rich for men professing poverty:) and having far but five years, had coffered up five Millions of Gold; four of which his Successor Gregory XIV. spent in less than a year. Out of France they received no less than a Million of Crowns yearly. Out of England, when it was the Pope's Patus inextinguibile, they and their Followers exacted no less than 60000 Marks per annum, which amounteth to 120000 pounds of our present Money; and was more than the Kings standing Revenue did attain unto: Yet was this in the time of King Henry III. before their avarice and rapine was at the height. And of late days no longer than since the Reign of King Henry VIII. besides their Peter-pence, which was an Annual Rent upon every Chimney in the Realm, first granted to the Pope by Offa King of the Mercians, Anno 730. or thereabouts, and afterwards confirmed by Edselwolf the second Monarch of England; besides their first Fruits, Tithes, and all other exactions: it was made evident that in some few years then last past, the Popes had received out of England no less than 160000 l. sterling, for the confirmation of Episcopal Elections only. By which we may conjecture what vast sums they drew hence on all other occasions. Let other Countries subject to the Pope's Authority be accordingly rated, and the total will amount to a sum incredible. Next add to this the sums of money they receive from particular persons, for Pardons, for Dispensations with unlawful Marriages, the profits arising from Pilgrimages, from the death and Funerals of great Persons, from the Indulgences granted to Abbies and Convents; in all which the Popes have a share; and it would puzzle a good Arithmetician to state his Integro. So truly was it said by Pope Sixtus IV. that a Pope could never want money, as long as he was able to hold a Pen in his hand. Yet notwithstanding, their Treasury for the most part is but low and empty. For 1. the State they kept, because of that great honour which they have above other Princes, which is to be maintained at a great expence for the more worship the more, as the saying is) is very chargeable unto them; their ordinary Guards standing them in no less than 30000 Crowns per annum. 2. The large allowances which they are fain to give unto their Legates, Nuncios, and other Ministers, keep their Coffers low: the entertainment of their ordinary Nuncios in the Courts of Christian Princes, amounting to no less than 1200 Crowns a month to each. And 3. their greedy desire to enrich their Sons or Kinsmen with the treasures of the Church (with which humour Pope Sixtus V. being of poor and obscure birth, was never touched) keeps them always bare. Add unto these the excessive gorgeousness of the Papal Veit-ments (in which vanity every one seeketh to excel the other) especially that of their Triple-Crown; which must needs put them to great charge and continual issues of their treasure. And for an evidence of this last, we find that Clement V. who first transferred his See to Avignon, to shew his gallantry to the French (probably unacquainted with the like fine sight) had his Crown thick set with Carbuncles and precious stones; one of which being lost by a fall from his Horse, was valued at 6000 Ducats.

As for the Forces of the Church, the Pope is able to impress as great a number of Land-fouldiers out of his Estate, as any Prince or Common-wealth within the limits of Italy. Paul III. sent to the aid of Charles V. in the Wars of Germany, 12000 Foot, and 500 Horse; and yet raised his own Family to the Dukedom of Parma, Pius V. sent to the aid of Charles IX. against the Hugonots, 4000 Foot, and 1000 Horse, which Forces they maintained at their own charges. And when Clement undertook the War of Ferrara, he raised out of his Estate 20000 Foot, and 2000 Horse in less than a month; which was more than most Princes in Europe could possibly have done. And for the valour of his Souldiers, and ability of his Commanders, they retain so much (as before was said) of their Ancestors virtues, that there are thought to be many Families in the Estate of the Church, able to furnish all the Common-wealths and Princes of Christendom, with sufficient Captains. What and how little he is able to do by Sea, may be best seen out of the aid which he sent to the Venetians, at the famous Battle of Lepanto, wherein he furnished them with no more than twelve Gallies; and those too hired of the Duke of Florence: The Venetians in the Adriatick, and the Florentines in the Tylian Seas, having all the Trade, and consequently all the power in the Seas of Italy. It is true, the Pope was bound by the capitulation, to bear the fifth part of the charge of the War, and with the help of the rest of the Princes of Italy (who were to march under his colours) to set forth 50000 Foot, and 4500 Horse: which is as great an Argument of his riches and power by Land, as the other is of his weakness at Sea.

Having a purpose in the prosecution of this Work, to mention such particular Orders of Knighthood, as most Countries have given beginning to; I will here set down the Orders of such Popish Spiritual Knights or Friars, which his holy Benediction hath erected, and shall allowance doth maintain. And for our better proceeding, we will begin with the original of a Monastical life; and then we will make special mention of some of the Romish Votaries of both Sexes. Know then, that under the seventh Persecution raised against the Church by Decius, one Paulus, born at Thebes in Egypt, retired to a private Cave under the foot of a Rock, Anno 260. Here he is said to have lived one hundred years, and to have been seen often man but one Anthony who was at his death. This Anthony was the first that followed the example of Paulus: a man of a noble House, and one that sold all his Estate, that he might the more privately enjoy himself. He lived an hundred and fifty years, and is called the Father of the Monks. To these beginnings doth Polidore Virgil refer the original of the Monks, and religious Orders; the name Monk coming from the Greek Μοναχ, because of their lonely and solitary lives. Those of the Religious Orders are called Fraters, and in English Friars, from the French word Frere, which signifieth a Brother; and that either because of their brotherly co-habitation; or else because they are Fraters in malo, Brethren in mischief and design.

The foundation of Monastical life thus laid by Paulus, and Anthony; the world increased so fast in Monks and and Eremites, that it seemed necessary to prescribe them Orders. Hereupon St. Basil gathered them together, living formerly dispersed; and is said to be the first that built them Monasteries. He is also said to have ordained the three Vows, of Poverty, Chastity, and Obedience; to have instructed them in good Arts, true Religion, and in the service of God, with Hymns, Prayers, and Watching. Of this Order there are not many in the Latin Church, but good plenty of them in the Greek. They are bound to abstain from all kind of Flesh, and are called Monks of St. Basil, by the name of that Father; amongst the Writings of which Father, the Rules for these Monasticks are set down at large.

II. The next who prescribed Orders was S. Augustine, born in the year 350, who being thirty years of age, is said to have obtained a Garden without the walls of Hippo, for private Contemplations. Twelve only he assumed into his Society, living with them in all integrity, and wearing a leathern Girdle to distinguish them from Monks. Branched afterwards into two several and distinct Orders, the one called by the name of Canon Regular, whose chief House here in England was St. John's near Colchester; the other called commonly Augustin Friars, or the Eremites of St. Augustin, as others call them: Of such esteem formerly in the University of Oxford, that all who took the Degree of a Master of Arts, were to submit themselves to their Oppositions in the publick Schools, and receive approbation from them; from whence the form, in Augustinianibus responderis vel opposeris, still retained among them. Their house in London stood in Broad-street, of which part of the Church still standeth, converted to a Church for the use of the Dutch; the rest demolished, and in the place thereof a stately Manſion erected by Sir William Pawlet the first Marquels of Winchester, and Lord Treasurer of England. These make the first Order of the Friers Mendicants. The first Monastery of them was erected at Paris by William Duke of Guien, Anno 1155; and Anno 1200. they began to flourish in Italy, by the favour of John Lord of Manua. The other branches of this Tree, are 1. the Monks of St. Hierom, 2. the Carmelites, 3. the Crouchet Friars, and 4. the Dominicans.

1. The Monks of St. Hierom challenge their original from the worthy Father of the Church, so called. They flourish especially in Spain, where there are thirty two Monasteries of them; their chief House being St. Bartholomews of Lupena; and have taken unto themselves the Rule of Saint Anthony. Their Robe is a white Calkoff, under a tawny Cloak.

2. The Carmelites, so called from Mount Carmel in Syria, pretend their original from Elias, and John the Baptist. They only allowed at first the Rule of S. Basil; and were confirmed in Europe by Honorius the Third. They are by some called Jacobines, from a Church dedicated to St. James, where they had their first Convent; and by us, the White Friars, from the colour of their Habit. Their House in London stood in Fleetstreet, converted since into a dwelling of the Earls of Kent, besides other Tenements. Their Rule was afterwards corrected according to the Rule of St. Augustin, by Dona Erbesa (or Teresa) a Spanish Woman; who made them also certain Constitutions, confirmed by Pius IV. Anno 1505.

3. The Friers of St. Crois, Croised, or Crouched Friers, were first ordained by Cyriacus Bishop of Jerusalem, who shewed to Helena the place where the Crois was hidden; hence this Order, which being almost decayed, was restored first by Urban II. and afterwards by Innocent III. under the Rule of St. Augustin. Their Robe is Watcher, and in their hands they carry the Figure of the Crois. Their House in London near the Tower, still retains its name.

4. The Dominicans, or Friers Preachers, were instituted by S. Dominick a Spaniard. He put himself in this Order with sixteen of his Disciples, under the Rule of St. Augustin, Anno 1206. and had his device confirmed by Honorius the Third. Their duty is to preach the Gospel in all places unto the farthest parts of the world; which both they did, and their Successors since have done, not at home only, but in India and America, with great zeal and diligence. They are called by us Black-Friers, from the Colour of their Habits, and are the third Order of Friers Mendicants. Their House in London stood near Longgate, and took up the whole Precinct which is still called Black-Friers; though the meaning being remaining of it but the very name.

III. The third that prescribed Orders was St. Benedict, born at Nursia, in the Duchy of Spoleto, Anno 472. He gathered the Monks of Italy together, gave them a Rule in Writing, caused them to be called Benedictines, or Monks of St. Benedict; and lived till he had seen twelve Monasteries filled with them. After his death this Order grew so populous, that there have been of it 29 Popes, 200 Cardinals, 1603 Archbishops, 4000 Bishops, besides some thousands of Canonized Saints, which they use to brag of. Their Habit is a loose Gown of black, reaching down to the ground with a Hood of the same; an under-garment of white woollen, and Boots on their legs. The other principal streams of this Fountain are, 1. the Monks of Clugnie, 2. of Carthusia, 3. of Cîteaux, 4. the Celestines.

1. The Monks of Clugnie, are so called from the Abbey of Clugnie in the County of Burgundy, the Abbot whereof, by name Odo, was the first that reformed the Benedictines, then fallen from their former integrity, Anno 913. He obtained of the Popes and Emperors, that all such Abbies as would come under the compass of his Reformatiſms (which were in all about two hundred) should be called the Congregation of Clugnie, and that they might call their Chapters, and dispatch their common business, when and as often as they pleased.

2. The Carthusians were first instituted by one Bruno, a German Doctor of Divinity, at the Town of Carthusia in Danphin, Anno 1080. His followers which were at the first but six, have at this day 93 Monasteries. They eat no flesh, live by couples, labour with their hands, watch, pray, and never meet together but on Sundays. Their House in London by corruption and long tract of time, got the name of the Charter-House, (the Monks themselves being corruptly called the Charter-house Monks) now better known by the name of Sutton's Hospital; from the Hospital of the Foundation of Richard Sutton, a wealthy Citizen of London.

3. The Monks of Cîteaux were first instituted by one Robert, Abbot of Malsme, Anno 1090, or thereabouts; who together with 21 of the most religious of his Convent, retired to Cîteaux in Burgundy Dutchy; hence the name. About five years after, one Bernard, a great Lord, became of their Order, who built and repaired for them 160 Abbies. Their Robe is a white Calkoff, girt with a girdle of wool, the rest black. They were by us called White Monks, and the common Benedictines, Black Monks; both from the colour of their Habits.

4. The Celestines owe their original to Peter de Moron a Samnite, born Anno 1250, who being afterwards for his sanctity chose Pope, was called Celestine V. He reformed the Benedictines, then much degenerated; and had his Order confirmed by Gregory XI. There are at this present 124 Monasteries of them.

IV. The fourth and last that prescribed new Orders to the Monasticks, was St. Francis of Assisi in the Duchy, of Spoleta. He fell from Merchandize, which was his first Profession, into the study of Religion, going barefoot, and behaving himself very penitently: whereupon, great flocks of Disciples following him, he gave them a rule in writing; by which they are bound to profess absolute beggary, and are not permitted to carry any money about them, or more victuals than will for this present serve themselves and their Brethren. This they observe punctually in their own persons, but give themselves leave to have a Boy with them, to do both without scruple. St. Francis desired they should be called Minors, to shew their humility; but they are generally called Franciscans, by the name of their Founder. By the French, called Cordeliers, because of the knotty Cord which they wear about their necks instead of a Girdle; by which they wear about their upper Garment, the Gray-Friers, from the colour of their upper Garment. Their House in London stood near Newgate, of which the Church, the Cloysters, and some other the publick Offices, do still stand entire: the whole converted to an Hospital for poor Children by King Edward VI. in the latter end of his Reign, now best known by the name of Christ-Church. Their Rule and Order was confirmed by Innocent III. Anno 1212, and is the fourth and last of the Friers Mendicants, or begging Friers. The other principal Children of this Father, are 1. the Minims; and 2. the Capuchins.

1. The Friers Minims, were first founded by Franciscus de Pola, a Neapolitan, Anno 1450, according to a correct copy of the Rule of St. Francis of Assisi. His followers keep always a true Lenten Fast, unless in case of sickness. Their Robe is a dark tawny, an Hood of the same hanging to their Girdles.

2. The Capuchins, (so called from their Cow or Capuchin) were ordained by one Matthew Basi of Ancona Frier Lewis his Companion obtained for them of the Pope, the Habit and Rule of St. Francis, Anno 1526. In the space of 42 years they increased to 2240 Affiliates, had 222 Monasteries, and were divided into 15 Provinces. They are bound by their Rule to spend their time in prayer, and are generally thought to be the devoutest of all the Orders Monastical.

I shall now speak of the Jesuites, but that I cannot bring them under any Rule, as being a people neither simply Lay nor Friars, nor merely secular nor regular, but all together. They were founded by Ignatius Loyola, born in Navarre, was lamed in one of his Legs: after which the main basking himself to the study of Religion, he framed this Order, consisting at the first of Ten only. Paul III. did confirm it, Anno 1540, confining the number within sixty, which he after enlarged ad infinitum. They are now the greatest Politicians, foundation Scholars, and chiefest upholders of the Romish See: so that the only way to establish the Romish Religion in any Land, is to plant a College of Jesuites in it. To the three Vows of Poverty, Obedience, and Chastity, common to all the other Orders, Ignatius at the Institution of this, added the Vow of Mission: whereby his Followers are bound to obey their General, or the Pope, without demanding any reason, in all dangerous and hazardous attempts whatsoever, for the propagation of the Romish Religion, or the massacring of any Prince whose life is a hindrance to their proceedings. It is reported, that a Jesuit being in the midst of his Mass, which they call the Sacrifice of the Altar, was sent for by Ignatius: to whom, leaving off his Mass, he went immediately, Ignatius having no business wherein to employ him, told him, he only sent for him to try his obedience; and withal profanely added, that Obedience is better than Sacrifice: and this is called the blind obedience of the Jesuites. To leave them then as they are, the greatest disturbers of the quiet of Europe; I have heard a worthy Gentleman, now with God, say many times, that till the Jesuites were taken from the Church of Rome, and the pious Puritan (or Presbyterian) Preachers out of the Churches of Great Britain, he thought there would never be any peace in Christendom; with what a true prefiguring spirit, the event hath followed.

Contrivals with the Jesuites in power and learning, and almost coetaneous in point of time, are the Oratorians, founded by Philip Neri a Florentine, Anno 1564. Who marking the great way which the Jesuites began to have, and the danger which the Church might run, if that Order were not equally balanced by some other of as much ability, first established this, consisting altogether of Priests; that by their diligence in preaching of the lives of the Saints, and other heads of practical and moral duties, they might divert the torrent of the peoples affection from the brood of Ignatius. The renowned Cardinal Cesar Baronius, Francis Bordini, afterwards Bishop of Avignon in France, and one Alexander Fidelis, were the three first whom he admitted to his Order: initiated in St. Hierom's Church at Rome by Pope Pius IV. with great zeal and cheerfulness; to whom, as to some of his Predecessors, the power and practices of the Jesuites were become suspicious. They increased speedily (being countenanced on so good grounds) to great numbers, and a proportionable Revenue, as much esteemed of for their knowledge in Ecclesiastical History, and Practical Divinity, as the others for Philology, Tongues, and the study of Controversies; and more accepted of in most places, because not usually intermeddling in affairs of State. So evenly looked on by the Popes, that the Jesuites could not obtain the Canonization of their Ignatius, till the Oratorians were grown rich enough to celebrate that of their Nerius also: which happened in the short Popedom of Gregory XV. Anno 1622.

To conclude this discourse of Monks and Friers, I will say somewhat of the severest kind of Reclus, which is the Anacoret, or Anchoret, so called from anachore, because they use to live retired from company. They are kept in a close place, where they must dig their Graves with their nails; badly clad, and worse dieted; not to be pitied for all that, because their restraint of liberty is voluntary; yet to be sorrowed for in this, that after such an earthly Purgatory, they shall find instead of an Engel, bono servo, a Quis quesivit hoc de manibus vestris?

But concerning these Orders of Monks and Friers, certain it is, that at their first institution they were a People much revered for their holy life: as men that for Christs sake had abandoned all their Poms and Vanities of the World. And questionless they were then a people altogether mortified, and who by their very aspects would gain upon the affection of the hardest heart; inasmuch that not only men, but great personages also did desire to be buried in a Frier's weeds; as Francis the Second Marquis of Montmaur, Alexander Pius another Prince of Italy, Isabel the renowned Queen of Castile and Aragon, Wife of Ferdinand the Catholic; and in late times the great Scholar Christopher Longinus. But as Florus faith of the Civil Wars between Cesar and Pompey, Causa bujus Belli, eadem que omnium, nimia felicitas, we may say also of these Friers: The greatness of their wealth, which many on a superstitious devotion had bequeathed unto them, brought them first to a neglect of their former devout and religious carriage; next to a wretchedness of their credits, and consequently

into contempt: so that there was not a people under Heaven that was more infamous in themselves, or more scornfully abused by others. Hence the vulgar sayings of the People, that Friers wear Crozier on their breasts; because they have none in their hearts; and that, when a Frier receives the Razor, the Devil entereth into him; and the like. Nay, Sir Thomas Moor, who lost his head in the Pope's quarrel, sticks not in his Utopia, to call them Errone Maximo; and would have them comprehended within the Statutes of Vagabonds and lousy Beggars. Now to shew both the humours of Respect and Contempt, used frequently to these Monks and Friers, as men stood affected; there goeth a Tale, how the Lady Moor, Sir Thomas's wife, hating by chance a Frier's Girdle, shewed it to her Husband with great joy, saying, Behold Sir Thomas, a step towards Heaven: whereunto with a scornful laugh he returned this answer, that he feared that step would not bring her a step higher. And as for their reticence and solitary course of life, so it is that many Kings, especially of the Saxons in the time of their Hepherites, have abandoned their Scepters to enjoy it: And Berkeley in his Argenis, under the person of Anacoretus, hath defended it in such Princes, as have cloistered themselves to enjoy the solitude of a Convent. Which notwithstanding, Philosophers have defined a man to be felix et liber, a Creature principally made for civil conversation; the Poets say, Nascitur indignus per quem non nascitur alter, that he dieth indebted to the World, who leaveth no posterity behind him: and the Jews, which live in poverty numbers even in Rome it self, abhor this unlovely kind of living, and prefer a civil sociableness much before it: as to Nature more agreeable, to Man more profitable and consequently to God more acceptable. And having spoken thus much of the Monks and Friers, defend we now unto this Nun.

And indeed I should much wrong the Friers, if I should deprive them of the company of their dearer Poulters, and therefore take somewhat of them also. Called anciently Moniales from the Greek word Μονή, from their living alone; whence we also had the names of Monks and Monasteries: in the middle times called Nuns, from Nona an Egyptian word, (for Egypt in old times was not meanly furnished with such Eremites) which also signifieth a solitary and lonely life. A word in some of the barbarous Latines very much in use. Scho-lastica the Sister of St. Benedict, was the first who collected them into Companies, and prescribed them Rules. They are shaved as Monks are, and vow as they do perpetual Poverty and Virginity. Which last how well they keep, let Chonargie tell us: who telleth us, that Puellam velare idem est, hanc publicam ad cortandum exponere: to veil a Nun, and prostitute her for a common Harlot, were terms equivalent. And one Robinson, who lived for a time in the English Nunnery at Lisbon, hath told us, that he found a hole in the Garden-wall covered over with Morter, in which were hidden the bones of many newborn children, which their unnatural Mothers had murdered and thrown in there. But of these I will instance only in two Orders, viz. that of St. Clare, as being the strictest; and that of St. Briget which enjoyeth most liberty.

1. St. Clare was a Knights Daughter of Assisi, where St. Francis was born, with whom she was contemporary, and with whose austere life she was so affected, that she forsok her Fathers house, and followed him. Having learned her Little of that Frier-monger, she devised an Order of Religious Women, and had it confirmed by Pope Honorius III. Anno 1255. Her followers vow Poverty and Virginity, as before was said, go barefoot, feed meanly, and are more strained in their course of life, than those of any other Order. By their Foundress, out of a desire to conform the better to the Rule and Order of St. Francis, they were called Minors, or Minor, and gave name to the place near the Tower-hill in London, where they had their House, called from them the Minors.

2. St. Briget was a Queen of Swedenland, and coming to Rome on devotion, obtained of Pope Urban III. Anno 1170, or thereabouts, that Friers and Nuns might in some places live together. For being a Woman, and a Widow, she knew best (as it seemeth) what was good for both Sexes; and devised such a Rule, as contented both. But little need we this co-habitation or living together under the shelter of the same Roof. For they had formerly been joyed in carnal affections, though parted by walls; neither were the Visitation of the Friers so fruitless; but that the Nuns did fructify in the same. These Friers and Nuns, though they live under the same Roof, are prohibited from coming to one another but on special occasions: the Foundress so ordering it, that the Nuns should lie in the upper Rooms, and the Friers in the lower. The Confessor also is denied access into their Chambers, but sheweth them through an Iron-Grate, by which his Lodging is parted from the Lady Abbesse's. And herein lieth the Mystery of Iniquity. For Robinson, whom before I named, tells us, that at the time of his service in the English Nunnery at Lisbon, he was shewed a way by which this uncharitable Grate, which seemed to keep the Friers, from the company of their female Friends, might be, and was on such occasions usually removed, and the access made free and open to each others Beds. Which if it be truly said of these, may be suspected also in all the rest of this Order, and in most also of the others.

And now I return unto my Friers, which besides the maintenance which by their Founders is allotted for their present subsistence, are kept in a continual hope and possibility of attaining to the highest honours which that Church can give, if they continue constant in their due obedience. For there is not one of them which hopeth not to be the Prior of his Convent; 2. Provincial of his Order, in that Country where he liveth; 3. and then the General of this Order. Next none more likely than the Generals to be chosen Cardinals, and out of the Cardinals one of necessity must be chosen (and why not he, as well as any of the Pack?) to be Pope of Rome. So firm and sweet a Companion of man is Hope, that being the last thing that leaves him, it makes all toys sup-portable, all difficulties conquerable.

The Signeury of VENICE.

North of the Lands of the Church from Romandiola to the Alps, lie the Italian Provinces of the State of VENICE, bounded upon the South with the Territory of Ferrara, and the rest of Romandiola; on the West, with the Dukedom of Milain; on the North, with the main body of the Alps; and on the East, with the Adriatic and the River Asia, by which last parted from Liburnia, a Sclavonian Province. Besides which, it commands a great part of Dalmatia, together with the Islands of Candy, Corfu, Cephalonia, Ibica, Zant, Ciberra, and certain others of less note. The length of their Dominions by Sea and Land extending above a thousand Miles but the breadth not answerable.

The

4. The fourth member of this Elate with respect to Italy, are some ISLANDS in the Adriatick, which being principally under the command of this Commonwealth, is commonly called the Gulff Venice: a Gulf extending in length 700 miles in breadth 140 miles, in some places less: is called of Adria once a famous Haven Town (as before was said) at the mouth of Erebus; or Po: Concerning which we are to know, that though this Gulff or Bay of the Adriatick extended no farther than the Eastern parts of Dalmatia, yet the Sea begetteth to take the name of the Ionian; yet Mare Adriaticum, or the Adriatick Sea was of greater length. Exceeded by the Ancients over the Ionian, and thence South-westward till it meeteth with the Tyrrhen Seas; and Southward till it come to the coast of Africk, inasmuch as Mare Libyicum, or the Sea of Africk, is by Ortelius made a part of the Adriatick. For speaking of the Province of Tripolis (a Province of Africk) properly and especially is called, he boundeth it on the North with the Adriatick, as he doth the Ille of Cret, on the South, with the Libyan Sea, and Adriaticum totum, which they also call the Adriatick, as his own words are; The like might also be made evident out of other Authors, both Greek and Latin; which I note here because Peau's being scoffed up and down in the Sea of Adria is said, Ar. 27. 27. and being after cast on shore in the Ille of Malthe; occasioned some to think this Melte or called Malta to be that Ille of Dalmatia, which is now called Milid; being seated in the Bay or Gulff of Adria, whereas the Text speaks plainly of that Ille of Malta, which lieth in the furthest parts of the Adriatick Sea, on the Coasts of Africk. But to return to this Gulf, it was accounted heretofore to be very tempestuous and unsafe; as appears by improbo incursum Adria in Horace, the Minas Adria, in Catullus; and in the Ventus tumens Adria, in Seneca's Thyestes. But when the Emperess Helena had found the Cross on which CHRIST suffered, the caulked one of the three Nails with which his body was fastned to it, to be thrown of purpose into the Sea; since which time, as Platina hath told us in the life of Pope Sylvester (a very saint and his Author) it hath been into a Bridle for her Son Constantine's Horse, and a Crest for his Helmet of the third. But not to trouble too much to the truth of this miracle, certain it is that the Venians are Lords of it, by reason of their Naval Power; and that it is every year espoused to the Duke of Venice, by the solemn calling of a wedding Ring; and every year baptized on Epiphany day, by the Bishop of Zanti. When this last Ceremony took beginning, I am yet to seek. But for the firch, which is performed with a great deal of state, every Holy Thursday, the Duke, and all the Magnificos, being rowed in the Bucentaur (which is a rich and stately Gallie made for such solemnities, and capable of 200 persons, whence it had the name it took beginning from Pope Alexander the third. Who being hardly put to it by the Emperor Frederick Barbaross, had unto Venice in the habit of a Cook; Sebastian Cyani being then Duke: in prosecution of whole quarrell, the Venians encountered Otho the Emperors Son, vanquished him, and restored the Pope. The Duke returning back in Triumph with his Royal Prisoners, was thus saluted by the Pope. Cygni, take here this Ring of Gold, and by giving it unto the Sea oblige it unto thee: a Ceremony which on this day (the Ascension day) shall be yearly observed both by thee and thy Successors; that so posterity may know that you have purchased the dominion thereof by your valour, and made it subject to you, as a Wife to her husband.

The principal Islands of this Sea, lie on the other side thereof, on the coast of Dalmatia. Some few there are upon this side, but those (as well as these under the command of this Sigency) neither great nor famous. Of these the chief are, 1. MALAMOCO, in Latin Mallum, situate at the South-west end of the Bank or Causey, called Il Lido; now only considerable for the Haven, which is large and deep, made by the influx of Meduæ before mentioned; in which the greater ships do ride, till they hire Pilots from Rovigno to cross the Bars. It was ennobled heretofore with the Duke's Palace, and an Episcopal See: the See of Padua being translated hither, at the fact of that City by the Lombards. But the Duke's Palace being removed to Rialto, and the Episcopal See to the Island of Chioggia; it is now inhabited for the most part by none but Scavengers. 2. TORCELLAN, in which there is a little City of the same name, honoured with a Bishops See, (the Bishop of Altina with much people with him, for fear of the said Lombards retiring hither) but by reason of the ill air not very well peopled. 3. MURIANUM, or MURIANO, three miles compass, and but one from Venice, of a found air, and very well inhabited, the people whereof make the best Venice Glasses, so much used in all parts. 4. CHIOGGIA, called in Latin Fossa Claudia, a little West of Malamocco, at the very entrance into the Marishes from the Adriatic; distant from Venice 25 miles; to which it served instead of a Bulwark. There is a Town in of the same name, to which the Bishops See was removed from Malamocco, Anno 1103, and near to which are many Salt-pits, which yield great gain unto the people, and as much unto the Common-wealth. Near to this Island the Genoese fo discomfited the Venetians in a Fight at Sea, that thereupon, (the taking of the Island following shortly after) they were offered a blank Charter to write what they would. But the Genoese being grown too insolent on their good success, made the City desperate; as who putting all to hazard, fell again upon them, beat them, pursued them home, and there utterly crushed them; as we shall tell you more at large when we come to Genoa. 5. POVEGLIA, five miles from the City, first peopled by some who had raised a commotion in the City, on the death of Pietro Trademio the thirteenth Duke. After which much increased both in wealth and buildings, till destroyed by the Genoese. It is called Papias by the Latins. 6. JUDECHA, (in Latin called Judea) so named from the Jews who did there inhabit: not above half a mile from the City, and not very large; but liberally furnished with most pleasant Gardens. These and the rest reckoned as members of Trevigiana or dependants on it.

Between these Islands and the main land of Friuli, lieth a shoal of little Isles, in and amongst which lieth the renowned City of Venice, the head City of this Common-wealth, and the glory of Italy. These Isles 72 in number, but joined together by many Bridges, of which here are said to be 4000 at least, besides 10000 Boats for passage from one life to the other. The compass of the whole aggregate body said to be eight miles, the buildings fair, and generally adorned with Glass Windows; an Ornament not common in Italy; where the windows for the most part are made with Paper to let in the light: and that Paper oiled all over to keep out the wet. The number of the Inhabitants climaxed at 300000. By the situation one would think, that it was denominated from Venicia, which in the old Latina signifieth the fethering or fethering of the Sea. JENNIA mariæ exaltationis q. que ad littus venet, faith the old Clasary upon Isolare out of Marcus Varro. But the truth is, that it was so called from the Fenice, the old Inhabitants of the neighbouring Province of Friuli who to avoid the fury of the barbarous Huns then threatening Italy, abandoned the main Land and built this City in the bays and Marishes of the Sea adjoining. And that it might afford them the greater safety, they not only built it in the most inward part of the Adriatic Sea, commonly called the Gulf of Venice; but in the midst of many Lakes of Salt-water, extending ninety miles in compass, and having on the East the said Adriatic Sea for the length of 550 miles; betwixt which and the said Lakes, there is a Bank or Causey which they call Il Lido, made as it were by nature to defend the Islands which lie in this Lake, from the violent fury of the Sea. A Causey of 35 miles in length, bending like a Bow, and opening in seven places only, which serve as well to keep the Lakes always full of water for the passages of Vessels to and from the City. Known by the names of the Ports of 1. Brondolo, 2. Chioggia, 3. Malamocco, 4. The three Castles, or the Castles of San S. Eustachio, 6. Lido Maggiore, or the great there is and 7. The Troports: of which that of Brondolo lieth most to the South west, and that of Troports to the Northwest of the said great Causey. And through every one of these there is a safe passage for Ships and Barrels of smaller burden: the bigger being compelled to lie at Anchor, on the South side of the City, near to the Ports of Malamocco, and the Castles of Lido, which are well fortified, and there men remain till they are brought in by skillful Pilots, who know the passages, which by reason of the shifting of the Sands, change very often. On the West and North sides, it is compassed with very deep Marishes, about five miles distant from the Land; and on the South with many Islands in which are several Churches and Monasteries, like to many Forts, which lie between it and those parts of Italy, which are not under the obedience of the Common-wealth. So that it is impossible to be taken, but by an Army which can stretch 150 miles in compass. It is built, as before is said, on 72 Islands, 60 of which lie close together round about the Rialto, the other at a greater distance. Of these the principal, 1. Haraclea near the firm land of Trevigiana, peopled at first by such as followed Magnus Bishop of Utrecht, who to avoid the fury of the Lombards came and planted here; calling the Island and the Town which they founded in it by the name of Haraclea, in honour of Haraclea the Eastern Emperor in whose time it happened. Made by this means a Bishops See, and being grown populous withal, it was honoured with the first Seat of the Dukes of Venice; removed by Theodatus the seventh Duke to Malamocco, and from thence finally to Rialto. Destroyed by Pepi King of Italy, Son of Charler the Great, it was re-edified in the time of Angelo Partituro the tenth Duke, and called Cita Nova; more memorable at this time for the antiquity of the Bishops See, than the number of Citizens. 2. Jesulan, neighbouring to Haraclea, first planted by some Country people, who flying the fury of the Lombards, brought with them a great drove of Mares and of Horses, whence it had the name of Equilene, or Equilina. Made afterwards a Bishops See also, by the name of Jesulanus or Equilensis. 3. Grada, on the same part of the City also, but more towards the North, inhabited as first by such of the City of Aquileia as betook themselves thither thither to avoid the tyranny of the Hunnes: but made more eminent than before, by Paul the Patriarch of that City, who flying the fury of the Lombards, transported to this Island the Reliques and Treasures of his Church; and settled where the Church of S. Euphemia had been built before. And though Helle who succeeded Paul, obtained of Pope Pelagius the 11. An. 580, that the Bishops of Grada should from thenceforth have the title of Patriarchs, and be esteemed the Metropolitans of the City and Country of Venice: yet the Aquileian would not be robbed of his ancient privileges, and therefore stirred up many suits and disputes about it. The business compromised at last to this effect, that the Patriarch of Aquileia should enjoy his ancient jurisdiction over all the Churches in the Continent which belonged unto him; and that he of Grada, with the title and stile of Patriarch, should have like jurisdiction over the Churches in the Islands; that is to say, the Bishopsricks of Haraclea (or Cita Nova) Equilina, Torcellan, Chioggia, Caprinæ, and Castellina Olinda. His habitation near the Church of S. Sylvester, in the third Region of the City, called de Canaregio. 4. Caprinæ, towards the openings of the Adriatic, a Bishops See before the time of Charler the Great, but not observable: none of these four, nor of the residue of the twelve, which be remote from the Rialto, being much inhabited at the present. Castello Olindo, or Orivaller as some call it; situate at the East end of the City, not far from the Causey called Il Lido, of old a City of it self (as the former were) now joined by a Bridge to the rest of Venice, of most note for the Cathedral Church of S. Peter, and the Palace of the Venetian Patriarch: this City having been made a Bishops See by Pope Adrian the first Anno 774, with jurisdiction over the Isles of Olivella, Rialto, Lagaria, and Dorsedura. His title first Castellonenfis, but afterwards, the Bishop of Venice, because the best part of the City did belong unto him, invested by the Duke, and confirmed by the Patriarch of Grada, whose suffragans they were till the year 1450. At what time Pope Engenius the 4. (a Native of the City of Venice) advanced the Bishops hereof to the dignity and name of Patriarch; aligning the Churches of Dalmatia (of which they were intitled Primates) for their jurisdiction. By means whereof, and by persuading him of Aquileia to fix his dwelling here also, as before is said, there are no fewer than three Patriarchs which have their constant habitation in the City of Venice. 6. Rialto, which is of most esteem and reputation, so called quasi Rivo alto, because the Marishes are there deeper than in other places; or quasi Ripa alta, because it lay higher above the waters than the other Islands. For which reason that Island getting reputation above the rest, most of the Gentlemen settled their dwellings in the same; and drew thither in the end, the Dukes Palace also, inasmuch that in some ancient Writings, the whole City hath been called Rialto; many old Records being dated in such and such a year of the Rialto. But as they did increase in numbers, so were they fain to spread themselves from one life to another; till in the end they built on all the Islands which lay near together, and might conveniently be joined by Boats or Bridges. By this Rialto runs the passage called the Grand Canale, being in length about 1300 paces and some forty in breadth; adorned on both sides with stately and magnificent Palaces; and covered with incredible numbers of Boats called Gondols, very neatly built, and veiled over with Cloths; so that the passengers may go unseen and unknown, without the molestation of Sun, Wind or Rain. For public Buildings it hath in it 70 Parish Churches, to each of which belongeth a Market-place and a Well; 31 Cloysters of Monks, 28 of Nuns, besides Chappels and Almshouses.

The principal Church of this City is that of S. Mark, the Patron of their Common-wealth, whose body they report to have been brought hither from Alexandria in Egypt, and intombed herein: affirmed by some to be the richest and goodliest Church in all the World. The building of Mosai work, of which they boast themselves to have been the Authors. A kind of work by the Grecians called Mosaicum, and by the Latine Writers Mosaica, Mosica, and Mosaicia, wrought out of Stones or Metals of divers colours, into the shape of Flowers, Knots, Birds, Beasts, and other Fancies of the Workman; yet done with such exactness of skill and judgment, that it seemeth to be all one stone, the work rather of Nature than Art. A Church of admirable work both within and without, compacted of most rare pieces of Marble, Porphyrie, and a rich stone which the Lapidaries called Opbitis, because it is speckled like a Snake: adorned on the outside with 148 Pillars of Marble, and eight of Porphyrie near the door; besides 600 Marble Pillars of a lesser size, which carry up an open Gallery round about the Church; from whence the Magistrates and others of the principal Citizens, behold such shows as are presented in the Market-place, adjoining to it. The Church in length not above 200 foot of Venice measure, nor above 50 in breadth: the roof whereof being of an Orbicular form, lieth open at the very top, where the light comes in, there being no Windows in all the Church; as commonly the Churches in Italy are exceeding dark, either to strike in the spectators a religious reverence, or to make their Candles shew the better. And for the inside of the Church, the riches of it are so great, Images so glorious, the furniture of the Altars so above comparison, that all the treasures of the State may seem to be amassed in the decking of it. And yet as goodly and as glorious as the Fabrick is, it is still unfinished; and, as some think, is kept unfinished on purpose partly to draw on other Benefactors to advance the work, the benefit of whose liberality may be employed unto the use of the publick Treasury; and partly, left Revenues which are given already should be rendered by the Heirs of the deceased, if the work were ended. So infinitely doth the furniture of the Church exceed the sumptuousness and beauty of the Church it self.

Of other of the publick buildings, the Council-house the Ducal Palace, Monasteries, Churches, and the like, though stately and magnificent Structures, I forbear to speak. Nor shall I here say any thing of their private houses, so large and beautified, that here are said to be no fewer than 200 (most of them on the Grand Canale) able to entertain and lodge the best King in Christendom. All I shall add, and so leave this City, will be a word or two of their Arsenal, and publick Magazine. In the first of which they have in readiness 200 Gallies, with rooms for Cables, Masts, Sails, Victuals, and Ammunition of all sorts; able thereby to fit out a Navy to Sea, on the shortest warning. And in the other it is said, that they have Arms sufficient for 100000 Soldiers of all sorts; amongst which are affirmed to be a thousand Coats of Plate, garnished with Gold and covered with Velvet; fit for the use and wearing of the greatest Princes. But of their power and forcing both by Sea and Land, we shall speak more shortly. In the mean time I take my leave of this gallant City in this following Epigram of Samaritanus, one of our late Italian Poets, viz.

Viderat Adriacis Venetam Neptunus in undis
Stare urbem, et totopondere iura mari:

*Nunc mihi Terpeias quantum vis Joviter, arces Obijce, & illa tui mania Martis, ait.
Si Pelago Tibirin præfere, Urbem apicis utramque
Illam homines dicere, hanc possidisse deos.*

In English thus :

*Neptune saw Venice in the Adrian Land,
And all the Sea brought under her command ;
Now Jove, said he, thy Roman Towers object,
And those proud Walls which Mars did once protect,
Before the Sea if Tiber thou prefer,
Behold both Cities, and thou wilt aver,
That men build Rome ; the Gods plac'd Venice there.*

Proceed we now unto their story : and if we look upon them in their first Original, we shall find them to have been a people of Paphlagonia (a Province of Asia the lesser) called the Hæneti, who aiding Priamus King of Troy in his ten years Wars against the Greeks, where they lost their King, named Philemenes (or Philemon as some call him) chose rather to seek out new dwellings, than return with shame unto their old. Upon this resolution they join themselves to Antenor, who with some remnant of the Trojans had the same design ; and failing as the Wind and Sea conducted them, arrived at last in those parts of Italy, now called Friuli. So witnesseth the Poet, saying,

*Antenor potuit, mediis clapsus Achivis,
Illyricos penetrare Sinus, aque intima tutus
Regna Liburnorum, & fontes superare Timavi.*

Antenor through the Greeks could force his way,
And safely piercing the Illyrian Bay,
Cross the Liburnian Realms, and conquer all,
From fierce Timavus Fountain, to his fall.

Here landing they subdued the Enganei (who before inhabited this Tract) and possessed their Dwellings : the name of Hæneti being changed into that of Veneti. But this perhaps not done till subdued by the Galls, and made part of Gallia Cisalpina : agreeably to the name of the Veneti, an old Gallick Nation, opposite to the Isle of Britain. When those Galls were vanquished by the Romans, the name and Nation of these Veneti, was so considerable, that their Territory had the name of Venetia ; and together with Hilvania, made one Province of the Roman Empire. And here they lived in peace and safety under the protection of the Empire, till the terrible Noise of the great Preparation of the Huns ; for the Conquest of Italy occasioned many of the principal Men, with their several Retinues, to betake themselves to the Islands, and inaccessible Marishes of the Adriatick ; where in the place now called Rialto, they laid the foundation of this City, March 25, Anno 421. Exceedingly increased by the destruction of Aquileia, and the neighbouring Cities by Attila, and the said Barbarians, Anno 456. at what time it began to be called Venetia, by the name of their Nation. Not much encreased in Power and Greatness, at the fall of the Lombardian Kingdom : though for considerable at that time, that in the Division of Italy made by Charley the Great, betwixt himself, the Popes and the Eastern Emperors ; the Venetians were left at liberty, as a Free-Estate : and they deserved to be left in a free condition, considering how notably they had freed themselves from Pepin, the Son of Charley, who invaded them with a puissant Army, and was well beaten for his labour, though at first successful. After which making use of their situation, they grew not only rich in trade, but strong in shipping ; and thereby did good service to the Western Princes, in their Wars against the Turks in the Holy Land. And they served themselves well by it too : getting in one Expedition only (that namely, in which the Empire of Constantinople was made a Prey unto the Latines, Anno 1200.) all the Islands which they have at the present, in the Ægean and Ionian Seas ; many in those Seas which they have lost ; and not a few good Towns in Peloponnesus, since conquered from them by the Turks. Contending with the Genoese for the Sovereignty of the Mediterranean, they received to great a Blow at the Naval Battle near Chinggin (spoken of before) that they had utterly lost all, if the Enemy could have used his Fortune with Moderation. But being recovered of the Blow, after many various successes and Events of War, Anno 1381, they got the better of them, and made them quiet : by means whereof being Lords Paramount at Sea, they next cast their Eyes on the main Land of Italy, which now they were at more leisure to look after, than they had been formerly. The Hilfrians had before infected them with Piracy, and were punished for it, in the time of Duke Pietro Candiano, by the loss of many of their Towns : but in the year 1390, the whole Country is brought under the command of this Common-wealth. Padua with a great part of Trevigiana then appendant on it, they extorted from the noble Family of the Carrari Anno 1400. The City of Vicentia they possessed themselves of in the same year also ; and not long after fully perfected their Conquest of Hilvania, with the Revolts whereof they had before been often troubled.

But that whereby they most improved their Estate, was by a constant watching of their Opportunities, taking advantage of the Factions and Frictions amongst their neighbours, and working their own greatness out of others Ruines. By means whereof they came possessed of many places, of right belonging to the Empire, and the Church of Rome ; as also of some Towns, pertaining to the Dutchy of Millain ; and four of the best Havens in the Adriatick, which properly belonged to the Realm of Naples : not giving aid to any of their distressed Neighbours, without the Mortgage or direct Sale of some Place or other. Which lordly kind of Merchandizing, drew all the Princes of those parts, (Confederated together in a League at Cambray Anno 1508.) to make War upon them ; every one to recover by strong hand, what the Venetian had extorted from them in their necessity. And the Confederates thrived so well, that Maximilian the Emperor recovered to the Empire, the Towns and Territories of Padua, Vicentia, Vercina, Triest, Friuli, and whatsoever else he laid claim unto ; the Pops in Right of the Church, regained Ravenna, Cervia, Rimini (or Avimimum) and Faventia ; Lewis the 12. of France in Right of the Dutchy of Millain, Bergamum, Crema, Cremona, Brescia : the King of Spain in right of the Realm of Naples, Manfredonia, Trona, Barletta, and Monopoli, all upon the Adriatick ; the Duke of Ferrara gained Ravenna, and the Duke of Mantua the Town of Assisio. So that the Venetians being (like the Jay) stripped of all their Feathers, were fain to quit the firm land, and betake themselves unto the Isles and Marishes of their City ; having not one Foot, of all their whole Dominion left them in Italy, but but their Seas and Islands. And yet in very little time partly by working on the Pope to whom they quitted all their interests in the Towns aforesaid ; and partly by dividing the rest of the Confederates from one another ; they recovered all that they had lost in a little time, except the Towns of Naples only, for which they were not willing to contend with the Crown of Spain.

The Government is Aristocratical, managed only by the principal men of all the City, both for birth and breeding ; the common people having no Authority in affairs of State. The chief Officers at the first were many, whom they called Tribunes : but experience being had of that confusion, which a multitude of Governours carrieth for the most part with it, in the year 709, they made choice of one chief Officer, whom they called their Duke. Under these Dukes they have gotten that great Dominion which they now enjoy : The authority of which Dukes was at first more absolute, but by degrees restrained and limited within narrower bounds. He that beholdeth him in his Robes, his gravity and outward Port, and the respect given him by the people, would think no Prince could be more absolute and supreme. But look upon him in the exercise and power of Government and he is nothing in the world but an empty Title. For notwithstanding that he enjoyeth to great a dignity, yet hath he full power in nothing, not being able to determine in any point, without the presence of his Councillors (being fix in number) who always sit with him, and dispatch affairs both publick and private ; as namely, giving audience to Ambassadors from Foreign States, receiving Letters from their own Ministers, granting of Privileges and the like in which the Duke can do just nothing if four (at least) of these Councillors be not present with him.

And yet these Councillors without him may conclude of any thing. Nay he is so restrained in all things to the power of the Senate, and to three Officers called the Capi, that he may not go out of the Town without their consent ; and by them is prescribed an order in his own Apparel. So that he is but little better than a Prisoner, when within the City ; and a Traytor, if he stir abroad : at the belt, but an honourable Servant. And his Revenue is as little as his Authority ; as being allowed out of the common Treasury, no more than 40000 Ducats a year, towards his expence and entertainment. As for the Sovereignty of the State, that resides wholly in the Senate ; but representatively in the Duke, the fix Councillors, and the three Heads or Presidents of the Forty, which are those Officers (as I take it) whom they call the Capi. The Senate or Great Council, consists of all the Gentlemen of Venice, above five and twenty years of age, which may amount to the number of two thousand five hundred, though seldom half that number do assemble at once, by reason of their several employments in affairs of the Common-wealth, in other places : who usually do meet together every Sunday morning, and on the morning of their Festivals, where they choose Magistrates, and distribute Governments, and other matters of the State. But because such great Bodies move but slowly, and are not very capable of trust and secrecy, they parcel this great Council into lesser Members ; whereof the principal are the Progradi, and the Council of Ten. That of the Progradi consisteth of 120 in which they treat of and determine matters of the greatest importance ; and therein conclude commonly of such principal points, as formerly have been proposed and treated of in the great Assembly : And in this Council, besides the 120 before mentioned, the Duke, the six Councillors, and the Council of Ten, and all such as have born any publick Office, have their voice or suffrage. This is that Council which properly and more especially is called the Senate ; in which nothing is to be concluded or passed into Acts, except four of the six Councillors be present at them, and that sixty at the least of the whole number give their suffrage to it. Then for the Council of Ten, their power is universal, over all affairs, such as the other Councils may not meddle with, as to conclusion of War, or Peace, to put in execution what they think most necessary for the benefit of the Common-wealth, and other things of like weight and moment : which if they were first treated of in the General Council or Assembly, and after in that of the Progradi, as they ought to be in common course ; could not be possibly managed with such speed and secrecy, as the exigencies of the State require. And in this Council, with the Prince and his six Assistants, the supreme Majesty of the State doth reside especially. Some other Officers there are, and those of great authority and reputation, as the Procurators of St. Mark, which have the charge of the publick Treasures, and the Avogadori or Tribunes (as one might call them) of the people, being three in all ; one of which must be always present in all consultations, lest any thing should pass to the prejudice, and infringement of the Privileges of the common people.

For the whole body of the City consisteth either of the Gentlemen, or of Artificers and Commons. These last are the descendants and progeny of such as came to settle here when the State was fixed ; invited to dwell here, and to follow their occupations, by several Privileges and Immunities which were offered to them, and these they neither admit into any of their Councils, nor into any of the Offices of Trust and Power, except it be two, that namely of the Chancellor, and the principal Secretaries, which pertain only to the people. The other are the issue or descendants of those, who first laid the foundation of their City and Common-wealth ; and these they have in full respect, and to high esteem, that to make any stranger (how great and eminent soever) a Gentleman of the City, is the greatest honour which can beflow ; and not bestowed but upon the best deserver. Henry 3. of France taking this City in his way out of Poland, thought himself graced with this attribute, which they are very dainty and sparing of, it being the highest honour which they vouchsafe to impart to such Commanders of their own, and Ambassadors of other Princes as have well deserved it. And that this honour may be kept up to the very height, and their Nobility grow not too cheap by being too numerous, neither the younger Sons of these Gentlemen within the City, or of the Noblemen in the Country are permitted to marry. But otherwise they suffer them to satisfy their lusts, with too much impunity ; and for their fakes alone of Stenys, as an evil not to be avoided on the former grounds.

Now as Ordo in Tacito said to the Prætorian Souldiers, Principi & Senatori oritur, Senatus & nobis : so out of these Gentlemen are chosen the Senators, out of them the Duke. His election by Contrarius is described in this manner. In the vacancy of the place, all the Gentry above thirty years of age are assembled. So many as meet, cast their names into a pot ; and in another are just as many balls, of which thirty only are gilt. Then a child draweth for each, till the thirty gilt ones be all drawn, for which thirty the child draweth again the second time out of another pot, that hath only nine gilt balls. The nine so drawn, nominate forty, out of which forty are twelve again selected by the same kind of lot. These twelve nominate five and twenty, out of which five and twenty are nine again by lot set apart. These nine nominate 45, who are by lot again reduced unto eleven. These eleven choose forty one, of the best and chiefest of the Senators; who after an Oath taken severally, to choose whom they judge worthiest, write in a Scrole every one whom he best liketh. The Scroles are mingled together, and then drawn, the fittest of the Persons then drawn is discusse, and he that hath most voices above five and twenty, is the man whom they pronounce to be elected, and adjudged with due solemnities to be created their Duke. By the like kind of Lottery do they choose Gentlemen in the Senate, and make public Officers, insumch that Contarenius, who hath committed unto writing these publick Forms, conceiveth (I will not say how rightly) that the Venetian Common-wealth was modelled by Plato's Platform.

But whether this be so or no, certain it is, that this Common-wealth thus constituted, and modelled, as before is said, hath lasted longer under one form of Government, than any Republick in the world, either Greek or Roman. Nor hath it only preserved it self in the same condition, but may most justly be accounted one of the strongest Bulwarks of Christendom against the incroachments of the Turks: the Wars whereof hath procured peace, and the peace thereof hath procured plenty to the rest of Europe. Insumch, that it may well be said, that as Europe is the Head of the World, and Italy the face of Europe, so Venice is the eye of Italy; the fairest, strongest, and most active part in that powerful Body. As if the Genius of old Rome by some Psychogical transmigration had passed into the body of this powerful State, and animated it with all the virtues of that City, but knit with a more permanent and constant temper. From so base and abject a beginning is this City grown to be one of the best Supporters of the Arms of Europe.

As for the Religion of this State, they tolerate that of the Greek Church, but they themselves profess no other than that of the Church of Rome: yet with such caution and respect to their own authority, that they suffer not the Clergy to enjoy those privileges, which they possess in other Countries, to the publick prejudice. Hence grew the quarrel betwixt them, and Pope Paul the fifth, in which the Signeury stood stiffly to their ancient Rights, and caused Mass to be duly said, notwithstanding all their Churches were under the interdict; banished the Jesuites for ever out of their Dominions, for sticking too busily in behalf of the Pope: and in the end prevailed too far by their constant courage, that the Pope was fain to far by their constant courage, and reconcile them to the Church, give over the Cause, and reconcile them to the Church, without any submission. A notable example to all Christian Princes, how to behave themselves towards those of Rome; who are not to be gained upon but by such resistances. So easie a thing it is for men of constancy and courage to shake off that yoke, which Papal Tyranny and Superstition hath imposed upon them.

In managing their Wars they anciently observed two Rules, which most conduced to the enlargement and security of their Common-wealth. The first was the exempting of their own Citizens from the Wars (not out of jealousy, but care of their preservation) unless compelled to the contrary by extream necessity; the body of their Armies being compounded out of the Provincial Subjects, intermixt with Mercenaries. By means whereof they did not only keep their City in the same condition, able at any time, and at all times, to give Law to the rest of their Dominions: but waited the hot and boiling spirits of their Subjects, in the Wars abroad; which otherwise might have made too much work at home. The other was the entertaining of some neighbouring Prince to be the General of their Forces; whom in the conclusion of the service they dismissed with honour and reward. And by this course they avoided faction, and prevented servitude: Either or both of which might have happened by employing any of their own great ones in the chief commands, who (after the example of Julius Caesar in the State of Rome) having a strong party within the City, and an Army without, might perhaps have made himself their Prince. But this was only in the conduct of their Wars in Italy, and in such times when the State was not so well balanced as it hath been since.

As for the Forces of the State, we may behold them in relation to Sea or Land. Their Land-Forces which they have in continual pay, for defence of their Dominion, consist of 28000 Foot, with Captains, and all other Officers inrolled and paid; and besides those, they have a choice Band of 4000 Musketeers, for exercising of which, they keep yearly Musters, as well to improve them in experience, as to proportion them some gratuities, according to their well-deservings. And as for Hofes, they maintain constantly 6000 men at Arms, well appointed and paid; the like whereof is not to be found in all Italy. And yet besides this constant and ordinary establishment, they are able to bring great Forces into the Field: as appeareth by their Army against Lewis XII. in which without diminishing any of their Forts and Garrisons, the had 2000 men of Arms, 3000 light Horse, 30000 Foot, most of their own natural Subjects; saving that they were interlined with some Bands of Swissers: to which people they give yearly Pensions to be assured of their aid upon all occasions. They for the Sea-Force, besides that they keep fifty Gallies in continual action, for defence of the Adriatick and that they have no less than 200 more laid up in the Arsenal, with all manner of tackling and ammunition appertaining to them: they have 10000 men enrolled to serve at the Oar, and may raise as many as they please for those kind of services, out of those parts of Sclavonia, which are subject to them. But the great evidence of the power they can make at Sea, was the great Fleet set out against the Grand Signieur for the War of Cyprus, An. 1570. in which they manned out one great Gallion, eleven great Gallies, five and twenty tall Ships, and one hundred and fifty Gallies of lesser burden; being in all one hundred and eighty seven Sail, fit for present service. To give the total Sum in brief: they held a War by Sea and Land for seven years together, against all the Princes of Christendom (excepting England) confederated against them by the League at Cambray: in all which time they neither wanted men nor money; and in the end, were the least losers by the bargain.

By this we may conjecture also at the greatness of the publick Treasury, and of the yearly income which supplies the same. For though it be conceived that their ordinary standing Revenue be but four Millions of Ducats yearly (which yet is more than any Christian Prince can boast of, except France and Spain) yet they have many other ways to advance their Treasury, by laying new Imposts on commodities as they fee occasions, which needs must rise to vast and most considerable sums, in a City of the greatest Traffick of any in Europe, and perhaps in all the World besides. And yet besides such Customs and Imposts as they lay on Merchandise, there is nothing which the people do eat or drink, for which they pay not something to the publick Treasury: over and above which, the poorest Labourer in the whole Signeury payeth his Poll-money also. Insumch that it is credibly affirmed, that the Christians generally do live in a better condition under the Turk, than under the Venetians. Without such helps, (though heavy and burdensome to the Subject) they could not possibly have spent twelve millions in the War against Sclimus II. and as many a little before that, in the enterprise of Ferrara, and the War raised against them by the League at Cambray, which was that formerly remembered. As

As for the Dukes of Venice, though no Sovereign Prince, nor such as do succeed each other in the right of inheritance: yet being they are always men of most eminent note, and that in their names all the business of State is acted, and all writings dated, I will buyon a Catalogue of them to this present; to the end that meeting with their names in the course of History, we may the better know in what times they lived.

The principal Orders of Knighthood in this Republick are 1. of S. Mark, who is the Patron of this City; instituted in the year 1330, and renewed again (being grown somewhat out of use) An. 1562: The honour is commonly bestowed on the person present, sometimes by Letters Patents on a party absent; as lately upon Daniel Heinsius, one of great eminence for Learning in the Netherlands. The person chosen is to be of noble blood, at the least a Gentleman, the Word or Motto of the Order, is, Pax tibi Marce.

2. Of the glorious Virgin, first instituted by Bartholomew of Vincenti, An. 1222. Their charge is to defend Widows and Orphans, and to procure (as much as in them is) the peace of Italy. It was allowed of by Pope Urban the Fourth, An. 1262. The Arms of this Order are a purple Crofs, between certain Stars. The habit a white Surcoat over a Russet Cloak; and seems to be as well a Religious as a Military Institution, like to the Spanish Orders, and that of Malta.

There are in the Provinces of this Common-wealth, before described, Patriarchs 2. Bishops 16.

The Great Dukedom of TUSCANY.

HAVING thus run along the Coast of the Adriatick, or upper Seas from the Lands of the Church unto the Alper, which divide Italy from Germany; let us next keep along the tract of the Tuscan or Lower Sea from the said Lands of the Church, to that part of the Alper which divide Italy from France. And in the first place we meet with the Dukedom of Florence, or the Estate of the great Duke of Tuscany; divided on the East from S. Peters Territory, by the River Pifos; on the West from the Common-wealth of Genoa, by the River Masra, and the strong Fort of Sarazena on the North from Ramandiola, and Marca Anconitana; by the Apennine hills, and on the South side it is bounded, with the Tuscan or Tyrrhenian Seas.

It taketh up the greatest and goodliest part of all that which anciently was called Tuscany from the Greek word σκω, which signifieth to Sacrifice; of which act of Religious Worshipping, or rather of some superstitious Ceremonies appertaining to it, they are conceived to be the Authors. And to say truth, they were much given to Sooth-sayings and Divinations, and such like vanities of Conjilium: Tager, that Merlin of the old world, first appearing here, from whom they learned the greatest part of their Superstitions. So that this name was adventitious and accidential. For properly and originally it was called Tyrrhenia, from Tyrrhenus the Son of Alys King of Lydia, who came and planted in these parts about the time that Edom judged the Tribes of Israel. But these names signified the same both Country and people, though in divers Languages; and with respect to different Originations the name of Tyrrheni, and Tyrrhenia being most used by the Greeks; as that of Tyfl, and Tylia, by their neighbours of Rome, who also called the people Hurufiti, and the Country Hetruria, from a particular Province of it which was so entitled Anciently it extended as far Eastward as the Banks of Tiber, and the other bounds being then as they are at the presents; in that tract gave dwelling to a potent Nation, who not content to be restrained within the Apennine and the Tiber, wasted three hundred Towns of the Umbri, the next bordering Nation; and built twelve Cities on the other side of the mountains, that is to say, Adria, Venona, Vincenia, Trent, Bergamo, Manua, Coma, Fercelle, Novara, Parma, Bononia, and Regium, all of them and reputation to this very day. They were the first Nation that carried an Offensive War to the Gates of Rome, which they gave aid to the Tarquins under King Porfena; and held without much labour and great Charges, reduced to their former obedience. As for the City it self, it is almost as big as Florence; this being five miles in compals, and that but six; but very thort of it in the number of people, Florence being said to contain 90000 souls, Pisa not a third part of that proportion: yet hath it very good advantages to make it populous, that is to say, the publick Arsenal for shipping, an University for Students, and the See of an Archbishop: the Cathedral Church of which is a very beautiful piece of work, the Gates thereof are Brass, and the Steeple of it of such artificial and exquisite building, that it sheweth as if it were always falling. But the unwholsomness of the air over-burtheneth all these fair advantages.

The next place of importance within the Territory of this City is the Town and Haven of Ligorn, (Livornum it is called in Latine) seated upon the influx of the River Arno; well fortified against the Genese, by whom the Works were once slighted, Anno 1297. Upon a reconciliation made between those States, it returned again to its old Masters. And when the Pisans were sold over to the Florentines, by the Duke of Millain; Thomas Frugosa Duke of Genoa, seized upon this place, and sold it also to the same Chapman, for 120000 Ducats. By the care of Duke Cosmo and his two Sons it was much improved in strength and beauty; and so well fortified, that it is thought to be one of the strongest Cities in Christendom: Cities I say, and not Castles, the Castles of Stockholm in Sweden, and that of Millain, being held to be the strongest Forts in the World. After this comes in 3. Petra Sancta, on the West side of the Arno, (a place of great consequence and strength) one of the best pieces of the Pisans when a Free-Estate, against their old enemies the Genese, towards whom it standeth. 4. Terracola, Eastward of Ligorn, neighboured with a capacious Bay on the Mediterranean. 5. Castellona, an Episcopall See. 6. Porto Baratto, bordering on the Signeury of Sienna, now nothing but a station for Ships (nor much used for that) but heretofore beautified with one of the best Cities of the Tuscan, called Populonia.

3. The third member of this Dukedom is the City and Territory of SIE NNA A. lying betwixt the Estate of Pisa, and the Land of the Church. The City said to be built by Brennus, and called it Sena: the birth-place of Aeneas Sylvius, called afterward Pope Pius II. of Francis Piccolomini, after Pope Pius III. and of Sixtus (hence surnamed) Senefier, the greatest Scholar of the three, if not of all the Age he lived in. By Antoine in his Itinerarium called Sene Julite, to difference it perhaps from another of that name near the Adriatick, called Sena Gallica. Built near the Spring, or Fountain of the River Arbia, now better known by the name of Trevisa; but built (which makes the situation of it exceeding pleasant) upon an high Hill, on which there is a Castle that commands the Town; the Streets thereof are even and very plain, centring in a large and spacious Market-place; near to which is a very fair Palace used for a Senate-house in the Free-Common-wealth, and on the South-side near the Walls the Cathedral Church, reputed to be one of the fairest in Italy, having only one door into it, to which there is an ascent by fair Marble Stairs, of which the Pavement is made also. Having long held the Gibelline or Imperial Faction, it bought its liberty at an easie rate, of the Emperor Rodolph I. After, it fell into the hands of the Spaniards, then of the French; and finally was made over to Cosmo de Medices Duke of Florence, by the King of Spain, Anno 1558, in consideration of the great charge he had been at to beat out the French and other services expected for the time to come. Cosmo being thus invested in it, deprived the people of their Arms, altered the Government, and was the first Prince who had the absolute command of it, after the constitution of the Common-wealth, neither the French nor Spaniards ruling here as Lords, but only as called in by their several Factions; and suffered to have Garrison in it of their own people, by the agreement of their Party. And, to say truth, it stood with good reason of State, that the Florentine should use all his wit to get this City and having got it, use all means to assure it to him. For, besides that great accession which it made unto his Estate; by adding thereto the yearly income of 150000 Ducats, above all expences: it was also to be carefully looked on as a Rival, which had long time stood in competition with it, for the sovereign command of Tuscan. Besides there had been mighty animosities between the Cities; the Florentine being always of the Guesfier, and the Siennois of the Gibelline Faction. A Faction at last so generally distilld in all Italy, and so abominable to the Popes, that on an Alphonsus day, when the Pope being to cast Ashes on the Heads of the Cardinals, was to have said, Memento, O homo, quid cinis es, & in cinerem converteris, according to the usage of the Church of Rome: seeing a Gibelline amongst them, he forgot himself, and said thus unto him. Memento, O homo, quid Gibellinus es, & cum Gibellinis morieris. Of chief note next unto Sienna, are 1. Montelino (Monte Alcinus in Latine) a place of great strength both by industry and situation. 2. Castro Cardale seated upon a lofty Hill, most memorable for the Birth and Sepulchre of John Boccace, one of the best wits of his time, as his Decameron declarerth; buried here with a sorry and unworthy Epitaph, not worth the labour of transcribing. 3. Saena, an Episcopall City as also are 4. Pienza, 5. Crostito, and 6. Chiusi, this last, the Chusum of the ancient Tuscans spoken of heretofore. Besides these are 26 walled Towns within this Signeury, but of no great observation in the course of business.

These belonged also unto this Common-wealth, when a State distinct, some Ports and Pices on the Sea, which State it distinct, some Ports and Pices on the Sea, which State it was consigned over to the Duke of Florence, were retained by the Spaniard: partly thereby to keep those Princes at his devotion, but principally that by holding so many places of importance in his own hands, he might carry at his Girdle the Keys of Italy, and become Lord Paramount of those Seas. Of those the principal, if not all, 1. Piombino, in Latine called Plumbinum, from some Mines of Lead adorned with a strong Castle, and a plentiful Territory: the Castle in the hands of the Spaniard, but the Town and Territory in possession of a Lord of its own, who receives the whole Rents of the Estate. 2. Porto Talamon, Eastward of Piombino, so called of old from Talamon, an adjoining Promontory, and known by this name in Plutarch, in the life of Marium. Accounted the chief City of Tuscan in those elder times, but remarkable for the great Battle fought near unto it betwixt the Romans and the Gauls, A.D.C. 529. the Army of the Gauls consisting of 70000 Horse and Foot; that of the Romans little (if at all) inferior to it. A fight in which Antoine, one of the Consuls being slain, the Victory was gotten by Emilius his Collegue, with the slaughter of 40000 of the Enemies, and the taking of 10000 Prisoners: Annovaltus and Congulamus two Kings of the Transjurs alpine Gauls being slain or taken. A Victory which drew after it the total subjugation of the Cassibile Gauls, which followed within three years after. 3. Orbivello, drawing more towards the East, the Cossa of the ancient Writers. 4. Monte Argentorati, a Promontory or Peninsula, thrusting it self into the Sea, over against Orbivello, by the

Latines

Latines called Mons Argentarius: and thought by some who have observed the situation, strength, and extent thereof to be the fittest place for a Royal City to be built in, to command those Seas. 5. Porto Hercule, which still retains its ancient name, imparted to it from some Temple of Hercules, which was founded in its situate near the Eastern Ithmus of the said Peninsula. 6. Porto Longone, a piece of special conference for command of the Mediterranean; and for that cause of late times gotten by the French (then aiming at the Conquest of Naples, but again recovered by the Spaniard, who doth now possess it).

The fourth and last member of this Estate, are the Islands in the Tuscan or Tyrrhenian Seas. The principal whereof is, 1. Illa, not above ten miles from Piombino, called anciently Eubolia, by the vulgar Elba. Pliny affirmeth it to contain in compals a hundred miles, but it proves upon a just measurement, to be but fifty. Not very well furnished with Corn, and less with fruits; but plentiful in Mines of Iron; as formerly for Steel and Copper: for which, especially for Steel of great esteem in the time of Virgil, as appeareth by that passage in the tenth of his Aeneid, where it is called

Tusula inebantibus Cetylum generosa metalli

A noble Isle, and known full well,
For unexhausted Mines of Steel.

But for all that, the Steel now failing, the want thereof is supplied by Iron, which Iron is of so strange a nature, that every 25 year it reneweth again upon the Mines, and will by no means melt whilst it is in the Island, but must be carried somewhere else. It affordeth also Sulphur, Allom, Tin, Lead, Marble good plenty; and in some parts the Loadstone also. Formerly it belonged to the Lords of Piombino, who not being able to defend it against the Turks, if they should at any time invade it, resigned it, by the Council of Charles V. unto Cosmo de Medices the Duke of Florence: referring to themselves the Revenues of it, and the Government of all the Towns and Villages therein, except those that were thought fit for Fortification. It hath a very fair Haven called Porto Ferrario, capable to receive any great Fleet that should come thither, and therefore if the Turks and Moor had been Masters of it, they might easily have commanded all the Coasts adjoining, as well in Provence as Italy. For the defence thereof, there are two strong Castles, situate on two little Mountains, on each side one; so fortified by Art and Nature, that they are held to be impregnable, having also good store of Cannon, and all sorts of Warlike Ammunition. And not far off stands a strong Town built by the same Duke Cosmo, and by him called Campofortis well fortified, and made the seat of his New Order of St. Stephen, of which more hereafter.

The second Island of note is Giglio, called Igilium anciently, just opposite to Monte Argentorato, and having some 25 miles in compals; near unto which the Genese so discomfited the Pisans in a fight at Sea, that they were never able to recover their former puissance. 3. Capraria, not far from Ligorn, so called from its abundance of Goats; and for the same reason Agilora, by the Greek Geographers: as 4. Gallinaria, not far off, took name from abundance of Hens. Of the rest nothing memorable; but that some of them do occur in the ancient Writers; of which sort are 1. Meloria, heretofore Lanulum, not far from Capraria. 2. Lanusi, formerly Artemisia, in which there is a very good Haven. 3. Gorgona, 4. Troja, and 5. the small Islands which are called Formice. 6. To these we may add also the Isle of Planagia, more memorable than the rest, for the banishment and death of Agrippa Posthumus, the Nephew of Augustus Caesar by his daughter Julia; here murdered by the command of Tiberius, to prevent all future competition to the State imperial, situate somewhat nearer unto Cosica, than the rest of these Islands.

As for the MEDICES, whose Posterity are now Dukes thereof, they were in the Free-State (as Machirel informs us in his Florentine History) accounted in the chief rank of the popular Nobility: those being such of the ancient Nobles, as to be capable of the Magistracy, and publick Offices (then wholly shared among the commons) had as it were degraded themselves, and became part of the Commonalty. About the year 1416, Johannes de Medices, (the first great raiser of his House) stoutly maintaining the Liberties of the People against the great ones; was by them to be honoured and enriched, that he not only got a great Party but almost a Sovereignty in the City. To him succeeded his Son Cosmo, one of the greatest Statemen of those times; who did not only much reform the Civil Government, but enlarged the Territory of the State by the addition of Casentino, Burgos, St. Sepulchro, and some other pieces. Dying in the year 1464, he left the managery of the State to Peter de Medices his Son, whose whole time was consumed in suppressing such factions, as had at home been raised against him; and at his death left all his power, and the great wealth which he had gotten (but with a greater measure of his Fathers virtues) to Lawrence and Julian his two Sons. The People after his decease, either desirous of Novelities, as most people are; or fearing to be made hereditary to this powerful Family, seemed to encline one of the Soderini, a man of plausible deportment, and well beloved. But he judiciously considering, that new Houses as they are easily honoured, so are they as soon abandoned by the fickle multitude; conferred all the dependencies which were cast upon him, on these two young men of the Medices: as being descended from a Family which had long governed the City, against these two the Pazzi, a potent House in Florence, confpired and at last they flew Julian, but Lorenzo escaped; the blows which were struck at him, being received by one of his Servants, whom two days before he had delivered out of prison. For this fact the Pazzi were hanged at the Palace window, together with the Archbishop of Pisa, who had been of the Conspiracy. To revenge the death of this Bishop, Pope Paul II. excommunicated the Florentines; and Ferdinand King of Naples warred upon them. Lorenzo, to divert this mischief, went in person to Naples; where he grew so much into the good liking of the King, that there was a perpetual league made between them. After his death 1492, his Son Peter, having very impudently delivered Pisa and Ligorn, with other pieces, to the French King; was, together with his whole Family, banished. Johannes de Medices, the Son of Lawrence, the brother of Peter, being made Pope, by the name of Leo X. restored again his Family; who not long after his death were again exiled. This disgrace Julius de Medices, Son to the above named Julian, and Pope of Rome, by the name of Clement VII. not enduring, procured Charles V. to besiege it; which request was granted, and the City after two years resistance, yielded; The Emperor then gave it to Alexander Medice (Grandchild to Peter, by his Son Lawrence) Anno 1531. And he to restrain the insolencies of the people, built a strong Citadel in the Town. This Alexander was a Prince of good parts enough, had he not been too much addicted to Lust and Wantonness; which being observed by Lawrence de Medices his own Cousin, he trained him to a secret place, under colour of bringing him to the Bed of a beautiful Lady, and there basely murdered him. Which done, instead of calling the people to take Arms for recovery of their lost liberty, as he first intended & he fearfully left the City, and fled towards Venice. So that before the people had notice of the accident, the heads of the Medicei consulted together, and sent for Cosmo di Medicei dwelling in the Country with his Mother (and then about eighteen years of age) to be their Prince: as being next Heir-male which was left of the Family, according to the Entail (as our Lawyers call it) made by Charles the Emperour. This Cosmo proving an excellent Statesman, and a fortunate Commander, so swayed the affairs of Italy, that Philip II. of Spain to be assured of his friendship, gave him the Signiory of Sienna, out of which he had lately driven the French; and Pius IV. had an intent to have crowned him King of Tuscany. But Philip of Spain (though otherwise his special friend) thwarted that intent, as loth to have in Italy any more Kings than himself. After in the year 1570. Pius V. crowned the same Cosmo in the Court of Rome, with the Title of Great Duke of Tuscany, for him and his Heirs for ever. In the new Duke's Coronet he caused to be engraven these words, Pius Quintus Pont. Max. ob eximiam dilectionem & religionis Catholicæ zelum, præcipuamque iustitiæ studium, donavit. Thus forward were these Popes to honour this Family; but their Successors have been otherwise affected to it. For when one of Duke Cosmo's Successors did since intreat a succeeding Pope, that he might be created King of Tuscany; the Pope not liking to Lordly a Title, made answer, that he was content, He should be a King in Tuscany, but not King of Tuscany. A Scholar-like distinction, but not so satisfactory to the point proposed.

The Princes of the House of Medicei, in the Free-State.

- A. D.
1410 1. John di Medicei, the first advancer of the Family to publick greatness.
1433 2. Cosmo di Medicei, the Son of John, called the Father of the Common-wealth.
1464 3. Peter the Son of Cosmo.
1472 4. Lawrence di Medicei, Son of Peter, the great advancer of Learning in Italy.
1492 5. Peter di Medicei II. exiled upon the coming in of Charles VIII.
6. Lawrence di Medicei II. Son of Peter, exiled together with his Father's made Duke of Urbino by Pope Leo X. He was the Father of Catherine di Medicei, French Queen.

The Dukes of Florence, and Great Dukes of Tuscany.

- A. D.
1531 1. Alexander di Medicei, the Son of Lawrence, the first Duke of Florence.
1537 2. Cosmo II. the next Heir of Alexander, descended from Lawrence, a brother of the first Cosmo; the wisest Statesman of his time.
1574 3. Francis di Medicei, Son of Cosmo II. Father of Mary the French Queen.
1587 4. Ferdinand di Medicei, the Brother of Francis 1609 5. Cosmo III. Son of Ferdinand.
1621 6. Ferdinand II. Son of Cosmo di Medicei, the twelfth of this Family, the sixth Duke of Florence, and the fifth of Tuscany.

The length of this Estate is 200 miles, the breadth in some places not much inferior, but growing narrower where it bordereth upon that of Genoa. In all which Tract, the Great Duke hath but one considerable Port on the main Land, which is that of Ligorn; so that his strength in shipping is not very great: and yet might be greater than it is, if the Subjects did delight in Traffic, and not suffer their Commodities to be bought by Strangers (as generally they do in all this Country) and carried thence in foreign Vessels. For otherwise being an industrious people, and well trained in Manufactures, their power at Sea must needs be greater than it is: the Great Duke Fleet consisting ordinarily of no more than twelve Gallies, two Gallions, and five Galliflaes. And for his Power by Land, he hath in readinesse (sixteen thousand Foot of his own Subjects, well trained and mulstered under experienced Commanders, to serve him upon all occasions; and an hundred men at Arms, and 400 Light-horsemen, well paid, as well in times of Peace as in time of War. And besides these, he keeps so many Ports and Towns in continual Garrison, that his Estate is said to be made of Iron.

What the Revenue of it were in the Free-Estate, I am not able to determine. That they were very great is manifest, in that having in those five years, wherein they waged War against the Duke of Millain, spent three millions and an half of Florens; their Treasury was so far from being exhausted, that the next year they besieged and endangered the City of Lucca. Since the altring of the Common-wealth into a Dukedom, and the addition of a Territory and City of Sienna: the Revenues of the Duke are conceived to be a million and an half of Ducats yearly. Of which 600000 Crowns are raised yearly out of the Dominion of the City of Florence, 150000 more out of that of Sienna: the Customs arising out of the Port of Ligorn, amount yearly to 130000 Ducats, the toll of Mill-fines only unto 160000 that of Salt, Mines, and Iron falls not short of that: in all a million and 200000 Ducats. Then hath the Duke his Stock going amongst the Bankers, and trades as much as any in the way of Merchandizing; whereas in other Countries he loseth the privileges of a Nobleman, that betakes himself to Trade and Merchandize. He useth also to buy up almost all the Corn which is brought into the Country out of other parts, and sell it again at his own price; forbidding any to be sold till all his be vendid. The rest is made up by Exciise upon all Commodities, even unto very Herbs, and Sallds, which lies very heavy on the Subject; the poor especially; inasmuch that it was tartly said, and perhaps not untruly, Qui sub Mediceis vivit, misere vivit; applying to an old rule in a new sense.

The only Order of Knighthood in this Estate, is that of St. Stephen, instituted by Cosmo di Medicei, An. 1561, and dedicated to St. Stephen, because upon the Festival of Stephen, Pope and Martyr, being the sixth of August he won the famous battel of Marciano. Pope Pius IV. confirmed it the same year, and granted them all the privileges which they of Malta enjoy, conditioned that those of this Order should make a vow of Charity, of Conjugal Chastity, and Obedience; they are to be nobly born, and in lawful Wedlock; of the Romish Church, and without note of infamy. The Robe is of white Chamlet, with a Red Crofs on their left side, as well upon their military Garment, as their wearing Cloaks: intended principally against the Turk & Moor, for which cause settled first at Pisa, being near the Sea; but after at Cosmopolis in the Isle of Iva. The number of them is uncertain; the Great Duke the supreme Master of it. Other Orders are commonly simple, but this mixt; being partly religious, partly honorary.

The Arms are Or, five Torteaux Gules, two, two, and one, and one in chief Azure, charged with three Flowers de Luce of the rest.

Archbishops 3. Bishops 26.

The

The State of LUCA.

IN the West part of Tuscany, betwixt the Estate of the Great Duke, and the Common-wealth of Genoa, lieth the City of Luca, so called from Lucumo, a King of the Tuscan, who is said to have built it; situate on the River Serebin, not far from the mountains of Lima, whence the Country is at this day called Lunigiana. It is about three miles in compals, and contains about 24000 Inhabitants, who generally are a courteous and modest people, men of good judgment, and discreet, and by their widows have preserved themselves a free Common-wealth, notwithstanding the attempts of more powerful Neighbours: and they are very industrious also, and well seen in Manufactures, especially in weaving Silks and cloath of Gold, which they taught the Florentines. The City teated in a Plain, compassed with Mountains on all sides except towards Pistoia: so strongly fortified by the help of Art and Nature, that this City, Zara in Dalmatia, Canea in the Isle of Candia, and the Town of Ligorn, were thought in former times (when the Art of Fortification was less known) to be the four strongest Towns in the Christian World. The streets thereof are narrow, but paved with broad Free-stone, and most easie to walk on: the buildings very fair, built of Free-stone also, and beautified with pleasant Gardens. On the North-west stands a very strong Castle, near which lieth the Cathedral, stately paved with Marble, but very dark, as most of the Papish Churches, to give the better colour to the burning of Tapers in the day.

In this Town was the meeting of the great Captains Cesar, Pompey, and Crassus, so pernicious to the Roman Republick. For Pompey desirous to maintain his authority, Cesar to get honour, and Crassus to increase his wealth, here united their Councils: Pompey's authority to be upheld by Cesar's Arms, and Crassus his Riches; Cesar's continuance in his Province to be maintained by Pompey's Power, and Crassus his Money; and Crassus his Estate to be secured by Pompey's Greatness, and Cesar's Military Reputation. This done, they made a partition of the Roman Provinces among themselves, assigning Gaul to Cesar, Spain to Pompey, and to Crassus, Syria; which strong Confederacy was the cause of that alteration which after followed in that State. For Crassus being slain not long after, Pompey and Cesar wanting a third man to poize the balance, fell first to discontents, then to Civil Wars, which at last made Cesar Lord of Rome. Upon which meeting, and the breach which succeeded afterwards, was grounded that so memorated speech of Cicero, that it is to say, Vitium Pompeius cum Cæsare societatem aut nunquam inisset aut nunquam dimisset.

But to return again to the affairs of Luca, in the declining of the Empire; it became possessed by the Goths, from them recovered by Narses with the rest of Italy. After this it again followed the fortune of the Empire, till taken by Count Boniface the Father of that notable Pirato, the Countess of Mathildis: who being deceale without issue, and the Emperours pretending to it as to an Elcheat, the Citizens made a common prey, and bought their Liberty of their Emperour Rodolphus for 10000 Crowns. Some say the money was disbursed for by a Cardinal. But notwithstanding this purchase, and their title by it, the Emperour Lewis of Bavaria seized upon it again, under pretence of freeing it from the faction of Capriceo, who had made himself absolute Master of it; by a German Garrison there left it was sold to the Genoese; and having passed through many hands, the Emperour Charles IV. got it once again:

of whom they once more purchased their desired Liberties, for 25000 Florens of gold; and to secure themselves thereof, demolished the Castle built by Capriceo. But being not able to maintain it by their proper strength they have put themselves under the protection of their Potent Neighbours; changing their Patrons, as conducted from their preservation: and finding no security from Genoa, and as little from Florence, both which they severally tried; they put themselves at last into the Protection of the Dukes of Millain, and in that right are patronized by the Kings of Spain.

The Territories of this City extend in compals eighty miles, the chief Town next to Luca is self, being that of Luna, 2 Bishops See; all the rest ordinary Farms and Villages, but of a good air, and very well peopled: which yield a Revenue to the publick Treasury of 80000 Crowns per annum, and out of which the State is able to raise (if there be occasion) about 15000 Foot, and 3000 Horse. A great strength for so small a Signory, if he did seriously attempt to force it, and would venture on the displeasure of the Catholic King; besides that it is thought that he receives more profit thence in gifts and presents, by letting it stand as it is, than it would yield (considering the charge of keeping it) if it were his own. As for the Government thereof, the principal Magistrat is called the Gonfalonere, changeable every second month; assisted by a certain and determinate number of Citizens, whom they change every sixth month also; during which time they live together in the Palace, or common Hall. Other inferior Officers I insist not on. And for the Government of the Church, they have two Bishops only, which acknowledge the Archbishop of Florence for their Metropolitan.

The Commonwealth of GENOA.

DIRECTLY West of Tuscany, from which it is divided by the River Macra, lieth the Country anciently called Liguria, now Riviera di Genoa, the Coast of Genoa, because it lieth along the Sea of Genoa; and by some, II. Genovesiote, from Genoa the Metropolis of this Country and Common-wealth. A Common-wealth once of a larger reputation and authority than it is at the present; commanding heretofore the Islands of Corfica, Sardinia, and the Baleares, in the Mediterranean; Lebus, and Chio, with some others in the Greekish Seas; the Towns of Capra, or Thoudia, in the Taurian Chersonese; Pera, on the other side of Constantinople; and a good part of Tuscany.

It was also then so strong both in Men and Shipping, that they sent seven feven Armies to the Wars of the Holy Land: and in the space of three days only armed once upon occasion of present service, eight and fifty Gallies, and eight Amphiboli (being Vessels of one hundred and forty, or one hundred and sixty Oars apiece), and at an other time, one hundred and sixty six Gallies, at a sudden pinch. By the advantage of this strength, they beat the Pisans out of Sardinia, Corfica, and the Baleares; compelling them to pay 135000 Crowns for their Peace; they got a good share in the division of the Empire of Constantinople, when that City was taken by the Latins, and held a very strong hand over the Venetians. These last they had once in to great an exigence, having vanquished their Fleet at Sea, and taken the Island of Chio, not far from Venezia; that the Senate sent them a blank Charter bidding them write down what conditions they pleased, which should be readily condescended to. But Peter Doria Admiral of the Genoan Fleet, unseasonably proud of his advantages, would have the City of Venice wholly at his own own disposal. Whereupon the Venetians, now made desperate, assault the Genoise, and took an hundred of their Boats and Gallies. After which they always had the worst, losing their Islands in the Mediterranean to the Kings of Aragon; Capua and Pera with their Islands in the Greek Seas, to the Great Turks; most of their Holds in Tusfany, to the Florentines; their power at the last being broke by the Venetians; that in the end they were not able to fet out a Navy fit for an enterprize. But these Misfortunes were occasioned principally by their own Divisions; the City being miserably torn in pieces by continual Factions: first betwixt the Dorii and Spinoli on the one side, the Filijci and Grimaldi on the other, Anno 1174. Secondly, of the Negri and Mollani, against the Salvatici and Embraci, An. 1289. Thirdly, betwixt the Spinoli and Dorii themselves, An. 1336. And fourthly between the Nobility and the Commons, 1339. Which Factions did so weaken them both at home and abroad, that having lost the greatest part of their Estate they were fain to put themselves on the protection of their Neighbours to defend the rest; having now nothing left them but Liguria and the Isle of Corsica.

1. LIGURIA, hath on the West the River Varrus, rising about the edge of Provence in France; on the East, the River Magra, by which parted from Tusfany; on the North the Apennine Hills; and on the South the Ligurian or Tyrrhenian Seas. It is in length an hundred and forty miles; that is to say, from the Port of Luna in the East, to that of Monaco in the West, which lieth near to Provence; but the breadth not answerable to the length; and is divided generally into two Parts or Provinces, the East and the West, both centring upon Genoa the principal City.

The old Ligurians were a stout and warlike Nation, light and swift of Body, well practised in laying Ambushes, and not discouraged by an Overthrow, but forthwith ready to fight again: to which the nature of their Country served them very well, being rough, mountainous and woody, and full of straight and dangerous Passages; and in this Tract few open Towns, but many well-fortified Castles, so that without much labour they could neither be taken nor besieged. And if at any time they were vanquished in the open field, they had recourse unto these Castles, and other Fastnesses, hemmed round about with Woods and Mountains, in which they plaid their after-game, and tired out their Enemies and Invaders. The principal of their Tribes were the Decenii, Oxillii, Eubariades, and Ingenii; all at last vanquished by the Romans after the second Punic War: but not without much labour and pains, by reason of the Woods and Marishes and Mountains, within and behind which they retired and saved themselves, inasmuch that it was held a matter of more difficulty to find than to conquer them; Aliquanto major erat labor invenire quam vincere, are the words of my Author. That did divers times after this much molest the Romans, till at last Publius by disarmed them, that he scarce left them Instruments to plough the earth. So in the end they grew obedient to their Masters. In the division of whole large Territories by Augustus Cæsar, Liguria was made one of the eleven Regions of Italy; as it was also one of the seventeen Provinces into which Italy was divided by the Emperor Constantine: Millain at that time the Metropolis or Head-City of it. What kind of men they were in the breaking of the Western Empire, may be known by their actions both by Sea and Land, spoken of before: now more addicted to Merchandise than War, but most of all to Ufury. A Vice which the Christians learned of the Jews, and are now thought to equal, if not exceed their Teachers. It was the saying of a merry fellow, that in Christendom there were neither Scholars enough, Gentlemen enough, nor Jews enough. And when answer was made, that of all these there was rather too great a plenty than any scarcity, he replied, that if there were Scholars enough, so many would not be double or treble benefited; if Gentlemen enough, so many Peasants would not be ranked among the Gentry; and if Jews enough, so many Christians would not protect Ufury. The women are very fair and comely, wearing for the most part their hair in tresses, which they cast over their backs; they wear no upper Garments but of Cloth, as being only allowed by the Laws but their under Garments of the purest stuff. The women here are privileged above all in Italy, having free leave to talk with whom they will, and be courted by any that will, both privately and publicly. Which liberty it is likely they gained at such time as the French were Masters of this Estate; who do allow their Wives such excess of liberty, as no Italian would allow of in a common Civilized. And though it cannot be affirmed, that the women of the Country, or the City it self, do abuse this liberty; yet the Italians being generally of a different humour, reckon them to be past all decency as they esteem the German Merchants (who make little reckoning of their promises, if not bound by writing) to be men without faith. Of which and other things concerning this Estate, they have made this Proverb, Montagne senza legni &c. that is to say, Mountains without Wood, Sea without Fish, Men without Faith, and Women without Shame.

The Country, as before said, is very mountainous in the In-lands, and full of craggy Rocks towards the Sea: so that by Sea and Land it is very ill travelling. But amidst those Hills are Valleys of as rich a vein, as most others in Italy, abounding in Citrons, Lemons, Olives, Oranges, and the like fruits; with such variety of Flowers at all times of the year, that the Markets are seldom unfurnished of them in the month of December. It yieldeth also great plenty of most pleasant Vines, which the Inhabitants call La Vermazza; and another which they call Le lagime di Christo, or lacrime Christo: this last so pleasing to the taste, that it is said, a Dutchman tasting of it as he travelled in these parts, fetched a great sigh, and brake out into this exclamation: How happy had it been with us, if Christus lacrymatus esset in nostris regionibus, if Christ had shed some of his tears in the Country of Germany! Their greatest want is that of Corn, and therefore they do supply themselves out of other places.

The principal Towns and Cities of it in the Eastern part, are, 1. Sarenaza, a strong Fortrefs against the Florentines, and one of the best pieces of this Republick. 2. Porto-Remuli (Pour Remuli, as the Latins call it) of as great consequence as that, but possessed by the Spaniard. 3. Levigi, a Haven in the Tuscan or Tyrrhenian Sea. 4. Sestri, a reasonable good place, remarkable for as white Bread, and as pleasant Wine as any in Italy. 5. Floja, a Haven or Port Town, not far from Genoa, anciently called Portus Delphinus. Few of the Towns in this part are of any greatness: but they are set so thick, and intermingled with so many goodly houses, both on the Hills and the Valleys, that for the space of twenty miles, the whole Country seems to be one continual building.

In the West part the Towns of most importance are 1. Monaco, of old called Monacos, and Portus Herculis, beautified with a commodious Haven; belonging not long since to the Spaniard, who bought it for 10000 Crowns of the Grimaldi, then its proper Owners; but of late gotten by the French under colour of a late contract. 2. Venimiglia, a good Town and sweetly seated. 3. Savona, taken by the Genoise, An. 1250, before which time it had a Prince of its own. Remarkable for the interview betwixt Ferdinand the Catholic and Lewis XII. of France, An. 1507.

who having been deadly enemies, upon the taking of the Realm of Naples from the French by the Spaniard, met at this Town, and here most strangely relied upon one another: Lewis first boarding Ferdinand's Gally; and Ferdinand for divers days feasting with Lewis in this Town then in his possession, as Protector of the Estate of Genoa. Which kind of interviews (I note this only by the way) as they chance but seldom; so when they do, they prove for the most part dangerous unto one of the parties: great enemies not being easily forgot by persons of a publick Integrity: Nay, that notable Statesman Philip de Comines utterly disliked all such meetings of Princes, though in amity and good correspondence with one another; as many times producing effects quite contrary to their expectations. And this he proveth by the example of Lewis XI. of France, and Henry of Castile, who meeting purposely, Anno 1463, to change some friendly words together, took such dislike at each others persons and behaviour, that they never loved one another after it. The like example he bringeth of an Interview betwixt Edward IV. of England, and the same King Lewis: and betwixt Frederick, the Emperor, and Charles Duke of Burgundy; with divers others. His reasons I purposely omit, as not pertinent to my present undertaking, and make haste again unto the Town: which is about a mile and an half in circuit, and hath many stately buildings in it. It was called anciently Sabate or Sabatia, and hath been under the command of divers Lords: being taken from the Genoise by the Viccomi, and the Sforzas, Dukes of Millain, from them by the French, and at last recovered again by those of Genoa. I further note, that this one Town hath yielded to the Church of Rome three Popes, viz. Gregory VII. Julius II. and Sixtus IV. which is as much as Genoa it self can brag of. 4. Nola, upon the Sea-side, a commodious Haven. 5. Finali, a goodly Port-Town also, and very well fortified: honoured a long time with the Title of a Marquissate, one of the seven founded by the Emperor Orlo, (of which more hereafter) but taken from the last Marquess by the Count of Fuenter, then Governor of Millain for the King of Spain, and Garrisoned immediately with 200 Spaniards, the poor Marquess being put off with an Annual Pension, Anno 1602. 6. Milejims, a small Town adjoining, possessed upon the same right by the Spaniard also; who by these pieces hath a strong command on the Trade of Genoa. 7. But the great Ornament of those parts of Italy, is the City of Genoa, first built, say some, by Janus the Son of Sarnus, as others say, by Janus Genius Priscus, an Italian or Tuscan King. But by whomsoever it was built, certain it is, that it was miserably destroyed by Mago the Brother of Annibal, repaired by Lucretius Scirus, at the command of the Senate of Rome, for whose cause and quarrel it was ruined: once again spoiled and wasted by Rotharis a great Prince of the Lombards, Anno 660; or thereabouts: but built more beautiful than before by Charles the Great. On his foundation it now stands, situated on the shore of the Ligustick or Ligurian Seas, to which, being partly built on the declivity of an Hill, full of stately Palaces, it giveth a most pleasant and magnificent prospect. It is in compals six miles, of an Orbicular form, fortified towards the Sea by Art; towards the Land by Art and Nature; there being but one way to come to it by Land, and that over steep and craggy Rocks. The Streets are narrow, paved with Flint, and most of them on the sides of the Hill; which is the reason that they use Horse-litters here instead of Coaches, and most of the better sort are carried on mens' shoulders in Sedans or Chairs; which from hence came hither into England. But that which they call La Strada

Nueva, or the New-street, reaching from the West to North-east, is of a very fair breadth; each house whereof is built with such Kingly magnificence, that it is thought to be the fairest Street in the world. In all the rest the Buildings for the height of two Stories are made of Marble, curiously wrought; but the Laws forbid Marble to be used any higher. The Haven of it is very fair and capacious, safe from the violence of Tempests, and well fortified: so that the Spaniards use to say, that were the Catholic King absolute Lord of Marceller in Provence, and Genoa in Italy, he might command the whole World. After the re-edifying of it by Charles the Great, the People here continued subject to his Successors, till the Berengarii, as Kings of Italy, made them free, Anno 899. in which condition they remained till the year 1318. when being shrewdly weakened in their Estate, they were fain to give themselves to Pope John XXII. after to Robert King of Naples. But being soon weary of a foreign Government, the people in a popular tumult made choice of one Simon Bona Negra to be their Duke, Anno 1339. which Government continued till the French were called in by the Genoian Faction, in the Reign of Charles VII. under whom they continued thirteen years; and then expelling thence the French for their many infidelities, they put themselves under the protection of the Dukes of Millain, Anno 1403. Long time they lived under the protection of those Princes, in great tranquillity, who never carried towards them any rigorous hand; save that once Duke Lodowick Sforza exacted of them a great mass of money. But as the tale goeth, his Agent being invited to the house of a Genoise, and walking in a Garden with him, was shewed an herb growing there, called Basil, which stroaking gently he smelt thence a most pleasing favour, but as unfavourably a smell when he trained it hard. The Genoise hereupon inferred, Sir, if our Lord Duke Lodowick will gently stroak the hand of his pusillance over this City, it will prove pliant to him by obedience; but may chance to prove rebellious if he do opprest it. But Lodowick being taken Prisoner by King Lewis XII. they first came under the command of the French, and then of the Spaniard, according as those Nations had possession of the State of Millain; and after many changes and alterations, obtained again their freedom of King Francis I. Which being not able to preserve by their proper strength, they finally put themselves under the shelter of the Spaniard, who is now their Protector; and that not for nought, he being indebted to them, Anno 1600, a Million and an half of Gold; that being the remainder of 18 Millions, cut off by the Popes Authority; that so the King might be indebted to that Sea; for most of his Lands were formerly engaged to the Money-Masters of this City. The same cause of non-payment the King took with the rest of his Creditors in Florence, Ausburg, and the rest, inasmuch that it was commonly said in Italy, that the King of Spain had made more ill faces upon the Exchange in one day, than Michael Angelo the famous Painter had ever made good in all his life. And thus you see this great City which commanded the Ocean, the Lady of so many Islands, and a great Moderator of the affairs of Italy, fain to put her self into the protection of a foreign Prince, and that too at the charge of a great deal of Treasure; which he continually raiseth from them in the way of Loan, of which he often proves but a sorry Pay-master. And if the Wars he had with England did but drain their purses (for it was that War, and the War which he had in the Netherlands, that made him so indebted to the Banks of Genoa) no question but the revolt of Catalogne, and the lasting Wars made against him by the French in so many places; places have plunged him in as deep as ever. Which notwithstanding this people do so thrive under his protection, and drew so great commodity from their Trade with Spain, that it is thought their private men were never richer, the publick Treasury never fuller than it is at the present.

CORSICA is an Island in the Ligustick or Ligurian Sea, opposite to the City of Genoa, from whence it is distant about sixty miles; and lying just North of the Isle of Sardinia, from which it is distant seven miles. It comprehends in length an hundred and twenty miles, seven in breadth, and three hundred twenty five in circuit; and lyeth under the fifth Climate, the longest day being almost fifteen hours.

The people are stubborn, poor, unlearned; supposed to be more cruel than other Nations, and so affirmed to be by Cæsar in his Book of Commentaries; the Progeny, as some say, of the 52 Daughters of Thespius, who being all got with child in one night by Hercules, were by their Father put to the mercy of the Sea; by which they were brought unto this Island, after peopled by them. From one of these Sons named Cyrnus, the Island had the name of Cyrnos, by which it oftentimes occurth in such old Greek Writers. This is the conceit of Fabius Pictor, one of Annius his Authors. And that of Euphathus, a far more credible Writer, is not much unlike, who will have it called Corfica from a woman so named, dwelling in the coast of Liguria; who following her Bull hither, was the first that discovered it. But these Originals I look on, the first especially, as the worst kind of Romances: the name of Cyrnos being more like to be derived from the Phœnic Keranth, which signifies a horn or corner, by reason of the many Promontories with which it fronts into the Sea. Corfica insula multis promontoriis angulosa est, as it is in Isidore, Lib. 15, cap. 6. And for the name of Corfica, I should derive it rather from the Cass (by which name the Inhabitants thereof are called in most Latine Writers) one of the two Nations of most note in the Neighbouring Island of Sardinia. Celeberrimi ea populorum Bæti, & Cassi, as we find in Pliny. Which Cass, or some of them, being overborn by some new invaders (which the Island of Sardinia was freed from) they were fain to shift their seat, and came over hither.

This Country yieldeth excellent Dogs for game, good Horses, fierce Malliffs; and a beast called Musfili, not found in Europe, excepting in this Island, and Sardinia only, but there came Miffrone, or Muerione, (for I conceive they are the same under divers names) said to be horned like Rams, and Skinned like Stags; whose skin is of such incredible hardness, that the beast being cast headlong against a Rock, receives no hurt, but nimbly flies from his Enemy to his Den.

The soil by reason of the Mountains (which every where are too thick and barren in it) is not very fruitful; producing corn in less plenty, but the best Vines, and such as the old Romans well relished, in good measure. It produceth also Oyl, Figs, Raisins, and Honey: the first three in a mediocrity of goodness, the last somewhat bitter, and by many deemed unwholesome. It aboundeth also with Allom, Box-trees, Iron Mines, and the Tree called Taxus, whose poysonous Berries, though in taste pleasing, are much fed on by Bees, and therefore thought to be the cause of the bitterness of the Honey. In some few places where the Rivers have their currents, especially towards Liguria, it recompenseth by its fertility, in bearing all manner of grain, the barrenness of the mountains. Which mountains cutting through the midst of it, divide the whole Island into Cismontanum, being that towards Genoa; and Transmontanum, lying towards Sardinia; yet so, that the People on each side call themselves the Cismontanes, and the other the Transmontanes. Both of them speak a corrupt Italian, in which there is not a little mixture of French and Spanish.

For Rivers, there are none of note; the principal of those which the Island yields being called Gola, and Travignano. And as for Cities, some of the Ancients reckoned 33, which Strabo doth conceive to be Castles on lythere being but four Towns or Cities in it in his time: of which four, two were Roman Colonies; the one planted by Marius, called Mariana; the other by L. Sylla, in the Town called Alleria; a place of some Antiquity before that time, and at this day a Bishops See. But now the place of most importance is the Town of Bastia, seated in the North-east part of the Island, opposite almost unto Alleria, with a commodious Haven to it, and a strong Garrison to defend it: as being the ordinary seat of the Governour sent hither from Genoa; and of the Bishop of Alleria, who makes there his residence. A. Aiazze, a reasonable strong Town, and a Bishops See; and so is also 3. Nebbio, called Chafinnum by Plutony. Then there is 4. Porto Urechio, built not long since in the place of an old decayed Haven, and peopled by a Colony sent from Genoa. 5. St. Florence a Port-town in the Northern part in the midst betwixt Nebbio and Mariana; and 6. St. Bonifacio, called by Plutony, Portus Syraonannus, just opposite unto it in the South corner of the Isle; both of them places of good safety, and capable of the greatest Vessels that frequent those Seas.

Who were the first Inhabitants is not easily known. That the Phœnicians or Tyrians had some footing there, is manifest by that of Callimachus an old Greek Poet, who calleth it Βουρκια, Κόρυς, the Phœnician Cyrnus; and by that of Diodorus Siculus, affirming that the Carthaginians and Tyrrheni (which questionless he mistook for Tyri) call the Phœnices out of this Island. But whether these Phœnices first inhabit, or only had a Colony in some part thereof, is not demonstrable from those Authors. The Carthaginians after this made a Conquest of it, and held it till the time of the first Punic War; when they were driven thence by the valour of Cornelius Scipio. Yet was it not totally subdued, nor brought into the form of a Roman Province, till some time after; when it was fully conquered by G. Pompeius, A.U.C. 541. This Island and Sardinia at the first being joined together, governed by one Praetor only; but afterwards made two distinct Provinces, immediately subject to the Praefect of the City of Rome; and consequently members of the Roman Patriarchate. In the falling of the Roman Empire, it became a prey unto the Vandals, who used to send their condemned persons out of Africk hither, to fell Timber for shipping; the Country even till then being very much overgrown with Woods. Afterwards with the rest of the Islands of the Mediterraneæ, it was under the power of the Saracens, against whom Ademar the Count or Governour of Genoa armed a Fleet of Gallies, and vanquished them in a fight at Sea, but lost his life in the action: which notwithstanding the Genoese following their good Fortune, seized on the Island, and carried thence thirteen of the Enemies Ships. The Pisians after this got possession of it, but being vanquished by the Genoese in the fight near Giglio (before mentioned) they were fain to leave it to the Conquerors. Since that it hath always followed the fortune of Genoa, save that it remained somewhat longer than that City did in the hands of the French, who in the year 1554. seized on it by the aid of the Turks, whom (to the great dishonour of Christianity) they entertained in their Wars against Charles V. but in the end, restored it to the Common-

Common-wealth, upon the peace made betwixt France and Spain, Anno. 1559. And for securing of this Island to the state of Genoa, they fell upon this handfom project: employing none but natural Genoese to serve in the Garrisons of the Islands, the better to keep under this untractable People; and filling all their Garrisons upon the Continent with natural Genoese, whereby the Island is unfurnished of its ablest men, who also serve for Holy-ager of the Publick Faith.

Having thus took a brief view of the several parts and members of this Common-wealth, let us next look upon the whole, as to the Government, Forces, and Revenue of it. First for the Government, the principal of their Magistrats hath the name of Duke; as titular as the Duke of Venice, but of less esteem: that Duke continuing in his Office for term of life, but this being alterable and removed at the two years end. So that he may be called most properly the Mayor of Genoa. For this two years he dwells in the publick Palace, and hath 500 German for the Guard of his Persons: in nothing like a Prince but that: and for that time, he alone hath the power of propounding any thing to the Senate, which carrieth some resemblance of a Negative Voice. His time expired, he returns unto his house as a private Person, but so, that during life he hath the Office of Procurator in the Common-wealth. To him there are assistant eight principal Officers, who sit upon the same Form with him, and continue in their Office for two years also; which eight, together with the Duke, are called the Sigentry: but he and they, in matters of most weight and moment, subordinate to the General Council, consisting of 400 Persons, all of them Gentlemen of the City: who with the nine before remembered do constitute the body of the Common-wealth. Under this form they have continued ever since, by the power and Goodness of Andrea Doria (who might have made himself their Prince) they were discharged of their Subjection to the French, Anno 1528. never in danger of relapsing to their former servitude, but in the treasonable practice of the Fischi, a remarkable Family of the City; who hoping to possess themselves of the Principality under the Protection of the French, had fo laid their plot, that Augustine de Fischi, who was designed to be their Duke, had in the night time seized on the Navy, and slain John Doria who had the command thereof. But leaping from one Galley to another, to make sure of all, stumbled and fell into the Sea, where he and his ambitious treasons were both drowned together.

As for their Forces, there are within the Signeury 10000 men ready to arm at any time, as they see occasion; 25 Gallies always ready in the Publick Arsenal, and four continually at Sea for the defence of their Trading. Sufficient strength to save them from a petit force, though not to guard them from the power of a strong Invader. But the chief strength which they rely on, is the King of Spain; whose protection, though it costs them dear, is worth their money; and they have prospered so well by it, that notwithstanding all the Losses which they have sustained, it is supposed that the Revenue of the Common-wealth, (besides the Treasury of St. George, which is very rich, and managed as a distinct body from the Publick, by its own Officers) amounteth to no less than 430000 Crowns per annum.

As for the Treasury of St. George, though it contain no part of the publick Patrimony, but be governed by its own Officers as a State distinct; yet is it of such ready use, so able at all times to furnish the Republick with vast sums of money; that the security and preservation of this Common-wealth depends much upon it. The Institution and Administration whereof, together with the benefit which from hence reboundeth unto this Estate, I cannot better present to the Readers View, than in the words of Machiavel, the greatest Politick of his times; who in his History of Florence hath expressed it thus: 'Post diuturnum illud bellum quod Genoveses multis abhinc annis cum Venetis gesserunt, &c. After that tedious War between the Genoese and Venetians, was ended in the year 1281. and that the Genoese found themselves unable to repay those moneys, which they had taken up of their private Citizens in pursuit thereof, they thought it best to assign their ordinary Taxes over to them, that so in tract of time the whole debt might be satisfied; and for that end allotted them a Common Hall, there to deliberate and determine of their Affairs. These men, thus made the Masters of the publick Taxes, elect among themselves a Common-Council of an hundred and over them eight Officers of special power, to order and direct the rest and to dispose of the Entrado: which Corporation fo established, they intitle 1. St. George Bank. It hapned afterward, that the Republick wanting more moneys, was glad to have recourse unto St. George; who growing wealthy by the orderly managing of his stock, was best able to relieve them in their necessities: and as before they assigned their Taxes over to him, fo now Attinentiam suam assignabant, they mortgaged all their Demains. So that St. George continually waxing richer, and the States poorer, this Corporation became possessed at last, of almost all the Towns and Territories of the Common-wealth: all which they governed by their own Magistrats, chosen by common suffrage from among themselves. It followed hereupon, that the common People bearing less respect unto the Publick, applied themselves unto St. George; this being always orderly and prudently governed; that many times inclining to Tyranny; this never changing Officers, or form of Government, that subject to the proud ambitious lusts of each Ultrap, whether Domestick or Foreign. Insum that when the two potent Families of the Fregosi and Adorni, contended for the Sovereignty in this Estate, most of the People looked upon it as a quarrel which concerned them not: St. George not meddling more in it, than to take an Oath of the prevailing Faction, to preserve his Liberties. Rarissimo sunt exempla, &c. A most excellent and rare thing (saith he) never found out by any of the old Philosophers in their imaginary forms of a Common-wealth that in the same State, and the same People, one may see at the same time both Tyranny and Liberty, Justice and Oppression, Civility and Misgovernment: This only Corporation preserving in the Common-wealth its ancient Lustre. So that in case St. George should in the end become possessed of the remainder of the Patrimony and Estate thereof, as it is possible it may, the State of Genoa might not alone be equalled with that of Venice, but preferred before it. So far, and to this purpose that great Master of State-craft; a man of less impiety, and more regular life, than some of those who have traduced him for an Atheist.

The Estates of LOMBARDY.

LOMBARDY is bounded on the East with Romanandiola, and the Estate or Territory of Ferrara; on the West, with that part of the Alpes, which divides Italy from France; on the North, (reckoning Marca Travigiana within the bounds hereof) with that part of the Alps which lieth towards Germany; and on the South, with the Apennine, which parteth it from Liguria, or the State of Genoa.

It was called anciently Gallia Cisalpina, whereof we shall speak more anon and took this new name from the Lombards or Longobards, a people of Germany (of whom we have already spoken, but shall speak more at large when we come to Hungary), who coming out of Pannonia possessed themselves of a great part of Italy; but left their name to this Tract only. A Tract of ground of which it may be truly said, that, as Italy is the Garden of the world, so Lombardy is the Garden of Italy, or the fairest Flower in all that Garden. A Country of so rich a mixture, that such another piece of ground for beautiful Cities, goodly Rivers, for Fields and Pastures shaded with such excellent fruits, for plenty of Fowl, Fish, Corn, and Vine, cannot be found again in our Western World. So that it is no wonder, that the two great Kings of France and Spain, have strived so eagerly, and with such an effusion of Christian blood for the Duchy of Millain, a part only (though the richest part) of this goodly Country; and but a spot of Earth compared to their own Dominions.

Anciently it was of more extent than now it is, containing besides the Principalities hereafter mentioned, the Provinces of Romandiola, and Trevigiana; even all, which in the infancy and growth of the Roman Empire, had the name of Gallia Cisalpina: called Gallia from the Gauls, who being drawn over the Alps by the taste of the sweet Italian Wines, in the time of Tarquinius Priscus King of Rome, under the conduct and command of Belovis Son of Ambriger King of the Celts, subdued the Natives, and possessed themselves of all the Country, from the West parts of the Tyrian Sea and Apennine Hills to the Adriatic; and from the Alps to the River Rubicon on the Northeast, and the River Arno on the South-East. Cisalpina it was called because it lay on that side of the Alps which was near to Rome, to difference it from Gallia on the other side of the Mountains, which had the name of Transalpina. It was also called Gallia Togata because the people of it being civilized, conformed themselves to the Roman habit: that on the other side of the Alps being called Braccata because they kept themselves to their former Mantles (resembling those now worn by the vulgar Irish) which by the Latines were called Bracæ. For though the word Bracæ in some of our common Dictionaries be rendered Gally-flops or Breaches (which possibly the word Breeches may be thence derived) which made me conceive that the habit heretofore of those Gauls was a kind of Trowsers, such as those usually worn by the Irish Foot-men; yet when I find in approved Authors, that it was Tunica Sca impolita, a Garment which they wore over their Coats and Cassocks, I conceive I had good reason to translate it otherwise.

They were generally divided into four great Nations, that is to say, 1. the Insubres, inhabiting from the Alps to the River Arno, and consequently spreading over the Dukedoms of Millain, Parma, Modena, Mantua, Piemont, and some part of the Dukedom of Florence. 2. The Commani who lay next the Insubres, possessing the greatest part of Trevigiana. 3. The Boii, taking up the rest of Trevigiana, with the Dukedom of Ferrara, and so much of Romandiola as lieth on the North-west side of the River Rubicon. 4. The Senones, who passing over the Rubicon inhabiting the rest of Romandiola and the Dukedom of Urbino. Of these the Senones (or Semnonæ as Ptolemy calls them) were of greatest fame. These were the men that under the conduct of Brennus, having defeated the Roman Armies at the Battle of Allia, followed their victory into Rome, which they sacked and burned: nothing made good in all the City but the Capitol only, which also had been taken by them, ni auferre dis dumebus vigilassent, as St. Austin scoffs it, if the Geese had not been more watchful than their Gods or Guards. Failing herein they compounded for 1000 pound weight of Gold to forsake the City: but before the money was received, they were assailed by Camillus, driven out of the Town, and vanquished in a late Battle, about eight miles off; who is therefore called Rome's second Founder. This happened Anno U. C. 364. Vanquished again at the River Aniene, by T. Quinctius the Dictator; and after that Anno U. C. 394, by the said Camillus, being then 80 years of age in the Pontine fields: they got the Boii to assist them, and after joynted with the Sannites, Tuscan, and other Nations in a common War. But being for the most part beaten, and the War carried to their own doors a little before the coming of Pyrhus into Italy, by M. Curius, the Consul: they were by him driven out of their own Country; and finally so slaughtered by Dolabella at the Lake of Padimon, Anno U. C. 470, that there was scarce any left of all that Nation, to brag that any of their Ancestors had set fire on Rome.

The Senones being thus destroyed, the Romans suffered the rest of the Gallick Nations to remain in quiet till the end of the first Punic War, when being grown of more strength, and at very good leisure, they took up Arms against the Boii, who leaving the like fortune as the Senones had found before, called to their Aid both the Insubres and Transalpines; making in all an Army of 50000 Foot, and 20000 Horse. Anno U. C. 528. Discomfited by Æmilius the Roman Consul, near Talannus a City of Tuscany, with the slaughter of 40000 of their men; they were left upon in their own Country shortly after by the Consul Flaminius, vanquished and mulcted with the loss of one half thereof, most of them after this disaster passing into Germany, where we are like to hear more of them. And for the Insubres and Commani, being thus left unto themselves (the remainders of the Transalpines excepted only) they were invaded the next year after, (Anno U. C. 431.) under the Consuls M. Claudius Marcellus, and Cornelius Scipio: to whom upon the loss of their Armies, and some of their best Towns, they did yield themselves: the Romans so becoming Masters of all this Country. And yet it was accomplished as a Province distinct from Italy, until the settling of the Empire in Augustus Caesar, who dividing Italy into eleven Regions, made three of them out of this Cisalpina; that is to say, Gallia, Venetia, and Italia Transpadana: as afterwards it made up four of the seven Provinces of the Dioecesis of Italy, according to the distribution of it which was made by Constantine. How it came with the rest of Italy into the power of the Lombards, and how from them taken by the French, with the rest of that Kingdom, had been shewn already. Won by the French and from the French transferred with the Empire to the Kings of Germany; it did so for preserve the reputation of a Kingdom, that the Emperors were sometimes Crowned at Millain with an Iron Crown for the Kingdom of Lombardy: as at Aiken (a Town of Cleveland) with a Silver Crown for the Realm of Germany; and with a Golden Crown at Rome, for the sacred Empire. But the Emperor being weakened by the Artifices of the Popes of Rome, this goodly Country was torn from it; and parcelled in conclusion, amongst many Princes, as it still continueth.

The Lombards being Masters of it, and having given it their own name, divided it by the River Po into Longobardia Cispadana, lying betwixt the Po and the Apennine Mountains; and Transpadana, lying betwixt the Po and the Alps: the first of which the old Romans called Æmilia, from Æmilius Lepidus, the Founder Founder of the City of Reggio (then called Regium Lepidi) once Proconsul of it. In the division of Italy by Augustus Caesar it had the name of Gallia. The other was by him honoured with the name of Italia Transpadana, by which name it was known in the times of Tacitus; and by him called, Florentissimum Italie latæ, the most flourishing part of all Italy. But this division being long since worn out of use, and the whole Country being cantoned into many Estates, as before was said, we will consider it at the present as it stands divided into the Dukedoms of Millain and Mantua, which with Transpadana, described already, make up Transpadana; and those of Modena, Parma, and Montferrat, which with the Principate of Piemont, make up Cispadana.

The Dukedom of MILLAIN.

THE Dukedom of MILLAIN hath on the East, the Estates of Mantua and Parma; on the West, Piemont, and some part of Switzerland, one of the Provinces of the Alps; on the North Marca Trevisiana; and on the South, the Apennine which parteth it from Liguria, or the State of Genoa. In elder times the habitation of the Insubres, originally a Tribe of the Helvi inhabiting in those parts of the Gallia beyond the Alps, which now make up the Dukedom of Burgundy; but crossing the Mountains with the rest of the Gallick Nation, spoken of before they settled here, built the City of Millain, and finally became one of the greatest Tribes of the Cisalpina Gauls: from thence this Country hath the name of Insubrium Ducatus in some of the nearer Modern Writers; but commonly is called Ducatus Mediolanensis, from Mediolanum, or Millain, the chief City of it.

Principal Rivers of it, 1. Padus, 2. Adda, 3. Ollina, and 4. Ticino; of which somewhat hath been said already; and besides those it hath also in it the Lake called anciently Laus Laris, but now Lago di Como (from the City of Como which it neighboureth) 60 miles in length.

The chief Cities and places of note are, 1. Modocem, not far from Millain, of more fame than greatness; the fame thereof arising from the Iron Crown kept in a Monastery here, wherefrom some of the Emperors have been crowned by the Archbishops of Millain. A custom taken up from the Kings of Offogabur, who are said to have first used the same, in testimony that they had won their Estates by Iron. 2. Pavia or Papia, seated on the Flood Ticino, united to Millain by John Galeazzi, the first Duke thereof; made an University by Charles IV. Anno 1361. And famous for the Battle in which Francis I. of France, was taken Prisoner by Charles V. Anno 1525. It is seated, as before was said, on the Flood Ticino, about four miles from the Po, or Padus: the River carrying at this City so great a breadth, that the Bridge over it is no less than 200 walking paces long, built of Free-stone, and covered over-head with a roof supported all along with Pillars. From this River the City it self was anciently called Ticinum; and took the name of Papia from its great affection to the Popes; or, as some say, quasi Parla Piorum (the two first syllables of those words being joyned together) by reason of the many godly men it did produce. It lieth in length from East to West, a very fair Street dividing it in the very midst: on the West side whereof are two handom Market-places, and a strong Castle built by Galeazzi, the first Duke of Millain; whose Tomb, together with that of Luiprandus King of the Lombards, are here still remaining; the Kings of Lombardy being so pleased with the situation of the place, that they made it the Seat-Royal of that Kingdom. The Cathedral here is one of the best endowed in Italy, if not in Europe is the Revenues of it amounting to 300000 *Crown*s per annum, 3. Como, the birth-place of both the Plinius; a rich and handom Town situate on the South-side of the Lacus Laris, which from this Town hath now the name of Lago di Como: into which Lake and through it runs the Adda, and yet the waters do not mingle: that of the River passing over those of the Lake. About this Lake are many fair Hopies and handom Villages, which do much beautifie the place; and in the midst thereof an Island called Comacina, in which there was a strong Forts in former times, wherein the Longobardian Kings did preserve their Treasure. 4. Lodi, or Lauda in the Latine, seated in a prosperous soil, and blessed with a painful and industrious people. 5. Nosara, situate upon an high Hill, in which live many ancient and noble Families: of right belonging to the Splintardi, as Dukes of Millain; but at the time when Magnum wrote, consigned over upon some conditions to the Dukes of Parma. But this Town, though it appertained to the Dukes of Millain, is situate within the Dukedom of Montferrat; and is, 6. Alexandria also, once a poor small Village, known by the name of Koboretum, from a Grove of Oaks adjoining to it: afterwards being raised to its present greatness, by the joyned Purges of the Citizens of Cronoma, Millain, and Placentia; in honour of the Emperor it was called Cæsaræ. But in short time these people siding with the Popes, drew on themselves the anger of the Emperor Frederick Barbaross; who having in a manner devastated the City of Millain, the people thereof, at the destruction of the City, retired to this Town; calling it in honour of Pope Alexander III. whose part they then took against the Emperor, by the name of Alexandria, which it still retaineth. It is now the strongest outwork of the whole Duchy, well fortified against all assaults and batteries, which may come from France. 7. Margnan, situate South from Millain, remarkable for the great defeat here given the Switzers, by King Francis I. and now the title of a Marquess. 8. Cronoma, situate on the Banks of the River Po, in a very rich and healthful soil; an ancient Colony of the Romans, but a beautiful City to this day; and of such fidelity to its Prince, that it hath got the name of Cronoma the faithful. It was built in the first year of the second Punic War, and burnt to the ground by Vipsianus's Soldiers, after the defeat of Titellius his Forces: which defeat was given under the Walls of this Town. For when Antonius Vipsianus General, first after his Victory entered into it, he went into a Bath to wash away the sweat and blood from his body: where finding the water somewhat too cold, he laid by chance, that it should anon be made hotter. Which words the Soldiers applying to their greedy desires, set fire on the Town, and spent four days in the pillage of it. By the encouragement of Vipsianus it was again re-edified, and is now grown famous for the high Tower, from which the by-word, Una turris in Cronoma, unus Petrus in Roma, unus portus in Ancona, 9. Millain, a fair Town, once the Metropolis of the Province of Liguria, and afterwards of the whole Diocese of Italy; called therefore Metropolis hæc Italica, the Metropolis or Mother City of Italy, as Dionysius one of the Bishops heretofore called the Metropolitan of Italy by S. Athanasius. At this time the fairest and the biggest of all Lombardy, having a Castle so strongly fortified, with natural and artificial Ramparts, that it is deemed impregnable. A City very populous, containing 200000 persons; and of great Trade, here being private Shops equalling the publick Store-houses of other places; the people consequently so rich, that the Wife of every Mechanick will flant it in her Silks and Taffeties. This City is said to have been built by the Gauls, 359 years before Christ. It is seven miles in circuit, and honoured with an University, wherein flourished Hermolus Barbarus, Calvus Rhodoginus, and Cardanus. Seated it is, in as commodious a Soil as any in Italy, environed with Water by two great Channels; the one drawn from the River of Addua, the other from the Tesio or Adige: which run hard by it, and convey all things to the City in great abundance, that things there are of very cheap rates; and add much also to the industry of the Inhabitants in the vending and dispersing of their Manufactures, which are of great esteem in most parts of the World. The buildings of the City generally are fair and stately, but three especially commended for their magnificence; that is to say, The Castle, the Hospital, and the Cathedral. For matter of Religion it doth use to glory, that Barnabas the Apostle was its first Bishop, and St. Ambrose one of his Successors; that formerly their Bishop stood on even terms with the Popes of Rome, and their Church as much privileged as that; and that since those times they have given unto the World four Popes, that is to say, Alexander II. Urban III. Celestine V. and of late Gregory XIV.

As for the fortunes of it, it continued in the power of the French, and the King of Italy of that Nation, from the destruction of the Lombards, till the Kingdom of Italy fell from the house of Charles the Great, and came at last into the hands of the German Emperours. Under them it continued till the time of Frederick Barbarossa, from whose obedience it revolted Anno 1161, in behalf of Pope Alexander III. the Emperour divers times defacing the City, and the people till ministering fresh occasions of dislike and quarrel. Beatrice the Wife of Frederick coming to see the City, without any intentions to it; was by the irreverent people first imprisoned, and then most barbarously used. For setting her upon a Mule, they turned her face towards the tail, which they made her hold instead of a Bridle; and having thus shewed her up and down the City, they brought her unshewn to one of the Gates, and there kicked her out. To revenge this horrible affront, the Emperour besieged and forced the Town; adjudging all the people to die without mercy, but such as would undergo this ransom. Between the buttocks of a skittish and kicking Mule, there was fattened a bunch of Figs; one or more of which, such as desired to live must snatch out with their teeth, their hands bound behind them, as the Mule was pacing through the streets. A condition which most of them accepted; and thereupon gave occasion to the custom used among the Italians: who when they intend to scoff or disgrace a man, are wont to put their thumb betwixt two of their fingers, saying, Ecco la Fico: a disgrace answerable to that of making Horns (in England) to him that is suspected to be a Cuckold. The City after this rebelling, and again taken by the Emperour, he levelled it unto the ground, pulled down the Walls; and caused the whole ground on which it stood, to be plowed up and sowed with Salts, seeming to threaten by that Emblem, that it should never be re-edified. Which notwithstanding, the City was not only new built again, but the Pope, with the help of the Milanese and Venetians, had at last the better of the Emperour; whom he enjoyed, after a vile submission, to undertake a journey to the Holy Land. Freed from the Emperour, they began to live after the form of a Republick; in which condition they continued about 56 years: when Orso, summoned Visconti (quasi his Comes, because he was Lord of Millan and Angerona) assumed the title to himself, and fetled it upon that Family after his decease; but so that for the most part they were under the command of the German Emperours, and to them accountable. Galeazzo I. so called (as some write) because the Cocks crowed more than ordinarily at the time of his birth, added to the Estate hereof the Cities of Crema, and Cremona. In the person of John Galeazzo it was advanced unto a Dukedom by the Emperour Venceslaus, but 100000 Crowns in ready money; which John increased to mightily in wealth and power, that he had 29 Cities under his Command; and died as he was going to Florence to be crowned King of Tuscany. To him succeeded John Maria, and after him his brother Philip: who in his life had married his only daughter (but illegitimate) to Francisco Sforza, the best Commander of his times; and at his death appointed Alfonso of Aragon, King of Naples, for his Heir and Successor. Before Alfonso could take any benefit of this designation, Sforza was quietly possessed both of the City and the loves of the people. This Francis Sforza (I must needs crave leave to tell this story) was the Son of James Attendola, a plain Country-man, who going to his labour with his Ax in his hand, whilst a great Army was patting by him, compared the misery and unpleasingness of his present condition, with those fair probabilities which a Martial life did present unto him. And being in a great dispute within himself what were best to do, he presently fell upon a resolution of putting the question to the determination of the Heavenly Providence; by calling his Ax unto the top of a Tree next to him: conditioning with himself, that if the Ax came down again, he would contentedly apply himself to his wonted labour; but if it hung upon the boughs, he would betake himself unto higher hopes, and follow the Army then in passage. He did so, the Ax hung upon the boughs, he went after the Army, and thrived to well in that employment, that he became one of the best Captains of his time, named de Cotignola from the place of his dwelling, and Sforza from the greatness of his noble courage. By Antonia the Daughter of Francis di C. Salis, the Lord of Carona, he was the Father of this Francis Sforza whom now we speak of, who was so fortunate a Commander in the Wars of Italy, that to oblige him to his Party, Philip the Duke of Millain bestowed his daughter upon him, and thereby a fair title to this great Estate, which he successively obtained against all Pretenders. In his Line it continued till the coming of Lewis XII. of France, the Son of Charles, and Nephew of Lewis, Dukes of Orleans, by Valentina, the sole Daughter of John Galeazzo the first Duke: who getting Duke Lodowick Sforza (betrayed by the Swissers) into his hands, carried him prisoner into France, and possessed himself of the Estate. Outed not long after by the Confederate Princes of Italy, who were jealous of so great a neighbour, he left the cause and quarrel unto Francis his next Successor in that Kingdom, in pursuance whereof, it is said by Bellay a French Writer, that the use of Muskets was first known. But Francis being in conclusion taken at the Battle of Pavie, and carried prisoner into Spain; for his release, was forced to release all claim unto this Estate. A release long before endeavoured by some French Politicians, because the pretensions hereunto had brought such damage unto that Crown; and no less eagerly opposed by Chancellor Prat (on the same reason, that Scipio Nasica did oppose the destruction of Carthage, that is to say, because it did not only keep the French Nation in continual discipline of War; but served for a purgation of idle and superfluous people. Yet notwithstanding this release, Francis renewed the War again, and laid siege to Millain, then under the command of Antonio di Leva, and a Spanish Garrison: during which War, the wretched Millainese, endured the worst of miseries. For first the Governour, under colour of providing pay for his Souldiers, got all the victuals of the Town into the Castle, to be sold again at his own price: which many of the poorer sort not able to pay, perished of Famine in the streets. And on the other side, his Souldiers which were quartered in most parts of the City, used when they wanted money, to chain up their Hosts, and then to put them to a ransom. Such as upon this barbarous usage fled out of the City, had their Goods confiscated: on which there followed such a disconsolate desolation, that the chief streets were over-grown with Nettles and Brambles. In this miserable estate it continued, till Charles the Emperour having totally driven out the French, restored it to Francis Sforza, brother to the last Duke Maximilian, and Son of that Lodowick, who had vainly endeavoured to restore it to himself, but had most imprudently taught the French the way into Italy. But this Francis dying without issue, and the house of Sforza failing in him, the Emperour entered on the Dukedom as right Lord thereof, and left the same to his Successors in the Realm of Spain. This said, we will sum up the whole story of this Estate, in the ensuing Catalogue of

The Lords and Dukes of Millain.

- 1277 1. Orso Visconti Archbishop of Millain.
- 1295 2. Matthew, Brothers Son to Orso, confirmed in his command of Millain by Albertus the Emperour.
- 1322 3. Galeazzo Visconti Son of Matthew, disfeited of his command by Lewis of Bavaria Emperour.
- 1329 4. Atto Visconti, Son of Galeazzo, confirmed in his Fathers power by the same Lewis the Emperour.
- 1339 5. Lucchino Visconti, Brother to Galeazzo.
- 1349 6. John Visconti, the Brother of Lucchino.
- 1354 7. Galeazzo II. Son of Stephen, the Brother of John.
- 1378 8. John Galeazzo, Son of the first Galeazzo, created by the Emperour Venceslaus, the first Duke of Millain, An. 1395.
- 1402 9. John Maria, Son of John Galeazzo, slain by the people for his horrible tyrannies.
- 1412 10. Philip Maria, the last of the Visconti, which commanded in Millain; a Prince of great power in swaying the affairs in Italy. He died Anno 1446; the Millainese for some years refusing their former liberty.
- 1446 11. Francis Sforza, in right of his Wife Blanch the base daughter of Philip seconded by the power of the Sword, admitted Duke by the general consent of the people of Millain, one of the Knights of the noble Order of the Garter.
- 1461 12. Galeazzo Sforza, a valiant but libidinous Prince, cruelly murdered by his own Subjects.
- 1477 13. John Galeazzo Sforza, privately made away (as it was supposed) by his Uncle Lodowick.
- 1494 14. Lodowick Sforza, the Son of Francis, and Brother of Galeazzo, who to secure himself of his ill-got Dukedom, drew the French into Italy.
- 1501 15. Lewis XII. of France, Son unto Charles and Nephew to Lewis Duke of Orleans, by Valentina Daughter to John the first Duke of Millain; vanquished Lodowick, carried him prisoner into France, and took the Dukedom to himself.
- 1513 16. Maximilian Sforza, the Son of Lodowick, restored to the Dukedom by the power of the Swissers, and Venetians; but again outed of it by Francis I. Son-in-law and Successor to King Lewis XII. in the Kingdom of France 1529. 17. Francis Sforza, Brother of Maximilian, restored to the Estate, and the French expelled by the puissance of Charles V. who after the death of this Duke Francis (the last of the Sforzas) An. 1535, united it for ever to the Crown of Spain.

This Dukedom is not now of such great extent, and power, as in former times; there being but nine Cities remaining of those 29, which were once under the command of the Dukes hereof: the rest being gotten in by the State of Venice, the Florentines; the Dukes of Mantua, and Parma. And yet is this accounted the prime Dukedom of Christendom (as Flanders was accounted the prime Earldom of it) affording the Annual Revenue of 800000 Ducats to the King of Spain. A good Revenue, might it come clear unto his Possessors. But what with the discharge of his Garrison-souldiers, the detraying of his Viceroy, the Salaries of Judges and inferior Ministers; it is conceived that he spends more on it than he getteth.

The Arms hereof are Argent, a Scepter Azure, Crowned Or; in his Gorge, an Infant Gulcr, which was the Coat-Armour of a Saracen, vanquished by Orso the first of the Visconti in the Holy Land.

Here are in this Dukedom, Archbishop 1. Bishops 6.

The Dukedom of MANTUA.

THE Dukedom of MANTUA, is bounded on the West, with Millain; on the East, with Komandula; on the North, with Marcia Trevigiana; and on the South, with the Dukedom of Parma.

The Country about Mantua is reasonably good, and yieldeth all sorts of Fruits being well manured: plentiful in Corn and Pastures, the very high-ways by the fields being planted with Elms, to train up the Vines which grow there intermingled in every place, as generally it is in all parts of Lombardy. But the Inhabitants are conceived not to be so civil and well-bred, as the rest of Italy's childh in their apparel, without mainly gravity, poor in the entertainment of their friends, and exacting all they can from strangers.

The places in it of most note are, 1. Mercaris, bordering next to Millain. 2. Basilica, a small, but pleasant habitation, belonging to some Princes of the Ducal Family; built with fair Chyltreyers towards the Street, in which Passengers may walk dry in the greatest rain. 3. Pontida, a small Village, but as famous as any in regard it was the place where Virgil was born; but generally said to be born in Mantua. Mantua Virgilio gaudet, as the old Verse is; because the Village is so near the City of Mantua: being but two miles distant, that his birth might very well be ascribed unto it. 4. Mantua, seated on the River Nincius, now called Sarce; which coming out of Lago di garda falleth not far off into the Po, from whence there is a passage unto Venice. By Nature strong, covered on three sides with a running water, half a mile in breadth; and on the fourth side with a Wall. The Dukes to take their pleasure on the Lakes and Rivers, have a Barge called the Bucentaur, five stories high, and capable of two hundred persons (wherein it had the name) furnished very richly both for state and pleasure. Onus the Son of Manto the Prophetess, the Daughter of Tirifus, is said to have been the Founder of it, and to have given unto it his Mother's names; but I more than doubt it, though Virgil a Native of those parts do report port it to; this City being one of those which the Tufcani built beyond the Appennine; as the founders Antiquaries do affirm. Made memorable (by whosever built at first) in the declining times of Christian purity, for a Council holden in it, An. 1061. wherein it was decreed that the choosing of the Pope should from thenceforth belong unto the Cardinals. A Prerogative which of old belonging to the Emperors, was first by Constantine III. furnished Paganinus, given to the Clergy and People of Rome, in the time of Pope Benedict II. Anno 684. resumed by Charles the Great, when he came to the Empire; and now appropriated only to the College of Cardinals. But to return unto the Town: on the East-side of a Bridge of about 500 paces long, covered over head, and born up with Arches, stands the Duke's Palace for the City; and not far thence the Domo, or Cathedral Church of St. Peter. The Palace very fair and stately, but far short for the pleasures and delights thereof, of his Palace at Merrislo, five miles from the City: which though it be of a low roof (after the manner of ancient buildings) yet it is very richly furnished, and adorned with very beautiful Gardens: able to lodge, and give content to the best Prince in Christendom. Here are also many other Towns, as 5. Caprens and 6. Lucera, of which nothing memorable.

As for the fortunes of this Dukedom, it is to be observed that Mantua followed for long time the fortunes of the Western Empire; till given by Otto II. Son to Theobald Earl of Canstff, for the many good services he had done him. Bonifacio who succeeded him, had to Wife Beatrice the Sister of Henry II. and by her was the Father of Matthildis, that famous Warriours, who carried so great a stroke in the state of Italy. Being dispossessed of her Estate by Henry III. she joined in Faction with the Popes, recovered all her own again, and dismembered from the Empire many goodly Territories, which at her death (having had three Husbands, but no issue) she gave in Fee for ever to the See of Rome Anno 1115. After her death, Mantua continued under the protection of the Empire. But that protection failing them, by little and little it was brought under the Family of the Bonacelli: who Lording it over a Free-people with too great severity, contracted such a general hatred, that Passavino, the last of them, was slain in the Market-place by the people, under the command and conduct of Lewis de Gonzaga, a noble Gentleman; who presently with great applause took to himself the Government of the Estate, Anno 1328. which hath continued in his house to this very day, with a great deal of lustre. Whose Successors take here as followeth, under the several titles of

The Lords, Marquesses, and Dukes of Mantua.

A. Chr.

- 1328 1. Lewis Gonzaga, the first of this Line, Lord of Mantua.
- 1366 2. Guido Son of Lewis.
- 1369 3. Lodovick or Lewis II. Son of Guido.
- 1382 4. Francis Gonzaga, Son of Lewis II. highly extolled by Pagio the Florentine for his Wisdom and Learning; who valiantly repulged the attempts made against his Estate, by John Galeaze, the first Duke of Millain.
- 1407 5. John Francisco Gonzaga, created the first Marquess of Mantua, by the Emperor Sigismund.
- 1444 6. Lodovick, or Lewis III. Son of John Francisco, who entertained the Emperor Frederick, and the King of Denmark, with great magnificence.

- 1478 7. Frederick Son of Lewis III.
- 1484 8. Francis II. Son of Frederick.
- 1519 9. Frederick II. Commander of the Armies of the Pope, and Florentines, entertained Charles V. with great solemnity; by whom he was made Duke of Mantua, 1530, and declared Marquess of Monferrat, in right of his Wife.
- 1540 10. Francis III. Son of Frederick the second Duke of Mantua, and Marquess of Monferrat.
- 1550 11. William, the Brother of Francis III. created the first Duke of Monferrat.
- 1587 12. Vincent, Son of William, Duke of Mantua and Monferrat.
13. Francis IV. Son of Vincent, had to Wife Margaret the Daughter of Charles Emanuel Duke of Savoy, and by her a Daughter named Mary; in whose behalf the Duke of Savoy undertook the War against her Uncle, for Monferrat.
- 1613 14. Ferdinand the Brother of Francis IV. succeeded him in both Estates, notwithstanding the opposition of the Duke of Savoy.
15. Vincent II. the Brother of Ferdinand, and of Francis IV.
- 1628 16. Charles Gonzaga, Duke of Nevers, in France, by his Mothers Line; and of Mantua, and Monferrat, by his Father Lewis Gonzaga, the third Son of Frederick I. Duke of Mantua; succeeded on the death of Vincent II. but not without great opposition of the Spanish Faction, who lacked Mantua, distressed Casal, and much impoverished both Estates. But the Business was at last composed by the Power of the French, and the Invetiture conferred upon him, by the hands of the Emperor.

The Territories of this Duke (reckoning in that of Monferrat also) are in circuit nigh unto those of Florence; but his Revenues fall much short, which amount to about 500000 Ducats only; but might be greater, if either the Duke would be burthened to his Subjects, as Florence is; or if he were not on all sides Land-locked from Navigation and Traffic.

The chief Order of Knighthood in these Dukedoms, is, of the Blood of our Lord JESUS CHRIST, instituted Anno 1608. The Author of it was Duke Vincent Gonzaga, when the Marriage was solemnized between his Son Francis and Lady Margaret, Daughter to the Duke of Savoy. It consisteth of twenty Knights, whereof the Mantuan Dukes are Sovereigns; and was allowed by Pope Paul V. The Collar hath Threads of Gold laid on fire, and interwoven with these words; Domine Probasti. To the Collar are pendent two Angels, supporting three drops of Blood, and circumscribed with Nihil illi triste recepto. It took this name, because in St. Andrews Church in Mantua, are laid to be kept as a most precious Relique, certain drops of our Saviours Blood (thou canst not, O Reader, but believe it) with a piece of the Sponge.

The Arms of Mantua are Argent, a Cross Pure Gules, between four Eagles Sable; membered of the second, under an esccheon in Fesse, charged quarterly with Gules, a Lion Or, and Or three Bars Sable.

The Dukedom of MODENA.

THE Dukedom of MODENA containeth the Cities of Modena and Reggio, with the Territories adjoining to them: both of them situate in that part of Lombardy which is called Cispadana; and consequently partake of the pleasures and commodities of it.

The people of this Dukedom are said to be better natured than most of Italy: those of Modena being quick in their reformation; calm to be pacified when wronged, and friendly in their entertainment of Strangers; the Reggians being affable, of present wits, and fit for any thing they can be employed in: the women in both Towns of a middle disposition, neither too courtly, nor too froward, as in other places.

The first principal City is that of Modena, anciently better known by the name of Mutina, and famous in those times for the first battle betwixt Antony and Augustus Caesar; this latter being then not above eighteen years of age, and yet made head of a new League against Antony, whom the Senate and people looked upon as a common Enemy. The managing of the War was left to Herfius and Panfa then Consuls; the fortune of the day foecal, that Antony left the field, and the Consuls their lives leaving Augustus the absolute command of a powerful Army, in whose favors he so cunningly did work himself, that he made them the foundation of his future greatness. It was at that time a Roman Colony, but being ruined by the fury of the Goths and Lombards; was afterwards new built at the charge of the Citizens, situate near the Appennine in a very good soil, and of indifferent fair buildings. In the distractions of Italy betwixt the Emperors and the Popes, Guido the Pope's Legate, and then Bishop thereof, configned it over to Azo of the house of Este, Lord of Ferrara, Anno 1304. the Pope himself consenting to it upon the payment of a yearly tribute of 100000 Crowns: since which time it hath been for the most part in the power of that house: Borjus the Marquess of Ferrara, being by Frederick III. made Duke of Mantua, 2. Reggio, the second Town of note, hath tasted much of the same fortune; at first a Roman Colony called Legium Lepidi, afterwards ruined by the Goths when they came first into Italy, repaired and compassed with a Wall by its own Inhabitants, and for a time under the command of the Earls of Canstff. But being weary of that yoke, they recovered their liberty; which being unable to maintain in those boiling times, they gave themselves unto Obizo the Father of Azo, Anno 1292. and after that in the year 1326, to the See of Rome, passing through many other hands, it was at last sold for 60000 Ducats to the Visconti, Lords of Millain, Anno 1370 and in the end recovered by the house of Este, Anno 1409 and gave the title of a Duke to the aforesaid Borjus, whom Frederick III. made Duke of Modena, and Reggio, 1452.

The Successors of this Borjus are before laid down in the succession of Ferrara; who held the whole Estate together till the death of Alphonso the last Duke. He dying without lawful Issue, Anno 1595. left his Estate to Cesar de Este, his Nephew by a base Son called Alphonso also; betwixt whom and Pope Clement VIII. a War was threatened for the whole: but at last compromised upon these conditions, That the Church of Rome should have Ferrara, with all the Lands and Territories appertaining to it, as the Estate anciently holden of that See; and that Modena and Reggio, being Imperial Fiefs, should remain to Cesar; but to be held in fee of the Papal Throne. Duke Cesar to have leave to carry away all his moveable goods, to sell such of his Lands as were not of the ancient domain of the Dukedom; and to have one half of the Ordinance and Artillery. By which agreement the Cities of Modena and Reggio, became a new erected State, distinct, and independent of any other: each City being well fortified, and garrisoned, and furnished with Ordnance for defence thereof. But what they yield unto the Prince in the way of Revenue, and what Forces he is able to raise out of his Estates, I cannot positively determine: but by the Tribute formerly paid unto the Popes for the City of Mutina, and the rich Territory of both Towns, and the great Revenues of the Dukes of Ferrara; I conceive they cannot yield less than 100000 Crowns of yearly Income. The Arms of this Duke the same with those of Ferrara, before blazoned.

The Dukedom of PARMA.

THE Dukedom of PARMA hath on the North the Dukedoms of Millain and Mantua, from which it is parted by the Po, on the South the Appennine, which divideth it from Liguria; on the East the Country of Modena and Romandiola, from which last parted by the River Sciltema, now called Panaro; on the West Monferrat: situate, as Modena is, in Lombardia Cispadana; and much of the same nature both for soil, and air, and other the commodities of those parts of Italy.

The principal Cities of it are, 1. Parma, an ancient City, and made a Colony of the Romans at the end of the second Punic War; as Mutina and Aquilia at the same time were. It is seated on a small River of the same name, which runneth almost through the midst of it; beautified with very handfom buildings, and peopled by a race of ingenious men, whether they do betake themselves to Arts or Arms. The grounds about this City are of excellent Pasturage, and yield great plenty of the Cheese which is called Parmesin. 2. Placencia, seated on the Po, one of the first Colonies which the Romans planted amongst the Cisalpine Gauls; and famous for the resistance which it made both to Annibal, and Asdrubal, who severally in vain besieged it: made afterwards the Metropolis of the Province of Emilia, yet nothing the less beautiful for so great an age. The fields adjoining have the same commendation with those of Parma, for most excellent Cheese; but go beyond for Salt-pits and Mines of Iron, which the other wanteth. 3. Mirandula, a proper Town built in the time of Constantine the Son of Constantine the Great: the Patrimony of the noble Family of the Pieri (of which was Pierre de Mirandula that renowned Scholar) but held by them as Feudatories to the Dukes of Parma. 4. Briscella, called anciently Briscellum, not far from the chief City of Parma; of no great note at the present time, but memorable in the Roman story for the death of the Emperor Obizo, who here killed himself. For hearing here that his Forces were overthrown by Valens, and Cecina, Commanders of the Forces of Vitellius, then his Competitor for the Empire; he rather chose to fall by his own Sword, than that the Romans should be forced, for his sake, to renew the War. And this he did with so much honour to himself, that many of his Soldiers slew themselves at his Funeral Pile; not out of conspicuousness of crime, or for fear of punishment, but to testify their affections to him, and to follow such a brave example as was laid before them. So as we may truly say of him, as he is said by Tacitus to have said of himself, vixi. Alii divitum imperium tenuerunt, nemo tam fortiter reliquit. 5. Monticella, in the middle way almost between Parma and Placencia, and and opposite unto Cremona, a chief Town of the Dutchy of Millain, from which parted by the River Po.

These Towns (as others in these parts) have been partakers of the diversities of fortune, as being (after the declining of the Western Empire) sometimes under the Frentians, most times under the Millanys; and at last conquered by Pope Julius II. in the confusions and distractions of the Dukedom of Millain, under the two last Princes of the House of Sforza. By Paul III. being of the House of the Farnesjs, the Cities of Parma and Placentia with their Appendices, were given unto his Son Petro Alsigni (or Petrus Aloysius, as the Latine call him) with the title of Duke, Anno 1549. The Signeury of Camerino, which he had lately taken from the Dukes of Urbis, being given in recompence to the Church. This Petro being a man of most vicious life, had amongst other villanies committed an unspeakable violence on the person of Cosmus Chirius the Bishop of Favenns; and soon after poisoned him. For which most detestable Fact, he received no other chastisement of his Father than this, Eae vitia me non commotione didicit, that he was sure he had not learnt those vices by his example. But going on in these wicked courses, he was slain at last by Count John Aguczzola, and Placentia, after a short siege, yielded to Ferdinand Gonzaga (Viceroy in Millain for the Emperor Charles V.) conceived to be privy to the murder. Ottavian, the Son of Petro Luigi, hearing what had hapned, fortified himself in Parma as well as he could; but being hated by the new Pope, and distrustful, not without good cause of the Emperor's purposes, he had quite lost all, if Henry II. of France, had not taken him into his protection. For the Emperor Charles fully determined (notwithstanding that Ottavian had married his base Daughter) to have made himself Lord of the Town; and the French King was loth to see to great a strength added to the Emperor's possession in Italy. When the War had now lasted four years, Philip II. (who afterward succeeded Charles) considering how necessary it was for his affairs in Italy, to have this Ottavian his friend, restored unto him the City of Plaiance or Placentia, and so withdrew him from the French Faction, Anno 1557. Yet because he would be sure to keep his house in a perpetual dependence on Spain, he restored it not absolutely at the present, but held the Citadel thereof with a Spanish Garrison, till the year 1583, when in regard of the good services, which Alexander Prince of Parma had done him in his Wars against the Hollanders, and others of the revolted Provinces; he caused it to be surrendered into the hands of his Father Ottavian. By which, and by his settling upon this House the Town and Territory of Novara, in the Dukedom of Millain, and other personal favours which they have conferred on the Princes of it; the Kings of Spain seem to have given some satisfaction to this House for stepping betwixt them and the Kingdom of Portugal; to which they might have made such a probable title, as would have troubled his Estate, had they stood upon it.

The Dukes of Parma.

- A. Chr.
1549 1. Petro Luigi Farnesjs, Son to Paul III. made by the Pope, his Father, the first Duke of Parma.
1550 2. Ottavian Farnesjs, Son to Petro Luigi, married Margaret base daughter of Charles V. afterwards Governours of the Netherlands.
3. Alexander, Son of Ottavian and Margaret of Austria, one of the most renowned Soldiers of his time, Governour of the Netherlands for King Philip II.

- 1592 4. Raimutio Farnesjs, Son of Alexander and Mary of Portugal, eldest Daughter of Edward Son to King Emmanuel; one of the Competitors for that Crown.
5. Odoardo Farnesjs, Son of Raimutio.

The Dukedom of MONT-FERRAT.

THE Dukedom of MONT-FERRAT, is situate betwixt Lombardy and Piemont, on the Rivers of Tenarus and Po, on the East, and West; extended North and South, in a line or branch, from the Alpes to the borders of Liguria; of which last it was sometimes counted part, and called Liguria Cisapennina for distinction sake.

It took this name either a monte ferrato, from some Mountain of it stord with Iron; or else a monte feraci, as some rather think, from the fertility of the Mountains. And to say truth, though the whole Country seem to be nothing else than a continual heap of Mountains; yet are they Mountains of such wonderful fruitfulness, that they will hardly give place to any Valley in Europe.

The principal River of it is the Tenarus, above mentioned, which springing out of the hills about Sarecin, a Town of the Marquise of Saluzzez, falleth into the Po not far from Pavie. The principal Cities of it are 1. Alba, called by Pliny Alba Pompeia, situate on the banks of the said River, in a rich and fertile soil, but a very bad air: near to which, in a poor Village called Zobia the Emperor Perennis was born. Who being of mean and obscure Parents, after the death of Commodus, was called by the Conspirators to the Roman Empire. But being over-zealous to reform the corruptions of the Soldiers, he was by the Pretorian Guards (hating their Princes for their virtues, as much as formerly for their vices) most cruelly murdered; and the Imperial dignity fold to Julianus, for 25 Sesteriums a man. 2. Casal, vulgarly called St. Vas, from the Church there dedicated to St. Evasius (or St. Vas, as they speak it commonly) the strongest Town in all this Country; well built and peopled with many ancient and noble Families, of which the Family of St. George is one of the principal; and made a Bishops See by Pope Sixtus IV. Anno 1474. It was in former times the chief seat of the House of Montferrat, and for that cause compassed with a strong Wall, and a fair Castle: but of late fortified after the modern manner of Fortifications, and strengthened with an impregnable Citadel by Duke Vincenz Gonzagas as the surest Key of his Estate, in which new Citadel the Governour of the Province holds his usual residence. 3. Aigue, in Latine Aquensis, famous for its Baths or Fountains of hot and Medicinal waters. 4. St. Savoyens, where there is a very strong Fortrefs, as there is also in 5. Posellure, or Pont di Sura, so called of the River Sura 6. Ogniano, anciently Occimianum, the old seat of the first Marquesses of this Montferrat. 7. Belzale. 8. Liburn, and many others of less note.

Here are also within the limits of this Dukedom, the Towns of Ast, Cherian, and Chivasso, belonging to the Dukes of Savoy, in the description of whose Country we may speak more of them, together with Novara and Alexandria, appertaining to the Dukedom of Millain, which we have spoken of already. And hereunto also I refer the strong (and in those times) impregnable Fortrefs, by the Latine Historians called Fraxinetum, from some Grove of Athes near unto it: situate in the advantages of the Mountains, and not far from the Sea, by consequence consequence better able to defend it self and admit relief; and therefore made the receptacle or retreat of the Saracens, at such time as they had footing in these parts of Italy. First took and fortified by them in the year 891. recovered afterwards by the prowess and good Fortune of Orbo the Emperor, deservedly furnished the Great, about sixty years after. Of great note in the stories of those middle times. By Luiprandus placed near the borders of Provence; by Blondus, and Leander, near the River Po, and the Town of Valenza, once called Forum Fulvis and finally, by Sigimius in the Coelian Alps; and so most fit unto be referred to this Country, though now so desolated that there is no remainders of the ruins of it.

This Country was made a Marquise by Orbo II. 985. one of the seven by him created and given to the seven Sons of Waleran of Saxony, who had married his Daughter Adelbeide. A Military Family, conspicuously eminent in the Wars of Greece, and the Holy-Land; where they did many acts of singular Merit: inasmuch as Baldwin and Conrade, issuing from a second branch hereof, were made Kings of Jerusalem; and Boniface one of the Marquesses, got the Kingdom of Thessaly, and many fair Estates in Greece. But the Male-issue failing in Marquess John, the Estate fell to Theodorus Paleologus, of the Imperial Family of Constantinople, who had married the Heir-General of the House; continuing in his name till the year 1534. when it fell into the hands of the Dukes of Mantua. In the person of Duke William Montferrat raised to the honour of a Dukedom, as it still continueth the best and richest part of the Duke's Estate, and the fairest flower in all his Garden. The residue of the story may be best collected out of the following Catalogue of

The Marquesses of Montferrat.

- A. Chr.
185 1. William, one of the Sons of Waleran and Adelbeide, made the first Marquess of Montferrat.
2. Boniface the Son of William.
3. William II. who accompanied the Emperor Conrade III. and St. Lewis of France to the Holy-Land.
1183 4. Boniface II. Son of William II. his younger Brother, William being designed King of Jerusalem, and Reynor another of them made Prince of Thessaly, succeeded his Father in Montferrat. Aiding his Nephew Baldwin, the Son of William, in recovering the Kingdom of Jerusalem; he was took prisoner by Guy of Lusignan, Competitor with him for that title.
5. William III. Son of Boniface, poisoned in the Holy-Land, where he endeavoured the restoring of his Brother Conrade, to that languishing Kingdom.
6. Boniface III. Son of William III. for his valour in taking of Constantinople, made King of Thessaly.
1254 7. Boniface VI. Son of Boniface III. added Veroli and Ephoredium unto his Estate.
8. John, surnamed the Just, the last of this house.
9. Theodorus Paleologus Son of the Emperor Andronicus Paleologus the elder, and Toland his Wife, Daughter of Boniface IV.
10. John Paleologus, Son of Theodorus.
11. Theodorus II. Son of John, a great builder and endower of Religious houses.

12. Jacobus Johanner, Son of Theodorus II.
13. John III. eldest Son of Jacobus Johanner.
1464 14. William IV. Brother of John III. Founder of the City and Monastery of Casal.
1487 15. Boniface V. Brother of John and William, the two last Marquesses, invested by the Emperor Frederick IV. Blanca Maria, the Daughter of William, surrendering her Estate unto him.
16. William V. Son of Boniface V.
1518 17. Boniface VI. Son of William V.
1530 18. John George, Brother of William V. succeeded his Nephew in the Estate which he held but four years. After whose death, Anno 1534. this Marquise was adjudged to Frederick the first Duke of Mantua, who had married Margaret, Daughter of William V. and next Heir to George.

Whose Successors may be seen in the former Catalogue of the Dukes of Mantua.

The Arms hereof are Gules, a Chief Argent.

Here are in this Estate, Archbishops 0. Bishops 4.

And now according to my method I should proceed to the description and story of the Principality of Piemont, the last and most Western part of Italy. But being it lieth partly in, and partly at the foot of the Alpes, was anciently a part of the Province called Alpes Coele, and is now part of the Estate of the Duke of Savoy: we will defer till we come to those Alpine Provinces, which are next to follow. And so much shall suffice for Italy, in which there are, besides those of Piemont,

And so much for Italy.

OF THE ALPES.

BEfore we can come out of Italy into France, we must cross the Alpes; a ridge of Hills where-with (as with a strong and defensible Rampart) Italy is assured against France and Germany. They are said to be five days journey high, covered continually with Snow, from the whitemests whereof they took this name; that in the Sabine Dialect being called Alpum, which in the Latine was called Album.

They begin about the Mediterranean or Ligustick Seas, and crossing all along the Borders of France and Germany, extend as far as to the Gulf of Comero, in the Province of Istria; and are in several parts called by several names, which we will mutter up as they lie in order from the Mediterranean to the Adriatick. And first those which lie nearest to the Mediterranean, are for that cause called Maritime, from the nearness to Liguria, called by some Ligustica. 2. Then follow those called Cottia, from Cottius, a King of the Allobroges; And 3. Those named Graia, from the passage of Hercules and his Graecian Followers of which, both amongst the Poets and Historians, there is very good evidence. 4. After we come to the Penine, so named from the march of Annibal and his Carthaginians, whom the Latine Writers call by the name of Penni; or from the Mountain-God Pannus, worshipped by the Veragi, the Inhabitants of it. 5. Next come we to the Lepontia, so named from Lepontii, who did there inhabit: As 6. the Rhetica, which lie next to them, from the Rhetii, once a powerful people of that mountainous tract. 7. Then follow those called Julia, from the passage of Julius Caesar over them, in his march towards Gaul; and so at last we come unto those called Carnica, extending to the shores of the Adriatick, denominated from the Carni who did there inhabit, and who gave name also to Carniola, an adjoining Province.

The ancient Inhabitants of these mountainous Countries, besides the Allobroges, Veragi, Lepontii, Rheti, and Carni, spoken of before; where the Sedani, Salii, Valaisers, Yaemiti, and divers others of less note and estimation: all vanquished by the indefatigable industry of the Romans. After whose subjugation, and the settlement of the Roman Empire, these mountains, and some part of the Vales adjoining; made five several provinces; viz. the Province of the Cottian Alps, containing Wallisland, and Piemont. Secondly of Rhetia Prima, comprehending the Grison, and part of the Dukedom of Millain, now in possession of the Swissers both which were members of the Dioceses of Italy. Thirdly, of the Alpes Maritimae, now part of Dauphine and Provence. Fourthly, of the Graia and Penine Alps, and the greatest part of Maxima Sequanorum, including some part of Savoie, and most part of Switzerland; both which were members of the Diocese of Gaul. And fifthly, of Noricum Mediterraneum, comprehending Carniola, Carinthia, and the parts near hand, which were members of the Diocese of Illyricum Occidentale. The people anciently, as now, by reason of their drinking Snow-water, dissolving from the tops of the Hills, and sometimes falling thence with as great a violence as the Cataracts of Nile are said to do; were generally troubled with a swelling in the throat, which the Latines call Struma: being the same with that which we call the Kings-Evil; because by special privilege curable by the Kings of France and England. Quis tumidum guttur miratur in Alpibus? as the Poet hath it.

Of these vast Hills, the lowest are the Carnice and Maritime, lying nearest to the several Seas before remembered: The Cottia and the Graia are so high, but that the passages lie open for the most part of the year. Thereof, by reason of their deep and dreadful precipices, their tedious and steep ascents, narrow ways, dangerous craggy Rocks, fierce whirlwinds, and huge balls of Snow, tumbling with an incredible violence from the tops of the Mountains; are hardly passable by horse, nor at all by Waggons. And yet amongst these dreadful Hills, there are observed to be some Valleys of great fertility, not giving ground for fruitfulness to the best in Europe; and for the sweetness of the temperature going much beyond them. With such an equal hand, doth the heavenly Providence dispense the benefits of Nature to his whole Creation; that plenty bordereth upon want, and pain on pleasure.

And yet for all the Difficulty and danger of these Alpine Passages, Conventuofness, or Curiosity, or Desire of Conquest, have found away to make them passible in many places; and that not only for private and particular Passengers, but for vast Multitudes and numerous Armies, such as those led by Annibal and Julius Caesar. But especially the barbarous people found out five ways to break into Italy, which hath been since much travelled by divers Nations, of which three be out of France, and two out of Germany. The first from France is through Provence, and do close to the Ligustick Seas; easiest for private Passengers, but too strait and narrow for great Armies: there being many passages in the Country of Nizza, so narrow, that ten men may make head against ten thousand; as in that called the Pass of the Virgin, for one. The second is over the Hills called Genèvre, into the Marquisate of Saluzzesi, and to the other parts of Lombardy; and was the way that Charles VIII. marched towards Naples, and by the Italians, is commonly called Strada Romana, because the ordinary Passage betwixt France and Rome. The third way is over the greater Centis, (which some call the lesser St. Bernard) to Aost, or Turin; which (if we may believe antiquity) was first opened by Hercules, and after followed by Annibal: who found the Passages so closed up, that he was forced to break his way (as Plutarch telleth us) with Fire and Vinegar, whence that to memorable a saying, Viam Annibal, aut invenit, aut facit. From the passage of those Worthies, this Tract, and that adjoining were called Alpes Graia, and Penina. Or if (as others think) Annibal took the former way, and came directly upon Turin, which Town it is most certain that he took in his march: then these Penine must take name from the Passage of Adrubal, or of some part of Annibal's Army, which probably was too great to go all one way: or else from the Mountain God Panninus, as before was said.

The first way out of Germany into Italy, is through the Country of Grison, by the Valtolin, which the Spaniards seized into his hand. So that by the keeping of the Velthyn, or Valtolin, and manning of the Fort Fuenter, which he also erected; he was in a manner the Lord of this passage: not only to the discontent of the Natives, but to the distaste of his neighbours the Savoyards and Venicians. The other way out of Germany into Italy, is through the Country of Tirol by the Towns of Innsbruck, and Trent. This passage is commanded by the Castle and Fort of Eberberg, seated on the Confines of this Country towards Suecia, and from Innsbruck, is two days journey distant. Which Fort, in the War which the Protestant Princes made against Charles V. was surprized by Captain Schertelin, so to hinder the coming of the Pope's Forces into Germany: for which the Emperor so hated him, that when all the rest of that Faction were pardoned, he only continued a Proscript, his head being valued at 4000 Crowns. The taking also of this Fort, and the Castle adjoining, by D. Maurice of Savoie made the said Charles then being in Innsbruck, to fly out of Germany; and shortly after to resign his Empire to his Brother Ferdinand.

Out of these Mountains rise the Springs of many of the most renowned Rivers in these vast parts of the World; as 1. The Rhine, which springeth from two several Fountains, the one which they call the Nearer Rhine, out of the Lepontia; and the other which they term the Vorder, or further Rhine, out of the Rhetica, which meet together about a Dutch mile from Chur the chief Town of the Grison; and so go on by Constance to Germany. 2. Rhofne, which riseth in that part of the Lepontia, which is called Die Furche, about two Dutch miles from the head of the Nearer or Hinder Rhine, and so through Wallisland in France. 3. Padus, or Po, which hath his head in a branch of the Cottian or Cedrian Alps, heretofore called Mons Pessulus, and so through Piemont into Italy; out of them also spring the Rivers of Russe, Durance, and Aberist, the first a Dutch, the second a French, and the third an Italian River also; not to say any thing of others of inferior note. The great Lakes which are found in this Mountainous Tract, we shall hereafter meet with in their proper places.

Let us next look upon the Countries and Estates here situate, which bordering upon Italy, France, and Germany, and partaking somewhat of them all, do belong to neither; but reckon themselves to be free and absolute Estates supreme, and independent upon any others, as indeed they are. Such other of these Alpine Countries, which are under the command of the German Princes, as some parts of Schwarzen and Bavaria; together with Tirol, Carniola, and the rest which belongs to Austria, shall be considered in the History of those States and Princes, to which of right they do belong. But for the rest, which as they lie entire together without intermixture, so they are absolute in themselves, and owe nor suit nor service unto any other, we will consider them in this place, under the name of the Alpes, or the Alpine Provinces.

The ALPES then, or the Alpine Provinces, call them which you will, are bounded on the East with Tirol in Germany, and the Dukedom of Millain and Monferrat in Italy, on the West, with Provence, Dauphine, and La Bresse, parts of the Continent of France, on the North, with the County of Burgundy in France, and Suecia or Schwarzen in Highb Germany; and on the South, with Lombardy, and a branch of the Mediterranean Sea. Called in the middle times by the name of Burgundia Transjurana, because it contained that part of the Kingdom of Burgundy, which lay beyond the Mountain Tour. A Mountain which beginning near the City of Basle, and not far from the Rhine, passeth South-ward by the Lakes of Bieler-Zee, Neuchamber-Zee, and that called Lemane, till it come almost unto the Rhofne: dividing by that means the Provinces of Switzerland, and Savoie, from the Country of Burgundy.

It lieth under the sixth Climate, and some part of the seventh, so that the longest day in Summer is fifteen hours and three quarters. Of different nature in regard both of Soil and People; which will best shew it self in the survey of the several Provinces, into which divided that is to say, 1. the Dukedom of Savoie, 2. the Signeury of Geneva; 3. the Reforms of Wallisland; 4. the Conton of the Swissers; and 5. the Leagues of the Grison. Which several States, though they be reckoned to belong to the German Empire, and that the Bishops of Chur, Sion, and Basle, are generally accounted for Princes of it: yet they neither come unto the Diet, nor are subject to the publick Taxes, nor comprehended within any of those ten Circles into which the Empire is divided.

The Language herein spoken partakes somewhat of all three, as before was said: the French being wholly spoken in Savoie, the lower Wallisland, and generally by the Swissers, bordering on the Lake Leman; and the Dutch being common to the greatest part of the Swissers, the Grison about Chur, and the upper Wallisland; and finally the Italian used by the generality of the Grison, the Prefectures appertaining unto them, and the Swissers both in Piemont, and those parts of Savoie which lie next unto it.

The principal Souldiers of these mountainous Provinces, 1. Rodolph, Earl of Habsburg, the Founder of the present Austrian Family. 2. Thomas, and 3. Peter, Earls of Savoie, this last furnished Charlemain II. 4. Emanuel Philibert, one of the later Dukes heretofore, Commander of the Armies of the King of Spain. 5. John Tserelli, commonly called Count Tilly, General of the Imperial Armies in the War of Germany. For Scholars of more special note, for which we are beholden to these Countries, we have 1. Philip Theophrastus Bombasius a Boscimam, commonly called Paracelsus, the Author, or Instigator of Chymical Physick; born in the Mountains of Helvetia, as he faith himself: a man of most prodigious parts, and of no mean vices. 2. Zuinglius, one of the chief Agents in the Reformation. 3. Musculus, and 4. Oecolampadius, two Divines, his Seconds. 5. Henry Bullinger, one of the same profession also. 6. Sebastian Castelle, of as much learning as the best of them, though of different judgment. 7. Dan. Tassanus the Hebrician. To which we may add 8. Calvin also, who though he had his birth in France, had his being here; and never grew to any eminency in Fame or Learning, till he was settled in Geneva.

For matter of Religion, it is of a very mixt condition also in all these Countries: that of the Romish only having publick countenance in the Dukedom of Savoie, and Piemont; but so that the Reformed is tolerated in some parts thereof; especially in the next parts of Dun- phine, to which the neighbourhood of Geneva gives a great increase. In Switzerland there are four Cantons which are wholly for the Reformation, viz. Zurich, Bern, Basle, and Schaffhausen: Seven that stand wholly for the Doctrine of the Church of Rome, i. e. Uren, Schwyz, Unterwalden, Lucern, Zug, Friburg, and Solothurn: In Appenzel, and Glaris, they allow of both. The Grisons are confutedly divided betwixt both Religions; but the Italian Prefectures admit no other but the Romish. The cause of which division came upon the preaching of Zuinglius, a Canon of the Church of Zurich: who being animated with Luther's good success in Germany, began about the year 1519, to preach against the Mass and Images, and other the corruptions of the Church of Rome. In which his Party so increased, that on a public Disputation, which was held at Zurich, the Mass was abrogated in that Canton by the authority of the Senate, Anno 1526. and Images destroyed at Bern, 1528. After which prosperous beginnings, the Reformation began to spread it self amongst the Confederates; and had prevailed farther both in France and Germany, but for a difference which arose betwixt him and Luther about the Sacrament of the Supper: in which Luther did not only maintain a real Presence, but a Consubstantiation also in the sacred Elements; which Zuinglius maintained to be only a bare sign and representation of Christ's blessed Body. For reconciling this difference, wherein the enemies of both did extremely triumph; a Conference was held between them at Marburg, a Town of Hesse, by the procurement of that Landgrave, but without success: Luther professing that he durst not agree in that point with Zuinglius, Ne principes suas interpretationes tantopere Pontificis exosa, magis inviol redderet; for fear of drawing too great hatred on the Princes of his own profession. From this time forwards all brake out into open flames, the names of Ubiquitarians, and Sacramentarians, being reciprocally cast upon one another: to the great hindrance of the cause which they had in hand: yet to that the Lutheran opinions got ground in Germany, the Zuinglians amongst these Mountains, and in France it self; and finally prevailed by the means of Calvin in many parts in Germany also. But heretofore more hereafter in convenient place.

As for the story of those Countries, before they were divided into so many hands, we are to know that the old Inhabitants hereof (mentioned before) were conquered severally by the Romans: as shall be shewn in the description of the several Provinces. Won from the Romans by the Burgundians, in the time of Honorius the Western Emperor, they became a member of their Kingdom; except the Country of the Grisons, and some parts of Switzerland, which fell under the Alans: united afterwards in the new Kingdom of Burgundy, of the French erection, when subdued by that Nation. But Charles the Bald, the last of the French Kings of Burgundy having united it to the Kingdom of France, divided that Kingdom into three Estates; that is to say, the Dukedom of Burgundy on this side of the Saône, the Dukedom of Burgundy beyond the Saône, and the Dukedom of Burgundy beyond the Jura. This last, containing the greatest part of all these Alpine Provinces (except Piemont only) was by the said Charles given to Conrad a Saxon Prince; the Son of Witkind III. and younger Brother of Robert, the first Earl of Anjou; by the name of Earl of Burgundy Transjurane or Burgundy beyond the Jura. Rodolph his Son and Successor, by Ender the King of France, his Cousin German, was honoured with the title of King: to make him equal at the least, with Bofon Earl of Burgundy beyond the Saône, whom Charles the Great, about the same time had made King of Arles.

But Rodolph finding it offensive to the German Emperor, abandoned it on the death of Ender, and took to himself the title of Duke. The residue of the story we shall have in the following Catalogue of The Earls, Dukes and Kings of Burgundy Transjurane.

1. Conrad the first Earl of Burgundy Transjurane.
- 890 2. Rodolph, Earl, King, and Duke of Burgundy Transjurane.
- 912 3. Rodolph II. elected King of Italy against Berengar; which title he exchanged with Hugh de Arles, who was chosen by another Faction, for the possession of the Kingdom of Arles and Burgundy; on the assuming of which Crown, he resigned this Dukedom to his Brother Bofon.
4. Bofon the Brother of Rodolph II. succeeded his Brother in the Dukedom of Burgundy, beyond the Jura; as afterwards he succeeded Rodolph, his Brothers Son, in the Kingdom of Arles and Burgundy.
- 965 5. Conrad II. Son of Bofon, King of Arles and Burgundy and Duke of Burgundy Transjurane.
- 990 6. Rodolph III. Son of Conrad, who dying without Issue, left his Estates to Henry furnished the Black, the Son of his Sister Gisela, by Conrad II. Emperor and King of Germany: united to unto the Empire, till by the bounty and improvidence of some following Emperors, it was Cantoned into many parts, of which more anon.

It is now time to lay aside this discourse as to the general condition and affairs of these Alpine Provinces; and to look over the particulars: beginning first with the Estate of the Duke of Savoy, situate wholly in the Mountains, and lying next to Italy, where before we left.

The Dukedom of SAVOY.

THE Dukedom of SAVOY is bounded on the East with Milan and Montferrat in Italy; on the West, with Dauphine in France; on the North, with Switzerland, and the Lake of Geneva; and on the South, with Provence, and the Mediterranean. The Country of so different nature, that it cannot be reduced under any one Character; and therefore we must look upon it in the several parts into which divided; that is to say, 1. the Principality of Piemont; 2. Savoy, especially so called.

1. PIEMONTE, in Latine called Regio Pedemontana, because situate at the foot of the Mountains (as the name in both Languages imports) is bounded on the East, with Milan, and Montferrat; on the West, with Savoy, on the North, with the Swissers; and on the South, it runneth in a narrow Valley to the Mediterranean, having Montferrat on the one side, Provence and a part of the Alpes upon the other. The Country wonderfully fertile compared with Switzerland and Savoy; which lie next unto it; but thought to be inferior to the rest of Italy. It containeth, besides Baronies, and Lordships, 15 Marquises, 52 Earldoms, 160 Castles or Walled places; and is so populous withal, that once a Piemontese being demanded the extent of his Country, made answer, that it was a City of three hundred miles in compass.

The principal Cities of it are, 1. Turin, called of old Augusta Taurinorum, because the head City of the Taurini, once the Inhabitants of this Tract: from which Taurini, it deriveth the name of Turin, and not as some conceive from the River Doria, on whose banks it standeth. In this City is the Court and Palace of the Duke of Savoy (who is the Lord of this Country) the See of an Archbishop, and an University, in which the renowned Scholar Erasmus took his degrees in Divinity. It is situate on the River Po, in a place very important for the guard of Italy; for which cause the Romans sent a Colony thither, and the Lombards made it one of their four Dukedoms. Adjoining to it is a Park of the Dukes of Savoy, watered with the Doria, Stura, and Po, six miles in circuit, full of Woods, Lakes, and pleasant Fountains; which make it one of the sweetest situations in Europe. 2. Mondovi, seated on the swelling of a little hill, with very fair Suburbs round about it; in one of which the Dukes of Savoy built a Church and Chappel to the blessed Virgin; intended for the burial place of the Ducal Family. It is the best peopled Town, for the bigness of it, of any in Italy. 3. Augusta Pretoria, now called Asti, situate in the furthest corner of Italy to the North and West. 4. Verelli, a strong Town bordering upon Milain, to which it formerly belonged; and was given first in Dower with Blanch the Daughter of Philip Maria Duke of Milain, to Amade III. Duke of Savoy; and anciently the chief Town of the Liby, who together with the Salaffi and Taurini, were the old Inhabitants of this Country. 5. Inuria, called by Ptolomy Eporedia, situate at the very jaws of the Alpes, an Episcopal City, 6. Nicea, or Nizze, an Haven on the Mediterranean, at the influx of the River Varus, which divides it from Provence; beautified with a Cathedral Church, the Bishops Palace, a Monastery of Nuns, and an impregnable Citadel. A place so naturally strong, that when yet the Fortifications were imperfect, it resisted the whole Forces of Barbarossa the Turkish Admiral. An. 1543. lying before it with a Navy of two hundred sail and battering it continually with incredible fury. First fortified by Duke Charles, upon occasion of some words of the Duke of Barbon, who passing this way with his Army, Behold, faith he, a situation of which they know not the importance: the Citadel being after added by Emanuel Philibert, and Garrisoned for the most part with 400 Souldiers. 7. Suse, seated in the ordinary thorough-fair betwixt France and Italy, called of old Segovia; and honoured in those times with a stately Sepulchre of King Coltine, a King of the Allobroges: one of the seven Marquises in the middle times erected by the Emperor Otho. 8. Pignarelle, fortified with a Castle of great importance, which commandeth all the adjoining Valleys, fold by Duke Charles Emanuel to Lewis XIII. of France, together with the Port and Valley of Perousa, (and in them both to the number of ten or twelve Towns and Villages) for the sum of 494000 Crowns, to be for ever in the propriety and Sovereignty of the Kings of France; and thereby giving to the French a commodious pass from Dauphine into Italy upon all occasions, and no small influence and command on his own Estates. 9. Quier, adorned with many goodly Churches, fair Convents, and noble Families. 10. Ville Franca, a place of great strength, more towards the Sea. 11. Savilian, seated in so pleasant a Country, that Duke Emanuel Philibert had once a purpose to settle his abode in it, and make it the chief of his Estate. 12. Bujsque, a Marquise, another of the seven erected for the Sons of Walaran. 13. Hereunto we may add the City of Asti (though properly within the limits of Montferrat) anciently a Colony of the Romans; and now to be compared, for the greatness and beauty of her Palaces, to the most stately Cities of Lombardy; situate betwixt the two Rivers of Po and Tenarus, very rich and populous.

Here is also in this Country the Marquise of Saluzzo, (of the same erection as the former, but a greater Estate) the cause of so many differences betwixt France and Savoy. The principal Town whereof called also Saluzzo (from the Salaffi questionless who dwelt hereabouts) seated about the Spring of the River Po; reasonably big and fortified with a very large Castle, fitted with rooms for all uses, and for every season. 2. Carmagnola, which gave name to that famous Captain who carried so great a sway in the Wars of Italy. A Town so fortified and stored with all sorts of Ammunition, that it is thought impregnable. 3. Revelle, a well fortified place. 4. Doglian, the thorough-fair for the greatest part of the Trade which is driven betwixt Piemont, and the River of Genoa. The Arms heretofore Argent, a Chief Gules.

The ancient Inhabitants of this Country were the Salaffi, Liby, and Taurini, as before is said, all vanquished by the Romans, and their Country made a Province of that Empire, by the name of the Province of Alpes Cottiae in the time of Nero; of which Genoa was the Metropolis or principal City. The present are descended, for the most part of the Herulii, who under the conduct of Odoacer conquered Italy; whereof he was proclaimed King by the Romans their selves, but Odoacer being vanquished near Vercina, by Theoderick King of the Goths, the Heruli had this Country allotted to them by the Conqueror for their Habitation. They had not held it long when subdued by the Lombards, of whose Kingdom it remained a part, till given by Asipert the seventeenth King of the Lombards, to the Church of Rome; affirmed by some to be the first temporal Estate that ever the Popes of Rome had possession of. But lying far off, and the Donation not confirmed by the Kings succeeding, the Popes got little by the gift: so that in the subverting of the Kingdom of the Lombards, it was at the devotion of the Kings of Italy; of the house of Charles the Great; and afterwards of his Successors in the Empire, by whom distracted into several Estates and Principalities. Thomas and Peter, Earls of Savoy, made themselves Masters of the greatest part of it, by force of Arms: the former in the year 1210. the latter in the year 1256. Since that time the first Son of Savoy is titled Prince of Piemont. The Marquise of Saluzzo, containing almost all the rest, was added by the Marriage of a daughter of this Marquise, with Charles Duke of Savoy, An. 1481. Of which Marriage though there was no issue, yet the Savoyards always held it as their own, till the French upon as good a title possessed themselves of it: Recovered by the Savoyards, Anno 1588, the Civil Wars then hot in France. But finding that he was not able to hold it against Henry IV. (who looked upon it as a door to let his Forces into Italy) he compounded with him, Anno 1600. the Country of Bresse being given in exchange for this Marquise: of which, together with the residue of Piemont, and some pieces of importance in the Dukedom of Montferrat, that noble Family of Savoy doth now stand possessed.

The Arms of this Principality are Gules, a Cross Argent, charged with a Label of three points Azure.

2. SAVOY, strictly and especially so called, is bounded on the East, with Wallisland, and part of Piemont; on the West, with Dauphine, and La Bresse; on the South, with some parts of Dauphine only; and on the North with Switzerland, and the Lake of Geneva.

The Country is for the most part hilly and Mountainous, tainous, overspread with the branches of the Alper, healthy enough, as commonly all Hill Countries are, but not very fruitful, except some Valleys which lie nearest to the Western Sun, and the plain tract about the Lemanian Lake, lying towards Geneva. By reason of the difficult and narrow ways, and those full of Thieves, it was once called Maly; but the passages being opened by the coast and industry of the people, and purged of Thieves by good Laws and exemplary Justice, it gained the name of Savoy or Savoy, quasi salvia via: as Male-ventum, a Town of the Realm of Naples, on the like considerations got the name of Beneventum. By the Latines of these later times it is called Sabaudia, a name not known to any of the ancient Writers; who knew it by no other name than that of the Allobroges, or Allobrogum Regio.

The common People are naturally very dull and simple, so gross of understanding for all their continual converse with other Nations, who take this Country in their way to Italy; that they believe the Duke of Savoy to be the greatest Prince in the World: and so unworlike, that a few men of another Nation, well trained and disciplined, will make a great number of them flee. But on the other side, the Gentry are of a very pleasing conversation, civil, ingenious, and affecting all good exercise: so that there may be daily seen in Chambery, as much good company, and as well appointed and behaved, as in many of the best Towns of France or Italy. The number of both sorts (taking in Piemont who are not interested in the first place of this character) are thought to be 80000.

The chief Cities are, 1. Chambery, situate on the banks of the River L'Arche, in a very pleasant Valley, compassed round with Mountains; the principal of the Dukedom on that side of the Alper: honoured with the Dukes Court when he resided in this Country, the ordinary seat of Justice, and many neat houses which belong to the Gentry, fortified of late with a strong Castle and sufficient Outworks; but not recovered of the damage it received, Anno 1600, when it was forced by King Henry IV. of France, in his Wars with Savoy. 2. Tarentaise, an Archbishop's See, situate in the midst of the Mountains, heretofore the Metropolis of the Province of the Alpes Graie, and Panine, and called by Antoninus, Civitas Centronum, from the Centrons who inhabited about this tract. 3. Lunebourg in the Country of the old Medulli; betwixt which and Suse, a Town of Piemont, lieth the most ordinary rode betwixt France and Italy. 4. Aque belle, situate at the foot of a craggy Rock. 5. Rapaille, a sweet and fruitful situation, on the South-side of the Lake Lemanus, the chief Town of the Signiory of Fossigny; where Amadeus I. Duke of Savoy, having given over his Estate, lived a Monastick life, and was thence chosen Pope by the Fathers at Basil, Anno 1440. 6. Nun or Nevidum (by some of the old Latines called Novidunum) an ancient City, laid desolate in or before the time of Julius Cæsar, repaired again in the Empire of Vespasian; the seat of late times of the Bishops of Geneva, since their expulsion out of that City. 7. Bele, on the Rhodanus, or Rhone. 8. Albon, founded about the year 456. 9. Conflans, fortified by the late Dukes of Savoy, but otherwise of small importance. 10. Annunziata, not much observable, but for being the seat or place of Solemnities, for an order of Knights called by that name. 11. Maurienne, or St. John de Maurienne, an Archbishop's See, situate in the Valley of the Alper so called; the chief City of the old Medulli, who dwelt herabouts; from whence the Princes of this house were first entitled Earls of Maurienne only. 12. Charbonnier, a well fortified place. Here is also the strong Town and Fort of Montmélian, which held out four Months against Henry IV. and many thousand shot of French Cannon, Anno 1600, and the impregnable Forts of St. Cartharines, which yet submitted to that King, the Government whereof being denied to the Duke Byron, plunged him in discontent and Treason, to the loss of his head.

The many Tribes in and about this Mountainous Country, of which we have mentioned some before, pass generally in some ancient Writers, by the name of Allobroges; because the most powerful of them all. Of whom the first mention which we find in story, is the Atone-ment made by Hannibal in his passage this way, between Brutus and his Brother, about the succession of the Kingdom. Afterwards siding with the Salii a Gallick Nation, in a War against Marcellus, then a Confederate of the Romans, they drew that people on their banks; by whom they were in fine subdued, with the loss of no less than 120000 Gauls under the several conducts of Cn. Domitius Enobarbus, and Qu. Fabius Maximus; by which last, Binnius or Bittulius King of the Avemni, one of the Confederates, was led in triumph unto Rome. The Country and people at that time were much alike, Cællum atrox pervicaci ingenio, a sharp air, and a stubborn people; as it is in Florus: not without commendation in the following Ages, for discovering Cataline's Conspiracy, by which the whole Roman State was in danger of ruin. After which we find Cælius, one of the Kings of these Allobroges, to have been in special favour with Augustus Cæsar: affirmed to be the Founder of twelve Cities in this mountainous Tract; whence it had the name of Alpes Cællie; and by that name reduced into the form of a Province, by the Emperor Nero, in the declining of that Empire, this Province became a part of the Kingdom of Burgundy; and passed, with other rights of that falling Kingdom, to the Emperours of Germany, by the gift of Rodolph the last King. To whom it did continue subject till the year 999, in which Berard of Saxony, Son of Hugh of Saxony (which Hugh was Son of Orto, and Brother to Orto III.) for killing Mary the lascivious Wife of his Uncle, fled from Germany; and settled himself here, near France. His Son Humbert, (surnamed Blanchemanis, that is Whitehand) was by the special favour of the Emperor Conradus Salicus, made Earl of Maurienne; which is a Town of this Country, Anno 1027. And by his Marriage with Adela, the Daughter and Heir of the Marquess of Suse, added that noble Marquisate (one of the seven erected by Orto II. and given amongst the Sons of Waleran) unto his Estate. Humbert II. gained by Conquest the Town and Territory of Tarentaise; as Amé, or Amadeus III. did the Countries of Vaulx, and Chablais, Anno 1240, or thereabouts. Amé, or Amadeus IV. by the Marriage of Sibylle, Daughter and sole Heir of Ulrick Earl of Bresse, added that Earldom to his House: as Amé or Amadeus IX. did the Town and Territory of Vercelli, upon the Contract betwixt Philibert his Son and Successor, with Blanch the base Daughter of Philip Maria Duke of Millain, who afterwards was married unto Francis Sforza. Amé, or Amadeus II. Earl of Maurienne was by the Emperor Henry V. invested with the Title of Savoy; and Amadeus VIII. created the first Duke, by the Emperor Sigismund, Anno 1397. But the main improvement or the power and patrimony of his House came by the valour and good success of the two Earls, Thomas, who in the year 1210, and Peter one of his Sons and Successors (for his manifold Conquests, surnamed Charlemain the Junior). An. 1256, by conquest got a great part of Piedmont; to which the Marquisate of Salmaz, containing almost all the rest, was united by a marriage of the daughter of the Marquisate, to Charles Duke

Duke of Savoy: and though he died without Issue by her, Anno 1489, yet his Successors still kept the possession of it, till Francis I. pretending some title to it in the right of his Mother (a Daughter of the House of Savoy) laid it unto the Crown of France; from which it was again recovered by the Savoyard, during the French Civil Wars, Anno 1588, and now is peaceably possessed. The Country of Bresse being given to the French, for their pretention to this Marquisate, Anno 1600. These Dukes of Savoy have a long time been devoted to the Faction of Spain, especially since the French Kings took in the lesser States bordering on them, as Burgundy, Breigne, &c. Charles III. sided so constantly with the Emperor Charles V. that denying Francis I. a passage for his Army through the Country into Italy, he was by the said King deposed of his Estates, Anno 1536. The Emperor to recover it left nothing undone, but in vain; for the French encountering his force in the open field, vanquished them, with the slaughter of fifteen thousand of his men. In the year 1558, peace being made between Henry and Philip, Successors to those great Princes: Emanuel Philibert, Son to Duke Charles, was restored to all his Rights. His Son and Successor having married Katherine the Daughter of King Philip II. depended wholly upon Spain, notwithstanding many quarrels which did grow betwixt them; his Sons receiving thence many great Pensions and preferments. For at the same time Prince Amadeus Vittorio the second Son, during the life of Philip his elder Brother, was chief Commander of that King's Gallies; and had in Pension a hundred thousand Crowns per annum; Philibert the third Son, was Vice-roy of Sicily; Maurice a Cardinal, had a moiety of the Revenues of the Archbishopric of Toledo; and Dou Thomas, though then young, had his Pensions also. But Amadeus Vittorio, who succeeded him, marrying Madam Christiane, a Daughter of King Henry IV. of France, changed his dependences, and held more close to France than any of his Predecessors: but whether to the hurt or benefit of his Estates, future times will shew. For leaving his Heir a Minor, in the hands of his Mother, the French upon pretence of preserving the Country for him, against the incroachments of the Spaniards, have made themselves Masters of the greatest parts of it: which when they will restore to the proper Owner, is beyond my cunning to determine. But now behold the Catalogue of the Earls and Dukes of Savoy.

- 999 1. Berard of Saxony.
- 1027 2. Humbert, the first Earl of Maurienne.
- 1048 3. Amé, or Amadeus I.
- 1076 4. Humbert II.
- 1109 5. Amé, or Amadeus II. the first Earl of Savoy.
- 1154 6. Humbert III.
- 1201 7. Thomas, Son of Humbert.
- 1234 8. Amé, or Amadeus III.
- 1246 9. Boniface, Son of Amé III.
- 1256 10. Peter, a young Son of Earl Thomas, called Charlemain the 1st.
- 1268 11. Philip, Brother of Peter.
- 1285 12. Amé, or Amadeus IV. Nephew of Thomas VII. Earl, by a Son named Thomas.
- 1323 13. Edward, Son of Amé IV.
- 1329 14. Amé, or Amadeus V. the Brother of Edward.
- 1342 15. Amé, or Amadeus VI.
- 1385 16. Amé, or Amadeus VII.
- 1387 17. Amé, or Amadeus VIII. the first Duke of Savoy.
- 1434 18. Lewis, Son of Amé VIII.

- 1491 19. Amé, or Amadeus IX.
- 1475 20. Philibert Son of Amé IX.
- 1481 21. Charles, Brother of Philibert.
- 1489 22. Charles II.
- 1495 23. Philibert II. Son of Lewis the second Duke.
- 1496 24. Philibert II.
- 1504 25. Charles III. the Brother of Philibert, outed of his Estate by King Francis I.
- 1559 26. Emanuel Philibert, restored upon his Marriage with Margaret the Daughter of King Francis I. made Knight of the Garter by Queen Mary.
- 1580 27. Charles Emanuel.
28. Amé X. called also Amadeus Vittorio, Son of Charles Emanuel, married Christiane the Daughter of King Henry IV.
- 1637 29. Charles Emanuel II. Son of Amadeus Vittorio, or Amé X. at the age of three years succeeded his Father.

The Forces of this Duke consist especially in his Forts and Garrisons; whereof he hath good store in Savoy and Piemont, well fortified and plentifully furnished with all manner of Ammunition. And it concerneth him so to have, considering what dangerous neighbours he hath near him, and that his Country is a continual thoroughfare, for the Armies both of France and Spain, upon all occasions. Nor doth it less conduce to his preservation, that he hath so many retreats of natural strength, as are not easily accessible by a conquering Army; of which I left first, amongst many others, the Valley of Aost (which some reckon for a part of Savoy, and some of Piemont) so strong by reason of the narrow entries, the uneasy passages, and the great multitudes of the people which inhabit in it; that those who have made themselves Masters of the rest of the Country, durst never attempt it. And of the first, besides those formerly described, is the Town of Nizze, so fortified and flanked upon all accesses, that it seems rather to be an assembly of Forts, than a single Fortress. Out of which Garrisons, the Duke is able to draw great Forces for present service; besides the aid of the Piemontese upon all occasions, which are for the most part given to Arms.

The ordinary Revenue of this Dukedom (taking Piemont) are said to be above a Million of Crowns per annum. But his extraordinary is so great, that Duke Charles Emanuel, during the Wars with Henry IV. in a very few years drew out of Piemont only 11 Millions of Crowns; besides the charge which they were put to in quartering of Soldiers. By which it may appear, that the Dukes are not like to want Money to serve their turns, when they shall desire it of their Subjects; and yet not charge them more than they are able to bear.

The only Order of Knighthood in this Dukes estate is that of the Annunziata ordained by Amadeus the fifth Duke; at what time he defended Rhodes from the Turks, An. 1409. Their Collar is of fifteen Links, to shew the fifteen mysteries of the Virgin: at the end is the portrait of our Lady, with the history of the Annunciation. Instead of a Motto, these letters, F. E. R. T. id est, Fortitudo Ejus Rhodum Tenuit, are engraven in every plate or link of the Collar; each link being interwoven one with the other, in form of a True-lovers knot. The number of the Knights are fourteen, besides the Duke, who is the Sovereign of the Order: the solemnity was held antiently on our Lady-day, in the Castle of St. Peter in Turin; but of late time in the Town of Annunziata, from hence so denominated. So from this victory (for every repulse of the besieger, is a victory to the be- sieged fieged) there arose a double effect; first, the institution of this Order; secondly, the assumption of the present Army of this Dutchy, where are G. a Cross A. This being the Cross of St. John of Jerusalem, whose Knights at that time were Owners of the Rhoder. Whereas before, the Arms were Or, an Eagle displayed with two heads, Sable, Armed Gules supporting in Fesse, an Escutcheon of Saxony, that is Barwile six pieces Sable and Or, a Bend flowered Vermilion a Coat belonging to the Emperors of the house of Saxony, from whom the first Earls of Savoy did derive themselves.

3. The Signeury of GENEVA.

GENEVA is a City in the Dukedom of Savoy, formerly subject to its Bishops, acknowledging the Dukes of Savoy for the Lord in chief: now reckoned as a Free-Place, bordering close upon the Swissers, and with them Confederate; and so more properly within the course and compass of the Alpine Provinces. It is situate on the South-side of the Lake Lemane, opposite to the City of Lazane in the Canton of Berne, from which it is distant six Dutch-miles: the River Rhofie (having passed through the Lake with fo clear a colour, that it seemeth not at all to mingle with the waters of it) runneth through the lower part thereof, over which there is a passage by two fair Bridges. This lower part is seated on a flat or level, the rest on the ascent of an Hill: the buildings fair and of free stone, well fortified on both sides both by Art and Nature; in regard of the pretensions of the Duke of Savoy (whom they suffer not to arm any Gallies upon the Lake) and other jealousies of State. The compass of the whole City is about two miles, in which there are supposed to be about sixteen or seventeen thousand souls. One of their Bridges is more ancient, and better fortified than the other, belonging anciently to the Swissers (or Helvetians, the old Inhabitants of that tract) but broken down by Julius Cesar, to hinder them from passing that way into Gallia.

The people of the Town are generally of good wits in the managery of publick business, but not very courteous towards Strangers, of whom they exact as much as may be; modest and thrifty in Apparel, and speak for the most part the Savoyard, or worst kind of French: So that the great resort of young Gentlemen thither, is not so much to learn that Language (which is no where worse taught) as out of an opinion which their Parents have, that the Reformed Religion is no where so purely practised and professed as there. By means whereof, the fry or seminary of our Gentry being seasoned in their youth with Genevan Principles have many times proved diffatisfied to the forms of Government (as well Monarchical as Episcopall) which they found established here at home: to the great embroilment of the State, in matters of most near concernment. The Women are said to be more chaste (or at least more reserved) than in any other place in the World: which possibly may be ascribed to that severity, with which they punish all Offenders in that kind. Dancing by no means tolerated in publick or private; Adultery expiated by no less than death: Fornication, for the first offence with nine days fasting upon bread and water in prison; for the second, with whipping; for the third, with banishment. But notwithstanding this severity, they make love in secret and are as amorous in their dalliances, as in other places.

The Territories of it are very small, extending not above two Leagues and an half from any part of the Town: but the soil, if well manured, bringeth Grain of all sorts, and great store of Wine. There is likewise plenty of Pasture and feeding grounds, which furnish the City with flesh-meats, Butter, and Cheese, at very reasonable rates: the nearness of the Lake affording them both Fish and Wild-Fowl in good measure, and amongst others (as some say) the best Carps in Europe.

But the main improvement of this State is by the industry of the people, and the convenient situation of the City itself: the City being situate very well for the Trade of Merchandize, in regard it is the ordinary passage for Transporting Commodities out of Germany, to the Marts at Lion; and from thence back again to Germany, Switzerland, and some parts of Italy. And for the industry of the people, it is discernable in that great store of Armour, and Apparel, and other Necessaries, brought from hence yearly by those of Bern; and their Manufactures in Satin, Velvet, Taffate, and some quantities of Cloth, (fine but not durable) transported hence yearly into other places.

The Sovereignty of this City was anciently in the Earls heretofore, at first Imperial Officers only, but at last the hereditary Princes of it. Betwixt these and the Bishops (Suffragans to the Metropolitan of Vienna, in Dauphine) grew many quarrels for the absolute command thereof. In fine, the Bishops did obtain of the Emperor Frederick I. that they and their Successors should be sole Princes of Geneva; free from all Taxes, and not accountable to any but the Emperor. Which notwithstanding, the Earls continuing still to molest the Bishops, they were fain to call unto their aid the Earl of Savoy; who took upon him first as Protector only, but after by degrees as the Lord in Chief. For when the rights of the Earls of Geneva, by the Marriage of Thomas Earl of Savoy, with Beatrice a Daughter of this Earl's, fell into that house, then Ame or Amade VI. of that name, obtained of the Emperor Charles IV. to be Viceroy-general of the Emperor in his own Country, and in that right superior to the Bishop in all Temporal matters: and Ame or Amade the first Duke got from Pope Martin (to the great prejudice of the Bishops) a grant of all the Temporal jurisdiction of it. After which time the Bishops were constrained to do homage to the Dukes of Savoy, and acknowledge them for their Sovereign Lords: the Authority of the Dukes being grown so great (notwithstanding that the people were immediately subject to their Bishop only) that the Money in Geneva was stamped with the Duke's Name and Figure: Capital Officers were pardoned by him; no Sentence of Law executed till his Officers were first made acquainted; nor League contracted by the People of any validity, without his privacy and allowance: and finally the Keys of the Town presented to him as often as he pleased to lodge there; as once (for instance) to Duke Charles III. coming thither with Beatrice his Wife, a Daughter of Portugal. And in this state it stood till the year 1528, the Bishop being all this while their immediate Lord, and having jus gladii & alius civilis jurisdictionis partes, as Calvin himself confesseth in an Epistle to Cardinal Sadolet. But in that year, Religion being then altered in the Canton of Bern, near adjoining to them, Viret and Farrellus did endeavour it in Geneva also. But finding that the Bishop and his Clergy did not like their doings, they secured themselves unto the people, and by their aid in a popular tumult compelled the Bishop and his Clergy to abandon the Town. And though the Bishop made them many fair overtures, out of an hope to be restored to his Estate; yet would they never harken to him, nor admit of him any more being once thrust out. Nor did they only in that tumult alter the Doctrine and Orders of of the Church before established; but changed the Government of the State also; disclaiming all Allegiance both to Duke and Bishop, and standing on their own Liberty, as a Free-Commonwealth. And though all this was done by Viret and Farrellus, before Calvin's coming to that City, which was not till the year 1536, yet being come, Justifigatio meo comprobavit, as he faith himself, no man was forwarder than he to approve the Action.

But Calvin being come amongst them, made their Divinity Reader, and one of the ordinary Preachers, he first negotiated with them to abjure the Papacy, and never more admit their Bishop; to which he found a cheerful and unanimous consent in all the people. Then finding that no Ecclesiastical Discipline was in use among them, he dealt with them to admit of one of his own composing: which at last he obtained also, but with very great difficulty; and got it ratified by the Senate, July 20. 1537. The next year after, the people weary of this yoke, and he and his Colleagues (Farrellus and Carandus) as resolute to hold them to it; they were all three banished the Town in popular humour; and with like levity sued to, to return again: to which he would by no means yield, except they would oblige themselves by a solemn Oath, to admit of such a Form of Discipline, as he with the advice of their other Ministers should prescribe unto them. This being conceded to by that fickle multitude, he returns in triumph to Geneva, September the thirteenth, 1541. and got his new Discipline established on the twentieth of November following. The sum of the Device was this: All Ministers to be equal among themselves; two Lay-men to be super-added unto every Minister; the Minister to continue for term of life; the Lay-Elders to be annually chosen; these being met together to be called the Presbytery; and to have power of Ordination, Censure, Absolution, and whatsoever else was used by the Bishop formerly. Hitherto is related to Geneva only, which being but one City and a small one too, was not capable of more than one Presbytery. The names and notions of Cloistical, Provincial, and National Assemblies, came not in till afterwards, as it got ground in Kingdoms, and larger Provinces. This Platform though of purpose framed to content the people yet since the Lay Officers were to be but annual, and after subject to the laity, like other Morals; it gave but sorry satisfaction unto wiser men. And being built withal on a false foundation, was for a long time hardly able to stand alone, and fain at twelve years end to borrow a support from Zurich, and others of the Protestant Cantons: whom Calvin earnestly solicited to allow his project, against which one Perinus, and some principal Citizens, had begun to spurn. And so we have the true beginning of the Genevan Discipline, begotten in Rebellion, born in sedition, and nursed up by Faction.

Being born in the World by the means aforesaid, some other helps it had to make it acceptable, and approved of in other Churches. As first the great content it gave to the Common People, to see themselves entrusted with the weightiest matters of Religion; and thereby an equality with, if not (by reason of their number, being two for one) a superiority above their Ministers: Next the great reputation, which Calvin for his diligence in Writing and Preaching, had attained unto; made all his Disciples as authentick amongst some Divines, as ever the Popes Ips dixit in the Church of Rome. Whereby it came to pass, in a little time, that only those Churches which embraced the Doctrines and Discipline authorized by Calvin, were called the Reformed Churches: those in High Germany, and elsewhere, which adhered to Luther, being generally called by no other names than the Lutherans, or the Lutheran Churches; as not reformed enough from the dregs of Rome. Then comes in his endeavour to promote that Platform, in all other Churches which he had calculated from the Meridian of Geneva only: commanding it to Gasper Olevianus, Minister of the Church of Triver, as appears by his Letters dated April the twelfth 1560, congratulating the reception of it in the Churches of Poland, as appeareth by others of his Letters. And for the last help, comes in Beza, who not content to recommend it as convenient, for the use of that Church (beyond which Calvin did not go) imposed it as a matter necessary upon all the Churches: so necessary, ut ab ea recedere non magis liceat, quam ab ipsius Religionis placitis, that it was utterly as unlawful to recede from this, as for the most natural points of the Christian Faith. So he, Epist. 83. By means where their followers in most of the Reformed Churches drove on so furiously, that rather than their Discipline should not be admitted, and the Episcopall Government destroyed in all the Churches of CHRIST, they were resolved to depose Kings, ruin Kingdoms, and to subvert the fundamental Constitutions of all Civil States. And henceunto their own Ambition gave them spur enough, affecting the supremacy in their several Provinces; that they themselves might Lord it over God's Inheritance, under pretence of setting CHRIST upon his Throne. Upon which love to the preeminence they did not only prate against the Bishops, with malicious words, (as Discepolus for the same reason did against the Apostles) but not therewith content, neither would they themselves receive them, nor permit them that would, casting them out of the Church with reproach and infamy. Which proud ambition in the ordinary Parochial Minister, was cunningly fomented by some great persons, and many Lay-perform in all places, who under-hand aimed at a further end: the one to raise themselves great fortunes out of Bishops Lands; the other to keep those Tythes themselves, to which by the Law they only were to nominate some deserving person. Such were the helps by which this new device of Calvin was diffused and propagated.

But to return unto Geneva, though Calvin for his time did hold the Chair as a perpetual Moderator, and Beza too, until Danem set him beside the Cushion: yet after that, the power of the Presbytery was shrewdly lessened in Geneva, and the good members so restrained in the exercise of it; that they have no power to convene any man before them, but by the authority of a Synod, or Civil Magistrate. And as for maintenance, they hold their Ministers so strictly to a forry pittance, as would be sure to keep them from presuming too much on their power in the Confessory-Tythes of all forts were to be taken up for the use of the State, and laid up in the publick Treasury; and stipends issued out to maintain the Ministry: but thofe to mean, that Beza's stipend whilst he lived, hardly amounted to eighty pounds per annum, the residue of the City Ministers not to sixty pounds, those of the Villages adjoining, having hardly forty pounds; enough to keep them always poor, and miserably obnoxious to the wealthier Citizens. And that they may not feel the Goads, and stick up a Feather, the State doth use to make some poor allowance to the Wives and Daughters of their deceased Ministers, if they die poor, or leave their Children unprovided, or otherwise have deserved well in the time of their lives. In respect hereof, though the Ministers are very strict in forbidding Dancing, and have writ many Tracts against it; yet to give some content to the common people (who have not leisure to attend it at other times) they allow all Man-like exercises on the Lords-day, as shooting in Pieces, Long-bows, Crofs-bows, and the like, and that too in the morning, both before and after the Sermon, so it be no impediment to them, from coming to the Church at the times appointed.

As for the Government of the State, it is directed principally by the Civil or Imperial Laws; the Judge whereof is called the Lieutenant-Criminal; before whom all causes are tried, and from whom there lieth no Appeal; unless it be unto the Council, of two hundred, whom they call the Great Council, in which the supreme power of the State resideth. Out of this Council, of two hundred, there is chosen another lesser Council of five and twenty, and out of them four principal Officers whom they call the Syndicks, who have the sole managing of the Common-wealth; except it be in some great matter, as making Peace or War, offensive or defensive Leagues, hearing Appeals, and such like general concerns; which the great Council of two hundred must determine of. They have a custom superadded to the Civil Law, that if any Malefactor from another place flee to them for refuge, they punish him after the custom of the place in which the crime was committed. Otherwise their Town being on the borders of divers Princes, would never be free from Vagabonds. Examples herof I will assign two: the first of certain Monks, who robbing their Convents of certain Plate and hoping for their wicked pranks at home to be the welcome thither, were at their first acquaintance advanced to the Gallows. The second is of a Spanish Gentleman, who having fled his Country for clipping and counterfeiting the King's Gold, came to this Town, and had the like reward. And when for defence he alleged, that he understood their City being free, gave admission to all Offenders; True (said they) but with an intent to punish them that offended: a distinction which the Spaniard never till then learned, but then it was too late.

As for their ordinary Revenue, it is proportionable to their Territory, if not above it, conceived to amount to 60000 pounds per annum; which they raise upon the domain of the Bishop, and the Tithes of the Church, and on such Impositions as laid upon the flesh and Merchandise. But they are able to raise greater sums if there be occasion, as appears plainly by the fending of 45000 Crowns to King Henry III. before they had been long settled in their own Estates.

And as for Military Forces, they are able to impress two thousand men, and have Arms of all sorts for so many in the publick Magazines: as also twelve or fourteen Pieces of Ordnance, with all manner of Ammunition appertaining to them, and on the Lake some Gallies in continual readines, against the dangers threatened them by the Dukes of Savoy. And for the greater safety of their Estate, and the preservation of their Religion, they joyned themselves in a constant and perpetual League with the Canton of Bern, Anno 1582. communicating to each other the freedom of their several Cities; and by that means, are reckoned for a Member of the Common-wealth of the Switzers, which is no small security to their affairs. But their chief strength, as I conceive, is, that neighbouring Princes are not willing to have it fall into the hands of that Duke; or any other Portentate of more strength than he. Inasmuch that when that Duke besieged it, Anno 1589, they were aided from Venice with four and twenty thousand, and from England, with thirteen thousand Crowns, from France with Intelligence of the Enemies purposes. Another time, when the Pope, the French King, the Spaniard, and Savoyard had designs upon it, the Emperor offered them assistance both of Men and Money: yea, and sometimes the Dukes of Savoy have assisted them against the others; as being more desirous that the Town should remain as it doth, than fall into any other hands than his own. So ordinary a thing it is for such petit States, to be more safe by the interest of their jealous neighbours, than any forces of their own.

The Arms of Geneva, when under the command of the Earls thereof were Or a Crofs Azure. But for the title of Geneva after it had been born a while by the Earls of Savoy, it was given to Philip youngest Son of Ame or Amadeus the first Duke, to Jean the third Son of Lewis the second Duke; and finally, to Philip Duke of Nemours, the fourth Son of Philip the seventh Duke of Savoy, in whose Posterity (Dukes of Nemours) it doth still continue.

4. WALLISLAND.

Eastward from Savoy, in a long and deep bottom of the Alpes Penine, lyeth the Country of WALLISLAND: so called either quasi Wallenland, or the Land of the Valenses, once the Inhabitants of the Country about Martinach, a chief Town herof; or quasi Valleyland, or the Land of Valley, of which it totally consists. It reacheth from the Mountain de Furken, to the Town of St. Maurice, where again the hills do close, and thut up the Valley; which is so narrow in that place, that a Bridge laid from one hill to another (under which the River Rhofne doth pass) is capable of no more than one Arch only, and that defended with a Castle and two strong Gates. On other parts it is environed with a continual Wall of steep and horrid Mountains, covered all the year long with a crust of Ice; not passable at all by Armies, and not without much difficulty by single Passengers: so that having but that one entrance to it, which before we spoke of, no Citadel can be made so strong by Art, as this whole Country is by Nature. But in the bottom of those craggy and impassable Rocks lies a pleasant Valley, fruitful in Saffron, Corn, Wine, and most delicate fruits; and happily enriched with Meadows, and most excellent Pastures, which yield a notable increase of Cheese and Butter: and in the Country about Sion they digcovered in Anno 1544. a Fountain of Salt; and have also many hot Baths, and Medicinal waters very wholesome. Of Springs and River-waters, they are very delittute; having scarce any but what they fetch from the Rhofne, with a great deal both of charge and trouble (the common people using Snow-water for the most part for domestick uses;) which made one pleasantly observe, that they pay dearer for their Waters, than they do for their Wine. Cattel they have sufficient to serve their turn, and amongst others, a wild Beck, equal to a Stag in bigness, footed like a Goat, and horned like a Fallow-deer, leaping with wonderful agility from one Precipice to another, and so not easily caught but in Summer time, for then the heat of that season makes him blind.

It is divided into the Upper and the Lower Wallisland: the Upper lying towards the Mountain di Furken, in the very bottom of the Valley; and the Lower stretching out to the Town of St. Maurice, which is at the opening of the same: the length of both said to be five ordinary days journey, but the breadth not unfavourable. The Upper Wallisland containeth the seven Refforts of 1. Sion, or Sedune, 2. Lenek, 3. Brig, 4. Nier, 5. Kawren, 6. Sider, 7. Ganber, in which are reckoned thirty Parishes, the Lower comprehending the six Refforts of 1. Gurdiz, 2. Ardoz, 3. Sallien, 4. Martinach, 5. Jurament, and 6. St. Maurice: in which are 24 Parishes. The people in both parts said to be courteous towards strangers, but very tough and churlish towards one another.

It

The several Refforts before mentioned, are named according to the names of their principal Towns: which according to their reckoning are thirteen in number. The chief of which are 1. Sedunum, Sittim, or Sion, a Bishops See, suffragan to the Metropolitan of Tarentenise; the chief of all this little Country: of no great beauty in it self, but neat and gallant in respect of the Towns about it. Situate in a Plain on the River of Rhofne, under a Mountain of two tops; on the one of which being the lower, is seated the Cathedral Church, and the Canon's houses; and on the other, looking downwards with a dreadful precipice, a very strong Castle, the dwelling place of the Bishop in the heat of Summer: which being built upon an Hill of so great an height, and so hazardous an ascent, is impossible almost to be took by force; the sharpness of the Rocks keeping it from the danger of assaults, and the highness of the Hill from the reach of the Gun-shot. 2. Marchinacht, by Cesar called Otdurum, and Civitas Valesium by Antonine, remarkable for its antiquity only. 3. St. Maurice, or St. Moritz, anciently Auganum, the Key of the whole Country; but in Winter especially, when all the other passages are frozen up, that there is no other entrance but by the Bridge at this Town, which for that cause is very well manned and fortified to avoid surprisall; and therefore also chosen for the seat of the Governour of the Lower Wallisland.

This Country now called Wallisland, is in most Latine Writers called by the name of Valesia, but corruptly, as I think, for Valesia, as the Dutch or English name for Wallenland: which name I should conceive it took from the Valenses, the old Inhabitants of this Valley, of whom Otdurum (now called Marchinacht) is by Antonine made to be the Metropolis, or principal City. It was made subject to the Romans by Julius Cesar, at such time as the Helvetians were conquered by him: and falling with the Western parts of the Roman Empire unto Charles the Great, was by him given to Theodulus Bishop of Sion, Anno 805. Under his Successors they continued to this very day; but so, that the Deputies of the seven Refforts have not only voices with the Cannons in his Election, but being chosen and invested unto the place, they joyn with him also in the *Diet*s for choosing Magistrates, redressing grievances, and determining matters of the State. The Lower Wallisland obeyeth the Upper, made subject by long War, and the chance of Victory, and hath no way in the publick Government, but takes for Law that which their Governours agree of. The same Religion is in both, being that of Rome. For maintenance whereof they combined themselves with the seven Popish Cantons of Switzerland, Anno 1572. or thereabouts: as also for their mutual defence and preservation against foreign Enemies, and keeping amity and concord amongst one another.

5. SWITZERLAND.

NEXT unto Wallisland lieth the Country of the SWITZERS, having on the East, the Grifons, and some part of the Tirol, in Germany; on the West, the Mountain Jura, and the Lake of Geneva, which parts it from Savoy, and Burgundy; on the North, Swedia, or Schmaben, another Province also of the upper Germany; and on the South, Wallisland and the Alpes, which border on the Dukedom of Milain.

The whole Country heretofore divided into three parts only; that is to say, 1. Argow, so called from the River Aax, whose chief Town was Lucern: 2. Wistflung, so called from Wistflung an old Town thereof, the chief City whereof is Bern: And 3. Zurichem, so named from Zurich, both formerly and at this present the Town of most note in all this Tract; but since the falling of these Countries from the house of Austria, divided into many Cantons and other members; of which more anon.

It is wholly in a manner over-grown with craggy Mountains, but such as for the most part have grassy tops, and in their bottoms afford rich Meadows, and nourishing Pastures, which breed them a great stock of Cattel, their greatest wealth. And in some places yields plenty of very good Wines, and a fair increase of Corn also, if care and industry be not wanting on the Husbandmen part, but neither in so great abundance, as to serve all necessary uses, which want they supply from their neighbouring Countries. And though it stand upon as high ground as any in Christendome, yet is no place more stored with Rivers, and capacious Lakes; which do not only yield them great abundance of Fish, but serve the people very well in the way of Traffick, to disperse their several Commodities from one Canton to another. Of which the principal are, Badenfer, and the Lake of Cell, made by the Rhone; Geviersee, or the Lake of Geneva, by the Rhofne; Walldetsee, and the Lake of Lucern, made by the Rasse; Mamminger and Bietsee, by the Orbe; and Zurichsee, by the River of Limat, or Limachus.

It is in length two hundred and forty miles, an hundred and eighty in breadth; conceived to be the highest Country in Europe (as before is said) the Rivers which do issue from it running through all quarters of the same; as Rhene, through France and Belgium, North; Ro, through Italy to the South; Rhodanus, through part of France, to the Western Ocean; and the Isar, which falling into the Danubius passeth through Germany, and Hungary, into Pontus Euxinus.

And as the Country is, such are the Inhabitants of rude and rugged dispositions, more fit for Arms than any civil occupations, capable of toyl and labour, which the necessities of their Country do inure them to, not able otherwise to afford them an hungry livelihood: the poverty whereof makes them seek for service, which they shift and change according as they like the conditions of their entertainment; and having no way to vent their superfluous numbers by Navigation, are able to spare greater multitudes to a foreign War, than a man would easily imagine. In a word, the people are naturally honest, frugal, and industrious, impartial in the administration of Justice, and great lovers of liberty.

In matters of War, they were once of such a reputation, on the defeats given them to Charles of Burgundy, that no Prince thought himself able to take the Field, or stand his own ground in defence of his Dominions, if he had not Switzers in his Army: And to advance their reputation, the Wars which followed in Italy about the Dutchy of Milain, served exceeding fitly. For being borderers on that Country, they could be hired better cheap by the French, or Spaniards, than any Army could be brought out of France, or Spain. And having had some good successes to increase their fame, they grew so terrible at last, that the Spaniards in the War of Gruen were more afraid of one band of Swiss, than of all the rest of the French Army. But being found withal to be false and treacherous, and easily bought off by the better purse (which they most evidently discovered in betraying Duke Ladewick Sforza, who had put himself and his estate into their hands) and those Italian Wars growing unto an end, they did decay to fall in their reputation, that that first the neighbouring Princes could do well without them; and at last used them not at all, or at least very sparingly. And now it is their honour that they are chosen of the Guard to the French King, and the Popes of Rome, and the Dukes of Genoa; and that the greatest Princes of Europe give them yearly Pensions. Which Pensions were given heretofore to be assured of their aid upon all occasions, but now to keep them from engaging on the other side.

For matter of Religion it is proportionably mixt; some of the Cantons being wholly Popish, some wholly Protestant; in others, both Religions used promiscuously. At first the differences were so eagerly pursued on both sides, that notwithstanding the mediation of some potent Neighbours, it broke out into a Civil War; the Cantons of Switz, Uren, Underswald, Lucern, and Zug, (which the Latine Writers of this story call the Quinque pagie) arming against Zurich, Bern, and others which adhered to Zuinglius. In the beginning of which War the Protestant Party was difcomfited, Zuinglius himself slain in the head of the Battell, and his body burnt: his heart remaining in the midst of the fire whole and untouched; as Archbishop Cramer's also did, when all the rest of his body was consumed to ashes. But those of the Reformed Party would not go to give over. Another field they fought for it, and therein had the better of the adverse Party. Wearied at last with reciprocal defeats, they agreed the business, indulging each to the other free exercise of their own Religions. So it continueth at this day, diversity of opinions not drawing them from a due care of the publick interest, nor giving any interruption to that bond of peace which was so firmly knit amongst them in their first Confederacy.

Now for the body of their State, it consists of three distinct parts or members, which are to be considered in this discourse, viz. the Swiss themselves, the Præfidents which are subject to them, and the States that are Confederates with them. The Swiss are subdivided into thirteen Cantons, that is to say, Switz, Uren, Underswald, Lucern, Zug, Bern, Zurich, Basel, Friburg, Solothurn, Apenzel, Glaris, and Schaffhausen. These properly make the body of that Common-wealth, enjoying many Rights, Privileges and Preeminences which the others do not; as power to determine of War and Peace, to dispose of the Præfidents, and divide amongst themselves the spoil of the Enemy. The first Confederacy was made between the Cantons of Switz, and Underswald, Anno 1315. Of which the Switz, being the most potent, the most exasperated, and that which did most hotly prosecute the combination, gave to the rest the name of Switzers, first made for ten years only in defence of themselves against the violences of Albert I. Emperor and Duke of Austria; intending to alienate them from the Empire, and add them by strong hand to his own Estates, Anno 1309, but made perpetual after their great victory obtained against Duke Leopold, Son of Albert, in the fields of Mortgarten, of which more anon. Lucern was added to the three, Anno 1332. Zug, Zurich, and Glaris, came not into the Confederacy till the year 1352. nor Bern until the year next after. Friburg and Solothurn came in Anno 1481. Basel and Schaffhausen united with them in the year 1501. And Apenzel, which was the last which was admitted into their Confederacy, Anno 1513. So that there passed within little of two hundred years, from the first beginning of these Leagues, to the finishing of them.

The second Member of this body, are the Towns and States Confederates with them, for the preservation of their common Liberties, viz. the Town and Abbot of St. Gall, the Towns of Rorschach, Mulhausen, Muenberg, and Biel, situated on the Lake thence named: (of which the first belonged heretofore to the Earls of Longeville in France, the latter to the Bishops of Basel) with the City and Signiory of Geneva: And of these, Rorschach and Mulhausen are confederate with all the Cantons; the rest, with some particulars only. The Abbot of St. Gall first entered into League with Zurich, Lucern, Switz, and Glaris, for the preservation of his Lands and Towns then revolving from him; and the Town following his example, confederated with Zurich, Bern, Switz, Lucern, Zug, Glaris, the better to preserve themselves from the power of their Abbot, who was before their natural and immediate Lord. This was in Anno 1452. Rorschach and Mulhausen, two Imperial Towns in the Province of Schabern, confederated in a perpetual League with all the Cantons, the first, Anno 1515, the other, 1519; Neuenburg, Biel, and Geneva, with Bern, only.

As for the Præfidents of the Switzers, they are such lesser parcels and additions, as have accrewed to their Estate, and are subject unto their authority; either by gift, purchase, or the chance of War: some lying in Switzerland itself, some amongst other parts of the Alpes, and some in Italy. These are the Towns and Countries of Baden, Bregarten, Millingen, Rappenswyll, Wagwil, interposed here and there amongst the Switzers: the Town and Country of Sargans, lying amongst the Rhetian Alpes, not far from the Grisons and Rhineck, lying in Valley of the Alpes, on the left shore of the Rhone, near the Lake of Constans; and finally, the Valleys of Locarno, Magis, and Lugano Mendrisio, and Belinzano, situate in and amongst the Alpes, near the Dukedom of Milain, to which they formerly belonged. Of which the Præfidents of Baden, and Millingen appertain to the eight first Cantons: Wagwil, the Sargans, and Rhineck to the seven first Cantons: Rappenswyll to Uren, Switz, Underswald, and Glaris, and Thurgow unto the ten first Cantons: Belinzano to the three first only; and all the rest of the Italian Præfidents to the Cantons generally, excepting Apenzel, which was not entered into the confederacy when these Præfidents were given unto the Switzers; by Maximilian Sforza Duke of Milain, which was in Anno 1513, some months before the taking in of Apenzel to the rest of the Cantons.

Such is the number of the Cantons, Præfidents, and States confederate, amongst all which there are few Towns or Cities of any note: there being no City nor well built Towns in the Cantons of Switz, Uren, Underswald, Glaris, Apenzel, nor in any of the States confederate situate amongst the Switzers, but St. Gall only, nor in any of the Præfidents but that of Baden. So that the places worthy of consideration are not like to be many. Of those that are, the principal are, 1. Zurich, a large City, and a renowned University, situate on both sides of the River Limn, where it issueth out of the Lake called Zurich-See. It had anciently two Monasteries in it, in one of which Huldreich Zuinglius was a Canon, slain near this Town in the Battell spoken of before, Anno 1531. now giving name to the most honourable of the Cantons, to which belongeth the authority of summoning the general Diet; as of those also of the Protestants; the Legates thereof presiding in both Assemblies. 2. Friburg, situate on the River Sana, on the declivity of an uneven and rocky hill, founded by Berold the fourth Duke of Zeringen. 3. Solothurn, (the Solothurnum of Antoninus) on the River Aar, famous for the Martyrdom of St. Ursula, and his 66 Theban Soldiers in the time of the Emperor Dioclesian. A Town of great Antiquity, but not so old by far as the people make it: who would have it to be built in the time of Abraham. 4. Basel, so called either of a Basilisk slain at the building of the City; or of the German word Pascl, signifying a path; or of Basilus, signifying Kingly. It was built Anno 382, and is famous for an University founded by Pius the II. Anno 1459. It was made a Canton, Anno 1501, and is honoured with the Sepulchers of Oecolampadius, Erasmus, Pontanus, Clarius, and Hottomann the famous Civilian. In this City, Anno 1431, was held that notable Council wherein though the Papal authority was then at the height, it was declared that a general Council was above the Pope. What was then enacted, was immediately put in practice; the Council deposing Pope Eugenius IV. and placing in his room Adrian Duke of Savoy, afterward called Felix the IV. who having held the See nine years in a time of Schism, did willingly in order to the peace of Christendom, resign the Popedom to Nicholas V. who had before been chosen by the opposite Faction. The City is great, rich, and populous, sometimes a Town Imperial, still a Bishop's See; the Bishop being subject to the Archbishop of Besanson, in the County of Burgundy; seated upon the River Rhone (where it receiveth Weir and Byssa, two lesser Rivers) by which it is divided into the greater Basel lying towards France, and the lesser lying towards Germany. 5. Lucern, situate on both sides of the Ruffs, where it issueth out of the Lake of Lucern; so called from Lucern, i.e. the Lantern, which was placed here on an high Tower, to give light to Water-men in the night. A City well traded and frequented by strangers, because the ordinary road from Germany into Italy, passing from hence through the Country of the Grisons; and in regard that the Diet for the Popish Cantons, which heretofore were held at Uren, are removed hither. Not far from this Town is the Mountain called Pilates Hill, of Pontius Pilate, whose ghost (as the common people are made to believe) doth walk once a year on the banks of this Lake in his Judges Robes. And to be sure the fiction shall not be confuted they add, that whosoever seeth him shall die that year. 6. Bern, compassed almost round with the River Aar, and taking up the whole extent of a little Mountain; the houses of Free-hold, neatly and uniformly built: A Town which gives name to the largest and most potent of all the Cantons; one of the first which did embrace the Reformation, and the first of all which purged it self of Images, those excellent Instruments of Superstition and Idolatry; defaced herein a popular tumult, Anno 1548. 7. Lausanna in the Canton of Bern, a Bishop's See, situate to the Archbishop of Besanson; seated on the banks of the Lake of Lemane; and compassed with mountains always covered with snow, which open themselves on the East side only, which is towards Italy. 8. Schaffhausen, the only Town of all the Cantons, which lieth on the other side of the Rhone; of right belonging unto Suevia, or Schabern, a Province of Germany, and reckoned as a part thereof, before it was incorporated into this Confederacy.

German

Next for the Præfidents, and Confederated States; they have not many Towns of note (excepting Rorschach, and Mulhausen, two Imperial Cities, which properly belong to another place.) Of those which be, the principal amongst the Confederates, lying within the bounds of this Country, is the Town of St. Gall, (Sengal as they corruptly call it) an Imperial City, situate amongst the Mountains near the Boden-See; a rich, populous, and well-governed Town, taking name from the Monastery of St. Gall a famous Scot, and the Apostle of those parts, Anno 630, or thereabouts; the Abbot of which having great possessions in this Tract (before Apenzel, and this Town revolted from him) was a Prince of the Empire. The Anabaptists were once very prevalent here, in so much that one of them cut off his Brothers head in the presence of his Father and Mother, and said (according to the humour of that Sect, who boast much of dreams, visions, and Enthusiasms) that God commanded him so to do. The principal amongst the Præfidents is the Town of Baden, or (to difference it from Baden a Marquise in Germany) the Upper-Baden; seated on a little Mountain near the River Limn, almost in the middle of the Country; and for that cause the place of meeting for the Council of Estate of all the Confederates. It taketh name from the Baths here being, two of which only are publick, the rest in private houses: confest, as it is thought, to much lasciviousness. For whereas it is said of Adrian, that Lavacro pro facibus sparavit; here men and women promiscuously bathe together; and which is worst in private: whereas Münster telleth us, Cernunt viri uxoribus tractari, cernunt cum alienis loqui, & quidem solam cum solo; and yet are not any of them disturbed with jealousy. The Baths are much frequented, yet not so much for health as pleasure. Their Chief vertues the quickning power they have upon barren women. But as the Friars use to send men whose Wives are fruitless, in pilgrimage to St. Jeger, the Patrons of fruitfulness; and in the mean time to lie with their Wives: so it may be with good reason thought, that in a place of such liberty as this is, the lusty young Gallants that haunt this place, produce greater operation of barren women, than the waters of the Bath it self. No other Town of eminent note amongst the Præfidents of the Swiss, except Rhineck it self, the seat of the Governor for the Switzers, situate near the Lake of Comlance; and none of any note at all amongst the Italian Præfidents, except Belinzano, and Locarno, neither of them containing four hundred Houses, and those none of the handfomest.

Within the limits of this Country, and in that part thereof which was called Argov, containing the now Cantons of Uren, Switz, Underswald, Glaris, and Lucern; with some of the adjoining parts of Germany, and some part of the Dukedom of Savoy did sometimes stand the famous and renowned Castle of HABSPURG: from the Lords whereof the House of Austria, and most of the Kings and Princes of the Christian World do derive themselves. First founded, as some say, by Ottobert the third Prince of this Line, at or before the year 700, as others say, by Rapato the Son of Betzeline, about the year 1020; situate on the River Aar (by the Latines called Arula) near a Town called Bruck; now decayed, that there is no tracing of the ruins. Preserved in memory by the Lords and Princes of it, defended in a direct line from Segebert the eldest Son of Theobert King of Metz, or Austrasia; first settled in these parts by Clotivus the second, King of the French, with the titles, as some say, of Duke of Upper Almain (the Lower Almain being that which is now called Suevia or Schabern, an adjoining Province of Germany.) Being soon weary of that empty, but invidious title, they were sometimes called Earls of Habsburg, by the name of this Castle; sometimes Earls of Altenburg, another Castle not far off, of their own foundation. And after, closing in with the Kings of Burgundy Transjurane, and the German Emperors, they received of them a great part of the Country of Argov; from which some of them were called Earls of Argov. Not known distinctly by the title of Earls of Habsburg; till the time of Rapato above-mentioned; when those of Altenburg and Argov became discontinued. Howsoever we will here lay down the whole Succession of this famous Family, either Earls, or the Progenitors of

The Earls of Habsburg.

A. Chr.

635

1. Sigibert, Son of Theobert King of Metz, by Clotilde the second of that name. French King, dispossessed of the Kingdom of his Father, and afterwards by him indowed with a great part of those Countries, which are now called Switzerland, with the title of Duke of Upper Almain.
2. Sigibert II. Son of Sigibert I. Duke of Upper Almain.
3. Ottobert, or Oibert, the Son of Sigibert II. the founder, as some say, of the Castle of Altemburg, and Habsburg, of which promiscuously called Earl.
4. Bebo, the Son of Ottobert, the last Duke of Upper Almain; which title he exchanged for that of Earl of Altemburg, and Habsburg.
5. Robert, or Robor, as some call him, the Son of Bebo, Earl of Altemburg.
- 766 6. Hertbert, the Son of Robert, who added unto his Estate that part of Schwaben, or Suevia, which is called Brigow.
7. Rampert, the Son of Hertbert, who flourished Anno 814. at what time he procured the Canonization of S. Trupertus.
8. Gunttram, the Son of Rampert, Earl of Altemburg.
9. Luitward, the Son of Gunttram.
- 500 10. Luitfride, the Son of Luitward.
- 929 11. Hunfride, the Son of Luitfride, who added unto his Estates the Territory now called Sungow, bordering on Alsacia, a Province of Germany; recovered after his decease by the Dukes of Schwaben.
- 550 12. Gunttram II. Son of Hunfride, the first who took unto himself the title of Earl of Argow: from whose second Son named Berthold, descended the Dukes or Earls of Zeringen, possessed of almost all Brigow, and a good part of Switzerland, which they inherited from Berthold, the Son of Gebira, the third Son of Gunttram; who having founded the Castle of Zeringen, and acquired great possessions in adjoining parts of Schwaben, left them at his decease (being childless) to Berthold the Son of Berthold, and his Cousin German.
13. Betza, or Berzeline, the eldest Son of Gunttram II. Earl of Argow.
14. Rapata, Son of Betzeline, the founder or repaire of the Castle of Habsburg, from whence both he and his Successors were constantly called Earls of Habsburg. Great Grand-father by Theodoric his youngest Son, of Rodolph Earl of Rhineland, and Duke of Schwaben, elected Emperor (as the inscription of the Pope) against Henry IV.
15. Warner, by some called Berenger, or Berengarius, the Son of Rapata.
- 1096 16. Orbo, the Son of Warner or Berenger.
- 1108 17. Warner II. Son of Orbo, enriched by the Emperor Henry IV. with some fair Estates belonging to the Dukes of Schwaben.
18. Albert, the Son of Warner II. surnamed the Rich.
19. Albert II. surnamed the Wise, Son of Albert I. added to his Estates a great part of the Upper Alsacia; which he had by the Right of Helduigis his Wife, one of the Daughters and heir of Simon the last Earl thereof.

- 1238 20. Rodolph, the fortunate Son of Albert II. added to his Estate the rest of the Upper Elzate, elected Emperor of the Romans, Anno 1273. Of which he made so good advantage, that he added unto his Estates the great Dukedom of Austria, with all the incorporate Provinces thereunto belonging, and laid the first foundation of the Austrian greatness, of which more in Germany. Here only note, that besides the following Princes of the House of Austria, those of the line Collateral still retained the titles of Earls of Habsburg (according to the ill custom of Germany) increased with the addition of the Earldom of Kyburg, of which more hereafter: and so continued till the expiring of that Line in the person of Rodolph IV. the last that bare the title of Earl of Habsburg, Anno 1356. by whose death many fair Estates were added to the Austrian Family.

Having on the occasion of these Earls of Habsburg, be-held so much of the affairs of this Country, as related unto that puissant and illustrious family, let us go forward to the rest: first taking in our way the ancient Estate hereof, in the time of the Romans. At what time this whole mountainous tract, containing many several Nations (some of them spoken of before) was comprehended under the general name and notion of the Helvetii: the greatest and most populous of all the rest: so called, as Vesfegan will have it, Quasi Hil-vites, or the Piles of the Mountains, to difference them from the Piles of the lower parts, inhabiting in that part of Gimbrich, Chefingse, which is now called Friesland; and from those dwelling in the middle, betwixt both extremes in the little Province still called Vuitland. Grown by long peace, and want of opportunity by traffick into foreign parts, to so great a multitude, that the Country bareen of it self, was no longer able to maintain them, they set fire on their Towns and Houses, and with a general resolution went to seek new dwellings. The total number of men, women, and children, which went upon this desperate action, are said to have amounted to the number of 368000, whereof 90000 were fighting men. They had not long before overthrown L. Cassius a Roman Consul, slain the Consul himself, and sold his Soldiers for Bond-slaves: upon the apprehension of which good success, they thought no body able to withstand them. But they found Cesar of a stronger metal than L. Cassius. Who having stopped their passage by hewing down the Bridge of Geneva, till he was grown strong enough to bid them battle; so waited them in several skirmishes and defeats, that they were forced to crave leave of him to go home again, and to rebuild those Towns and Villages which they had destroyed before this enterprize: which he upon delivery of Hostages, did vouchsafe to grant. It is conceived, that at the least two Millions of them perished in this journey, and not so much by the Sword (though that spared them not) as for want of necessities. After this they continued Members of the Roman Empire, till conquered in the times of Honorius and Valentinian III. by the Burgundians and Alamans, betwixt whom divided; the River Rust parting their Dominions. From them being taken by the French, it was made a part of the Kingdom of Burgundy; some parts first taken out: and given to the Progenitors of the Earls of Habsburg, as before was noted. Given with the rest of that Kingdom to the Emperor Conrade the the second, by Rodolph the last King thereof: parcelled out by the German Emperors (as their custom was) into divers States; most of the which were drawn in by the Dukes of Schwaben, the Earls of Habsburg, Kyburg, Werdenburg, &c. and the Dukes of Zeringen; as afterwards in the fall of the one, and as heirs to many of the other, by the Dukes of Austria. By means of which united titles, the Austrian Family was possessed of so much of this Country, as now makes up five Cantons, and as many of the principal Presfectures: that is to say, the Canton of Zug, Glaron, Lucern, Friburg, and Schaffhausen; the Presfectures of Baden, Bruggarten, Mellingen, Wegenthal, Rapperswil; together with a great part of the Country of Targow, wherein stands the City of St. Gall, now a Confederate with the Switzers; some of the rest, as Uren, Smitz, Uderwalden, being brought under by the power of the Emperor Albert, the Son of Rodolph of Habsburg, who had a purpose to unite them to the house of Austria; because obnoxious also to the power of those Princes. But the people being at last over-burthened by the tyranny of those Governors, whom the Dukes of Austria and their other Lords had sent among them: seeing withal the Empire by the Pope's Fulminations distracted into many Factions, and the Austrian Family weakened by a sub-division of that great Estate into many parcels: they contracted an Offensive and Defensive League amongst themselves, for defence of their Liberty, into which first entered those of Switz, Uren, and Uderwalden, Anno 1385. Not all united into one Confederation till the year 1513, as was before noted. At their first beginning to take Arms, Frederick one of the many Dukes of Austria (to whose share they fell) sent his Brother Leopold against them with a puissant Army which they encountered near Morgarten, a Village of the now Canton of Uderwalden, and there overthrew him: but more by the convenience of those narrow passages, through which his Army was to march, than by any valour. In which it was no small help to them, that the ways were all so filled with ice, that he was able to do no service with his Horse, and his Soldiers so amazed at the present difficulties, that the Confederates only casting stones on them from the tops of the Mountains, made them leap into the Lakes adjoining. This hapned in the year 1315. Grown confident by this success, they brought the new Canton of Lucern into their Confederacy by the force of Arms, Anno 1332. and that of Zurich by their reputation and like hope of Liberty, Anno 1351. in which year those of Zug, and Glaris invaded by the former live, and willing to discharge themselves of their Lordly Matters, were united to them, as was the new Canton of Bern in the year next following. In the year 1381, the Towns of Solothurn and Friburg, descended from the House of Zeringen, (at the expiration of that Line) upon those of Habsburg, revolted from their natural Lords and admitted Cantons, occasioned Leopold Son of Albert the short, and Brother of Albert IV. Duke of Austria, to make War upon them: in which War being vanquished and slain near Sempach a Village of the Canton of Lucern, with the Flower of his Nobility and Gentry, Anno 1386. and the succeeding Dukes not venturing any more against them, the residue of the Cantons and Confederates were in time made up.

Having thus cleared themselves of the House of Austria, they continued free and unmolested, but never came to any reputation for their valour, till the War made upon them by Charles Duke of Burgundy, whom they discomfited in three great Battels, and slew him also in the third. A War commenced by him at the first on small occasions, and left hopes: the Country being so barren, and the people so poor, that their Embassadour to the Duke (as Comines reporteth) protested, that if all their Country-men were taken, they would not be able to pay a Ranom, to the value of the Spurs and Bridle-bits in his Camp. Certainly at that time they were so poor, that they knew not what riches was. For having won the first Battle at Gronin (the other two were those of Marat and Nancy) one of the goodliest Pavilions in the World, was by them torn in pieces, and turned into Breches and Side-coats: divers silver Plates and Dishes, they fold for a French Sour (each Sour a little more than an English Penny) suppling them to be but Pewter; and a great Diamond of the Dukes, which was the goodliest Jewel in Christendom, was sold to a Priest for a Guilders; and by him again to some of the Lords of the Country for three Frank. After their valour shewed in these Battels, Lewis XI. took them into Pension, giving them yearly forty thousand Crowns, viz. twenty thousand to the Cantons, and twenty thousand to particular persons: and bowed so much beneath the Majesty of the most Christian King, as to term himself one of the Burgesses of their Corporation; and to contend with the Duke of Savoy, which of them should be held for their first Allie. By these Arts, and the nearness of their Forces for those occasions, he wrested Burgundy out of the hands of Mary the Daughter of Charles; and Lewis XII. won Millain from Ludowick Sforze, whom they perditionally betrayed, as was said before. Upon the merit of these services, they required an augmentation of their Pensions: which when this Lewis XII. denied, they withdrew themselves from the Amity of the French, and entered into the service of Pope Julius II. who therefore stiled them the Defenders of the Church, Anno 1510. The fruits of which entertainment was the defeat of the whole Forces of King Lewis, and the loss of Millain; into which Maximilian Sforze the Son of Ludowick, was solemnly re-initiated by the Confederates: who to oblige the Switzers more firmly to him, gave them those Towns and Valleys in the Alpes of Italy (formerly members of that Dukedom) which now belong unto the Switzers, reckoned amongst the Presfectures of their Common-wealth. Francis I. in pursuance of his claim to Millain, gave them a great and memorable overthrow at the Battle of Marignan. Yet afterwards considering what damage his Realm had sustained by the revolt of the Auxiliaries to his Enemies, he renewed the Confederation with them; on condition that he should restore the ancient Pension of forty thousand Crowns; secondly, that he should pay unto them at certain terms, six hundred thousand Crowns; thirdly, that he should entertain four thousand of them in his pay continually; fourthly, that for the restoring of such places as they had taken from the Dutchy of Millain, he should give unto them thirty thousand Crowns: fifthly, that he should give them three months pay beforehand: sixthly and lastly, that Maximilian Sforze, whom they had estated in Millain, and were now going to dispossess, might by the King be created Duke of Nemours, endowed with twelve thousand Frank of yearly revenue, and married to a daughter of the blood royal. On these conditions, as honourable to them as burthenous to the King, was the League renewed, Anno 1522. since which time, they have obtained, that six hundred of their Country are to be of the French King's Guard; five hundred of which wait without at the gates of the Courts, the other hundred in the great Hall. And yet the French Kings did not so ingross the Market, though they raised the price of the commodity, but that all other Princes might have them also for their Money: the Kings of Spain and others bidding fair for them, but never never going so high as the French had done. At last, upon the differences which grew amongst themselves in point of Religion they grew to be divided also in point of Person: the Populi Cantons taking Penfions of the Pope, and the King of Spain; the Protestants of the French, the mixt, of both; and all of the Venetians. By which means being bribed and corrupted by all, they came in very little time to be ruled of none. Which sudden sinking of that fame and reputation which they had attained to, together with the reasons of it; that notable Statesman and Historian Guicciardini doth describe as followeth: "The name (saith he) of this wild and uncivil Nation, hath got great honour by their Concord, and glory by Arms. For being fierce by nature, insured to War, and exact keepers of Military discipline, they have not only defended their own Country, but have won much praise in Foreign parts: which doubtless had been greater, if they had sought to enlarge their own Empire, and not for Wages to enlarge the Empire of others; and if nobly they had proceeded upon themselves any other ends than the gain of money; by the love whereof being made abject, they have lost the opportunity of becoming fearful to Italy. For since they never came out of their Confinnes, but as mercenary men, they have had no publick fruit of their Victories: but by their covetousness have become intolerable in their actions, where they overcame, and in their demands with other men; yea, at home froward and obdurate in their conclusions, as well as following their commands, under whose pay they serve in War. Their chief men have Penfions of several Princes to favour them in their publick meetings: and so private profit being preferred before the good of the publick, they are apt to be corrupted, and fall at discord amongst themselves, with great lessening of their reputation which they had gotten amongst strangers. So he, relating the occurrences of the year 1511, which the following issue of affairs hath fully verified.

As for the Government of this State, it is meere popular, and that not only in the particular Cantons, but the aggregate body of their Council: the Gentry and Nobility being either rooted up in those long wars which were betwixt them and their Vassals, justly provoked by those intolerable pressures and exactions which they laid upon them; or else worn out of memory and observation, for want of way and suffrage in the Councils of the Common-wealth. Only in Schaffhausen, Basel, and Zurich, are some Gentry left, not capable of any place or suffrage in the Senate of the said Cantons (from which they are excluded by the common people, because they joynted not with them in their first revolt) unless they waive their Gentry, and be enrolled amongst the number of Plebeians. The rest they have (it seemeth in poore esteem, that Porters and Mechanicks of the meanest Trades, in all occasions of War, are numbered with and amongst these Gentlemen; making up one Society only, and joyning with them in electing the Master of their Company, who is one of the Senate. But because that every Canton hath his proper Magistrates, but more or fewer, according as it is in greatness, or in the number of its several Resorts, or sub-divisions; it will not be amiss to shew what number of Resorts are in every Canton: that is to say, in Underralden only two, in Switz six, in Oren ten, in Zug five, in Glaris or Glarona fifteen, in Apenzel six, in Lucern seven, in Solothurn no more than one, in Friburg nineteen, in Basel and Schaffhausen but one apiece (the Cantons there and in Solothurn, reaching but little further than the Towns themselves) in that of Zurich thirty one, and thirty in that of Bern; in all one hundred forty and eight. Of these consisteth the body of this Common-wealth. In ordering whereof, every particular Canton hath its proper Magistrate, chosen by the Commonalty of that Canton (whom they call the Wismen) together with a standing Council assistant to him, chosen out of the people, for the directing and disposing of their own affairs; which meet and sit in the chief Town and Village of that Distrikt. But if the cause concern the Publick, then every Canton sendeth one or more Commissioners to the general Diet; where they determine of the business which they meet about, according to the major part of the Voter: the Commissioners of every Canton have one Vote only, though many may be sent from each, to add the greater weight to their Consultations. The place of meeting is most commonly at the Town of Baden, in respect of the Commodity of the Inns and Houses, the pleasant situation and famous Medicinal Baths; and because it is seated in the very centre of Switzerland, and subject to the eight first Cantons. And here they do determine of War, Peace, and Leagues; of making Laws, of sending, receiving, and answering Embassadors; of Governments, and distributing the publick offices; and finally, of difficult Causes and Appeals, referred unto the judgment of the Great Council, in which the City Zurich, chief of the Cantons, hath the first place, not by antiquity, but dignity, and of old custom hath the greatest authority of calling together this Great Council, signifying by Letters to each Canton, the cause, time, and place of meeting: yet so, that if any Canton think it for the publick good, to have an extraordinary meeting of their Commissioners, they write to the greater of Zurich to appoint the same. That which the greater number do resolve upon is without delay put in execution.

The Forces of these Swiss consist altogether of Foot, Horse being found unconvincible in this Mountainous Country. And of these Foot, Botery reckoneth that they are able to raise sixscore thousand. Which possibly may be true enough, if it be understood of all that be able to bear Arms. For otherwise de facto, the greatest Army that ever they brought into the field, consisted but of one and thirty thousand men, which was that where-with they aided the Confederate States of Italy against the French, and restored Maximilian Sforza to the Dukedom of Millain. Their ordinary standing Forces are conceived to be sixteen or seventeen thousand, which they may bring into the field, leaving their Towns and Forts well furnished. And for their Revenue, it is not like to be very great, considering the poverty of their Country, and their want of Traffic with other Nations. That which is ordinary and in common, ariseth out of the Annual Penfions which they receive from Foreign States; the profits arising out of their Dutch and Italian Prefectures, the Impost laid on Wines sold in Taverns, and Corn used by Bakers; and the Rents of a dissolved Monastery called Kings-field (or Conings-field) because many Kings and Queens have been cloistered there, amounting to forty thousand Guldans yearly. Which Monastery was built in the year 1380, in memory and honour of the Emperor Albertus, slain by his Nephew Spaniback, not far from Basel. Their extraordinary doth consist of spoils that be gotten in the War: which if it be managed in common, are divided in common; but if by two or three of the Cantons only, the rest can claim no share in the booty gotten.

But this is only in relation to the Switzers themselves. For otherwise taking in the Confederate States as well without as within the bounds of that Country, they are able to raise fifty or three score thousand men: that is to say, the Switzers themselves seventeen thousand men, the Grisons ten thousand, those of Wallisland six thousand; the Abbot and Town of St. Gall four thousand; the City of Geneva two thousand; besides what Rome and Mulhausen, two Imperial Cities, are able to contribute towards it; the Dukes of Savoy being bound by their ancient Leagues to aid them with six hundred Horses, at his own charges; besides two thousand six hundred Crowns in Annual Penfions. But the Revenue of those States is ordered by it self apart, and never comes with in the computation of the publick; unless it be on the repelling of a common Enemy, in which they are equally concerned. In which case, and others of a general interest, they communicate both heads and pulses: the Delegates and Commissioners of all the States of this Confederacy, meeting together to consult of the Common Cause, which meeting they entitle the Greatest Council. But this is very seldom held, publick affairs being generally ordered by the Commissioners of the Switzers only though they themselves disclaim the name of Switzers, as too mean and narrow, and call themselves Eidgenossen, that is to say, Partakers of the sworn Leagues. More of this Common-wealth he that lists to see, may satisfy himself in Simler, who purposely and punctually hath described the same.

The Leagues of the GRISONS.

THE Country of the GRISONS comprehendeth all that part of the Alpes, which lieth between the Springs of the Rivers Rhene, Inn, Adice or Alpehris, and Adna: being bounded on the East, with the Country of Tirol; on the West with Switzerland; on the North with Suevia or Schwaben, and a part of the Switzers; on the South, with Lombardy. A Country far more mountainous than any of this Alpine tract, and having less natural commodities to boast it self of, more than the Mountains of those Rivers before mentioned.

The People of it by most Latine Writers of these times, are called by the name of Rheti, the Country Rhetia; and so far properly enough, as that the ancient Rheti did inhabit all the Lands possessed by the Grisons: though the Grisons do not inhabit a fourth part of those Lands, which were possessed heretofore by the ancient Rheti: For anciently the Rheti did extend their dwellings as far as from the Alpes of Italy, to the River of Daon; comprehending besides this of the Grison, a great part of Suevia or Schwaben, Tirol, Bavaria, and so much also of the Switzers, as was not in possession of the old Helvetii. Within which Tract there were not only many rich Valleys and fruitful fields; but a most pleasant race of Wines called Vina Rhetica, much drunk of by Augustus Caesar, and by him preferred before all others; which no man can conceive to grow in this barren Country. More properly Ammianus Marcellinus calleth this Tract by the name of Campi Canini, Mountainous fields, which the continual Snow made to look of an hoary hue: and by allusion thereunto, the Dutchmen call this Nation at the present by the name of Graupunnier, that is to say, the hoary or gray Confederates.

As for the Rheti, take them in the former latitude, they were subdued by Drusus and Tiberius, the Sons-in-law and adopted children of Augustus Caesar, A.U.C. 739. And in the time of Antoninus made up two Provinces of the Empire, viz. Rhetia prima, and Rhetia secunda, both of them appertaining by Constantine new Model, to the Dioecesis of Italy. A Nation in the first Original of Italian race, and so more properly to be assigned to that Dioecesis; but had inhabited this Tract from the time that Bellerophon the Gall fell on part of Tisany, expelling thence the ancient inhabitants thereof: who under the conduct of Rhetus, a great man amongst them, possessed themselves of these Mountains, and afterwards of the Vales adjoining, which they called Rhetia, by the name of their Captain General. This happened in the time of Tarquinius Priscus, in the first cradle, as it were, of the Roman Empire: in the declining age whereof, during the reign of Valentinian III, and Augustulus, those parts which lay nearest unto Germany, and were worth the conquering, were subdued by the Almain; and Bolarians by them incorporated with the rest of their several States. The residue of this Mountainous Tract, as not worth the looking after, continued a member of the Empire, till given by Charles the Great to the Bishop of Chur: whose Successors, being several ways molested by their potent neighbours, confederated with the Switzers for their mutual aid and preservation, Anno 1497. By whose aid they so valiantly made good their ground against the Austrians, that at the last, after the loss of twenty thousand men on both sides, the points in difference were accorded, and a peace concluded.

This is the substance of this story, as to former times, to which there cannot much be added in the way of History; little or no alteration happening in their affairs, but a more perfect settling of them in a form of Government. Concerning which we must observe that this whole Tract is cleft into three Districts: that is to say, the Upper League or Liga Grise, 2. Liga Cadi Din, or the League of the House of God, 3. The Lower League called also Liga Diuturn, or the League of the ten Mountainous. The eight Italian Prefectures will make a fourth. Their buildings generally in the three first being cold and mountainous, are of free-stone, but low, and for three parts of the year covered with Snow: the Windows thereof glazed and large, of which for the said three parts of the year they only open a little quarry of the Glaze, and presently shut it close again; the outside of the Windows having leaves of wood, to keep the heat of their Stows from going out, or any cold from coming in. And as for travelling, the ways are for the most part unsafe and dangerous, by reason of the straight passages, dreadful precipices, and these almost continual Bridges which hang over the terrible falls and Cataracts of the River Rhene, descending with great violence from the highest Mountains: huge hills of Snow tumbling into the Valleys, with a noise as hideous as if it were a clap of thunder.

For the particulars, the Upper League lieth in the highest and most mountainous parts of the Alpes of Italy, having therein those vast Mountains of Lockannier, and Der Vogel; out of which the two streams of the Rhene have their first Original. By the French it is called Liga Grise or the Gray League, (the word Grise or Grise, in that Language, being Gray in ours) in the same sense as the Dutch call it Graupunnier, that is, Confederates Grise-pates, which we may render properly the Confederate Grise-pates: either because the Mountains are continually covered with a periview of hoary flakes, or from the heads of the people, Gray before their time. It consisteth of nineteen Resorts or Commonalties, according to their number of their Vales and Villages, of which four only speak the Dutch, all the rest a corrupt Italian: and was the first which did confederate with the Switzers, from whence the name of Grison came unto the rest, who after joynted with them in the same Confederacy. It hath no City nor Town of note. The principal of those that be, are 1. Ilanier, the place sometimes of the General Diets for these Leagues. 2. Diferant, where is a very rich Monastery. 3. St. Bernardin, situate at the foot of the Mountain Vogel. 4. Mafox, sometimes an Earldom, giving name to the Valley Mafocer-tal. 5. Galancker, whence the Vale so named, inhabited by none but Basket-makers. 6. Ruffia, situate on the River Mufa, near Belluzano, on the skirts of Italy.

2. The second League, is Liga Cadi Dio, or the League of the House of God, so called because it was the proper Patrimony of the Bishop and Church of Chur: and may be called the Middle League, as being situate between the Upper League on the West, and the Lower League upon the East. It is the greatest of the three, containing twenty one Reforts or Commonalties: of which nine lie on this side the tops of the Mountains towards Germany, the rest towards Italy: and yet two only speak the Dutch, the others a corrupt Italian. The places of most note are 1. Tintzen, the Tinnerio of Antoninus, seated amongst high and inaccessible Mountains, betwixt Chur and the Valley of Bergel. 2. Mur, (called Murny by the same Antoninus) in the Valley of Bergel: a Valley extending from the head of the River Maira, towards Chiavenna, one of the Italian Prefectures. 3. Stalla, called Bevia by the Italians, because the way doth in that place divide it self. 4. Jasomo (in the Valley of Compalschein) called Transide by Antoninus. 5. Simada, in the Valley of Engadin. And 6. Chur, by some Coina, but more truly Curia, so called from the long stay that Constantine the Great made here with his Court and Army, in a War intended against the Germans; built afterwards by some part of his Forces which continued here, Anno 357. about half a Dutch mile from the meeting of the two streams of the Rhone, in form triangular, the buildings indifferent in themselves, but not uniform with one another. High on a Hill; in one corner of which standeth the Clofe, and therein the Cathedral Church, a stately Edifice, but more in account of the Natives who have seen no fairer, than it is with strangers: and near the Church the Bishop's Palace, and the houses of the Canons, all well built, and handsomely adorned. The Bishop of this City, and of all the Country of these Leagues (for they received their Bishop and the Faith together, Anno 489.) acknowledgeth the Archbishop of Mentz for their Metropolitan; is reckoned for a Prince of the Empire, and the rightful Lord both of this City and the whole League: but on the introduction of the Reformed Religion, which they had from the Switzers and Genevians, the Citizens withdrew themselves from their obedience to the Bishop, and govern the City in the manner of a Free State. So far conformable to him, for their own preservation, that as the Bishop and his Canons, with the rest of this League, upon occasion of the wrangs done them by the House of Austria; Lords of the neighbouring Tirol; joined in confederacy with the seven first Canons of the Switzers (which was in the year 1498.) So did the Citizens of Chur, after they had withdrawn themselves from the command of their Bishops, concur with them at last in that mutual League.

3. The third League of these Grifons, is the Lower League, called also Liga Dittura, or the League of the ten Jurisdictions; situate close upon Tirol, in the Northeast part of the whole Country. Of all the ten, two only, which are those of Malans and Maienfeld, obey the joyn't commands of the three Leagues of the Grifons; the other eight being subject to the Arch-Duke of Austria under whom they are suffered to enjoy their ancient privileges, for fear of uniting with the Switzers; which hitherto they have not done. Only they did unite together in one common League, Anno 1436, confirming their mutual defence against all Enemies, preservation of their peace, and maintenance of their privileges; reserving notwithstanding their obedience to their natural Lords. In which respect, and by reason of the interest and society which they have with the rest of the Grifons they are in friendship with the Swiss, but in no Confederacy. City or walled Town they have none. The chief of those they have, are 1. Caltis, the seat of the Government for the Arch Duke of Austria; 2. Malans, and 3. Maienfeld, both bordering upon the Rhone. 4. Tanau, giving name to the first and greatest of the ten Jurisdictions, the chief Town of this League, in which are held the General Diets for the same; and where are kept Monuments and Records which concern their Privileges. In this League is the Mountain called Rhatico mons, by Pomponius Mela, but now Pretigomerberg, because it is at the end of the Valley which the Dutch call Pretigom.

4. As for the Italian Prefectures they are eight in number, and were given unto the Grifons by Maximilian Sforze, Duke of Millain, Anno 1513. at such time as he gave the like present to the Canons of Switzerland. Of these the first is called Plurs, so called from the chief Town of the same name, in Latine Plura, once seated in a Plain at the foot of the Alpes, near the River Maira, the chief of sundry Villages lying in the same bottom; now nothing but a deep and bottomless Gulf. For on the 26 of August 1617, an huge Rock falling from the top of the Mountains, overwhelmed the Town, killed in the twinkling of an eye 1500 people, and left no sign or ruine of a Town there standing; but in the place thereof a great Lake of some two miles length. 2. Chiarama, situate in a pleasant Valley so called, near the River Maira, and ten Italian miles from the Lake of Como. Antoninus calleth it Clavenna, and the Dutch Cleuver-tal, or the Valley of Chruu, more near unto the ancient name. 3. The Valtolina, Vallis Tolina in the Latine, a pleasant Valley, extending threecore miles in length, from the head of the River Adia, unto the fall thereof in the Lake of Como: the Wines thereof are much commended, and frequently transported on this side the Alpes. It is divided into six Prefectures, according to the names of the principal Towns. The chief whereof, are 1. Bormio, seated near the head of the River Adia. 2. Teio, the chief Fortrefs of the whole Valley. 3. Sondrio, the chief Town, and the Seat of the Governour, or Lieutenant General of the whole Country. This Valley lying opportunely for the passage of the King of Spain's Forces out of Millain into Germany, by the practices and treasons of Kodolpus Planta, one of the Natives of it, and of the Romish Religion; was delivered to the Duke of Feria, being then Governour of Millain, Anno 1622. the whole Country brought under the obedience of that King, Chur it self forced and taken by them, and the Religion of Rome settled in all parts thereof. But two years after, by the joyn't Forces of the French, Venetians and Savoyards, the whole Valley was recovered from the Spaniards, and after a long treaty between France and Spain, the Grifons re-estated in their just possessions, Anno 1630. save that the Spaniard still holds the Fort of Fuenter, for the safer passage of his Forces, if occasion be.

Such is the state of three Leagues considered severally and apart from one another. In reference to the whole, they make up one Government, or Commonwealth; for ordering whereof they hold a General Diet, once in every year, consisting of threecore and three Commissioners; that is to say, 28 from the Upper League, 23 from the League of the House of God, and 14 from the League of the ten Jurisdictions. These these have authority to determine of Appeals from the common Prefectures, to conclude of Peace and War, Confederacies, Embassies, and Laws, which concern the publick; yet so, that in a point of Judicature, it is lawful to appeal unto the Commonalties of every League, who have authority if need be, to reverse the Sentence; the causes being severally proposed, and passed by the major part of the voices. The Government of each League, popular, as amongst the Switzers.

There are in these Alpine Provinces,

Archbishops 2. Bishops 13.

FRANCE.

HAVING thus crossed the Alpes, we may indifferently dispose our selves for France or Germany. But, we will follow the Course and Fortunes of the Roman Empire, which first passed into France, before it meddled with the German; and had brought Spain and Britain under the Form of Roman Provinces, when Germany was looked on at a greater distance.

FRANCE then according to the present dimensions of it, is bounded on the East, with a branch of the Alpes, which divide Dauphine from Piemont; as also, with the Countries of Savoy, Switzerland, and some parts of Germany, and the Netherlands on the North, with the Aquitain Ocean, and the Pyrenean Mountains, which divide it from Spain; on the North, with the English Ocean, and some parts of Belgium; and on the South, with the rest of the Pyrenean Mountains, and the Mediterranean.

The Figure of it, is almost Square, each side of the Quadrature being reckoned 600 miles in length. But, they that go more exactly to work upon it, make the length hereof to be 660 Italian miles; the breadth 570 only; the whole Circumference to amount to 2040. Seated in the Northern Temperate Zone, between the middle Parallel of the Fifth Climate, where the longest day is 15 hours; and the middle Parallel of the Eighth Climate, where the longest day is 16 hours and an half.

It hath this present Name of France, from the Franks, or Franks, a people of Germany, who seized upon those parts of it which lay nearest to the Rhene. In the time of Valentinian III. and, having afterwards subdued Paris, and made it the Seat-Royal of their growing Empire, they caused the Country thereabouts to be called France. Which Name, as they enlarged their borders, they imposed on, or communicated rather, to the rest of this Country, and to those parts of Germany also, which were conquered by them. At which time, for distinction sake, they called the East parts of their whole Empire by the name of Ostero-reich, or Austrasia, lying now wholly out of France; in Germany; and that part of Belgium, which is subject to the King of Spain; and for the West parts thereof, they have the name of Westen-reich, or Westrasia, (in the barbarous Latine of that Age) West France, or Francia Occidentalis; to which the name of France was at last appropriated, according to the limits before laid down.

Anciently, it was called Gallia, and the people, Galli; and by that name occurs, most commonly, in the Writers of the Roman story; and Gallia Transalpinga, because situate on the further side of the Alpes, from Italy, to difference it from the Country of those Gauls, which being planted in those parts which we now call Lombardy, was called Cisalpinga. Sometimes it was called Gallia; and by that name known amongst the Greeks; by Plutarch called Celto-Gallia; or the Gallia of the Celts, a potent Nation of old Gaul; to distinguish it from Gallia one of the Provinces of Asia minor, denominated from the Gallatians, or Gauls, of this Country. Whence it became so named, is not yet determined. Some think it was called Gallia from the Greek word Γαλα (Gala) signifying Milk, quia Lactior, i. e. albos homines producit, for the milky and white complexion of the people, compared to the Greeks and Romans, who first imported it. Others, and amongst them, Dionysius Siculus, derive the name from Galata, a Son of Hercules; to which that of Gallia comes as near as may be. That Hercules was sometimes in this Country, is affirmed also by Ammianus Marcellinus; who further adds, That after he had suppressed those Tyrants which oppressed the people, he begat many Children on the principal Women; Et ex partu quibus imperitabant, nominibus suis appellavit, Lib. XL. Who gave their own names to those parts over which they ruled. But, in another place, acknowledging, That the Grecians call this people, Gallatae, (ita enim Gallos sermo Graecus appellat) he telleth us from Timon an ancient Author, one very diligent in the search of the Gallick Antiquities, that the Aborigines, or first Inhabitants hereof, called themselves Celtae, by the name of one of their Kings, whom they highly honoured; Et matris ejus vocabulo Galatam, and Galata from the name of his Mother Galata; who, and properly enough, might be a Daughter of Hercules; mutuoque by Dionysius, for one of his Sons.

Of the Original of this people, more anon. In the mean time, we may take too much notice of the ancient Gaul as to affirm him 'Out of Cesar, and other Authors' to be quick-witted, of a sudden and humble apprehension; but withal, very rati and hair-brain'd (ut sunt Julia Gallorum ingenia, is a note set upon them by the Pen of Cesar;) so full of Law-suits and Contentions, that their Lawyers never wanted work. Gallia Castior, &c. as that Poet hath it, of vehement affections, and precipitate in all their actions, as well Military as Civil: falling on like a Clap of Thunder, and presently going off in Smoke. Primus impetus major quam virum, secundus minor quam semineum, was a part also of their Character in the time of Florus the Historian. And though the present French be generally of another Original; yet, there is so much of the old Gaul still left amongst them, either by the impression of the Heavenly Bodies, or by Inter-marriages with the Gauls, as they overcame them; that all the qualities are still predominant minant in the French; not differing from the ancient Gaul, but in Name and Habit. For further evidence whereof, take with you a Comparison, homely I must confess, but to the life expresting the nature of the French, compared with the Dutch and Spanish, in matters of War. The French is said to be like a Flea, quickly skipping into a Country, and soon leaping out of it; as was the Expedition of Charles VIII. into Italy. The Dutch is said to be like a Louse, slowly mattering a place, and as slowly (yet at last) driven out of their hold; as was their taking and losing of Ostend and Gulick. The Spaniard is said to be like a Crab, or Pedicular inguinalis, which being once crept into a place, is so rooted there, that nothing but the extremity of Violence, can fetch him out again. In which, I think I need not instance; it being generally observed, that the Spaniards will endure all possible hardship, before they will part with any thing that they are possessed of. It is used also for a By-word, That the Italian is wise before-hand, the Dutch in the time of action, and the French after it is done; a Witdom much like that of the ancient Gauls. Nor are they less Litigious than the old Gauls were; inasmuch as it is thought, that there are more Law-suits tried among them in seven years, than have been in England from the Conquest, till the time of King James. They are great Scoffers, yea even in matters of Religion, as appeareth by the story of a Gentleman lying sick on his death-bed, who, when the Priest had perswaded him, that the Sacrament of the Altar was the very Body and Blood of CHRIST, refused to eat thereof, because it was Friday. Nor can I forget another in the same extremity; who seeing the Host (for so they call the Consecrated Elements) brought unto him by a Lubberly Priest, said, That CHRIST came to him, as he entered into Jerusalem, riding upon an Ass. As for the Women, they are said to be witty, but apish, wanton, and incontinent; where a man at his first entrance, may find acquaintance; and at his first acquaintance, may find an entrance. So Dallington, in his View of France, describeth them. But I have since heard this Censure condemned of some Uncharitableness, and the French Gentlemen highly magnified for all those Graces which may beautify and adorn that Sex. And it is possible enough, that it may be so in some particulars, though it be more than any man would guess at, that cometh amongst them. For, generally, at the first sight you shall have them as familiar with you, as if they had known you from your Cradle; and are so full of Chat and Tattle, even with those they know not, as if they were resolved sooner to want Bread, than Words; and never to be silent, but in the Grave.

As to the persons of this People, they are commonly of a middle stature, and for the most part, of a slight jnaking; their Complexion being generally hot and moist, which makes them very subject to the heats of Lust, and easily inclinable unto those Diseases which are concomitants thereof. Their Constitution somewhat tender, if not delicate; which rendreth them impatient of Toil and Labour; and is, in part, the cause of those ill success which have happened to them in the Wars; in which they have lost as much for want of constancy and perseverance in their Enterprises, as they have gained by their courage in the undertakings. And for the Women, they are for the most part, very proportionable of stature, slender waisted, and a fit symmetry of proportion in all the rest; their hands white, long, and slender; and easily discernable to be so; for either they wear no Gloves at all, or else so short, as if they were cut off at the hand-wrist. To those, the Complexion of their Faces, and the Colour of their Hair, too much inclining to the black, holds no true Decorum. 'Tis true, the Poets commend Leda for her black hair, and not unworthily; Leda fuit nigris conspicienda comis, as it is in Ovid. But this was specially, because it set off, with the greater liltre, the amiable Sweetness of her Complexion; for in that case, the Hair doth set forth the Face, as shadows commonly do a Picture; and the face so becometh the Hair, as a Field Argent doth a Sable bearing; which kind of Coat, our Critical Herald call the most fair. But when a Black Hair meets with a brown or swarthy complexion, it falls short of that attractiveness of Beauty which Ovid, seeing to great a Crafter-Master in the Art of Love, did commend in Leda.

The chief Exercises they use, are, 1. Tennis; every Village having a Tennis-Court, Orleans 60. Paris many hundreds. 2. Dancing; a sport to which they are so generally affected, that were it not so much inveighed against by their straight-laced Ministers, it is thought that many more of the French Catholics had been of the Reformed Religion. For, so extremely are they bent upon this disport, that neither Age, nor Sickness, nor Poverty itself, can make them keep their heels still when they hear the Music. Such as can hardly walk abroad without their Crutches, or go as if they were troubled all day with a Sciatica, and perchance have their rags hang loo loose about them that one would think a swift Galliard might shake them out of their nakedness, will to the Dancing-green howsoever, and be there as eager at the sport as if they had left their several infirmities and wants behind them. What makes their Minstrels (and indeed, all that follow the Genevian Discipline) inveigh so bitterly against Dancing, and punish it with such severity when they find it used, I am not able to determine, nor doth it any way belong unto this Discourse. But being it is a Recreation which this People are so given unto, and such a one as cannot be followed, but in a great deal of company, and before many witnesses and spectators of their carriage in it; I must needs think the Ministers of the French Church more nice than wise, if they chuse rather to deter men from their Congregation by so strict a Stoicism, than indulge any thing unto the jollity and natural gaiety of this People, in matters not offensive but by accident only.

The Language of this People is very voluble and pleasant; but rather Elegant, than Copious; and therefore much troubled for want of proper words to find out Periphrases; besides that very much of it is exprest in the action; the head and shoulders move as significantly toward it, as the lips and tongue; and he that hopeth to speak it with any good grace, must have somewhat in him of the Mimick. A Language enriched with great plenty of Proverbs, and consequently, a great help to the French humour of Scoffing; and so naturally disposed for Courtship, as makes all the people complements; the poorest Cobler in the parish, hath his Courti cringer, and his Beaubien de Cour, his Courti holymater, (as they call it) as perfectly as the best Gentleman-Husher in Paris. Compared with that of other Nations, the Language of the Spaniards is said to be Manly; the Italian, Courtly; and the French, Amorous. A sweet Language it is, without question, the people leaving out in their pronunciation, many of their Consonants; and thereby giving occasion to this By-word. That the French man pronounceth not as he writeth, singeth not as he pricketh, nor speaketh as he thinketh. In the Original thereof, it is a compound of the old Gallick, German, and Latine Tongues; the old Gallick being questionless the same with the Welsh or British, as appeareth clearly by these Reasons. 1. The Latine words are known to have have been received from the Romans; and the German words, at the coming in of the Franks and Burgundians; but the Welsh words which they have, we can give no reason, but that they are the remainder of their ancient Language; of which Welsh words, which still continue in that Language, Camden in his Britannia, reckoneth not a few. 2. It is said by Tacitus, that the Britains were the Descendants of the Gauls; and this he proveth, as by other Arguments, so from the identity or near resemblance of the Language which both Nations speak. Utriusque sermo haud multum diversus, as his own words are. And 3. it is said by Caesar, That the Gauls used to pass into Britain, to be instructed in the Rights and Learning of the Druids; which sheweth that both People speak but one common Tongue; there being, in those times, no one Learned Language which other Nations studied, besides their own.

The Soil is extraordinary fruitful, and hath three Load-measures to draw riches out of other Countries, Corn, Wine, and Salt; in exchange for which, there is yearly brought into France 1200000 l. sterling, the Custom of Salt only to the King, being estimated at 1700000 Crowns per annum. And indeed the benefit arising on this one Commodity, is almost incredible; it being constituted by the King's Edict, (which is all in all) that no man shall have any Salt for Domestic uses, (except by special Privilege, and that dearly paid for) but what he must buy of the King's Officers, and that upon such prices too, as they please to sell it. Nor can it but be very well stored with Fish: For, besides the benefit of the Seas, their Lakes and Ponds belonging to the Clergy only, are said to be 150000. Their other Merchandizes are, Bees, Hogs, Nuts, Woods, Skins, vast quantities of all sorts of Linnen. And, to say truth, there are not many Countries in the Christian World, to which Nature hath been so prodigal of her choicest blessings as the hath to this; the fields thereof being large and open, and those so intermingled with Corn and Vines, and every hedge-row so beset with choice of Fruits, that never any covetous or curious eye had a fairer object. And yet so miserable is the condition of the common Peasant; partly by reason of the intolerable Taxes laid upon him by the King; and partly, by those great, but uncertain Reuts, which are set upon him by his Landlords, (for the poor husbandman is Tenant only at the will of his Lord) that there is many one amongst them, who farmeth yearly thirty or forty Acres of Wheat and Vines, that never drinks Wine, nor eats good Bread, from one end of the year unto the other.

The Christian Faith was planted first amongst the Gauls, by some of St. Peter's Disciples, sent hither by him at his first coming to Rome: Xylus, Frontus, and Julianus, the first Bishops of Rhemes, Perigueux, and Mantes, (Concomensium, in the Latine) being said to be of his ordaining in the Martyrol gene. The like may be affirmed (but on sure grounds) of Trophimus, the first Bishop of Arles. For, on a Controversie betwixt the Archbishops of Vienna and Arles, for the dignity of the Metropolitan, in the time of Pope Leo I. it was thus pleaded in behalf of the Bishop of Arles, Quod prima inter Gallias, &c. That Arles of all the Cities of Gaul, did first obtain the happiness of having Trophimus ordained Bishop thereof, by the hands of St. Peter. Nor is St. Paul to be denied the honour of sending some of his Disciples thither also to preach the Gospel; Crescentus sent by him, as he telleth us, 2 Tim. 4. into Galatia, being the first Bishop of Vienna, spoken of before, as, not the Martyrologist only, but Ado Vinnensis, an ancient Writer of that Church, doth expressly say. And that it was into this Country it was sent that Crescentus at that time, and not unto Galatia in Asia minor, the testimonies of Epiphanius and Theodoret, which affirm the same, and that which hath been said before of this name of Galatia, may confirm sufficiently. But Christianity being destroyed by the French at their first coming hither, was again planted by the industry of St. Remigius, the first Bishop of Rhemes; Clovis, or Clodoveus V. King of the French, giving way unto it for his Wives sake, who was zealous in it; and after taking unto himself that holy Calling, on a great victory which he won against the Almains; by whom, being over-laid in the day of Battle, he made his prayers to CHRIST, whom his Wife Clotilda worshipped; vowing to be of that Religion, if he got the Victory: which Vow he had no sooner made, (as the Story telleth us) but Alamanni invaded him; a sudden fear fell upon the Almains, and the French were Conquerors.

At this time they are divided in Religion, as in other places, some following the Doctrine of the Church of Rome; and others, that of those Reformed Churches which adhere to Calvin. But this Division is more ancient than Calvin's days; the same opinions (as they relate unto the Errors in the Romish Church) being maintained formerly by the Albigenses, the Waldenses, or Pauvres de Lugduno, (the Vandoyes, as the French Writers call them) of whom we shall speak more, when we come to Lyons. Suffice it in this place to note, That the Doctrine of the Reformed Churches was not new in France, when Zuinglius first preached against the superstitions of the Mass, and the worship of Images; and Calvin travelled in advancing the Reformation, though much suppressed as to the outward profession of it. But, being revived by their endeavours, it sprung out again, and spread it self so speedily in this Kingdom, that there were reckoned in the year 1550. above 1240 Churches of them; which cannot, in such a long time, but be wonderfully augmented, though scarce any of them having escaped some Massacre or other. Of these Massacres, two are most memorable, viz. that of Merindol and Chabriers, as being the first; and the Massacre of Paris, as being the greatest. That of Merindol hapned in the year 1545; the Instrument of it, being Minier, the President of the Council of Aix: for, having condemned this poor people of Heresie, he mustered a small Army, and set fire on the Villages. They of Merindol, seeing the flame, with their Wives and Children fled into the Wood, but where there butchered, or sent to the Gallies. One Boy they took, placed him against a Tree, and shot him with Calivers; 25 which had hid themselves in a Cave, were in part stifled, in part burned. In Chabriers, they so inhumanely dealt with the young Wives and Maids, that most of them died immediately after. The Men and Women were put to the Sword; the Children were re-baptized, 800 Men were murdered in a Cave, and 40 Women were put together in an old Barn, and burned. Yea, such was the Cruelty of these Souldiers to these poor Women, that when some of them had clambered to the top of the House, with an intent to leap down, the Souldiers beat them back again with their Pikes. The Massacre of Paris was more cunningly plotted. A Peace was made with the Protestants for the assurance whereof, a Marriage was solemnized between Henry of Navarre, chief of the Protestant Party, and the Lady Marguerite the King's Sister. At this Wedding, there assembled the Prince of Conde, the Admiral Coligni, and divers others of chief note; but there was not so much Wine drunk, as Blood shed at it. At midnight the Watch-Bell rung, the King of Navarre and the Prince of Conde are taken prisoners, the Admiral murdered in his bed, and 30000 at the least, of the

the greatest and most potent men of the Religion, sent by the way of the Red Sea, to find the nearest passage to the Land of Canaan, Anno 1572. yet notwithstanding these Massacres, and the long and frequent Wars which were made against them by their Kings, they grew so numerous, and got unto so great a Power, that partly by Capitulations with the French Kings, at the end of every Civil War; but principally, by the connivance of King Henry IV. who was sometimes the Head of their Party, they had gotten above three hundred Walled Towns and Garrisons, and were absolute Masters in effect, of all those Provinces which lie along the Aquitaine shore, and the Pyrennes from the Mediterranean Sea, to the River of Loyre. But, being grown too insolent by reason of so great a Strength, and standing upon terms with the King, as a Free Estate, (the Commonwealth of Roche, as King Henry IV. was used to call it) they drew upon themselves the Jealousie and Fury of King Lewis XIII. Who seeing that he could not otherwise dissolve the Knot of their Combination, than by the Sword, drew it out at last; and was so fortunate in the success of his Undertakings, that in two years, (viz. Anno 1621, 1622.) he stripped them of all their Walled Towns, except Montauban and Roche only; and those two he reduced not long after, by the power of his Arms, leaving them nothing to rely on for their future security, but the Grace and Clemency of their King, procured by their Obedience and Integrity. And it hath sped so well with them since that time, that they never had the exercise of their Religion with so much freedom, as they have hitherto enjoyed since the reducing of their Forts and Garrisons to the Kings obedience.

The other Party in Religion, having the countenance of the State, and the prescription and possession of so many years to confirm the same, is in as prosperous a condition both for Power and Patrimony, as any that acknowledgeth the Authority of the Popes of Rome. In point of Patrimony, the Author of the Cabinet computes the Tythes and Temporal Revenues of the Clergy, besides Provisions of all sorts, to 80 Millions of Crowns; but this account is disallowed by all knowing men. Bodin reporteth from the mouth of Monsieur Almain, one of the Presidents of Accounts in Paris, that they amount to 12 Millions, and 300000 of their Livres, which is 1200000 l. of our English money; and he himself conceiveth, that they possess seven parts of twelve, of the whole revenues of that Kingdom. The Book, entitled Comment d'Etat, gives a lower estimate; and reckoning that there are in France 200 millions of Arpens (which is a measure somewhat bigger than our Acre) assigneth 47 Millions, which is near a fourth part of the whole, to the Gallican Clergy. And then it is resolved by all that the Balsmann, (as they call it) which consists of Offerings, Churchings, Burials, Diriges, and such like Casualties, amounteth to as much per annum, as their standing Rents. Upon which ground Sir Edwin Sandys computeth their Revenue at six millions yearly. And to say truth, there needs a very great Revenue to maintain their numbers; there being reckoned in this Kingdom, 13 Archbishops, 104 Bishops, 1450 Abbots, 540 Arch-Priors, 12320 Priors, 567 Nunneries, 700 Convents of Nuns, 259 Commanderies of Malta: besides the Colleges of the Jesuites, which being of a late foundation, are not here accounted. And for the Parish-Priests, they are reckoned at 130000 of all sorts, taking in Ordres, Sub-deacons, and all those of Inferiour Degrees, which have some Ministry in their Churches, the number of which was reckoned, in the time of King Lewis XI. to be little less than 100000. But then 'tis like, that Chanteries and Free Chappels went in that account; or else the Hugonots in the Wars have destroyed more Churches than they are like to build again in haste; there being found in France on a just Account, no more than 27400 Parish-Churches, besides Oratories and Chappels of Ease appertaining to them: In which there are supposed to live 15 millions of People; whereof the Clergy, and the Ministers depending on them, do make up 3 Millions, which is a fifth part of the whole. And lost their Power, the Gallican Clergy stands more stoutly to their natural Rights against the Usurpations and Encroachments of the See of Rome, than any other that lives under the Pope's Authority; which they acknowledge so far only as conflict with their own Privileges, and the Rights of their Sovereign. For Helldid they in long time submit to the Decrees of the Council of Trent, nor have they yet admitted of the Inquisition, nor yield such store of Gift to the Pope's Mill, as probably might redound to him from so rich a Clergy; And for his Temporal Power over Kings and Princes, it is a Doctrine so averse from the Politicians and Principals of the Gallican Church, that in the year 1610, the Divines of Paris published a Declaration, in which it was affirmed, that the Doctrine of the Popes Supremacy was an inconclusive Doctrine, and the ground of that Hellish Position, of Deposing and Killing Kings. And this, indeed, hath constantly been the Doctrine of the Gallican Church, since the time of Geofroy, maintaining the Authority of a Council above that of the Pope.

But to proceed; The men most eminent for Learning of either side, have been, (besides those mentioned in the Alpine Provinces) Peter du Moulin, highly commended for his Eloquence, by the Pen of Balfae: Fr. Junius, a moderate and grave Divine; Chamier the Controverser, and Philip de Morney, Lord of Plaffry. Of the other Party, Claudius Espenacius, a Sorbon Doctor, the famous Cardinal of Peron the Gambard the Historian, Petrinus a learned Jesuit, &c. In the middle times, St. Bernard, Abbot of Clarevalle; Pet. Lombard, Bishop of Paris; John Geofroy, Chancellor of that University. More anciently, Proper of Aquitain, Cassianus the Hermit, Isaacus the renowned Bishop of Lyons, (though not here a Native,) and as to men of other Studies, Antoine the Poet, Huetan and Gaufredus, the Civilians; Duarenus the Canonist, Bern. Briffonius the great Antiquary, Jacques Casaubon, that renowned Philologist, Budens that great Master of the Greek Language, Thomas the Historian, Laurentius the Anatomist, &c. And as for Military men, it hath been famous for the valour of Clouis the first Christian King of the French, Charles Martel, that illustrious Champion of the Church against the Saracens; and Charles the Great, the Father of the Western Empire. In the middle times for Godfrey of Bullion, one of the Nine Worthies, (as they call them) the Son of Eustace, Earl of Beaufort in Picardy; and in these latter days, for King Henry IV. Kingsley and Henry, Dukes of Guise; Charles Duke of Bayonne, Charles Duke of Biron, &c.

The Laws of this Kingdom are either Temporary, and alterable at pleasure; or Fundamental, which neither King or Parliament (as they say) can alter. Of this last sort, the principal are, the Salique Law, and the Law of Apenage. By that of the Apenage, the younger Sons of the King are not to have partage in the Kingdom with their Elder Brother. Which Law was made by Charles the Great, before whose time we find the Children of the Kings estated in their several Thrones, and the Realm parcelled out among them into many Kingdoms. But by this Law, they are to be entituled to some Dutchy or County, (though they are content sometimes with Annual Penfions) with all the Rights Rights and Profits thereunto belonging: all matters of Regality (as Levying Taxes, Coyuage and the like) excepted only; which upon the failing of the Maleline, do return again unto the Crown. The name therefore derived from Albano, a German word, signifying a Portion.

But the main Law they stand on, is the Salique Law, by which the Crown of France may not descend unto the Females or fall from the Lance to the Dishuff, as their saying is. Which Law, one undertaking to make good out of Holy Writ, urged that Text of St. Matthew, where it is said, Mark the Lillies, (which are the Arms of France) and see how they neither Labour nor spin. This Law they pretend to have been made by Pharamond, the first King of the French; and that the words Si aliquis, so often used in it, gave the name of the Salique Law. But Heillan, one of their best Writers affirms, That it was never heard of in France, till the time of Philip the Long, Anno 1315; and that it could not possibly be made by Pharamond, who though he was the first King of the French, had not one foot of ground in France: Cleodan the Son of Pharamond, being the first of the French Kings which passed over the Rhone; their third King Mervoe, the first that ever fixed his seat in the Modern France. Others say, it was made by Charles the Great, after the Conquest of Germany, where the incontinent lives of the Women, living about the River Sala, (in the Modern Misnia) gave both the occasion and the name. De terra vero Salica, nulla portio hereditatis mulieri veniat, sed ad virilem Sexum tota terra hereditas perveniat, are the words thereof. This Terra Salica, the Learned Selden in his Titles of Honour, Englishness, Knights-Fee, or Land that is holden by Knights Service, as our Lawyers call it; and proveth this Interpretation by a Record of the Parliament of Bourdeaux, cited by Bodinus; where an old Will or Testament being once produced, in which the Testator had bequeathed unto his Son all his Salique Land; it was rescinded by the Court, That thereby was meant, his Land holden in Knights Service. And then the fence thereof must be, That in Lands holden of the King by Knights Service, or the like Military tenures, the Male-children should inherit only, because the Females could not perform those Services for which those Lands were given and by which they were holden. And for this there may be good reason, though in England we deal not so unfriendly with the Female Sex, but permit them after the age of 15 years, to enjoy such Lands, because they may then take such Husbands as are able to do the King those Services which the Law requirith. But this Interpretation (how good and genuine indeed soever it be) cannot stand with the French Glofs. For then the Crown, being held of none but God, and so not properly to be called a Fee or Fief, could not be brought within the compass of the Salique Law, because not to be counted for Salique Land. Give them therefore their own Glofs, their own Etymology and Original; and let us see by what right their Kings Daughters are excluded from their succession to the Diadem. For first, supposing that to be the Salique Land which lyeth about the River Sala, in the Modern Misnia; I would fain know how it could reach unto the King's Daughter in France, so far distant from it; or with what honesty they can lay on them the like brand of Incontinency, as was supposed to have been found in those Women of Germany? And next, supposing that the Law had been made by Pharamond, I would fain learn how it can be applied to the Crown of France, to which Pharamond had then no title, nor so much as one foot of Land on that side of the Rhone. And finally, supposing that the Law was made in such general terms, as to extend to all the Countries, which the French in time to come should conquer, and consequently unto France when once conquered by them: I would then ask, Whether it did extend to the Crown alone, or to all subordinate Estates which were holden of it; if unto all Estates holden of that Crown, I would fain know with what pretence they could give sentence in behalf of Charles of Blois, against John de Montfort, in the Succession to the Dukedom of Bretagne: Charles of Blois claiming by his Mother, the Niece of Arthur II. by his second Son Guy: whereas John de Montfort was the third Son (and the next Heir-male) of the said Duke Arthur. If only to the Crown of France, it would be known by what right they detain that Dukedom from the true Heirs of Anne the Dutchess, whose Daughter and Heir, the Lady Claude, being married unto Francis I. had issue Henry II. and other Children. Which Henry, besides Francis II. Charles IX. Henry III. and Francis Duke of Anjou, all dying without Issue, had a Daughter named Isabel, or Elizabeth, married to Philip II. King of Spain, by whom the was made the Mother of Isabella, the late Arch-Dutchess, and of Katharine, the Wife of Charles Emmanuel, the late Duke of Savoy. Not to say any thing of the pretensions of the House of Lorraine, descending from the Lady Claude, the second Daughter of King Henry II. and Sister of Isabel or Elizabeth, Queen of Spain. Nor do we find, that the French so stand upon this Law, as not to think, that a Succession by and from the Females, is, in some cases, their best Title. For thus we read, That Pepin having thrust his Mother Childeric into a Monastery, to make good his Title to the Crown, (or some colour for it) derived his Pedigree from Phylidola, one of the Daughters of Clovis I. married to Ansebert the Grandfather of that Ambulph, who was the first Mayre of the Palace of Pepin's Family. As also, how Hugh Capet, putting aside Charles of Lorraine, the right Heir of this Pepin, to make his lawless Action the more seemingly lawful, drew his descent from some of the Heirs General of Charles the Great; his Mother Adelaide, being the Daughter of the Emperor Henry I. furnished the Fowler; who was the Son of Ordo Duke of Saxony, by Luigardis, the Daughter of the Emperor Arnulph, the last Emperor of the Romans (or Germans) of the House of Charles. And it is said of Lewis IX. so renowned for sanctity amongst them, That he never enjoyed the Crown with a quiet Conscience, till it was proved unto him, That by his Grandmother, the Lady Isabel of Hainault, he was descended from Hermingrade, the Daughter of Charles of Lorraine. Add here, that this supposed Salique Law, not only crosseth the received Laws of all Nations else, which admit of women to the succession in their Kingdoms, where the Crown descends in a succession; and have a great respect both unto their Persons and Posterities in such Kingdoms also where the Kings are said to be Elective, as in Poland, Hungary, and Bohemia; but that even France it self hath submitted to the Imperious Command of two Women of the Medicee; and at the present to the Government of a Spanish Princess. So that it is evident, that this Law, by whomsoever made, and how far forever it extended, is of no such force, but that the Labels of it may be easily cut in pieces by an English Sword well whetted, if there were no other bar to the Title of England than the Authority and Antiquity of the Salique Law.

But, for my part (if it be lawful for me to dispute this point) I am not satisfied in the right of the English Title; (supposing the Salique Law to be of no such force as the French pretended, and measuring the Succession in the Crown Crown of France, to be according to successions in the Realm of England, on which King Edward III. seemed to ground his claim. For if there were no Salique Law to exclude succession by the females, as the English did pretend there was not: yet could not Edward coming from a Sister of the three last Kings, which reigned successively before Philip of Valois, against whom he claimed, be served in court, before the Daughters of those Kings (or the males at least descending of them) had their turns in the succession of that Kingdom. Of the three Brethren two left issue, viz. Lewis and Philip, Lewis surnamed Hutten, son of Philip the Fair and Joan Queen of Navarre, had a Daughter named Joan, married to Philip Earl of Flanders, who was King of Navarre in right of his Wife; from which marriage issued all the succeeding Kings of that Realm; the rights whereof are now in the House of Burbon, Philip the second Brother, surnamed the Long, by Joan the Daughter of Obelin Earl of Burgundy, had a daughter named Marguerite, married to Lewis E. of Flanders: from whom descended those great Princes of the race of Burgundy, the rights whereof are now in the House of Spain. If then there were no Salique Law to exclude the Women and their Sons, Charles K. of Navarre the son of Q. Joan and of Philip de Evreux, descended from Lewis Hutten the elder Brother, and Lewis de Malarie Earl of Flanders and Burgundy, the son of Lewis E. of Flanders, and of Marguerite the daughter of Philip the Long, the second Brother, must have precedence of title before King Edward III. of England, descending from a Sister of the said two Kings, their issue severally and respectively, before any claiming or defending from the said King Edward. So that K. Edward III. had some other claim than what is commonly alleged for him in our English Histories; or else he had no claim to that Crown at all: and I conceive, so wife a King would not have ventured on a business of so great consequence, without some colourable title; though what this title was is not declared, for I believe ought I know, by what writers of our Nation. I believe therefore, that he went upon some other grounds, than that of ordinary succession by the Law of England, and claimed that Crown, as the eldest heir-male and nearest Kinsman to the last King. For being Sisters Son to the King who deceased, he was a degree nearer to him than either the K. of Navarre or the E. of Flanders, who were the Grandchildren of his Brethren: and having priority of either in respect of age, had a fair title before either to the Crown of that Kingdom. And on these grounds K. Edward might the rather go, because he found it a ruled case, in the dispute about the succession in the Kingdom of Scotland. For though K. Edward I. measuring the order of succession by the Laws of England, and perhaps wilful of succession by the Laws of England, and perhaps wilful of adjudge the Crown to one who should hold it of King; gave sentence in behalf of John Balliol, the Grandchild of the eldest daughter of the E. of Huntington: yet was this sentence disavowed and protested against by the other Competitors. Robert Bruce son of the second daughter of the said Earl of Huntington, as a degree nearer to the last King, though descended from the younger Sister, who not only thought himself wronged in it, but had the whole Scottish Nation for him to assert his right: by whose unanimous consent his Son was called to the Government of the Realm of Scotland, during the life of Balliol, and his Patron both. Proximity in blood to the King deceased, was measured by nearness of degrees, not descent of birth, and on this Plea, though different from the Laws of England, as Bruce had formerly possessed himself of the Crown of Scotland; so on the same, though different from the Laws of Castile, did Philip II. ground his claim to the Crown of Portugal. For being eldest son of Mary, the Sister of Henry the last King (and this was just King Edward's call: to the Crown of France) he thought himself to be preferred before the Prince of Parma, and the Duke of Bragance, descended from the daughters of Edward the said Kings Brother; because the eldest male of the Royal Blood, and nearer to the said K. Henry by one degree. In the pursuance of which title, as Philip openly avowed, that the Laws of Portugal were more favourable to him than the Laws of Castile: so in like case, the laws of France might be more favourable to K. Edward, than the Laws of England: In claims to Crowns, the Rules of Royal Succession differ in many Countries; and in few Countries are the same with that of the Succession into mean Estates; as may be proved by many particulars in the Realm of England, in which the Law of the Crown differeth very much from the Law of the Land; as in the case of Parcours, the whole blood, (as our Lawyers call it) the Tenure of courtfees and some others; were this a time and place fit for it. But to return again to France; Whether the Salique Law were in force or not, it made not much to the prejudice of K. Edward III. though it served Philip the Long to exclude the daughter of King Lewis Hutten, and Charles the Fair to do the like with the daughter of Philip's; as it did Philip of Valois to dispossess the whole Lineage of K. Philip le Bel.

Machiavel accounteth this Salique Law to be a great happiness to the French Nation, not so much in relation to the unfitness of Women to govern (for therein some of them have gone beyond most men) but because thereby by the Crown of France is not endangered to fall into the hands of Strangers. Such men consider not how great Dominions may by this means be incorporated to the Crown. They remember not how Maud the Empress being married to Geoffrey Earl of Anjou, Toussain and Main, conveyed those Countries to the Diadem of England, nor what rich and fertile Provinces were added to Spain, by the Match of the Lady Joan to Arch-Duke Philip: neither do they see those great advantages of power and strength which England now enjoyeth by the conjunction of Scotland, proceeding from a like marriage. Yet there is a saying in Spain, that as a man shall desire to live in Italy, because of the civility and ingenious natures of the People; and to die in Spain, because there the Catholic Religion is so sincerely professed: so he should wish to be born in France, because of the nobleness of that Nation, which never had any King but of their own Country.

The chief enemies to the French have been the English and Spaniards. The former had here great possessions, divers times plagued them, and took from them their Kingdom; but being called home by civil dissensions, lost all. At their departure, the French coolly asked an English Captain, When they would return? Who tellingly answered, When your sins be greater than ours. The Spaniards began, but of late with them, yet have they taken from them Navarre, Naples and Milain: they displaced them in Florida: poisoned the Dauphine of Viennois, (as it was generally conceived) murdered their Soldiers in cold blood, being taken prisoners in the life of Tercera; and by their Faction raised even in France it self, drove Henry III. out of Paris, and most of his other Cities; and at last caused him to be murdered by Jaques Clement, a Dominican Friar. The like they intended to his Successor K. Henry IV. whose coming to the Crown they opposed for their utmost power, and held a tedious War against him. Concerning which last War, when they rebelled with the Duke of Mayenne, and the rest of those Fiefs which called themselves the Holy League (of which the D. of Guisse was the Author) against the two Kings Henry III. and IV., a French Gentleman made this excellent Althosio. For being asked the cause of these civil broils, he

he replied, they were Spania and Mania; seeming by this answer to signify Spain, penny, and Maria, fury; which are indeed the causes of all intestine tumults: but covertly therein implying the King of Spain, and the Duke of Mayenne: since which time the French, upon the turn of Fortune, (notwithstanding the cross Marriages between the Kings of both Kingdoms, and their several Sisters) have had as great a hand upon the Spaniards; outing them by their plots and practices of the whole Kingdom of Portugal, and the Country of Catalogne in the main Land of Spain it self, and of many of the best parts of Artois, Hainault, and other of the Belgick Provinces, by the force of Arms. So little conciliary there is, either in the favours of Fortune, or the affection of great Princes, that no wife man can trust the one, or depend safely on the other. For in the former times, as we read in Cicero, there were no Princes more friendly than these two, the Kings of Castile and France, being the nearest confederate Princes in Christendom. For their League was between King and King, Realm and Realm, Subject and Subject; which they were all bound under great curses to keep inviolable. But of late times, especially since the beginning of the Wars betwixt Charles V. and Francis I. for the Dukedom of Millain; there have not been greater animosities, nor more implacable enmities betwixt any Nations, than betwixt France and Spain. Which seconded by the mutual jealousies they have of each other, and the diversity of Contestations under which they live, hath produced such diffimilitude betwixt them in all their ways, that there is not greater contrariety of temper, carriage, and affections, betwixt any two Nations in the World, than is between these Neighbours, parted no otherwise from one another, than by passable Hills. First, in the Actions of the Soul, the one Astive and Mercurial, the other Speculative and Saturnine; the one fociable and discursive, the other reserved and full of thought; the one open, that you cannot hire him to keep a secret; the other close, that all the Rhetorick in the World cannot get it out of him. Next in their Fashion and Apparel, the French wears his hair long, the Spaniard short: the French goes thin and open to the very throat, as if there were continual Summer, the Spaniard to wrapt up and close, as if all were Winter; the French begins to button downward, and the Spaniard upward; the last always constant in his Fashion, the first intent to much on nothing as on new fancies of Apparel. Then for their Gate, the French walks fast, as if pursued on an Arrest, the Spaniard slowly, as if newly come out of a Quarantain; the French goes up and down in clusters, the Spaniards but by two and two at the most; the French Laqueys march in the Rere, and the Spanish always in the Van; the French sings and danceth as he walks the streets, the Spaniard in a grave and solemn posture, as if he were going a Procession. The like might be observed of their Tune, their Speech, and almost every passage in the life of man: for which I rather chuse to refer the Reader to the ingenious James Howell's Book of Instructions for Travel, than insist longer on it here. Only I add, that of the two so different humours, that of the Spaniards seems to be the more approvable. Inasmuch as the Neapolitans, Millenois, and Sicilians, who have had trial of both Nations, chuse rather to submit themselves to the proud and severe yoke of the Spaniards, than the lulls and infolencies of the French, not sufferable by men of even and well balanced spirits. And possible enough it is, that such of the Netherlands, as have of late been won to the Crown of France, will find little comfort in the change of their Matters; as may confirm the residue to the Crown of Spain, to which they naturally belong.

The chief Mountains of this Country, next to the Pyrenees which part France from Spain, the Jura or Jura, which separates it from Savoy and Switzerland; and the Vange or Vogues, which divides it from Lorain; are those which Cæsar calleth Gabennâ, Pyromy Cimminy, being the fame which separate Auvergne from Languedoc, called therefore the Mountains of Auvergne; the only ones of note which are peculiar to this Continent of France, which for the most part is plain and champain; the others before mentioned, being common unto this, with the bordering Provinces.

This Country is wonderfully stored with Rivers, the chief whereof, 1. Saône or Seine, which arising in Burgundy, watering the Cities of Paris and Rouen, and receiving into it nine navigable streams, disburdeneth it self into the British Ocean. 2. Sonne, in Latine called Samona, which rising near the Town of St. Quentin, first cutteth between Picardy and Artois, afterwards passeth through the fair City of Amiens, and the goodly Town of Abbeville, and finally having received eight lesser streams, loseth it self in the fame Sea also. 3. Ligeris or Loyre, on which are seated Nantes, and Orleans. It riseth about the Mountains of Auvergne, (being the greatest in France) and having run 600 miles, and augmented his Channel with the entertainment of 72 lesser Rivulets, mingling his sweet waters with the brackish Aquitane Ocean. 4. Rhodanus, or the Rhône, which springeth from the Alpes, three Dutch miles from the head of the Rhône, passeth by Lions and Avignon; and having taken in thirteen lesser Brooks, falleth into the Mediterranean Sea, not far from Arles. 5. The Souane, by the old Latines called Araris, which rising out of the Mountain of Vogues or Vange, in the borders of Lorain and Alsatia, divideth the two Burgundies from each other; and falleth into the Rhône, at the City of Lions. 6. Garonna or the Garonne, which issuing out of the Pyrenean Mountains, passing by Toulouse and Bordeaux, and having swallowed up sixteen lesser Rivers (of which the Dordogne is the chief) disburdeneth it self into the Aquitane Ocean, near the Town of Blay: that part hereof which is betwixt the main Ocean, and the influx of the River Dordogne, being called the Garonne. Of these it is said Proverbially, that the Seine is the richest, the Rhône the swiftest, the Garonne the greatest, and the Loyre the sweetest. And by these and many other Rivers this Kingdom is enriched with 34 excellent Havens, having all the properties of a good Harbour; that is to say, 1. Room, 2. Safety, 3. Easiness of defence, 4. Resort of Merchants.

As for so much of the Story hereof as concerneth the whole, it was first peopled, if we may give credit to Annius, (as I think we may not in this point) by Samolus the sixth Son of Japhet (assured by them, and such as adhere unto them, to be that Son of his, who in the Scripture is called Meshech) in the year of the world 1806. But those which are better conversant in the course of History have utterly laid aside this device of Annius. Even Vindictus, though a great Berserker, doth confess ingenuously, Quia sic Samolus fuerit, incertum est; that it is unresolved who this Samolus was. And Vigener a French Antiquary doth confess with Fantinus, Mais un ne sçay point il étoit, that nobody can tell us who he was. They who have better studied this point than Annius, derive the Gauls from Gomer, Japhet's eldest Son, whose offspring were first called Gomerians, afterwards Cimmerians, at last Cimbri: first planted (as before was said) in the Mountainous places of Albania, where the Mountains called Cimmerii long preserved his memory, and after changing that unfruitful and unpleasant dwelling for the Plains of Phrygia, wherein the City Cimmeris did retain somewhat of his name, in the times of Pliny. Afterwards his posterity proceeded further in the lesser Asia, and in long tract of time filled Germany, Gaul, and Britain, with his numerous offshoots: the Gauls and Cimbri being clearly of the same Original, though known amongst the Romans by two different names. From whence they had the names of Gauls, and Celtæ, and Galatæ, hath been shewn before. It shall suffice us now to add, that being originally of the Cimbri, and having somewhat in them of the blood of Hercules; they proved a very valiant and warlike Nation, without whose love, no King could secure himself from eminent dangers. They were very sparing in their diet, and used to fine any one that outgrew his Girdle. With these men the Romans fought at first for their own preservation, rather than out of any hope by the conquest of them to improve either their Fame or their Dominions. Inasmuch that when they had invaded Italy with a numerous Army, in favour of the Chalpine Gauls, under the conduct of Anerostrus and Comelanus, two of their Kings, and pierced as far as Tellamon a City of Tuscany, the Romans thought they had done enough in discomfiting their Forces, and clearing their own Provinces of them; not holding it for a point of wisdom to pursue them, or invade their Country; though by the conquest of Liguria, but few years before, they had enlarged their Dominions to the borders of it. But to enumerate more particularly their great achievements in the Wars, these were they who under the conduct of Belovius, passing over the Alpes, conquered the nearest parts of Italy, called afterwards Gallia Cisalpina; and under that of Segevius, over-run all Germany, and following their successes as far as Seybia, founded the potent Nation of the Celto-Seythe. These were the men, whose issue under the command of Brennus, discomfited the Romans, at the River Alia; sacked the City, and besieged the Capitol, An. M. 3577. U.C. 365. In which action they so terrified the Romans, that after their expulsion from Rome by Camillus, there was a Law made, that the Priests, though at all other times exempted from Military employments, should be compelled to the War, if ever the Gauls came again. And finally, these were the men, who under the command of Belgicus, and another Brennus, sacked Illyricum, Pannonia, Thrace, and Greece, in which they spoiled and plundered the Temple of Delphe; for which Sacrilege they were visited with the Pestilence. Such as survived this Plague, went into Asia, and there gave name to that Country now called Gallatia, of whom thus Dubartus:

The ancient Gaul in roving every way,
As far as Pæbus darts his Golden Ray;
Seiz'd Italy; the World's proud Mitres fact,
Then spoils Pysidia, Myfia doth enthrall.
And midst of Asia plants another Gaul.

Yet at last the Romans undertook the War, but not till they had conquered almost all the residue of the (then known) World. Attempting first by Fulvius Flaccus, a Roman Consul, called in by the Massiliens to assist them against the Salli their unquiet Neighbours, A.U.C. 628, that part hereof which afterwards was called Narbonensis, being brought into the form of a Roman Province at the conclusion of the War against the Allobroges and Arverni, (undertaken on the like complaint of the Hedui) about five years after. Not totally subdued until the time of Julius Cæsar, and not easily then. For though the War was managed then by the ablest Captain that ever the State of Rome gave life to; yet was it not more easily vanquished by the valour and fortune of the Romans, than by want of good intelligence and correspondence amongst themselves. Nor did they fell their liberty to good cheap, as those other Nations, with whom the Romans had to deal: Cæsar himself affirming, That he had slain 1192000 of them before they would submit to the Roman yoke. But at the last they were brought under the power of Rome, by whom the whole Country was divided into these four parts, viz. 1. Narbonensis, called so from the City of Narbon, which a Roman Colony, containing Languedoc, Provence, Dauphine and some part of Savoy, called also Braccata at the first conquest by the Romans, from the usual habit of the people (resembling the Mantles used by the Wild Tribes) called in Latine, Bræce; attempted first by Fulvius Flaccus, in his War against the Salli, as before is said; and finally subdued, A.U.C. 633; by Pubius Maximus and Cn. Domitius Ahenobarbus, in their War against the Allobroges, and their Confederates, before mentioned, about 70 years before the coming in of Julius Cæsar. 2. Aquitania, so called from the City of Aque Augustæ, now D'Acq, in Guienne; lying upon the Pyrenees, and the wide Ocean, which comprehended the Provinces of Gascogne, Guicene, Xaintonge, Limousin, Quercy, Perigord, Berry, Bourbonnois, and Auvergne; extending from the Pyrenees to the River Loyre, and consequently stretching over all the middle of Gaul. 3. Celtica, so named from the valiant Nation of the Celtæ; called also Lyngdunensis, from the City of Lions; and Comata from the long hair worn amongst this people, extending from the Loyre to the British Ocean, and comprehending the Provinces of Bretagne, Normandy, Anjou, Touren, Main, Le Beouffe, the Isle of France, part of Champagne, the Dukedom of Burgundy, and the County of Lyonnois. 4. Belgica, from the Belgæ, a potent Nation of that Tract, taking up all the East parts of Gaul, viz. Picardy, the rest of Champagne, the County of Burgundy, together with so much of Germany and the Netherlands, as lieth on this side of the Rhône, belonging now unto the Empire and the Kings of Spain. In the new modelling of the Empire by Constantine the Great, Gaul was appointed for the seat of one of the four Præfidi Pretorio, designed the four Quarters of it. His Title Præfidi Pretorio Galliarum; his Government extending over the Dioceses of Gaul, Spain and Britain: this Diocese of Gaul being cut into seventeen Provinces; that is to say, 1. Lyngdunensis Prima, 2. Secunda, 3. Tertia, 4. Quarta, 5. Belgica Prima, 6. Secunda, 7. Germania Prima, 8. Secunda, 9. Narbonensis Prima, 10. Secunda, 11. Aquitania Prima, 12. Secunda, 13. Novempopulana, 14. Vienne Prima, 15. Maxima Sequanorum, 16. Alpes Graia & Pennine, 17. Alpes Maritime. Of these seventeen Germania Prima & Secunda, all Belgica Prima, and a great part of Secunda, all that of the Alpes Graia & Pennine, and so much of Maxima Sequanorum, as lieth in Switzerland; are now dismembered from the name and account of France. What principal Nations of the Gauls, and what Provinces of the present France, the rest contained, shall be declared in our Survey of the particulars.

But long it flood not in this fate: for within sixty years after the death of Constantine, during the Reigns of Honorius and Theodosius, the Burgundians, a great and populous Nation, were called in by Silico, Lieutenant to Honorius the Western Emperor, to keep the borders of the Empire against the French: then ready with some other of the Barbarous Nations to invade the same. The Goths not long after by agreement with the same Honorius, leaving their hold in Italy, were vested in Gaul Narbonensis, by the gift of that Emperor; with a good part of Tarracensis, one of the Provinces of Spain: Aquitain being after added, in regard of the service they had done the Empire, in driving the Alani out of Spain, then likely to have made a great impression on that Country. And in the reign of Valentinian the third, the French who had long hovered on the banks of the Rhene, taking advantage of the distractions of the Empire, ventured over the River; first made themselves Masters of Gaul-Belgick; and after, spread themselves over all the rest of the Provinces which had not been subdued by the Goths and Burgundians; excepting a small corner of Armorica, then possessed by the Britains. So that the Romans being out of all the Country, it was divided between the Nations above mentioned, and that with more equality than could be imagined: The Goths possessing all Aquitain, and Narbonensis, containing now the Provinces of Provence, Languedoc, Gasconie, Guienne, Xaintonge, Poitou, Berry, Limousin, Perigord, Quercy and Auvergne; the Burgundians having for their share, the Alpine Provinces, together with Nivernois, Bourbon, Beau-Jolois, Forrest, the Countries of Lyons, La Bresse, Dauphine, and both the Burgundies, from them so denominated. The rest (except that part thereof which we now call Bretagne) was possessed by the French, who in short time repulsed the Vijigoths, or Waltens-Goths, (then busy in the Conquest of Spain) out of all the Provinces of the Roman Aquitain, by the Valour of Clouis the Great, their first Christian King, before they could challenge a Prefcription of 60 years. Nor was it long, before Provence also was resigned to Theodorick the French King of Metz by Amalasinda, Queen of the Ofstro-Goths, or Goths of Italy; nothing being left unto that Nation, of all their Gallick Conquests, but Languedoc only. In which respect, the Gothish Provinces of Gaul, (except Provence only) together with so much of the Burgundia's which was after laid to West-France, shall pass in the account of the French part of this Country; the rest of the Burgundian Conquests which lie within the bounds of the Modern France, (having Provence added to them) shall be considered by themselves in the description and affairs of the Kingdom of Burgundy, a distinct Realm from that of France, and not reduced but by peace-meal, and by several Titles, (and yet not wholly so neither) to the Crown thereof. Finally, of the French themselves, and the succession of their Kings, we will speak at last, when we have brought all the chief parts and Provinces of this flourishing Country into their possession. The principal Provinces are, 1. France, specially so called, 2. Champagna, 3. Picardy, 4. Normandy, 5. Bretagne, 6. The Estates of Anjou, with its members, 7. La Beaulle, 8. Nivernois, 9. The Dukedom of Bourbon, with the Provinces dependent on it; being all (excepting Bretagne) the firsts acquets of the French. Then following the chief Provinces of the Gothish Kingdom, that is to say, 10. Berry, 11. Poitou, 12. Limousin, 13. Perigord, and 14. Quercy, 15. Aquitain, with the members of it; and 16. Languedoc: and last of all, the Burgundian Kingdom, of which there now remain in France, the Countries of 17. Provence, 18. Dauphine, 19. La Bresse, 20. Lionni, 21. The Duchy, 22. the County of Burgundy, 23. The Islands of the Aquitain, and Gallick Ocean, in the clofe of all. Of some of which, La Nore, a French Author, hath passed this sentence: The men of Berry, are Leachers: they of Touren, Thieves; they of Languedoc, Traytors; they of Provence, Atheists; they of Rouen, (or Champagne) superstitious; they of Normandy, insolent; they of Picardy, proud; & sic de ceteris. But here we are to understand that all these Provinces (though passing by the name and account of France) are not under the Command of the French King; the Isles of Jersey and Guernsey, being possessed by the English the Counties of Burgundy and Charolois, by the King of Spain; the Duchy of Bar, belonging to the Dukes of Lorain; the Principality of Orange, to the House of Nassau; and Avignon, to the Popes of Rome. And on the other side, the French Kings are possessed of some Towns and Cities, not lying within the bounds of France, as the Imperial Cities of Metz, Toul, and Verdun; lying within the Dukedom of Lorain, the Fort and Pass of Figuerolle, in the Dukedom of Savoy, and the Port of Mouche, in Liguria; Basse Navarre, in Spain; not to say any thing of their late acquets in Spain and Flanders, which I look not on as parts of the French Dominions.

FRANCE, especially so called.

THE first place which the Franks or French had for their first Habitation was by that People honoured with the name of FRANCE; the first green Turf of Gallick ground, by which they took livery and seisin of all the rest. A Province now bounded on the East, with Champagna; on the North, with Normandy; on the West and South, with La Beaulle. To difference it from the main Continent of France, it is called the Isle of France, as being circled almost round with several Rivers; that is to say, the Oise on the North, the Eure on the West, the Velle on the East, and a Vein-reveret of the Seine, towards the South. A Country not so large as many of the French Provinces; but such as hath given name unto all the rest; it being the Fate of many small, but puissant Provinces, to give their names to others which are greater than they, if conquered and brought under by them. For, thus we see the little Province of Poland, to have mastered and given name to the Mazovii, Pruteni, and other Nations of Sarmatia Europea, as that of Mosco, to the Province of Asiatica. And thus have those of Sweden conquered and denominated almost the great Penninsula of Scandia, whereof it is one of the smallest Provinces. And thus this Island being the Seat-Royal of the French in Gallia, gave name to all the residue of it, as they made it theirs. A Country generally so fruitful and delectable, (except in Gastinois) that the very Hills thereof are equal to the Valleys in most places of Europe: but the Vale of Montmorency (wherein Paris standeth) scarce is to be followed in the World. An argument whereof may be, that when the Dukes of Berry, Burgundy, and their Confederates, besieged that City with an Army of 100000 men, neither the Assaults without, nor the Citizens within, found any facility of Victuals; and yet the Citizens, besides Souldiers, were reckoned at 500000.

It was formerly part of the Province of Belgica Secunda, & Lugdunensis quarta; the chief Inhabitants thereof being the Parisii, the Bellocaci, and the Silvanctii: and is now divided into four parts, that is to say, the Dukedom of Valois, 2. Gastinois, 3. Heurepoix, and that which is properly called the Isle of France; by some, the Provinc, or County of Paris.

1. Dukedom or County of VALOIS, lieth under Picardy: the principal Cities of it, 1. Senlis, (in Latine, Silvanctium) a Bishops See. 2. Compeigne, (Compendium) seated on the River Oise, a retiring place of the French Kings for hunting, and other Country pleasures. 3. Beauvais the chief City of the Bellocaci, by Ptolomy called Cesaromagus; a fair, large, well-traded Town, from which the Country round about hath the name of Beauvaisin. The Patrimony, in former times, of Roger, the third Son of Theobald, the second Earl of Blair, and younger Brother of Oden, the first Earl of Champagne, who enjoyed it with the Title of Earl of Beauvais:

vois and at his death, gave it for ever to the Bishops hereof: for anciently, this City was a See Episcopall; the Bishop whereof is one of the Twelve Peers of France. Philip, one of the Bishops here in times succeeding, a Military man, and one that had much damaged the English Borders, was fortunately taken by King Richard I. The Pope being made acquainted with his Imprisonment, but not the cause of it, wrote in his behalf unto the King, as for an Ecclesiastical person, and one of his beloved Sons. The King returned unto the Pope the Armour in which the Bishop was taken in, and these words engraven on the same, Vide an hec sit tunica filii tui, vel non; being the words which Jacobs Children speak to him, when they presented him with the Coat of their Brother Joseph, which the Pope viewing, swore, that it was rather the Coat of a Son of Mars, than a Son of the Church: and so left him wholly to the Kings pleasure. 4. Clermont, a Town of good note in the County of Beauvoisin, memorable for giving the Title of Earl of Clermont, to Robert the fifth Son of the King, St. Lewis, before his marriage with the Daughter and Heir of Bourbon: afterwards, to the eldest Sons of that Princely Family: and finally, to Catharine de Medicis, created Countess of Clermont and Boulogne, at her marriage with Henry Duke of Orleans, Successor to King Francis I. in the Realm of France. 5. Luzarch, a Town belonging to the Count of Soissons. 6. Brennaville, 7. St. Leger, on the confines of Picardy, so called from a Monastery dedicated to St. Leger, Bishop of Troy in Champagne, sent into Britain with St. Germanus, to suppress the Pelagian Heresies, which were there beginning. But of this part of France, nothing more observable, than that it gave denomination to the Royal Family of the French Kings, (thirteen in number) from hence entitled of Valois: beginning in Philip de Valois. Anno 1328, and ending in Henry III. Anno 1589. As for the Earls hereof, (from whom that adjunct or denomination had its first Original) the first who had the Title of Earl of Valois, was Charles, the second Son of Philip III. in right of his Wife: Earl of Anjou also: after whose death, it descended upon Philip de Valois, his eldest Son, who carried the Crown of France from Edward III. On his assuming of the Crown, it fell to Lewis his second Brother; and he deceasing without Issue, Anno 1391. to Lewis Duke of Orleans, Son of Charles V. amongst the Titles of which House, it lay dormant, till the expiring of that Line in King Lewis XII. and lately given unto the Monsieur, or Duke of Orleans, Brother to Lewis XIII. and Uncle to King Lewis XIV. now reigning, upon the first reconciliation made between him and his Brother: adding thereby to his Estate, no less than 10000 pounds sterling of yearly Rents, which make up 100000 Frank or Livres, in the French account. I only add, that Charles, the first Earl of this Family, as he was the Son of Philip III. Brother of Philip IV. surnamed the Fair; and Father of Philip de Valois: so was he Uncle to Lewis Hutin; Philip the Long and Charles the Fair, all in their order Kings of France. In which regard it was said of him, That he was the Son, Brother, Father, and Uncle of Kings: yet no King himself.

2. The second part of this Province, is called HEUREPOIX; beginning at the little Bridge of Paris, on the River of Seine, and going up along the River, as far as the River of Verme; which divides it from Gastinois. The chief Towns of it are, 1. Charenton, three Miles from Paris, where the French Protestants of that City, have their Church for religious exercises, it being not permitted them to hold their Assemblies in any Walled Cities, or Garrison Towns, for fear of any sudden surprize, which to great a multitude might easily make: Which Church (or Temple, as they call it) being burnt down by the hot-headed Parlians, on the news of the Duke of Mayenne death; slain at the Siege of Montauban, Anno 1622. was presently re-edified by the command of the Duke of Montbassin, then Governour of the Isle of France, at the charge of the State: to let those of the Reformed Party understand that it was their Disobedience, and not the Religion, which caused the King to Arm against them. 2. Corbeil, seated on the confluence of Seine and Effrons. 3. Mort, which gives the title of an Earl to one of the natural Sons of Henry IV. begotten on the Daughter and Heir of the former Earl. 4. Meln, by Cesar called Molodunum, the principal of this Heurepoix, and the seat of the Ballif for this Tract. Here is also in this part the Royal Palace of Fontainbleau, so called from the many fair Springs and Fountains amongst which it standeth; but otherwise seated in a solitary and woody Country, fit for Hunting only; and for that cause much visited by the French Kings in their times of leisure; and beautified with so much cost by King Henry IV. that it is absolutely the fairest and most magnificent Pile of Building in all France.

3. GASTINOIS, the most dry and barren part of this Province, but rich enough, if compared with other places; lieth between Paris, and the Country of Orleans. The chief places of it are, 1. Etampes, in the middle way betwixt Paris and Orleans, on the very edge of it, towards La Beaulle, a fair large Town, having in it five Churches, and one of them a Colledge of Chanoins, with the ruins of an ancient Castle; which together with the Walls and demolished Fortifications of it, shew it to have been of great importance in the former times. Given, with the Title of an Earl, by Charles Duke of Orleans, then Lord hereof, to Richard, the third Son of John of Montford, Duke of Bretagne, in marriage with his Sister the Lady Marguerette; from which Marriage issued Francis Earl of Etampes, the last Duke of Bretagne. 2. Montleberry, famous for the battle betwixt King Lewis XI. and Charles Earl of Charolois, (after Duke of Burgundy) in which both sides ran out of the field, and each proclaimed it self the Victor. It standeth in the road betwixt Paris and Etampes. And so doth, 3. Catres, of the biggness of an ordinary Market-Town; not to be mentioned in this place, but for a Chamber or Branch of the Court of Parliament, here seated by King Henry IV. for the use and benefit of his Subjects of the Reformed Religion; in Latine called Camera Castellensis. 4. Nemours, upon the River of Loyre, the chief of Gastinois in name, but not in beauty, (wherein inferior to Etampes) a Town which hath given the Title of Duke to many eminent persons of France. Here is also in this part, the County of Rochoy, and the Towns of 1. Milly, 2. Montargis, &c. More their occurrence not worth the noting, in this part of the Country, but that being part of the possessions of Hugh the Great Constable of France, and Earl of Paris. It was given by him, together with the Earldom of Anjou, to Geo. Grey, surnamed Griffynelle, a right noble Warrior, and a great stickler in behalf of the House of Anjou, then aiming at the Crown it self, which at last they carried. Continued in his Line till the time of Fulk II. (the fifth Earl of Anjou of this Family) who gave it back again to King Philip I. that by his help he might possess himself of the Earldom of Normandy, from his part where-in he was excluded by his elder Brother. Never since that, dissembred from the Crown of France, in fact or Title.

4. But the great glory of this Province, is that which is more properly called the ISLE OF FRANCE, and sometimes l'île de France, the Isle, caused by the Circles and embracements of the Rivers of Sein, and Marn; the abstract of the whole Beauties and Glories of France, which in this rich and pleasant Valley are summed up together.

Chief places in it, 1. S. German, seated on the ascent of an Hill seven miles from Paris, down the water; a pretty neat and handfom Town, honoured with one of the fairest Palaces of the French Kings; which being built (like Windfor) on the top of a fine Mountaine, on the Rivers side; affordeth an excellent Prospect over all the Country. The excellent Water-works herein, have been described on occasion of those of Tivoli, a Town of the Popes in Campagna di Roma, so much extolled by the Italians. It was first built by Charles V. furnished the Wife; beautified by the English when they were possessed of this Country; but finally, re-edified and enlarged by King Henry IV. who brought it into that Magnificence in which now we see it. It took name from St. German, Bishop of Auxerre, Companion with St. Lupus before mentioned, in the British Journey against Pelagius. 2. Poissy, upon the same River, or rather on the confluence of it, and the Marn which falleth into the Sein; situate not far from St. Germain; a Bailiwick belonging to the Provost of Paris, and one of his seven Daughters, as they use to call them. 3. Chantilly, the chief seat of the Dukes of Montmorency, the ancientest and most noble Family of all Christendom, whose Ancestors were the first fruits of the Gospel in this part of Gaul, and used to stile themselves, Les premiers Chrétiens, & plus vieilles Barons de France, i.e. The first Christians, and most ancient Barons of France. A Family that hath yielded unto France more Admirals, Constables, Marshals and other like Officers of Power, than any three in all the Kingdoms; now most unhappily extinct in the person of the late Cardinal of Richenien, for King with the Manfieur (now Duke of Orleans) against King Lewis XIII. his Brother. The Arms of which illustrious and most noble Family, (for I cannot let it pass without this honour) were Or, a Cross Gules, cantoned with sixteen Allerions Azure, four in every Cantra. What these Allerions are, we shall see in Lorraine: take we notice now, that from the great possessions which this Noble Family had in all this Tract, it was and is still called the Vale of Montmorency. 4. S. Denis, some three miles from Paris, so called of a Monastery built here by Dagobert, King of France, about the year 640, in memory of St. Denis, or Dionys, the first Bishop of Paris, martyred (on Mont-martyr, an Hill adjoining) in the time of Domitian. Some of the French Kings, because it lay so near to Paris, bestowed a Wall upon the Town, now not defensible; no otherwise of any consideration, but for a very fair Abby of Benedictines and therein the Sepulchres of many of the French Kings and Princes: neither for Workmanship nor Cost, able to hold comparison with those at Westminster. But being the Sepulture of their Kings, the French men use to say facetiously, that to this place none of their Kings do ever go with a good will. In this Town also is the Church of St. Maclon, where the Kings, with a Fast of nine Days, and other Penances, use to receive the famous Gift of healing the King's Evil, with nothing but a Touch: a Privilege enjoyed only by those Kings, and the Kings of England. 5. St. Cloud, (or the Town of St. Claudus) unfortunately memorable for the Murder of King Henry III. who lying here at a Siege of Paris, from whence he was compelled to flee by the Guisan Faction, was wretchedly assassinated by Jacques Clement, a Monk employed in that service by the Heads of the Holy League. 6. P. A. R. I. S., the chief City, not of this Isle alone; but of all the Kingdom. By Cæsar, and Ammianus Marcellinus called Civitas Parisiorum, from the Parisian; a Nation of Gaul called Celick, whose chief City it was; by Strabo called Luettia, Luettisia, by Ptolemy, quædam Luettis, as some conjecture from the distinct of the soil in which it standeth. A soil so dirty, (as commonly all rich Countries are) that though the Streets hereof are paved, (which they affirm to be the work of King Philip Augustus) yet every little dash of rain, makes them very slippery; and worse than oil, yields an ill favour to the Nolz. The Proverb is, Il déshait comme la fange de Paris. It stinketh like the dirt of Paris; but the Author of the Proverb might have changed the word, and turned it to Il pout, &c., It stinketh like the dirt of Paris: no link being more offensive than those streets in Summer. It is in compass about eight miles, of an Orbicular form, pleasantly seated on the divisions of the Sein: a fair, large, and capacious City, but far short of the brags which the French make of it. It was thought in the time of King Lewis XI. to contain 500000 people of all sorts and ages; which must be the least: the same King at the entertainment of the Spanish Embassadors, shewing 140000 of this City in Arms, all in a Liver of red Calicoes, with white Crosses. A gallant sight, though possibly the one half of them were not fit for service: the Parisians being for the most part an effeminate people, wanton enough, and apt to mutiny upon all occasions; but little addicted to the Wars, as appears plainly by their suffering King Henry IV. to hold St. Denis so long against them, with no considerable Garrison, and by that means to thrust them up from all relief on that side of their City. And yet their multitudes, which since the time of that King, must needs be very much increased, are the chief strength of the Town; the Fortifications being weak, and of ill assurance: inasmuch that when once a Parisian bragged, that their Town was never taken by force; an English man returned this Answer, That it was, because on the least distress it did use to capitulate. It is seated (as before was said) on the River Sein, which serveth it with Boats and Barges, (as the Thames Westward doth London) the River cobling and flowing no higher than Pont de l'Arche, 75 miles distant from the City.

We may divide it into four parts; The Town; the City, the University, and the Suburbs. La Ville, or that part of it which is called The Town, is situate on the North side of the River; the biggest, but poorest part of the Four; inhabited by Artizans and Tradesmen of the meaner sort. In this part are the Hôtel de Ville, or the Guilde-Hall, for the use of the Citizens; the Arsenal, or Armory, for the use of the King; and that Magnificent Building called the Place-Royal, new built and beautified at the charges of King Henry IV. for Tilts and Tournaments, and such Solemnities of State. And in this also, near the banks of the River stands the Kings Palace of the Louvre; a place of more Fame than Beauty; and nothing answerable to the report which goes commonly of it. A Building of no elegance or uniformity; nor otherwise remarkable, but for the vast Gallery begun by King Henry IV. and the fine Gardens of the Tuileries adjoining to it. The City is that part of it which takes up the Circumference of a little Island, made by the embracements of the Sein; joynted to the other parts on both sides, by several Bridges. The Paris or Luettia of the old Gauls, was no more than this, the Town on the one side, and the University on the other, being added since. This is the richest part, and best built of the whole Comptium. And herein stand the Palace, or Courts of Parliament; the Chapel of the Holy Ghost; and the Church of Notre-Dame, being the Cathedral; of ancient times a Bishops See, but of late raised unto the dignity of a Metropolis. On the South-side of the River lieth that part which is called the University, from an University here founded by Charles the Great, An. 792, at the perswasion of Alcuin an English man; the Scholar of Venerable Bede, and the first Professor of Divinity here. It consisteth of 52 Colleges or places for study, whereof 40 are of little use; and in the rest, the Students live at their own charges, as in the Halls at Oxon, or Inns of Court, or Chancery at London; there being no Endowment laid unto any of them, except the Sorbonne, and the College of Navarre. Which possibly may be the reason why the Scholars here are generally so debauched and insolent: a ruder rabble than the which are hardly to be found in the Christian world. Sensible of this mischief, and the cause thereof, Francis I. whom the French call the Father of the Muses, at the perswasion of Reuchlin and Budeus, those great reformers of the Greek, and Hebrew Languages, intended to have built a College for 600 Students, and therein to have placed Professors for all Arts and Sciences, endowing it with 50000 Crowns of yearly Revenue, for their constant maintenance. But it went no further than the purpose; prevented by the inevitable stroke of death, from pursuance of it. In bigness this is little inferior to the Town of Vile, and not superior to it for wealth and beauty; few men of any wealth and credit, affecting to inhabit in a place of little Government. The fourth and last part is the Suburbs, or the Faux-bourgs, as the French call them; the principal whereof is that of St. Germain, (so called from an ancient Abbot of that name) the best part of the whole Body of Paris, for large Streets, sweet Air, choice of the best company, magnificent Houses, pleasant Gardens, and finally, for all those Contentments which are wanting commonly in the throngs of most populous Cities.

Here are also in this Isle, the royal House of Madrid, a retiring-place of the Kings, built by King Francis I. at his return from his imprisonment in Spain. 2. Rueil, a sweet Country-house of the late Queen-Mother. And, 3. Bois de Vincennes, remarkable for the untimely death of our Henry V. I add this only, and so end; That this Isle hath always followed the Fortune of the Crown; France never dismembred from the Sovereignty of the same, though sometimes out of the possession of the French Kings; as when the English kept it against Charles VII. and the League against Henry IV. A thing which hardly can be said of any other of the Provinces of this flourishing Country; the French Kings of the Race of Mercurie, and Charles the Great, alienating from the Crown, many goodly Territories, contented only with a bare and titular Honour from them. By means whereof, more than three parts of the whole Kingdom was shared first amongst the great Princes of the French; which afterwards, by inter-marriages, and other titles, fell into the hands of strangers; most of them enemies of this Crown, and jealous of the Grandeur and Power thereof. Which kept the French Kings generally very low and poor, till by Arms, Confiscations, Marriages, and such other means, they reduced all these Rivalets to their first and original Channel; as shall be shewn in the pursuance of this Work.

2. CHAMPAGNE.

CHAMPAGNE is bounded on the North, with Picardy; on the South, with the Dukedom of Burgundy; on the East, with Lorraine; on the West, with France specially so called.

The Country, for the most part, very plain, and pleasant, (whence it had the name) adorned with thady Woods, and delectable Meadows, fruitful in Corn, and not deficient in Wines. The Seat, in elder times, of the Tricassers, Catalauni, Remi, the Ligones, and Senones, (of which last Tribe or Nation, were those Cisalpine Gauls who sacked Rome under the Conduct of Brennus) part of them Celts, and part Belgians; and so accordingly disposed of the Belgians, unto the Province of Belgica Secunda, the Metropolis whereof was Rhemus: the Celts unto Lugdunensis quarta, of which the Metropolis was Senis; both Cities seated in this Country. The chief Rivers of it, 1. Blaise, 2. Marn, 3. Yonne. 4. Sault.

Chief places of that part herof which belonged to Belgica Secunda, or the Province of Rhemus, are 1. Chalon, on the River Marn, an Episcopal See, Suffragan to the Arch-bishop of Rhemus; called anciently, Civitas Catalaunorum. 2. Jainville, situate on the same River, belonging to the House of Guise; the eldest Son of which Family, is called Prince of Jainville: in the Castle whereof, seated upon an high and inaccessible Hill, is to be seen the Tomb of Claude, the first Duke of Guise; the richest Monument of that kind, in all France. The Barony of William Lord Jainville, third Son of Eustace, Earl of Boulogne, and of Ida his Wife, who brought the Dukedom of Bouillon for her Dowry or Portion; and Brother of Godfrey and Baldwin, Dukes of Lorraine, and Kings of Jerryusalem. But whether it came to him by the gift of his Mother, as part of the Dukedom of Bouillon, or that he had it by his Wife, a daughter of Theobald Earl of Champagne, I am not able to determine. Left by him after his decease, to Godfrey his youngest Son (Thierry his eldest Son, succeeding his Uncle Baldwin in the Dukedom of Lorraine) upon the failure of whose Line it fell unto the Duke of Lorraine, as next Heirs thereof, and so unto the Dukes of Guise, as descended from them. 3. St. Urban, a Town of the Territory of Jainville, from which it is about two Leagues distance. 4. Pierre-Fort, defended with a Castle of so great strength, that in the Civil Wars of France, An. 1614, it endured a 110 foot long of Cannon, and yet was not taken. 5. Vassy, upon the River Blaise; a Town of as sweet a situation, as most in France. The last situate in that part of Champagne which is called Vallee: so named, as I conceive, from the Rivers Vasse, 6. Vitry, upon the confluence of the Sault and Marn, the chief Town and Ballage of that part which is named Parthois (Agger Pertensis in the Latine is) also called of Perte, another Town thereof, but now not so eminent. 8. Chaumont, upon the Marn; the chief Town of Bassigni, and strengthened with a Castle mounted on a craggy Rock, or Deuion, or St. Desier, (Fannum Sancti Desiderii) royally fortified after he had been ruined, An. 1544. 10. Rhemus, (Durocornum Rhebennum) an Archbishops See, who is one of the Twelve Peers of France, situate on the River of Vasse. At this City, the Kings of France are most commonly crowned, that so they may enjoy the Union of a sacred Oyl, kept in the Cathedral Church hereof; which, as they say, came down from Heaven and never decreaseth. How true this is, may be easily seen in that Gregory of Tours, who is so prodigal of his Miracles, makes no mention of it, but specially (for Argumentum ab auctoritate negative parum valet) since the Legend informeth us, that this Holy Oyl was sent from Heaven at the anointing of Clouis, the first Christian King of the French. Whereas Du Haillan, one of their most judicious Writers, affirmeth Pepin, the Father of Charles the Great, to have been their first anointed King; and that there was none of la premiere lignee ointe, ny sacre à Rhemes, ny ailleurs, none of the first or Mérovigian line of Kings had been anointed at Rhemes or elsewhere. But sure it is, let it be true or false, no matter that the French do wonderfully reverence this (their sacred) Oyl; and fetch it with great solemnity from the Church in which it is kept. For it is brought by the Prior, sitting on a white ambling Palfrey, and attended by his whole Convent: the Archbishop hereof, (who by his place is to perform the Ceremonies of the Coronation) and such Bishops as are present, going to the Church-doors to meet it, and leaving for it with the Prior, some competent Pawn; and on the other side, the King, when it is brought unto the Altar, bowing himself before it with great humility. But to return to the Town; it took this name from the Rheni, once a potent Nation of these parts, whose chief City it was, and now an University of no small esteem: in which among other Colleges, there is one appointed for the education of young English Fugitives. The first Seminary for which purpose, (I note this only by the way) was erected at Dumay, An. 1568. A second at Rome by Pope Gregory XIII. A third at Valladolid in Spain by K. Philip II. A fourth in Louvain a Town of Brabant: And a fifth here (so much do they affect the gaining of the English to the Romish Church) by the Dukes of Guise. 11. Ligni, upon the River Saule.

In that part of it which belonged to Lugdunensis quarta, or the Province of Sens, the places of chief note are, 1. Sens, Crivis Senonum in Antoninus, anciently the Metropolis of that Province, by consequence the See of an Archbishop also. The Country hereabouts called Le Pays Senois, was part of the habitation of the ancient Senones, some of which passing over the Alpes, with other Nations of the Gauls, planted those parts which afterwards were for long time called Gallia Cisalpinga. Of which the Senones were the most valiant, though far less in numbers; as those which had not only the honour of facking Rome, but of managing an offensive War against that State, for the space of 100 years and upwards. What afterwards became of them hath been hewed already when we were in Lombardy. 2. Langes or Civitas Lingunum, (by Polony called Adumaturum) situate in the confines of Burgundy, not far from the fountain or spring-head of the Seine: the See of a Bishop, who is one of the Twelve Peers of France. 3. Troy, Civitas Tricassum, seated on the Seine a fair, strong and well-traded City, honoured with the title of the Daughter of Paris; See Episcopal, and counted the chief of Champagne next Rhemes. A City of great note in our French and English Histories, for the meeting of Charles VI. and Henry V. Kings of France and England, in which it was agreed, that the said King Henry, espousing Katherine daughter of that King, should be proclaimed Heir apparent of the Kingdom of France; into which he should succeed on the said Kings death, and be the Regent of the Realm for the time of his life, with divers other Articles best suited with the will and honour of the Conqueror. 4. Provence, (by Cesar called Agendicum) seated upon the Seine, in a pleasant Country, abounding in all fragrant flowers, but especially with the sweetest Roses, which being transplanted into other Countries, are called Provence-Roses. 5. Meaux, seated on the River Marne, anciently the chief City of the Meldi, whom Pliny and others of the old Writers mention in this tract; now honoured with a Bishops See, and neighbored by 6. Mauconax beautified with a magnificent Palace, built by Katharine de Medicis, Queen-Mother of the three last Kings of the House of Valois. 7. Montreux, a strong town on the confluence of the Seine and the Tonne. 8. Chastell-Thierry, (Castellum Theodoric), as the Latines call it) situate on the River Marne. These five last, situate in that part of Champagne which lieth next to France specially to be called; known of long time by the name of Brie: which being the first or chief possession of the Earls of Champagne, occasioned them to be sometimes called Earls of Brie, and sometimes Earls of Brie and Champagne. Add here, 9. Auxerre, in former time a City of the Dukedom of Burgundy, but now part of Champagne; of which more hereafter. And 10. Fontenay, a small Town in Auxerrois, in the very borders of this Province; memorable for the great battle fought near it, An. 841. between the Sons and Nephews of Landovicus Pius, For their Fathers Kingdoms: in which fo many thousands were slain on both sides, that the Forces of the French Empire were extremely weakened; and had been utterly destroyed in pursuit of this unnatural War; if the Princes of the Empire had not mediated a Peace between them; alloting unto each some part of that vast Estate, dismembered by that means into the Kingdoms of Italy, France, Germany, Lorein, Burgundy; never since brought into one hand, as they were before.

Adjoining unto Champagne also, where it looks towards Lorein, lies the Country and Duchy of B. A. R. belonging to the Dukes of Lorein, but held by them in chief of the Kings of France. The Country commonly called B. A. R. O. I. S., environed for the most part with the two streams of the River Marne; of which the one rising in the edge of Burgundy, and the other in the borders of Lorein, do meet together at Châlons a City of Champagne. Places of most importance in it, 1. Bar le Duc, so called to distinguish it from Bar on the River Seine; and Bar upon the River Albe; a well fortified Town. 2. La Motte, 3. Ligni. 4. Arque, of which nothing memorable, but that they are the chief of this little Dukedom. Of what antiquity this Dukedom is, and by whom first founded and made an absolute Estate, I am yet to seek; though probable it is, that it might take its first rise (as many other petit Signeuries did) out of the ruin and dismembering of the Kingdom of Lorein, or otherwise might be erected by the Earls Palatines of Champagne, out of some part of that Estate. But whether it were fo or not, certain it is, that it came first to the present house of Lorein, by the gift of Rene Duke of Anjou, and titular King of Naples, Sicil, &c. who succeeded in it in the right of Toland or Violant his Mother, Daughter of Don John I. King of Aragon, and of Toland or Violant, the Heir of Bar; and dying gave the same, together with the towns of Lambehque and Orgon, to Rene Duke of Lorein, his Nephew by the Lady Violant his Daughter. From this Rene, it was taken by Lewis XI. who having put a Garrison into Bar, repaired the Wall and caused the Arms of France to be set on the Gates thereof. Restored again by Charles VIII. at his going to the Conquest of Naples: to buy him out by that means (if I guess aright) of his pretensions to that Kingdom, which were fair and specious, since which time quietly enjoyed by the Dukes of Lorein, till the year 1633, when seized on by Lewis XIII. upon a Judgment and Arrest of the Court of Parliament in Paris, in regard the present Duke had not done his Homage to the King as he ought to have done.

The Arms hereof are Azure, two Barbs back to back, Or; 3. Seme of Crofs Crocett, Pithe, of the second. But to return again to Champagne; it pleased Henry Capet at his coming to the Crown of France, to give the same to Eudes or Odou, Earl of Blais, whose Daughter he he had married in his private Fortunes, before he had attained the Kingdom, with all the Rights and Privileges of a County Palatine. Which Eudes, or Odou, was the Son of Theobald Earl of Blais, and Nephew of that Gerlon, a noble Dane, to whom Charles the Simple gave the Town and Earldom of Blais, about the year 920, and not long after the time, that he conferred the Country of Nestria upon Rollo the Norman, whose Kinsman and Assistant this Gerlon was in haralling and warring the coasts of France. In the person of Theobald the third, the Earls hereof became Kings of Navarre, descended on him in right of the Lady Blanch his Mother, Sister and Heir of King Sanebo the eighth, Anno 1234. By the Marriage of Joan Queen of Navarre, and Countess of Champagne, to Philip the fourth of France, furnished the Fair, both these Estates were added to the Crown of France: enjoyed by him and his three Sons one after another, though not without some prejudice to the Lady Joan, Daughter and Heir of Lewis Hutin. But the three Brethren being dead, and Philip of Valois succeeding in the Crown of France, he reformed the Kingdom of Navarre to the said Lady Joan: and for the County of Champagne (which lay too near the City of Paris to be trusted in a foreign hand) he gave unto her and her Posterity, as in the way of exchange, some certain Towns and Lands in other places; though not of equal value to so rich a Patrimony.

Count Palatines of Champagne.

- An. Chr. 999 1 Odo, Earl of Champagne, Brie, Blais and Tourenne, Son of Theobald the elder, Earl of Blais.
1032 2 Stephen, Earl of Champagne, and Blais, Father of Stephen Earl of Blais, and King of England.
1101 3 Theobald, eldest Son of Stephen.
1151 4 Henry, Son of Theobald, a great adventurer in the Wars of the Holy Land.
1181 5 Henry I. An Associate of the Kings of France and England in the Holy Wars; King of Hierusalem, in right of Isabel his Wife.
1196 6 Theobald II. Brother of Henry, added unto his house the hopes of the Kingdom of Navarre, by his Marriage with the Lady Blanche, Sister and Heir of Sanebo 8.
1201 7 Theobald III. Earl of Champagne, Son of Theobald the second, and the Lady Blanche, succeeded in the Realm of Navarre, An. 1234.
1269 8 Theobald IV. Son of Theobald the 3. King of Navarre, and Earl of Champagne, &c.
1271 9 Henry IV. Son of Theobald the 4. King of Navarre, and Earl of Champagne, &c.
1284 10 Philip IV. King of France, in right of Joan his Wife, King of Navarre, and Earl of Champagne.
1313 11 Lewis Hutin, Son of Philip King of France and Navarre, and Earl of Champagne.
1315 12 Philip the Long, Brother of Lewis Hutin, King of France and Navarre, and Earl of Champagne.
1320 13 Charles the Fair, Brother of Philip King of France and Navarre, and the last Earl of Champagne; united after his decease by Philip de Valois to the Crown of France: the Earldom of March, near Angoulême, being given for it, in exchange to the Lady Joan, Daughter of King Lewis Hutin, and Queen of Navarre married to Philip Earl of Encreux, in her right, honoured with that Crown, from whom descended the Kings of France and Navarre, of the House of Bourbon.

The Arms of these Palatines of Champagne, were Argent, two Bends cotized, potentee and counterpotentee of three pieces, Or.

3. PICARDIE.

PICARDIE hath on the East, the Dukedom of Luxemburg, and Lorein; on the West, some part of Normandy, and the English Ocean; on the North, the Counties of Artois and Hainault; and on the South, Champagne, and France strictly and specially so called. A Country to well stored with Corn, that it is accounted the Granary or Store-house of Paris; but the few Wines which it produceth are but harsh, and of no good relish, especially in the Northern and colder parts of it.

The ancient Inhabitants of it were the Suessiones, Ambiani and Vermomandi, considerable Nations of the Belge; and therefore reckoned into the Province of Belgica Secunda: but why they had the name of Picardi, I am yet to seek. Omitting therefore the conjectures of other men, some of the which are groundless, and the rest ridiculous; I only say, as Robert Boffet of Amiens, hath affirmed before me, Quot itaq; avis nigra Picardos appellat, vere Belge dicendi sunt, qui postmodum in Picardorum transfugerunt.

The whole Country as it lieth from Calais to the Borders of Lorein, is divided into the higher and the lower: the lower subdivided into Sainterre, Conthens, Boulengois, and Guise; the higher into the Vidamare of Amiens, Vermomandi, Rebellois, and Tierche; in every of which there are some places of importance and consideration.

In Lower PICARDIE and the County of GUISNES the chief Towns, 1. Calais by Cesar called Pontus Ictinus (as the adjoining Promontory, Promontorium Ictium, by Polony) a strong Town close upon Artois, at the entrance of the English Channel: taken by Edward the third after the siege of eleven months, Anno 1347. and lost again by Queen Mary in less than a fortnight, Anno 1557. So that had Monsieur de Cordes then lived, he had had his wish; who used to say, That, if he would be content to live seven years in Hell, on condition that Calais were taken from the English. The loss of which Town was a great blow to our estate, for till that time we had the Keys of France at our Girdles: and as great a grief unto Queen Mary, who sickning presently upon it, said to those which attended her, That, if she were opened, they should find Calais next her heart. 2. Hamme, a strong piece, one of the best Out-works of Calais. 3. Piomer, on the borders towards Artois, which with the Country joining to it, made an ancient Barony; the Patrimony in times past of the Earls of S. Paul, by whom given to Theobald the younger Brother of Lewis Earl of S. Paul and Countable of France, (of whom more hereafter) and from that Family conveyed to the house of Egmond, by the marriage of Francis heir hereof to John Earl of Egmond, who died in the year 1528, and was the Father of that Earl, who after was beheaded by the Duke of Alva, Anno 1568. 4. Andres, more towards the borders of Artois, memorable for the interview of Henry the Eighth, and Francis the first; and many meetings of the English and French Commissioners. 5. Guise, which gives name to this Division, called the County of Guise (of which the Land of Oye wherein Calais stood (by the French called commonly Pais de Calais) was esteemed a part.) The Earldom anciently of the illustrious house of Grave, of which more anon.

2. In BOULOGNOIS, neighbouring on the Country of Guineux, the places of most note, 1. Blackwell, a strong Fort on the Sea-side, betwixt Calice and Boulogne. 2. Caillon, opposite to Boulogne, on the other side of the water. 3. Boultonberg, more within the Land, an Out-work to Boulogne. 4. Boulogne, by Pliny called Portus Gessoriacus, part of the Country of the Morini, spoken of by Cæsar; divided into the Bisf or Low Town lying on the shore side, well built, and much frequented by Passengers, going to, or coming out of England; and the High Town standing on the rise of an Hill, well garisoned for defence of the Port beneath it, and honoured with a Bishops See, translated hither from Tournay when that City was taken by the English. The Town and Country taken by King Henry the eighth, with infinite expence of treasure, Anno 1544, but yielded not long after by King Edward the sixth: the French redeeming it at less than a fourth part of the money, which the gaining of it had cost the Crown of England. As for the fortunes of this Country, it was once an Earldom of its self, during which time it gave one King unto Hierusalem, and another to England. The first Earl of it which we meet with, was that Eustace, who by his marriage with Ida, the Daughter of Geoffrey or Godfrey the second, Duke of Lorrein, added the Dutchy of Bouillon in Gaul-Belgick to his Earldom of Boulogne. To him succeeded in both these Titles and Estates, Godfrey, surnamed of Bouillon his eldest Son: who after the death of Geoffrey the third his Cousin-german attained unto the Dukedom of Lorrein, and finally was the first and most renowned King of the Western Christians reigning in Hierusalem. Godfrey being dead, Eustace the youngest of his Brethren became Earl of Boulogne: whose daughter Maud brought this Estate and Title of Stephen of Blais, who afterwards was King of England. Eustace the only Son of Stephen dying without issue, the rights hereof remained in his Sister Mary, the Abbess of Ramfey, married to Matthew Brother of Philip of Eljats Earl of Flanders. And though Matthew was commanded by the Pope to restore her again unto the Abbey out of which he had taken her; yet he kept this Country for her Children. Conveyed by Ida the eldest Daughter of this Bed to Reginald of Chastis her third husband; by Maud his daughter to Philip, second Son of Philip Augustus King of France by another Maud (he dying without issue) to Alfonso of Portugal, who succeeding after in that Kingdom, sent her back to Boulogne; and finally by Juan daughter and heir of William, this Alfonso Grandchild to Philip Earl of Artois, the Son of Eudes Duke and Earl of Burgundy to whom the brought Philip their only Son, Successor to his Grand-father in the said Estates, and to his Mother in this Earldom. But he deceasing without issue, Anno 1361, and Juan not leaving any children by King John of France, whom he married after the death of her first husband, it fell by some other of the Heirs General to the De la Tour d'Auvergne (the Ancestors of the now Dukes of Bouillon) continuing in that Family till the year 1477, when bought by Lewis the eleventh of France of Bertrand de la Tour, the better to assure his Kingdom on that side against the English then possessed of the Country of Guineux. The purchase being made, Lewis the now Proprietor, did Homage for it to the Virgin Mary, in the chief Church then called Notre Dame; bare-headed, on his knees, without Spurs or Girdle: and offered to her Image a massie Heart of gold of 2000 ounces; capitalizing that from thenceforth he and his Successors would hold that Earldom of her only, in perpetual Homage; and at the change of every Vassal present her with a golden heart of the same weight. Since which time never aliened from the Crown of France; nor giving title unto any but to Katherine de Medicis Wife of Henry the Second, created Countess of Boulogne and Clermont, when first married to him, he being then Duke of Orleans only.

The Arms hereof under the ancient Earls of Boulogne, were Or, a Banner Gules, tufted Purple; those of De la Tour, being a Tower embattled Sable; but the colour of the Field I do now find ind. 3. PONTHIEU, so called from the Bridges, built for convenience of passage over the moorish Flats thereof, belonged formerly to the English; to whom it came by the Marriage of Eleanor, Daughter of Ferdinand of Castile, by Juan the Daughter and Heir of Simon the last Earl hereof, to King Edward the first. Towns of most note in it, 1. Abbeville, seated on the Some, well fortified and as strongly garisoned, as a Frontier Town upon Artois: on one side unassailable by reason of a deep and moorish Fens, which comes up close to it; beauried with a fair Abbey, whence it had the name (Abbacy Villa in the Latine) and the See of a Bishop. 2. Montreuil, a well fortified Town, in the way betwixt Abbeville and Boulogne, and a strong out-work unto Paris. 3. Crespy, where King Edward the third defeated the great Army of Philip de Valois, in the first onsets for that Kingdom, Anno 1343. And 4. Trepport, a small Haven on the East of S. Valerius. Some place the Earldom of S. Paul in this Country of Ponthieu, others more rightly in Artois, where we mean to meet with it. The Arms hereof were Or, three Bends Azure.

4. And as for the Country of S. AINTERRÉ, which is the fourth part of the Lower Picardy, the chief Towns of it are, 1. Peronne, upon the River Some, where Lewis the eleventh, the greatest Master of State-craft for the times he lived in, put himself most improvidently into the hands of Charles of Burgundy, who as improvidently dismissed him. 2. Roy, and 3. Mont Didier, (Mont Didier in Latin) both of them strong Towns upon the Frontier; but otherwise of little fame in former Stories.

In the Higher Picardy being that part of this Country which lieth furthest from the Sea, the first division which occurreth, is the Vidamats of AMIENS, so called of the fair City of Amiens, and the Vidame, or chief Governor of it. Which honour as it is peculiar to the French only (so Mills in his Edition of Gloveti Catalogue of Honour, will have but four at all in France, viz. this of Amiens, Chalours, Garbary, and that of Chartrai. But certainly in France there are many more of them; as at Rhemus, Mans, &c. and formerly as many as it had Bishops; the Vice-dominus, or Vice-dame, being to the Bishop in his Temporalts, as the Chancellor in his Spirituals; or as the Vice-comites (Vicomites) were anciently to the Provincial Earls in their Courts of Judicature; or to give you an example nearer home and of more resemblance, these French Vidames were unto their several and respective Bishops, as the Temporal Chancellors (in this Realm) of the Billopprick of Durham, or the High Steward of the Billopprick of Ely, to those several Bishops.

Places of most note herein, 1. Corbie, a Town of great importance, and strongly garisoned, situate on the Frontier towards the Netherlands. 2. Chaune, on the same Frontier also, but of less consideration, the Honorary seat and title of the present Vidame. 3. Piquigni, situate on a pretty ascent of ground overlooking the Some, on the left hand of the River betwixt Amiens and Abbeville, the ordinary seat of the former Vidames more famous for the interview of Edward the IV. of England, and Lewis the XII. than for giving the name of Picardy to all the Provinces which Mercator only of all writers doth ascribe unto it. 4. Crony an obscure Village now, but formerly of

special note for a goodly Castle, commanding over the adjoining Territory, and giving name to the illustrious Family, hence surnamed of Crony, descended from the Kings of Hungary, and the Progenitors of the Dukes of Archeon, and Princes of Chimay in the Netherlands; before their translating to which Countries by the Dukes of Burgundy, they were entitled Earls of Guineux. 5. Amiens itself, seated upon the Some above Piquigni, the River being there divided into many streams for the use and service of the Town; well built, with very strong walls and deep ditches: the loss whereof, when taken by Archduke Albert, much hazarded the affairs and reputation of King Henry the fourth, and therefore when he had regained it, he added to the former works an impregnable Citadel. But the chief glory of this City is in the Cathedral, the fairest and most lovely structure in the West of Europe: so beautified within and adorned without, that all the excellencies of Cost and Architecture seem to be met together in the composition. The Fronts of our Cathedrals of Wells and Peterburgh, the rich Glafs in the Quire at Canterbury, the costly Imagery, and arched Buttresses in the Chappel at Wolmister (before the late defacements of those Cathedrals) might serve as helps to set forth the full beauty of it. The Towns and Territories anciently under the command of the Bishops of it, whose Officers for the Temporal government hereof called Vice-dominus or Vidames, were at first eligible by the Bishops, and accountable to them, but by degrees engrossing all power unto themselves, they became Hereditary, and gave the name of the Vidamats of Amiens to this part of Picardy. The present Vidame of it is the Duke of Chaune, who being one of the younger Brothers of Maistre de Luyne (chief favourite to K. Lewis 13.) obtained in marriage the daughter and heir of the former Vidame, with whom he had the Town and Castle of Piquigni, the chief command of these parts, and a rent of 9000 l. per annum, honoured thereupon by the power and favours of his Brother with the title of the Duke of Chaune and Peer of France, Anno 1620, or thereabouts.

II. But not to dwell on this place too long, pass we yet next to VEROMANDOIS, the ancient habitation of the Vermandois, the fairest and largest part of both Picardies; and not a whit inferior to the best of France in the number of neat and populous Cities.

The principal Towns hereof are, 1. Soissons, called anciently Augusta Suessunum, the chief City of the Suessones or Suessiones; and the last Hold which the Romans had in all Gaul lost by Stagirus, Governor for the Western Emperor, to Clodius the fifth King of the French. In the division of his Kingdom, made the first Royal of Clodius, the Son of this Clodius was of Aripri, and Chilperic, the Sons of Clodius, from hence entitled Kings of Soissons; their Kingdom containing the whole Province of Belgica secunda, or the Provinces of Artois, Picardy, and Champagne, as we call them now. But Soissons having long since lost the honour of a Regal Seat, hath of long time been made the honorary Title of the Counts of Soissons, a branch of the Royal stock of Bourbon; a Bishops See, and situate on the River of Aisne. 2. Laon, a Bishops See also, the Bishop whereof is one of the Twelve Peers of France, an Earl of Laon; the Town in Latine, Laodunum. 3. Noyon, in Latine, Noviodunum, an Episcopal See also. 4. Chapelle, a strong piece, one of the best out-works of Paris against the Netherlands. 5. D'Orlans. 6. La Fere and Hon, places of great strength also, but more near the Frontiers. And 7. Soissons, anciently the chief City of the Vermandois, then called Augusta Veromandunum: called afterwards S. Quintin, from that Saint here worshipped, as the Patron Deus tutelaris of it. A place of great importance for the Realm of France; and so esteemed in the opinion of the Earl of Charlois, (after Duke of Burgundy) and King Lewis the 11. the first of which never digested the restoring of it to that King, being pawned unto his Father (together with Corbie, Amiens, and Abbeville) for no less than 400000 Crowns; the latter never would forgive the Earl of St. Paul for detaining it from him, though under colour of his service. A Town of greater note in succeeding times, for the famous battle of S. Quintin, Anno 1557, wherein King Philip the second of Spain, with the help of the English under command of the Earl of Pembroke; overthrew the whole Forces of the French, made themselves Masters of the Town, and thereby grew so formidable to the French King, that the Duke of Guise was in post haste sent for out of Italy (where his affairs began to prosper) to look unto the safety of France itself. As for the Fortunes of this part it was once an Earldom of its self, and an Earldom of as great Antiquity as the most in France, it being one Heribert or Robert Earl of Vermandois, who in pittance of the quarrel of the House of Anjou surprised Charles the Simple, and carried him Prisoner to Peronne, where he after died; for which deservedly hanged by Lewis surnamed Tranfmarine the Son of Charles, when he became possessed of his Fathers Kingdoms; by the Daughter and Heir of another Herbert, conveyed in marriage unto Hugh surnamed the Great, one of the younger Sons of King Henry the first of France, succeeding in her right into the title and estate of Earl of Vermandois, and by that name renowned in the first wars for the Holy Land. By Elizabeth the Nece of this Hugh, the Daughter of Rodolphus his eldest Son married to Philip of Eljats Earl of Flanders, it was added unto that estate; but shortly after given by the same Philip (having no children of his own) in Dowry with Isabel his Nece, daughter of Baldwin Earl of Hainault unto Philip Augustus King of France, and since united to that Crown, not giving since that time the title of Earl or Duke to any, for ought I can find.

III. More towards Hainault and Lorrein lieth the Country of RETHELOIS, so called of Rebel the chief Town, well fortified as the rest of the Frontier places, but of most note among the French, in that the Eldest Sons of the Dukes of Nevers, have usually been entituled Earls and Dukes of Rebel; united to that Family by the marriage of Lewis of Flanders, Earl of Nevers, with the daughter and heir of Jamer Earl of Rebel, Anno 1312, or thereabouts. 2. S. Monbaud, a Town of consequence and strength. 3. Sygni, a strong piece belonging to the Marquess of Vien ville. 4. Chasteau-Portim, of more beauty, but of like importance. The Arms of the Earls and Dukes of Rebel were Gules, three Rakes-beds indented Or.

IV. Finally in the Dutchy of TIER ASCHIE, the last part of the higher Picardy, we have the Town of Guise, of some note for the Castle, but of more for the Lords thereof, of the Ducal Family of Lorrein (on the borders whereof it standeth) from hence entituled Dukes of Guise. A Family which within a little compass of time produced two Cardinals, the one entituled of Guise, the other of Lorrein; six Dukes, that is to say, the D. of Guise, Mayenne, Amal, Elbeuf, Agillon, and Cherevins; the Earl of Samarine; and besides many daughters married into the best houses in France, one married to Jamer the 5th. King of the Scots. The first, and he that gave the rise unto all the rest of this potent Family, was Clodius Son to Rene, the second Duke of Lorrein, who passing into France to take possession of the Patrimony allotted to him, followed King Henry the first in the war of Italy, where he behaved himself so valiantly at the Battle of Marignano, in which he had the chief command of the German Auxiliaries, that the King always after held him in a great esteem, and married him to Anno Reute of Burbon, daughter ter of Francis, Earl of Vendome, in respect of which alliance, and his other merits, he was honoured with the title of Duke of Guise; the Father (amongst other children) of Mary Q. of Scots, Wife of James the fifth, and Grandmother of James the sixth, the first Monarch of Britain. The second was Francis, who endangered the Realm of Naples, resisted the siege of the Emperor Charles at Metz, drove him out of Provence, took Calice from Q. Mary, and was at last treacherously slain at the siege of Orleans, by one of the Hugonots named Poltrot, (on the infiltration of some of the chiefs of that faction) An. 1463. The third was Henry that great enemy of the Protestants, who contrived the great Massacre at Paris, and almost disposed of Henry the third of all France: He began the holy league, and was finally slain at Blair, by the command of King Henry the third. But we must know that this Town did anciently belong to the Dukes of Lorraine: and had given the title of Earl of Guise to Frederick the second Son of John, and Charles, the third Son of Rene, both the first of those names; before Claud of Lorraine was advanced to the title of Duke; as being part of the Estate and Patrimony of the Barons of Joinville, of whom we spake before when we were in Champagne. Of most note next to Guise is elfels 2. Ripemont on the South of Guise. 3. Chastels upon the borders towards Luxembourg, a strong Town, and none of the best out-works of France. 4. Mazieres, upon the Mais or Mosé, a place of great strength and like importance; belonging properly to the Dukes of Mevers (as chief Lords thereof) in right of their descent from the house of Reibel: fortified with a strong Citadel for defence of the place, and that Citadel well garrisoned by the French King, for defence of this border; laid to the Government of Champagne, though a Town of Picardy, and therefore made to come to belong to that Province also.

As for the state of this whole Province, I do not find that it was ever passed over by the French Kings unto any one hand: as almost all the rest of France had been at some time or other, but distracted unto divers Seigneuries and several Lordships (all of them absolute in themselves, and scarce affording to the French King the flight tribute of Homage) the particulars whereof we have seen before: some of which fell to the Crown of France by confiscations, some by lawful marriages, and others by conquest; some held of England, some of the Earls of Artois and others of Flanders, and lastly of the Dukes of Burgundy, as Lords of those Provinces: those which depended upon England, being seized on by Charles the 7. on the loss of Normandy by the English; as those which held of Burgundy, were by Lewis his Son, immediately on the death of Duke Charles, at the Battle of Nancy, An. 1476.

4. NORMANDY.

NORMANDY is bounded on the East with the River Seine, and part of Picardy, on the West with Bretagne, and some part of the Ocean; on the North with the English Channel, by which divided from England; and on the South, with France especially so called, and the County of Main. It made up the whole Province of Langue-d'outre-mer, in the time of the Romans; the Metropolis whereof was Rouen: and in the greatness of the French Empire had the name of Nestria, corruptly so called for Wistria; the name of Wistria or Wisternia, being given by some to the name of the Realm of Wist-France, as that of Astria or Osternia to a part of East.

France. Afterwards being bestowed upon the Normans by Charles the Simple, it was called Normandy.

This flourishing and rich Dukedom of Normandy, for largeness of Extent, multitudes of People, number and fertility of Cities, fertility of Soil, and the commodiousness of the Seas, may worthily be accounted the chief of France. Well watered with the River Seine which runneth quite through it; as do also 2. the Orne, and 3. the Aven: not to say any thing of 4. Robes, 5. Ante, and 6. Reimelle, and many others of less note. In length it reacheth about 170 miles, and about 60 in breadth, where it is narrowest: containing in that round the largest and fairest Corn-fields that arc to be seen in all France. Of all other natural commodities it is extremely plentiful, excepting Wines; which the Northern coldness of the Climate admits not of, or sparingly at the best, and of no perfection. The people of it formerly renowned for feats of Arms, the Conquerors of England, Naples, Sicily, and the Kingdom of Antioch in the East; at this time thought to be of a more sharp and subtil wit, than the rest of the French; Secutus an possibile ed procer et placideris (saith Orielius of them) especially in the quilllets of Law.

It is divided into the Higher and the Lower: the Lower containing the Sea-coasts, and the Higher, the more inland parts. Principal Cities of the whole, 1. Constance, a Bishop's See, the Spire or Steeple of whose Cathedral, is easily discernable afar off, both by Sea and Land; and serveth Sailors for a Land-mark. From hence the Country hereabouts hath the name of Constantine. 2. Auranches situate on a Rock with a fair prospect over the English Channel, but more near to Bretagne, than the other, the chief City of the Abrincantes, called Ingena by Ptolemy; now a Bishop's See. 3. Caen (Cadomum in Latine) an Episcopal See, as the other; strong, populous, and well built, seated upon the River Orne, second in reputation of the whole Province, but more especially famous for the Sepulchre of William the Conqueror, the University founded here by King Henry the fifth of England, and for the long resistance which it made against him, in his Conquest of Normandy. 4. Baieux (the Civitas Baiocensis of Antoninus) from whence the Country round about hath the name of Bessin. Memorable of a long time for a See Episcopal. One of the Bishops whereof, called Odo, Brother unto William the Conqueror, by the Mothers side, was by him created Earl of Kent; and afterwards on some just displeasure committed Prisoner. For which, when quarrelled by the Pope, (the Clergy being then exempted from the Secular Powers) he returned this answer, That he had committed the Earl of Kent, not the Bishop of Baieux: by which distinction he avoided the Popes displeasure. 5. Rouen, of old Rothomagus, pleasantly seated on the Seine, and watered with the two little Rivers of Robe, and Reimelle, which keep it very sweet and clean. The City for the most part well built, of large circuit, and great trading; the second for bigness, wealth, and beauty, in all France: anciently the Metropolis of this Province, and an Archbishop's See; and honoured of late times with a Court of Parliament, erected here by Lewis the twelfth, Anno 1501. In the Cathedral Church hereof (a reverend, but no beautiful Fabric) is to be seen the Sepulchre of John Duke of Bedford, and Regent of France for King Henry the sixth: which when an envious Countess periwaded Charles the 8. to deface; God forbid (saith he) that I should wrong him, being dead, whom living all the power of France was not able to withstand, adding withal, that he deserved a better Monument than the English had bestowed upon him. And to say truth, the Tomb is but mean and poor, short of the merits of the man, and carrying no proportion to so great a virtue.

6. Falaife,

6. Falaife, upon the River Ante, once of strength and note; the dwelling-place of Arelate, a Skinner's daughter, and the Mother of William the Conqueror; whom Duke Robert, passing through the Town, took such notice of, as he beheld her in a Dance amongst other Damozels, that he sent for her to accompany him that night in bed, and begot on her William the Bastard, Duke of Normandy, and King of England. Her immortality that night said to be so great, that either in regard thereof, or in spite to her Son, the English called all Strumpets by the name of Harlots, the word continuing to this day. 7. Vernville, (Vernulium in Latine) in former times accounted one of the Bulwarks of Normandy, against the French. Of which it is reported, that when news was brought to Richard the first, that Philip surnamed Augustus, the French King, had laid siege unto it, he should say these words: I will never turn my back, till I have conquered those cowardly Frenchmen. For performance of which Princely word, he caused a passage to be broken through the Palace of Westminster, and came to unexpectedly upon his Enemies, that they raised their siege, and hastened homewards. 8. Alanson, of most note for giving the title of Earl and Duke, to many Princes of the Royal Family of Valois, beginning in Charles de Valois, the Father of Philip de Valois, French King; and continuing for eight successions, till the death of Charles the Fourth, Duke of this line: conferred occasionally after that, on many of the younger Princes of the Royal Family. 9. Lyseux, on the North-east of Alanson, a Bishop's See, the chief Town of the Lexovii; as 10. Caen, of the Caletes, both placed by Cesar in these parts. 11. Eureux, an Episcopal See also, by Ptolemy called Mediolanum, the chief City anciently of the Eburones, and still a rich and flourishing Town; the third in estimation of all this Province, and made an Earldom in the person of Lewis a younger Son of Philip the third whose Son, called Philip, by his marriage with Jean Daughter of Lewis Hutin, attained unto the Crown of Navarre. But this Town, with many fair Estates in this Country which depend on it, being seized on by the French in the time of Charles the Son of this Philip, for some practices against that Kingdom; there was after given by Charles the third and last King of this House, in compensation for the same, Anno 1406, the title of Duke of Normandie, with a good sum of ready money, and a pension of 1200 l. sterling yearly, issuing out of the Revenues of Brie and Champagne. 12. Guise for a strong Frontier Town towards France, whilst Normandy was in the hands of the English, for under its own Duke and Princes: notable for the many rebellions given unto the French. An 13. Pontyef, another Frontier upon France: so called of the Bridge on the River of Oyfe, (which divides France from Normandy) on which the Town is situate, and by which well fortified on that side; but taken at the second coming of Charles the seventh, after an ignominious flight hence, upon the noise only of the coming of the Duke of Turk, Commander at that time of the Province, and the English Forces. 1. Alenmar, contractedly Aumer, most memorable for giving the title of Earl to the Noble Family De Fortibus, Lords of Holderness in England; and of Duke to Edward Earl of Rutland, after Duke of Turk. More towards the Sea, 15. S. Valerius, seated on a small, but secure Bay, betwixt Dieppe and New-baven, 16. Dieppe, at the mouth of a little River so named; opening in a large and capacious Bay: a Town of Trade, especially for the New-found-Land: remarkable for its idleness to Henry the IV. in the midst of his troubles; when the Confederates of the Guisean Faction, called the Holy League, had ousted him of almost all the rest of his Cities, compelled him to betake himself hither, (from whence he might more easily have sailed for England) and called him in derision, The King of Dieppe. 17. New-Haven, the Port-Town to Rouen and Paris, situate at the mouth of the River Seine, from hence by great Ships navigable as far as Rouen; by itself, unto Pont de l'Arch, 70 miles from Paris: the Bridge of Rouen formerly broken down by the English, to secure the Town, lying unprepared to this day, by means of the Parisians, for the better trading of their City. By the French it is called Havre de grace, and Franceopolis by the Latines; repaired and fortified (the better to confront the English) by King Francis the first, and from thence (named). Delivered by the Prince of Cande, and his faction, into the hands of Queen Elizabeth of England, as a Town of caution, for the landing of such Forces as she was to send to their relief, in the first Civil War of France about Religion; and by the help of the same Faction, taken from her again, as soon as their differences were compounded. By means whereof, the Hugonots were not only weakened for the present, but made incapable of any succours out of England for the time to come: and the next year were again warred on by their King, with more heat than formerly. 18. Harflow, and 19. Honflew, both situate on the banks of the Seine, but of little notice at the present, because not capable of any great shipping; nor useful in the way of Trade, by reason of the interposition of New-baven, betwixt them and the Sea: the former, famous notwithstanding in our English Stories; as the fifth Town which that Victorious Prince King Henry the fifth, attempted and took in, in France. 20. Chourburg, (the Latins call it Cesaris Burgum) on the Sea-side also, the last Town which the English held in the Dukedom of Normandy: belonging properly and naturally to the Earls of Eureux, advanced unto the Crown of Navarre; still alienated by Charles the third of Navarre, on the composition before mentioned; but being garrisoned by the English for King Henry the sixth, it held out a siege of seven months, against the Forces of France.

Here are also in this Kingdom, the Towns of 21. Tankerville, and 22. Ewe, which have given the title of Earls, to the noble Family of the Greys, and Burcheirs, in England: as also those of 23. Harcourt, 24. Longueville, and 25. Amul, which have given the title of Duke and Earl, to some of the best houses in France.

In this Country also is the little Signeury of VIDOT, heretofore said to be a free and absolute Kingdom; advanced to that high dignity by Clotaire, the seventh King of the French; who having abused the Wife of one Gautier de VIDOT, (so called because of his dwelling here) and afterward (to prevent revenge) killed the man himself, to make some satisfaction to his Family for so great an injury, erected the Lordship of VIDOT, to the estate of a Kingdom; and gave unto the Heirs of this Gautier (or Walter) all the Prerogatives of a free and absolute Monarch, as, to make Laws, coin Money, and the like. From hence the French call a man that hath but small domains to maintain a great title, a Roy d'VIDOT. At last, but at what time I know not, it fell again to a Lordship, and belongeth now to the house of Bellay in Bretagne.

There belonged also to this Dukedom, but rather as subject to the Dukes of Normandy, than part of Normandy it self; the County of P.E.R.C.H. situate betwixt it and the Province of La Beaulle, of which now reckoned for a part: and was divided into the higher and the lower. The chief Towns of it, 1. Nogent le Rotrou, of which little memorable, but that it is the principal of Perch Greys, or the lower Perch, and that it took that adjunct from Rutland, the second Earl of this County, the Founder or Repairer of it, to difference it from another of that name, called Negut le Roy, a Town of Champagne. 2. Morlaigue, or Moriton: of most note in the higher Perch, especially for giving the title of an Earl to John, the youngest Son of King Henry the second, after King of England was in the times succeeding to the Lord Edmund Beauford, after Duke of Somerset. The whole, first made a distinct Estate, in the person of Arnulp of Heslin the first Earl hereof. Whose Son and Successor, named Robert, (of great note in the Wars of Spain against the Moor, in behalf of Alfonso King of Navarre and Aragon, An. 1110.) by Mand the natural daughter of Henry the first of England, unfortunately drowned with her Brother William, as they crossed the Seas; had one only daughter, named Magdalen, (or as some say, Margaret) the Wife of Garcia, the seventh King of Navarre, and Mother of K. Sancho, furnished the Wife, from whom all the Kings of Navarre have since descended. But this Family being extinct in a short time after, the Estate fell into the English, as Dukes of Normandy; and so continued till the seizure of Normandy by the French, in the time of K. John. After which time, the title of Earl of Perch was given to Charles Earl of Valois and Alanson, Father of Philip de Valois, French King, of Lewis Earl of Anjou, and of Charles de Valois, Earl of Alanson; in which house of Alanson it continued, and was commonly the title of the eldest Sons of the Dukes thereof.

But to return again to the Country of Normandy, the ancient Inhabitants thereof were the Calotes, Eborones, Lexovii, Abrimantes, spoken of before: the Bellovaci, or Vendocci, about Rouen: the Salares and Batocenses, about Sens and Baieux: all conquered first by the powerful Romans; the Romans after by the French, and the French by the Normans. These last, a people of the North, inhabiting those Countries which now make up the Kingdoms of Denmark, Sweden, and Norway, united in the name of Normans, in regard of their Northern situation; as in our History and Description of those Kingdoms, we shall here more fully. Out of those parts they made their first irruption about the year 700, when they so ranfacked and plagued the Maritime Towns of France and Belgium, that it was inferred in the Litany, From Plague, Pestilence, and the fury of the Normans, good Lord, &c. To quiet these people, and to secure himself, Charles the Simple gave them a part of Neustria, (from thence since called Normannia) or Normandy, together with the Sovereignty of Bretagne: enjoyed by them and their posterity for many Ages. Their first Duke was Rollo, An. 912, from whom in a direct Line, the sixth was William the Battard, Conqueror, and King of England, An. 1067. After this Normandy continued English till the days of King John; when Philip Augustus seized on all Estates in France, as forfeitures, An. 1202. The English then possessing the Dukedoms of Normandy and Aquitain; the Earldoms of Anjou, Touren, Mains, Poitou, and Limousin; being in all a far greater and better portion of the Country, than the Kings of France themselves possessed. The English after this recovered this Dukedom, by the Valour of King Henry the fifth; and having held it thirty years, lost it again in the unfortunate Reign of King Henry the sixth: the English then distracted with domestic factions. After which double Conquest of it from the Crown of England, the French distrusting the affections of the Normans, and finding them wical a stubborn and untractable people have miserably oppressed them with Tolls and Taxes, keeping them always poor and in a low condition; insomuch as it may be said of them, that they are the most beggarly people that ever had the luck to live in so rich a Country. But it is time to look on

The Dukes of Normandy.

- An. Chr.
- 912 1 Rollo of Norway, made first Duke of Normandy, by Charles the Simple; by whose permission baptized, and called Robert.
 - 917 2 William, surnamed Longfesse, from the length of his Sword.
 - 942 3 Richard, the Son of Longfesse.
 - 980 4 Richard the II. Son of the former.
 - 1026 5 Richard the III. Son of Richard the Second.
 - 1028 6 Robert the Brother of Richard the Third.
 - 1035 7 William the base Son of Robert, subdued the Realm of England; from thence called the Conqueror.
 - 1093 8 Robert the II. eldest Son of William the Conqueror, put by the Kingdom of England by his two Brothers, William and Henry, in hope whereof he had refused the Crown of Hierusalem, then newly conquered by the Forces of the Christian Princes of the West. Outcast at last, imprisoned, and deprived of sight by his Brother Henry; he lived a miserable life in the Castle of Cardiff, and last buried in the Cathedral Church of Glocester.
 - 1102 9 Henry the first, King of England.
 - 1134 10 Stephen, King of England, and D. of Normandy.
 - 11 Henry Plantagenet, D. of Normandy, and after King of England; of that name the second.
 - 1161 12 Henry the III. surnamed Cour-mantle, Son of Henry the second, made D. of Normandy by his Father.
 - 1189 13 Richard I. surnamed Cœur de Lion, King of England, and D. of Normandy, Son of Henry the second.
 - 1199 14 John the Brother of Richard, King of England, and D. of Normandy, ousted of his Estates in France, by King Philip Augustus, An. 1202, before whom he was accused of the Murder of his Nephew Arthur, found dead in the Ditches of the Castle of Rouen, where he was imprisoned; but sentenced causa inaudita, for his not appearing. After this, Normandy still remained united to the Crown of France, (the title only being born by John de Valois, afterwards King, and Charles the fifth, during the life-time of his Father) till the Conquest of it by the Valour of King Henry the fifth, Anno 1420, which was 218 years after it had been seized on by King Philip Augustus, and having been held by the English but 30 years, was lost again, An. 1450, in the unfortunate reign of King Henry the sixth. Never since that dismembered from the Crown of France; saving that Lewis the eleventh, the better to content the Confederate Princes, conferred it, in Apperage, on his Brother Charles Duke of Berry, An. 1465, but within two Months after, took it from him again, and gave him in exchange for it, the Dukedom of Guienne, which lay further off from his Associates.

What

What the Revenues of this Dukedom were in former times I can hardly say. That they were very fair and great, appears by that which is affirmed by Philip de Comines; who saith that he had seen raised in Normandy, 95000 l. sterling money; which was a vast sum of money in those times. As also by this testimony of the D. of Burgundy, who held King Lewis the eleventh to be weaned a whole third part in his Estate, by giving Normandy in portion to the D. of Berry. Now they amount unto as much as the Kings Treasurers and Toll-masters are pleased to draw out of it.

The Arms of Normandy were Gules, two Leopards Or, which with the single Leopard, or Lyon, being added for the Duchy of Aquitain, make the Arms of England.

5. BRETAGNE.

BRETAGNE is bounded on the East with Normandy, and the County of Maine; on the South with Anjou, and Poitou; on all other parts with the English or Gallick Ocean. Watered upon the South-side with the Loir, which divides it from Anjou; but so as part of this Dukedom, called the County of Raiz, lieth on the South-side of that River, betwixt it and Poitou.

It was first called Armorica, from its situation on the Sea, as the word importeth in the old Language of that People. But how it came by this new name, is not well agreed on. The general opinion is, That it took this name from the neighbouring Britains, brought over hither by the Tyrant Maximus, rebelling against the Emperor Gratian, Anno 389, by whom this Province was subdued; and from them named Britania Minor, Little Britain. An Argument whereof may be, that the Language of these people hath till now small affinity with the Welsh or British; there being a Tradition also, that the Britains who first came over hither and married the Women of this Country, cut out their Tongues, for fear they should corrupt the Language of their Posterity. And to this Conquest by the Britains, these old Verses give this further countenance.

Vicit Azmericas animosa Britannia Gentes,
Et dedit impostis nomina prisca, jugo.

That is to say,

Gaul-Armorick, the Britains overcame,
And to the conquered Province gave their name.

Notwithstanding the most probable opinion seemeth to be, That it took this name from the Britains, an old Gallick people, mentioned by Pliny in Gaul-Belgick; retiring hither on the Invasions and Incursions of the Barbarous Nations; though possibly those Britanni of Gallia-Belgica, might be as well those Colony of the Island-Britains, as the Belgæ, a great Nation in the Isle of Britain, are said to have been a people of Gallia-Belgica. The reason is, because there was no Author before Geffrey of Monmouth, who takes notice of this transporting of the Isular Britons, by the Tyrant Maximus; no Ancient Author, Greek or Latin, making mention of it. And for the Welsh or British words, which are still remaining in the Language, they are conceived to be of no other than a remainder of the old Gallick Tongue, which was originally the same with the ancient British, as is elsewhere proved.

The Province is in compas 200-French Leagues, pleat

fant and fruitful; beautified with many shady Woods; and spacious Downs; sufficiently well stored with all manner of Grain; but destitute of Wine and the choicest Fruits, by reason of the Northernly situation of it. Divided commonly into Haut or Highbretagne, and Basse or Lowbretagne: the first containing the more Eastern, and the last the Western parts hereof. Neither of the two much furnished with navigable or notable Rivers; the defect of which, the Neighborhood of the Sea supplieth, affording more capacious Havens, and convenient Ports, than any one Province in this Kingdom.

To begin therefore with the Havens: those of most note in the Highbretagne, are 1. S. Mals, built on a Rock within the Sea, wherewith at every high-water it is encompassed. A Bishops See, and a Port very much frequented by the French and Spanish, who use here to barter their Commodities; oftentimes spoiled by the English, in the Wars with France, especially since the time of K. Henry the seventh. 2. Blanc, a false, but little Haven, on the mouth of a little River of the same name also. Impregnablely fortified by the Spaniards, An. 1590, when taking opportunity of the broil in France, and pretending a good title to this Dukedom, on the expiring of the Male-Issue of King Henry the second, he thought by this door to have entered on the whole Estate; but quitted it again on the general Peace made between the Crowns. 3. S. Brieux, (by the Latins called Fannus Sancti Bricii) a Bishops See, and a well traded-Port, seated upon the English Channel. 4. Vannes, a Bishops See also, situate on a capacious Bay, at the mouth of the Valais; the chief Town of the Vents, whom Cæsar placed in this Tract, and makes them to be the mightiest people of all the Americans; strongest in shipping, and best seen in Affairs at Sea. 5. Croisic, a little Haven at the mouth of the Loir, and the only Haven of this part on the Gallick Ocean. Then in Lowbretagne, or the more Western parts thereof, there is, 6. Brest, seated upon a spacious Bay of the Western Ocean! the Key and Bulwark of this Country, and the goodliest Harbour of all France. 7. Morlaix, a convenient Port, and well frequented. 8. Pol de Leon, and 9. Triguier, both Bishops Sees, both situate on the Sea-shore, and both the chief Towns of the Offizins, whom Prohm and Srabo place upon this Coast: the first of them neighbored by the Præmontary, which they call Le Four, the Goveum of Prohm. 10. Kemper Correnin, a Bishops See also, the chief Town of that part hereof which is called Correnville, (and called so for the same reason as Corwall in England) situate not far from the Foreland, which they call Pennarch, opposite to Le Four, spoken of before. A Sea-Town this, but much talked of for the Haven, for ought I can find. 11. Conquet, a well-frequented Road, not far from Brest.

Chief places in the Midlands, 1. Nantes, the principal City of the Nanneter, (by Prohm called Condræcinum) a large, fair, strong and populous City, seated upon the Loir; a Bishops See, and the Metropolis of Bretagne. 2. Rennes anciently the chief Town of the Redones, (called Condate by Prohm) now a Bishops See, and the Parliament-City for this Country, established here, An. 1553, which maketh it very populous, and of great resort, though not fully two miles in compas. 3. Del, an Episcopall City also, but unwholly seated among Marishes. 4. Dinan, a rich and pleasant Town on the River Nance. 5. L'Amblee, the chief Town of the Ambiliars, spoken of by Cæsar. 6. Roban, the title and inheritance of the Dukes of Roan, descended from a branch of the Ducal Family of Bretagne, by Mary the second Daughter of Duke Francis the first, and Wife of John, then Viscount of Roan. 7. Anjeux, the chief Seat of the now Duke of Vendosme, and and the head of his Estates in Bretagne. Of which possessed in the right of his Wife, the Daughter of the Duke of Menconbury by the Heir of Brittany, another of this Ducal Family. S. Chastan-Brian, a strong piece on the borders of Normandy. 9. Clifton, the chief Town of the Duchy of Rais, being that part of Bretagne which lieth on the South-side of the Loire, a strong Town, and fortified with a very good Castle.

The Britains, whosoever they were in their first Original, were unquestionably one of the first Nations that possessed any part of Gaul, after the Conquest of the Roman. Governed at first by their own Kings, the most considerable of which, was that Aldrems or Auldran, the Son of Solomon; who at the fall of the Isular Britains, then distressed by the Scots and Picts, (as Geoffrey of Monmouth telleth the story) sent over Constantine his Brother with a complete Army to their Aid; who having valiantly repulsed the Enemy, was made King of Britain, An. 433. Of whose posterity more there. Those of Armorica being broken by the puissance of Charles the Great, abandoned the name of Kings, and satisfied themselves with the title of Earls; assumed first by Alain le Rebre, An. 874, but as some say, An. 859, which was somewhat sooner. By Peter of Dreux, the sixteenth Earl; challenging his Estate in right of Alice his Wife, the half Sister of Arthur, and Daughter of Constance, by Guy of Thouars, her third Husband, the better to secure his title, this Earldom was made subject to the Vassalage of the Crown of France, in the time of Lewis the ninth; by whom John called the Red, the Son of this Peter, was created the first Duke of Bretagne, as being of the Blood-Royal of France, descended finally from Robert the first Earl of Dreux, one of the younger Sons of King Lewis the Great. Yet notwithstanding this Subjection to the Kings of France, the Dukes loved to ascribe to themselves the Sovereign Power, as to rule themselves, By the Grace of God, the privilege of Feudal Gold, and flood to high upon their terms, that Charles the last Duke, denied to do his homage to Charles the seventh, either upon his Knees, or without his Sword, according to the former custom. For which, being quarrelled by Lewis the IX. the Son of Charles, who was at better leisure to pursue the business, than his Father was, he joyined himself with Charles Duke of Berry, and Charles Duke of Burgundy, in a War against him; and thereby drew upon himself that ruin, which he endeavoured to avoid. For, in conclusion, Charles of Berry, and it was thought, was poisoned; Charles of Burgundy left his life at the Battle of Nancy, 1476, and a great part of his Estate was conquered by the French King. And Francis, this Duke, having embarked himself in the fame turbulent Ocean, must needs suffer shipwreck with his Copartners. The French K. invadeth Bretagne: the Duke over-charged with melancholy, dies, 1488, leaving Anne his Daughter and Heir, in the Power of Charles the 8. the Son and Successor of this Lewis; who contracts a marriage with the Orphan, and uniteth Bretagne to France. There were many impediments which might have hindered this Marriage, but Charles breaketh through them all. First, Charles himself had been formerly contracted to the Arch-Duke Maximilian's Daughter; but this he held void, because the young Lady was not of age at the time of the Contract. 2. Anne the Dutchess was also contracted to Maximilian; and this he held invalid also, because that being his Homage, he could not bestow her self without his consent. 3. Maximilian had by proxy married her, which marriage he consummated by a Ceremony in those days unusual. For his Ambassador attended with a great Train of Lords and Ladies, bared his Leg unto the Knee, and put the same within the Sheets of the Dutchess, taking possession thereby of her Bed and Body. But Charles consulting with his Divines, was told, That this pretended Consummation, was rather an invention of Courts, than any way firm by the Laws of the Church; and therefore of no power to hinder his pursuit of this Marriage, so advantageous to his Crown. What else remains touching the union of this Dukedom to the Realm of France, we shall see anon; having first looked over the Succession of those Princes, who under several Titles have governed the Estate thereof, according to the best light we can get from Story.

Kings of the Britains of Gaul-Armorick.

- 385 1 Conan, placed here by Maximus.
- 2 Grallon, Son of Conan.
- 3 Solomon, Son of Grallon.
- 4 Auldran, or Aldrems, the Son of Solomon.
- 5 Badis, Son of Auldran.
- 6 Hoel, Son of Badis.
- 7 Hoel II. Son of Hoel the first.
- 8 Alain, Son of Hoel the second.
- 9 Hoel III. Son of Alain.
- 10 Solomon II. Son of Hoel the third.
- 11 Alain II. Grandchild to Solomon the second, the last King of Bretagne, of the Race of Conan; who dying without issue, left his Kingdom unto many Competitors, by whom distracted into many petty Tyrannies, and at last subdued by Charles the Great. And though they did again recover their Liberty and Kingdom, in the time of Ludovicus Pius, who next succeeded; yet they did not hold it long in quiet. Inomuch, as after the murder of two or three Usurpers of the Royal Title, Alain, surnamed Le Rebre, laid aside that jivious name of Kings, would be called only Earl of Bretagne. His Successors follow.

Earls and Dukes of Bretagne.

- 874 1 Alain le Rebre.
- 2 Indicael and Colodock, Sons of Alain.
- 3 Matbrudon, Son in Law of Alain le Rebre.
- 4 Alain II. Son of Matbrudon.
- 5 Conan, descended from K. Solomon the third.
- 6 Geoffry, Son of Conan.
- 7 Alain III. Son of Geoffry.
- 8 Conan II. Son of Alain.
- 9 Hoel, Sitters on of Conan the second.
- 10 Alain IV. called Fergent, Son of Hoel.
- 11 Conan III. Son of Alain.
- 12 Eudon, Husband of Bertha, Daughter of Conan.
- 13 Conan IV. Son of Eudon.
- 14 Geoffry II. Son of Henry the 3. King of England, Husband of Constance, Daughter and Heir of Conan the Fourth.
- 1186 15 Arthur, Son of Geoffry.
- 1202 16 Peter of Breton, in right of Alice his Wife, the half Sister of Arthur.
- 1250 17 John, the first Duke of Bretagne.
- 1287 18 John II. Son of John the first.
- 1305 19 Arthur II. Son of John the second.
- 1312 20 John III. Son of Arthur the second.
- 1341 21 John Earl of Montfort, Brothers Son of Arthur.
- 1399 22 John V. Son of John of Montfort.
- 1442 23 Francis, the Son of John the fifth.
- 1450 24 Peter, the Brother of Duke Francis.
- 1457 25 Arthur III. 2d. Son of John Earl of Montfort.
- 1457 26 Francis II. Son of Richard Earl of Elhamper, the Brother of Duke Arthur 3. the last Duke of Bretagne, of whom sufficiently before.
- 1484 27 Charles the 8. French King, succeeded in the Duke-

1498 28. Lewis XII. French King, succeeded on the Death of Charles, in the right of the said Anne, whom he took to Wife: and to make a way unto her Bed, divorced himself from the Lady Joan his former Wife, Daughter of Lewis XI.

1515 29. Francis III. of Bretagne, and first of France succeeded in the Dukedom in right of Claude his Wife, the eldest Daughter of Lewis XII. and of Anne of Bretagne; by whom being made the Father of so many Children, that he had little cause to fear that the Crown would be separated from his House; in the year 1532, being the seventeenth of his Reign and Government, caused an Act to pass, with the consent of the States of Bretagne, for the inseparable uniting of that Dukedom to the Kingdom of France, and by that means divested his Posterity of it. For this Male-issue failing in Henry III. the rights hereof descended on the Heirs general, that is to say, on Isabel, Daughter of Philip II. of Spain, and of the Lady Isabel or Elizabeth his Wife, the eldest Daughter of Henry II. and Nece to the said Francis I. and after her decease (dying without Issue) on the Lady Katharine her Sister, married to Charles Emmanuel Duke of Savoy. For whom when Philip of Spain claimed this Estate, the French pretended a Law against it of their own devising, viz. That no Estate being incorporated into that Crown, could be aliened from it. In proper Law, and Cousin-German to the Salique; but such as served their turn by the help of the English, who desired not to have the Spaniards so near Neighbours to them.

Most of our former Earls of Richmond were Earls and Dukes of this House. Their Arms were Ermin.

6. The Dukedom and Estates of ANJOU.

THE Dukedom and Estates of ANJOU, taking them in the full Latitude and extent thereof, are bounded on the East, with La Beaulle; on the West, with Bretagne; and part of Poitou; on the North, with Normandy; and on the South, with part of Berry, and Poitou. In which circumference are comprehended the three small Provinces of Anjou, Tourain, and Main: most commonly accounted of as parts and members of La Beaulle, the ancient inhabitants whereof, in the times of the Romans, were the Andei, as Cæsar (or the Andegavi as Pliny) calls them, the Turneri, and the Comantani, accounted afterwards a part of the Province of Languedocensis tertius.

The Country for the most part is very fruitful and pleasant, especially in Tourain; as is the whole tract upon the Loire. Anjou is somewhat the more hilly, but otherwise little inferior to Tourain, affording plenty of White Wines, the best in France; and yielding from those Hills above 40 Rivers, falling into the Loire from thence: the chief whereof are Mayeune, 2. Vienne, 3. Dive, and 4. Sartre.

1. ANJOU, called Andegavia by the Latines, is situate in the midst betwixt Main and Tourain, so called from the Andegavi, the old Inhabitants of these parts. Principal Cities are, 1. Angiers, (by Ptolemy called Julianogery) of a large circuit, and well built, the See of a Bishop, reckoning in it 15 Parishes besides the Cathedral. It is seated on the River Sartre in a very good air, and therefore chosen for the Seat of an University, founded here by Lewis II. Duke of Anjou, the Son of King John, Anno 1388. 2. Beaufort, a Town belonging formerly to the Dukes of Lancaster, in which John of Gaunt so much delighted, that he caufed all the Children that he had by Katharine Swinford, his third Wife, to be called Beauforts: which Beauforts were afterwards Dukes of Somerset and Exeter, and Earls of Dorset. This Town came to the House of Lancaster, by the marriage of Blanche of Artois, unto Edmond surnamed Crouch-back, second Son to our Henry III. created by his Father, the first Earl of Lancaster. Memorable in these latter times for giving the Title of a Dutchess to Madam Katharine, the beloved Mistress of King Henry IV. by whom she was Mother of Cæsar now Duke of Yendome, and of Alexander not long since the Grand Prior of France. With reference to which, the second Son of the Duke of Yendome is: as the eldest with relation to his Mother was made Duke of Meveaux. 3. Baugie, near which was fought that memorable Battle betwixt the English and the French, wherein the English lost the day; and Thomas Duke of Clarence, Brother to Henry V. was there unfortunately slain, Anno 1422. 4. Saumur, pleasantly situate on the Loire, and for long time one of the Cautionary Towns in the hands of those of the Reformed Religion: of whom it is the only entire University in this Kingdom, especially famous for the Learned Philip du Mury, Lord of Pléffris, sometimes the Governour hereof. 5. Loches, seated on the River Indre, the Castle whereof being mounted on a steep high Rock, is thought to be one of the strongest pieces of all France. 6. La Fleche, of special name at the present for a College of Jesuits, one of the fairest in this Kingdom. The word in the French tongue signifieth an Arrow (whence those who make Bows and Arrows have the name of Flechers). At Nola in the Realm of Naples, there is another College of them, called D'Arque, the Bow: on which one wittily composed this ensuing Distich.

Arcum Nola dedit, dedit ille alma Sagittam
Callia: quis Funem, quem mensus, dabit?

That is to say,

Nola the Bow, and France the Shaft did bring:
But who shall help them to the Hempen-string?

2. On the South-east of Anjou, lieth the Country of TOURENNE, the ancient Seat of the Turneri: which, for the wholesomeness of the Air, the pleasantness of the Country, and admirable plenty of all Commodities, is by some called the Garden of France. Principal Cities in it, 1. Amboise, pleasantly seated on the Loire, and beautified with one of the fairest Castles in France, both for the gallantry of the Building, and beautifullness of the Prospect. 2. Tours, by Ptolemy called Cesardammus, and the Turonum Civitas of Antoninus, the Metropolis of Languedocensis tertius, and an Archbishop's See: a fair, rich, and well-traded Town, situate on the banks of the Loire, in a most sweet & pleasant Country. Famous in that those of the Reformed Religion, from the Gate of S. Hugo, at which they use to issue out to their Assemblies in the fields, had the name of Hugonots. Given to them, as some others think, as the Disciples of the night-walking Spirit (or Robin Goodfellow) which they call S. Hugo, in regard they had their first meetings for the most part, in the nights; as had the Primitive Christians in the times of their Persecutions. Some, more improbably, (and indeed ridiculously) derive the name from the first words of an Apology which they are fabled to have made to the King; which were, Huc nos venimus: tancying fancying, that as the Profranks did derive that Appellation from the words Profranks and Proframur to often used by them in their Apology to Charles V. so from those words, Huc nos, came the name of Hugonots, or Huc-nots. But more assuredly famous for the great Battle fought near it by Charles Martel, Mayr of the Palace, and Father of Peppin King of France, against an Army of 40000 *Moor*s, led by Alderman, Lieutenant General in Spain; for Eudold or Iffan the great Caliph: of which 370000 lost their lives in the place, An. 734. 3. Laudun, 4. Riebelien, pleasantly seated in a rich and flourishing Soil, as the name importeth. Of no great note till the time of the late great Cardinal of Riebelien, who took name from hence, by whom it was made one of the neatest Towns (for the bigness of it) in all this Kingdom, and honoured with the Titles of a Dukedom and Pairie of France.

As for the Fortunes of this Province (for of Anjou we shall speak more at large anon) it had a while its own Proprietary Earls of the House of Blais; conferred by Hugh Capet upon Odor Earl of Blais and Champagne: and by him given, together with the Earldom of Blais, to Theobald, 4. or Thibault his eldest Son, (his second Son named Stephen succeeding in Champagne) who in the year 1043, was vanquished and slain by Charles Martel Earl of Anjou, and this Province seized on by the Victor, who afterwards made Tours, his ordinary Seat and Residence. Part of which Earldom it continued, till the seizure of Anjou, and all the rest of the English Provinces in France, on the sentence passed upon King John. After which time dismembered from it, it was conferred on John, the fourth Son of King Charles VI. with the title and title of Duke of Touren; and he deceasing without Issue, it was bestowed with the same title, on Charles the eldest Son of Lewis Duke of Orleans (in the life of his Father;) the same who afterwards succeeding in the Dukedom of Orleans, was taken Prisoner by the English at the Battle of Agincourt, kept Prisoner 25 years in England, and finally was the Father of King Lewis XII.

3. On the North side of Anjou, betwixt it and Normandy, lieth the Province of MAINE; Comitatus Cenomanensis in our Latine Writers. So called of the Cenomani, the old Inhabitants of this Tract in the time of Cæsar; some of which, with the Brii, Senones, and other Nations of the Gauls had in the former time passed over the Alpes, and there possessed themselves of those Countries, which now pass under the name and account of Lombardy. The chief Towns whereof are, 1. Mans, Cenomanensis Civitas in Antoninus, by Pliny called Vindinium; seated on the meeting of Huine and Sartre; the principal of the Province, and a Bishop's See: most memorable in the elder times for giving the title of an Earl to that famous Rowland, the Sisters Son of Charlemagne, one of the Twelve Peers of France; (the subject of many notable Poems, under the name of Orlando Uimorato, Orlando Furioso, besides many of the old Romances) who was Earl of Mans. 2. Mayenne, on the Banks of a River of the same name, (Meduna in Latine) the title of the second branch of the House of Guis: famous for Charles Duke of Mayenne, who held out for the League against Henry IV. A Prince not to be equalled in the Art of War, only unfortunate in employing it in so ill a cause. 3. Vitrain, upon the edge of Bretagne, of which little memorable. 4. La Val, not far from the head of the River Mayenne; of note for giving both name and title to the Earls of Laval, an ancient Family, allied unto the Houses of Vendôme, Bretagne, Anjou, and other the best of France. Few else of any note in this little Country; which once subsisting of it self under its own natural Lords and Princes, was at last united to the Earldom of Anjou, by the marriage of the Lady Guiburge, Daughter and Heir of Heli, the last Earl hereof, to Foulk Earl of Anjou, An. 1083, or thereabouts. The Fortunes of which great Estate it hath always followed, since that time.

But as for Anjou it self, the principal part of this goodly Patrimony, it was by Charles the Bald conferred on Robert a Saxon Prince, for his Valour then against the Normans, An. 870, which Robert was Father of Eudes King of France, of Richard Duke of Burgundy, and of Robert who succeeded in the Earldom of Anjou; Competitor with Charles the Simple for the Crown it self, as the next Heir to his Brother Eudes, who died King thereof. Slain in the pursuit of this great quarrel, he left this Earldom, with the Title of Earl of Paris, and his pretensions to the Crown, unto Hugh his Son, furnished the Great: who to make good his claim to the Crown, against Lewis IV. Son of Charles the Simple, conferred the Earldom of Anjou, and the County of Gastinois, on Geoffrey furnished Gryffgonelle, a renowned Warrior, and a great stickler in his cause, in whose Race it continued near 300 years. How the two Counties of Main and Touren were joynted to it, hath been shewn before. Geoffrey the Son of Foulk III. married Maud, Daughter to Henry I. of England, and Widow of Henry the Fourth Emperor: from whom proceeded Henry II. King of England, and Earl of Anjou. But John his Son, forfeiting his Estates in France (as the French pretend) Anjou returned unto the Crown: and afterwards was conferred by King Lewis IX. on his Brother Charles; who in right of Beatrice his Wife was Earl of Provence, and by Pepe Urban IV. was made King of Naples and Sicily. Afterwards it was made a Dukedom by King Charles V. (Taurin being first dismembered from it) in the person of Lewis of France his second Brother to whom this fair Estate was given, as second Son of King John of France, the Son of Philip de Valois, and consequently, the next heir to Charles de Valois, the last Earl hereof (the King his Brother yielding up all his right unto him.) Finally it returned again unto the Crown in the time of Lewis XI. The Earls and Dukes hereof having been veiled with the Diadems of several Countries, following in this order.

The Earls of Anjou of the Line of Saxony

- 870 1. Robert of Saxony, the first Earl of Anjou.
- 875 2. Robert II. Competitor for the Crown of France with Charles the Simple, as Brother of Eudes the last King.
- 922 3. Hugh the Great, Lord of Gastinois, Earl of Paris, Countable of France, and Father of Hugh Capet.
- 926 4. Geoffrey Gryffgonelle, by the Donation of Hugh the Great, whose Party he had followed in the War of France, with great fidelity and courage.
- 938 5. Foulk, Earl of Anjou, the Son of Geoffrey.
- 987 6. Geoffrey II. furnished Martel, for his great valour.
- 1047 7. Geoffrey II. Nephew of Geoffrey II. by one of his Sisters.
- 1075 8. Foulk II. Brother of Geoffrey III. gave Gastinois (which was his proper inheritance) to King Philip I. that by his help he might recover the Earldom of Anjou from his part, wherein he was excluded by his Brother Geoffrey.

G. Geoffrey

- 1080 9. Geoffrey IV. Son of Foulk II.
- 1083 10. Foulk III. Brother of Geoffrey; King of Jerusalem in the right of Milfred his Wife.
- 1143 11. Geoffrey V. furnished Plantagenet.
- 1150 12. Henry II. King of England, Son of Earl Geoffrey and Maud his Wife, Daughter of King Henry I.
- 1162 13. Geoffrey VI. third Son of King Henry II. made Earl of Anjou on his marriage with Constance, the Heir of Bretagne.
- 1186 14. Arthur, Son of Geoffrey and Constance.
- 1202 15. John, King of England, succeeded on the death of Arthur dispossessed of his Estates in France by Philip Augustus, immediately on the death of Arthur, An. 1202.

Earls and Dukes of Anjou, of the Line of France.

- 1262 1. Charles, Brother of King Lewis IX. Earl of Anjou, and Provence, King of Naples, and Sicilia, &c.
- 1315 2. Charles of Valois, Son of Philip III. Earl of Anjou, in right of his Wife, Niece of the former Charles, by his Son and Heir of the same name; the Father of Philip de Valois, French King.
- 1318 3. Lewis of Valois, the second Son of Charles died without issue, An. 1325.
- 1376 4. Lewis of France, the second Son of King John, the Son of Philip de Valois, created the first Duke of Anjou by King Charles his Brother; and adopted by Queen Joan of Naples, King of Naples, Sicily, and Jerusalem, and Earl of Provence.
- 1385 5. Lewis III. Duke of Anjou, and Earl of Provence, and Main; titular King of Sicily, Naples, and Jerusalem.
- 1416 6. Lewis IV. Successor to his Father in Estate and Titles.
- 1430 7. Rene, the Brother of Lewis, by the adoption of Queen Joan II. was for a while possessed of Naples; but presently ousted by Alfonso of Aragon, and died the titular King of Naples, Sicily, and Jerusalem; the Father of Queen Marguerite, Wife of Henry VI. and Duke of Bar, in right of Violant his Mother.
- 1480 8. Charles Earl of Main, Nephew to Rene by his third Brother Charles, at his decease left Anjou, and all the rest of his Estates to King Lewis XI. An. 1481. Since which never otherwise alienated, than as an honorary Title of the third Son of France.

It is to be observed here (according to our method in other places) that Rene King of Sicily, &c. and Duke of Anjou, instituted an Order of Knighthood, called of the Croissant: the Knights whereof carried a Crescent, or Half-moon, on their right Arms, with this Motto, L'Oie en Croissant; encouraging them thereby to seek the increase of valour and reputation.

The Arms of this Dukedom, were France, a Border Gales.

7. LA BEAUSSE.

LA BEAUSSE, (not reckoning in the Provinces left before described) is bounded on the East, with France specially and primarily so called; on the West, with Anjou, Maine, Tourain, and some part of Berry (on the North, with Normandy; and on the South, with Nivernais, and the rest of Berry. It is called Belfia in Latine Writers; both names derived from the pleasantness and beauties of it; this Country being not only looked on as the Garden of France, but the Nurce of the great City of Paris, which from the breasts thereof receiveth the best part of its sustenance.

The principal Nations of the whole in the time of the Romans, were the Carnutes, which inhabited the greatest part, and the Samniti near the Loire, part of Gallia Celtica, and callt into the Province of Lugdunensis quarta, by the Emperor Constantine. Divided by the French into the Higher, the Lower, and the Intermediaire.

1. The HIGHER BEAUSSE is that part which lieth next to Normandy, of which the principal Towns are, 1. Dreux, seated upon the River Eureux, supposed to be the seat of the ancient Druides, who held here their Parliaments or Sessions for administration of Justice. The title and inheritance of Robert, one of the younger Sons of King Lewis the Great, and Grand-father of that Peter of Dreux, who succeeded Arthur, the Son of Geoffrey Plantagenet, in the Earldom of Bretagne. 2. Montfort, an Earldom, the Title and Estate of John Earl of Montfort, furnished the Valiant, who succeeded in the Dukedom of Bretagne, by the aid of the English, An. 1341. 3. Chartres, called anciently Carnutum Civitas, (but by Pliny, Atricum) from whence the Country hereabouts was called Le Paris Chartrain; seated in an uneven place, varied with fertile rising Hills, so that the Earth lieth stands upon the top of an Hill, and the Well spreads it self in the bottom of a Plain, through the middle whereof runs the River Eure, which as soon as it comes to the Walls of the City, on the South side, divides it self into three branches, two whereof encompass the City round about, and the third running through the middle thereof, serveth the Town with many Mills for the use of the people: doth afterwards unite it self with the rest into one main Channel. A very fair and goodly City, a Bishop's See, and one of the Vidameries of France; anciently giving the title of an Earldom also to the House of Blais, from the time that Theobald the second Earl of Blais extorted it by strong hand from the Bishops hereof, about the year 950, continuing in the possession of that Family till the year 1200, or thereabouts, when sold by Mabent or Maud, the Heir Proprietor hereof, Wife of Hugh de Chabillon, in her right, called Earl of Blais, to King Philip the Fair, for an Annual Pension of 4000 Livres. 4. Ameau, a Town of the Territory of Chartres, memorable for the great slaughter made here by Henry Duke of Guise, of the German Auxiliaries, invading France with a right formidable Army in behalf of the Hugonots, An. 1587.

2. The LOWER BEAUSSE is that which lieth towards Nivernais and Berry; and is subdivided into Sologne, and Orleanois. In SOLOGNE, which lieth close to Berry, the chief places of note, are, 1. Romoranais, seated on the Souldre, the chief Town of this Tract. 2. Meunay. 3. La Fertor La Feris St. Bernard, of which nothing memorable. In ORLEANOIS, which lieth more Northwards upon the River of Loyre, are, 1. Targeau, a Town once of very great strength, and one of the out-works of Orleans. 2. Clerf, called also Clerf of Nigre-dame, from the Church there built unto our Lady, 3. Tury, and 4. Angerville, both in the ordinary Road between Paris and Orleans; the principal City of all Beauce, called Gennabum in the time of Cæsar; repaired, or rather new built by the Emperor Aurelius, An. 276. From these named Aurelia, the Country round about it Aurellanensis, now Orleanois and Orleanois. The Country generally very fruitful and yielding a most excellent and delicious Wine; which for the strength and intoxicating power thereof, is banished the French Kings Cellar by especial Edict. The City very pleasant, seated on the River Loyre, well built, situate in a sweet Air, and planted with a Civil and ingenious People; who are said to speak the best Language of any in France. For a time it was the chief Seat of a distinct Kingdom, (according to the unprovident humour of the Merovingians) the Lot of Clodomir Son of Clouis the Great, and of Gunttram Son of Cloataire, both Kings of Orleans; as also was Theodorick, the second Son of Childbert King of Metz, on the death of Gunttram. But Sigibert his Son, being vanquished by Cloataire II. this Kingdom extending to the shores of the Aquitain Ocean, was added unto that of France. Orleans since that time, content with the lower Title, hath of late oftentimes with great prudence, been made the honourary Title of the second Sons of France, called Dukes hereof, the first who had the Title, being Philip II. Son of Philip de Valois, from a base Son of whose, the Earls of Dunois, and Dukes of Longueville do derive themselves, and Lewis the second Son of Charles I. Grand-father of Lewis XI. French King. It is a See Episcopal, a Balivick, or Siege Presidial, and an University. The See Episcopal founded in the Church of St. Croix, miserably ruined by the Huguenots in the Civil Wars out of mere hatred to the name. The Siege Presidial seated here by King Henry II. 1551. for the sake of his Subjects of these parts, in suits not worth the troubling of the Courts of Paris. The University erected by King Philip le bel, An. 1312. thought to speak properly, it be an Hall only for the reading of the Civil Laws, the only Learning there professed, and for that considerable. A Town now not of so great strength as in former times, when for some months it held out against the whole Power of the English rescued from them at last by the valour of Joan the Virgin, whose Statue (like a man of Arms) is still preserved on the Bridge-gate of this City; near which great Montaigne Earl of Salisbury had his Fatal blow.

The MIDDLE or intermediate BEAUSSE lieth betwixt the former; in which the places of chief note are, 1. Blais, seated also on the Loir, on a found Air, and fruitful Country; the Nursery for the most part of the Kings Children, for that cause much resorted to by the Nobility, and honoured sometimes with the residence of the Kings themselves: it being in the Council Chamber of the Kings House here, that Henry of Lorrein, Duke of Guise, the chief contriver of the terrible Massacre at Paris, and Author of the Holy League, was slain by the command of King Henry III. An. 1589. 2. Châteauneuf, the chief Town of the Earldom of Dunois, (the honour and Estate of John Earl of Dunois, commonly called the Bastard of Orleans, one of the best Soldiers of his time, and so approved by his exploits against the English) mounted upon the top of an high Hill, at the confluence of the Loire, and Aigre. 3. Laverdin, most remarkable for giving name and honour to a noble Family, which depending upon the House of Vendôme (to the Signeury whereof it doth belong) brought forth that valiant Commander, Monsieur de Tardieu, a faithful and courageous Follower of King Henry IV. in his long War against the League. 4. Vendôme, (Vindocinnum in Latine) the chief Town of the Dukedom of Vendôme; not otherwise of note than for the Earls and Dukes which have born this Title; of which as being the Progenitors of the Kings now regnant, I have thought fit to add the ensuing Catalogue; premising first, that this Earldom came to the House of France by the marriage of Katharine daughter and heir of John, the last Earl of the former Race, to John I. the Earl of the other Family.

Earls and Dukes of Vendôme.

- 1386 1. John of Bourbon, Grandchild of Lewis I. Duke of Bourbon, the first Earl of Vendôme of this Family.
- 1432 2. Lewis of Bourbon, a confederate with Joan the Virgin in her actions against the English.
- 1446 3. John of Bourbon II. from whom descended the Princes of Roch-Surgen, and the Dukes of Montpensier.
- 1472 4. Francis of Bourbon.
- 1495 5. Charles of Bourbon, the first Duke of Vendôme, from whose youngest Son, called Lodovick, or Lewis, descend the now Princes of Conde, and Earls of Souffray.
- 1532 6. Antony of Bourbon, Duke of Vendôme, and King of Naparra.
- 1562 7. Henry of Bourbon, Duke of Vendôme, and King of Naparra, afterwards King of France also, by the name of Henry IV.
8. Cesar de Vendôme, of the Sons of Henry IV. by the Dutchels of Beaufort, created by his Father Duke of Vendôme, and once designed his Successor in the Crown of France. Afterwards by the procurement of the King his Father, married to the Daughter and Heir of Philibert Emanuel, Duke of Mercuray, (a younger branch of the House of Lorrein) possessed of a fair and goodly Estate in the Dukedom of Bretagne, in the right of his Wife, a Daughter and Heir of the House of Martignac (a branch of the Family of those Dukes.) By means whereof the Duke of Vendôme hath not only a large inheritance, but great authority in that Country.

The Arms of the Earls and Dukes of Vendôme, were and are, Azure, six Flower de Lices, Or, 3, 2, 1. Those of the former Family affirmed by Bara to have been France, on a Bend Gules, three Lions or, Or.

But the great Lords of this Country were the Earls of Blais, possessed not only of the Earldom of Chabry, (a fair and goodly Signeury) in the highest Beausse, but also of the whole Country of Tourain, a better Patrimony and Estate than that; which how they were alienated from this House, we have seen before. And as for the Earldom of Blais it self, it contained a large and gallant Patrimony in the middle Beausse, thereto belonging; which being after sold to the Dukes of Orleans, gave the first greatness to that House. As for the Earls of Blais themselves, they fetch their Pedigree from one Gerlon a noble Dane (Companion in Arms unto Rollo the first Duke of Normandy) in his acquiring of that Dukedom, by Charles the Simple, created the first Earl hereof, An. 920; or thereabouts, branching it self into the Houses of Blais and Champagne; sometimes united into one person, but for the most part, and at last divided into two great Families; Stephen King of England, commonly called Stephen of Blais, derived both his name and Parentage from the Earls of this House, as being Son of Theobald, the fifth Earl of Blais, by Maud one of the Daughters of William Duke of Normandy, and King of England, famed the Conqueror. From this Theobald the Earls of Blais continued in the Masculine Line, till the year 1219, under nine Princes in the total: of the House of Gerlon: And then it fell by the Heirs general, to the noble Family of Chastillon, continuing theirs till the year 1391, when sold by Guy de Chastillon, the last Earl of that House, to Lewis Duke of Orleans, he being then Childless, and wholly governed by his wife (a Daughter of the House of Namur) who could not otherwise maintain her great prodigality, but by ready money, United finally to the Crown by Lewis

The Arms of these great Earls were Gules, three Falls, Vaire, a Chief Or.

8. NIVERNOIS.

NIVERNOIS is bounded on the North, with La Beausse; on the South, with Bourbonis; on the East, with Champagne; and on the West, with Berry; so called from Nivernum, or Nevers the chief Town thereof.

This is the smallest Province in all this Continent, but to be handled here apart, because not easily reduced unto any other, as all the rest of the lesser Provinces may be. The Soil not very fruitful of Corn or Wine, but plentifully stored with rich Pastures, and well shaded with Woods, in which are found some Mines of Iron, interspersed with Silver, and many Quarries of good Stone, of much use for building. The Territory being but small, we cannot look for many Towns of note and consequence. Of those that be the principal are, 1. Pontigny, remarkable for an ancient Abbey, the burial-place of some of the old Earls of Nevers. 2. Nevers it self, upon the Loire, beautified with a Bridge of twenty Arches, but otherwise not great or fair, though the chief of this small Country, and the seat of the Dukes. The reputation which it hath, proceeding specially from the Antiquity thereof, and the Earls and Dukes from thence denominated.

Once part of the Burgundian Conquests, and from them won by the French; it came to have Princes of its own, almost as early as any other Country in the Realm of France. Who was the first that had the Title of Earl of Nevers, and therewithal the Lordship of this Estate, I can no where find; but sure I am, that in the year 1001, both the Estate and Title were enjoyed by Laudin a Nobleman of the Burgundian Race, who on the death of Henry IV. Duke of Burgundy, was like to have seized on that Estate, in despite of Robert King of France, who pretended to it, Passing through many Families, it came at last to the House of Burgogne, in the person of Odo, the Son of Hugh the fourth of that name, Duke of Burgundy, by the Heir-General of Nevers; and from that to the House of Flanders, by the marriage of Yoland, or Burgogne, to Robert of Bethune, Earl of Flanders, 1512, whose Son, named Lewis, married the Heir of Rebel, uniting by that marriage, these Estates under his command. Together with the rest of the Rights of Flanders, it came again by marriage, to Philip the Hardy, Duke of Burgundy; who with the liking and consent of his elder Sons, (otherwise well provided for) conferred both it and Katbol, on his third Son Philip, whose Niece Elizabeth, Daughter and Heir of John of Burgogne, brought it in marriage to Adolph of Cleve, her Husband, An. 1484. In the Person of Francis, the fourth Earl of this House, it was made a Dukedom; and by his Daughter Henrietta, Sister and Heir of Francis the last Prince of this Family, was brought in Dowry to Lewis de Gonzaga, second Son of Frederick Duke of Munna, An. 1563, whose Son Charles succeeded his Father and Mother in the Dukedom of Nevers, and Vincen of Gonzaga, his Cousin German, in the Dukedom of Munna. And here it is to be observed, that though this Estate hath passed through so many Families; yet the Rights and Regalities thereof, have been till continued; not being hitherto reduced (for ought that I can find) under any of the Parliaments of France, as all the rest of that Kingdom is, but such parts thereof as are either under other Princes, or else enjoy the Privileges of a free Estate.

The Arms hereof are, Azure, within a Border Compans, Gules, and Argent, three Flower de Lys, Or.

9. The Dukedom of BOURBON.

THE Dukedom of BOURBON, in the full power and extent thereof, comprehended Bourbonnais, Paroiss, Beau-jolais, and Auvergne; all now reverted to the Crown.

1. BOURBONNOIS hath on the East, the Dukedom of Burgundy; on the West, Berry; on the North, Nivernois, and a Corner of Galkinois; on the South, Auvergne; so called from Bourbon, (for distinction sake, called Bourbon Archenbauld) the chief Town thereof. The Country very well Wooded, and of excellent Pasturage; which makes the people more intent to grazing and feeding Cattel, than they are to Tillage; and is watered with the Rivers of Loire, Tonne, and Allier, which are counted navigable; besides Aron, Aovins, Lisenter, Lambols, and some lesser streams.

It is divided into the Higher and Lower; in the Higher which is more mountainous and hilly, there is no other Town of note than that of Montaigne, situate in the Country of Combraille; the Signeury, as I take it, of Michel de Montaigne, the Author of the Book of Essays. But in the Lower Bourbonnais, are, 1. Molins, esteemed the Center of all France; situate on the Allier, a Ballage, and the chief Town of this Country; the River yielding great plenty of Fish, but of Salmons specially; the Town adorned with a fair Castle, and that beautified with one of the finest Gardens in France; in which are many trees of Lemmons and Oranges. 2. Bourbon Archenbauld, and 3. Bourbon Ancien; the former of the two, seated upon the Loire, and giving name to the whole Province; of great resort by reason of its Medicinal waters. 4. St. Paurcin, and 5. Varennes Ganat, upon the Frontiers of Auvergne. 6. Chancelle, 7. Charroux, 8. Palisse, 9. Souvigni, 10. Amand.

The ancient Inhabitants were part of the Hedui, who being waisted in their wars against the Romans, a great part of their Country was, by Julius Caesar conferred on the Boii, a German Nation, who coming with the Helvetians into Gaul, and unwilling upon their defeat to go home again, were by him planted in this Tract, at the request of the Hedui, who desired it of him; and possibly the Hedui might be willing to have these Baii dwell amongst them, not only to fill up their numbers, and manure the waste Grounds of their Country; but in regard of some nearer tie that was between them: it being conceived by some Learned men, that these Baii, which together with these Cenmanni, Senones, and other Gallick Nations, crossed over the Alpes, had been originally of these parts; and being driven out of Italy by the conquering Romans, fell into Germany, and from thence sent those Auxiliaries to attend the Helvetians in their journey, spoken of before. Made subject to the Romans, with the rest of Gallia; and by them reckoned as a part of Aquitanica; it continued under their command, till the coming of the Burgundians, by whom it was subdued, and made a part of their Kingdom; in the subvertig of which Kingdom, it was (together with Beau-jolais) subdued by the more powerful French; and how disposed of afterwards, we shall see anon, having first taken a view of the other Provinces.

2. FORRETT, is bounded on the East, with Beau-jolois on the West, with Auvergne on the North, with Bourbonnois, and on the South with a part of Languedoc. The Country populous and large, but not very fruitful; hilly and mountainous, much of the nature of the Wood-lands. The Air a little of the coldest to afford good Wines; but that sufficiently recompensed by abundance of Pit-coal; by which they have very good fires at a cheap rate. The people are conceived to be none of the wifely, but withal, very greedy and covetous of gain.

The chief Towns in it are, 1. Mont-brison, seated on the Loire. 2. Feurs, seated on the same River, called anciently, Forum Segisfanorum, the chief Town of the Segisfani, or Seesfani, whom Cesar and others mention in this part of Gaul. 3. St. Stephen, (or Etienne) in Ferrand, near the head of that River. 4. St. Germain. 5. St. Rimborg. 6. St. Bonnet le Chasteau. 7. St. Guernier, &c. of which little memorable.

This Country of Forrest was anciently a part of the Earldom of Lyons; difmembered from it at or about the same time with Beau-jolois; and was held by a long succession of Earls Proprietors of it, as a State distinct, till Rognaud, Lord of Forrest, the Son of Earl Guy, by the marriage of Isabel, Daughter and Heir of Humbert Earl of Beau-jen, joined them both together; which was about the year 1265; parted again after his decease, An. 1280. Guy being his eldest Son, succeeding in Forrest, and Lewis his second Son, in Beau-jen. How they became united in the House of Bourbon, we shall see anon.

3. BEAU JOLOIS, so called from Beau-jen, the chief Town thereof, taketh up the tract of ground betwixt the Loire and the Saône; and betwixt Lionnois and Forrest. A Country of no great extent, but very remarkable for the Lords and Princes of it: who have been men of great eminence in their several times. The chief Town of it, is Beau-jen beautified with a goodly Castle, pleasantly seated on the brow of a rising Mountain, from whence perhaps it took the name; as the great Keep in Farnham Castle, was in the same sense, and for the same pleasant situation, called Joyous Guard, in the time of Lancelot du lake, whose that Castle was. Which appears further by a Tower built by Constantinople, by Guisehard the third of that name, Lord thereof, (being then Embassador to the Emperor, from King Philip Augustus) with this Inscription, Turris Belli-jocundis; which there continued to be seen a long time after. 4. Belle-ville, where is an Abby founded by Humbert II. Anno 1158. 5. Ville-Franche, environed with Walls by Humbert IV. whose Son Guisehard III. above mentioned, founded here a Convent of Franciscans, called to this day, Minorette. 6. Noirmode. 5. St. Maurice. 6. Ustre. 7. Obeser, concerning which, there have been long and many Wars betwixt the Earls of Forrest, and these Lords of Beau-jen.

This Country, as that other of Forrest, was once part of the Earldom of Lyons in the partage of which Estate, it fell to Omphroy, one of the Brothers of Earl Artand. Anno 989, whose Successors had no other Title than Lords of Beau-jen. They were most of them men of great Piety, Founders of many Collegiate and Conventual Churches; some of them men of action also: Humbert the second, and the fifth, Adventurers in the Wars of the Holy Land; Richard II. in those against the English; Guisehard IV. made Constable of France, by King Lewis IX. But the House failing in this Guisehard, it was united unto that of the Earls of Forrest, as before is said, in the person of Rognand, Earl thereof, whose Son and Successor, called Lewis was also Constable of France; as Edward, the Grandchild of this Lewis, a Marshall of it. But at the last it fell into the hands of a lewd and wicked Prince, Edward II. who being imprisoned at Paris for his great Offences, and overlaid with Wars by the Dukes of Savoy; made a donation, or Free-gift, of all his Signatures, to Lewis Duke of Bourbon, furnished the God; the direct Heir of Guy Earl of Forrest, the eldest Son of Rognand Earl of Forrest, the Lord of Beau-jen above mentioned, and consequently of next kin to him An. 1400.

4. AUVERGNE hath on the East, Forrest, and Lyonois; on the West, Limousin, Perigow, and Quercy; on the South, part of Languedoc; and on the North, Berry, and Bourbonnois. It is divided into the Higher and Lower. The Lower being called Limaigne, is fruitful in a very eminent degree. The Higher, mountainous and barren. In this last, the Towns of chief note are, 1. St. Flour, a Bishops See of an impregnable situation. 2. Arilla, on the River Jourdain, defended with a strong Castle on the top of a Rock. 3. Beauregard, on the River Gardon. 4. Carlat. 5. Murat. 6. Billon, of which little to be said in ancient stories. In the Lower, called Lemaigne, 'torn a River of that name which falls into the Allier: there is, 1. Clermont, a Bishops See, fair and pleasing for the situation, and Fountains descending from the Hills of the higher Auvergne, the chief City of the whole Province. Most memorable in these latter Ages, for the Council here called by Pope Urban II. Anno 1067, in which, by the Artifice of the Pope, the Christian Princes of the West engaged themselves in the Wars of the Holy Land; giving thereby the better opportunity to the Popes, to enlarge both their Territories and their Power. It was first raised out of the ruins of Gergovia, the head City of the Auverni, in the time of Cesar; and the Seat-royal of Vercingetorix, King of that Nation, who so long put him to his trumps with the Army of 128000 men: now a small Village called Gergau. 2. Rion, in which resides the Seneschal, or chief Governor of the Lower Auvergne. 3. Montpensier, of great note for the Princes of the House of Bourbon, once Dukes herof; beginning in Lewis the first Earl, Son of John Duke of Bourbon, An. 1415, and ending in Henry the last Duke of Orleans Brother of Lewis XIII. 4. Montferant 5. Tissire. 6. Brioude. 7. Aiguepreste. 8. Taranne, the ancient Seat and Patrimony of the Delatours, heretofore Earls of Boulogne, now Sovereigns of Sedan, and Dukes of Bouillon; to whom it hath for some ages since, given the Title of Vicomte. A Family descended from the Heirs general of Eustace, Earl of Boulogne in Picardy, Father to Godfrey of Bouillon, Duke of Lorraine, and King of Jerusalem.

The Country first inhabited in the times of the Roman, by the potent Nation of the Auverni; whose King Bittunus was taken Prisoner, and led in triumph unto Rome, in the War against the Salii, the Allobroges, and other of their Confederates. Not fully conquered, till Cesar had subdued their King Vercingetorix. They were afterwards part of the Province of Aquitania prima; retaining, in the oft-changes of the Empire, its old name of Auvergne. Heretofore part of the great Duchy of Aquitain; remaining subject to those Dukes, till William the eighth Duke, and fourth of that name, gave it in portion with one of his Daughters, whose name I find not, nor the name of her Husband neither; of whom there is nothing on record, but that he took up Arms against Lewis VI. who began his Reign, An. 1110. by the Heir-general of this House, it was conveyed in marriage to John the second Son of

Guigne

Guigne IV. and Beatrice, Dauphin of Viennois; in whose Line it continued under the title of the Dauphins of Auvergne, till Berault, the last Earl or Dauphin of it. Who having married the Heir of Guy Earl of Forrest, the Son of Rognand above mentioned, had by her a daughter named Anne, Heir of both Estates, married to Lewis the God, the third Duke of Bourbon; to whom Edward the last Lord of Beau-jen, made a Donation or surrendry of that Signetury also, uniting in his person the distinct Estates of Bourbon, Beau-jen, Forrest, and Auvergne.

And as for Bourbonnois it self, in the diffractions of the French Empire by the posterity of Charles the Great, most impropriately Cantoned it into many great Estates, and petit Signeuries, it fell unto the share of the potent Family of the Dampierre, descended from the ancient House of Burgogne; who held it till the year 1308. At what time Lewis IX. for the advancement of Robert Earl of Clermont (in Beauvoisin) his fifth Son, married him to Beatrice, Daughter and Heir of Archebald Dampierre, the last of that House. Lewis the Son of this Robert, was the first Duke of this Line; whose Successors and their Achievements, follow in this Catalogue of

The Lords and Dukes of Bourbon.

- 1308 1. Robert, Son of King Lewis IX. Earl of Clermont; the first Lord of Bourbon of the House of France.
- 1317 2. Lewis, the first Duke of Bourbon, Peer, and Chamberlain of France: from whose second Son Jaques, comes the House of Vendosme.
- 1341 3. Peter, Peer, and Chamberlain; slain in the Battle of Poitiers, An. 1356.
- 1356 4. Lewis II. called the Good; in whose person all these Estates were first united: Peer, and Chamberlain of France, and Governour of Charles VI.
- 1410 5. John, Peer, and Chamberlain; taken Prisoner at the Battle of Agincourt, and died in England: the Root of the Family of Montpensier.
- 1434 6. Charles, Peer, and Chamberlain; General of the Army against the English, in the Isle of France.
- 1456 7. John II. Peer, Chamberlain, and Constable of France.
- 1487 8. Peter II. Brother of John; Peer, Chamberlain, and Regent of France, in the absence of Charles VIII.
- 1503 9. Charles Earl of Montpensier, Duke of Bourbon, in the right of Susan his Wife, Daughter and Heir of Peter the second, Duke of Bourbon. After whose death, being slain at the sack of Rome, An. 1527, without Issue, his Estate fell unto the Crown; and so continued till by the Sentence of Arrêt of the Court of Parliament in Paris, Auvergne, Forrest, and Beau-jen, were adjudged to Madam Louise, Mother of Lewis the first Duke of Montpensier, and Daughter and Heir of Gilbert de Boulbon, Earl of Montpensier, the Nephew of John Duke of Bourbon, (the first of that name) of which House she was the only surviving Heir; from whence descended Henry, the last Duke of Auvergne, it was used customarily, by the eldest Sons of the Earls and Dukes of Montpensier; till given to Charles, natural Son of King Charles IX. called from hence, the Count or Earl of Auvergne; who being a Confederate of Charles Duke of St. Rhon, was in the year 1604, made Prisoner by King Henry IV. released by King Lewis XIII. An. 1616, and within two years after made Duke of Angoulême: in whose Posterity it remaineth.

The Arms of these Dukes were, 1. France, a Baston, Gules, for the Dukedom of Bourbon. 2. Or, a Dauphin Palmé, Azure, for the County of Auvergne. 3. Or, a Lion Sable, armed Gules, under a Label of five pieces of the same, for the Signetury of Beau-jen. The Arms of the Earldom of Forrest, I am yet to seek. But anciently, the Arms of Bourbon, when under the Dampierres, were Or, a Lion Rampant Gules, environed with Cockle shells of Azure.

10. BERRIE.

HAVING thus taken a view of those several Provinces which (except Bretagne) were the first purchases of the French in the modern France; and so much of the Burgundian Conquests, as were either laid to the Kingdom of West-France, or else were necessarily to be passed over in the course of our Journey: let us next look on those which were possessed by the Goths. And first we will begin with BERRIE (as next in situation with those before described) bounded on the East, with Bourbonnois and Nivernois; on the West, with Poitou; and part of Touren, on the North with La Beaulle; and on the South with Limousin; in Laine called Binnurum regio, from the Binnuriger, the old Inhabitants of this Tract; by Pliny, Strabo, and some others, called the Binnuriger Cubi, to difference them from the Binnuriger Ubijci, dwelling about Bourdeaux.

The Country watered in the East with the River Laure; in the South, with the Fage; in the North, with the Chur; and in the Inland parts, with Indre, Annon, Thon, Eure, and others which we shall meet withal anon: of no great note, but such as much conduce to the fruitfulness of it: affording it the benefit of fat Pastures and flourishing Meadows; which breed great multitudes of Cattle, and such flocks of Sheep, that when they tax a man for lying in excess of numbers, they use to say, Eye, Sir, there are not so many sheep in Berrie.

It containeth in it 33 Walled Towns; the chief whereof are, 1. Bourges, a Town of great strength by Nature, and as well fortified by Art, situate in a low Flat, amongst deep impassable Bogs and Marshes, caused by the overflowing of the Annon, Tour, Malon, and Aunette; small Riverets, but of great waters when they meet together: by means whereof it may be easily drowned at the approach of an Enemy: for that cause made the Falnelns and Retreat of Charles VII. in his long Wars against the English, possessed at that time of Paris, and the greatest part of the Kingdom. The poor Prince in the mean time fain to feast it here with a Rump of Mutton, and a Chick, and that but upon high days neither. From his constant abode here, and that which he had been Duke of his Country, in the life of his three elder Brethren, by the English in derision called King of Berie. A large, fair, and rich Town it is, the Seat of an Arch-bishop: a Siege-prefidial, and one of the best Universities in France, especially for the study of the Civil-Laws, first founded by King Lewis IX. and afterwards restored and perfected by Charles Duke of Berie, the Brother of King Lewis XI. Some Fabulous Founders, and Ridiculous Originations, have been thought of for it, as, that it was built by Ogyges, a Grandchild of Noah; by whom called Binnuriger, which in the corruption of the following times, came (forth) unto Bituriges; which Etymology, were it as dear bought, as it is far fetch'd might be good for Ladies; and then it would be good for some what. Others, no less absurdly, will have it called Biturix, quasi Biturix, from two fair Towers which formerly (as they pretend) were erected here: one of the two, in part, still standing: and unto this, they say, alludeth in old Grammarians, thus:

Turribus à binis, inde vocor Biturix.

From two Towers which were builded here,
The name of Biturix I bear.

But the truth is, it was thus called from the Bituriges, (the Biturigeni Civitas of Antoninus) and by that name in the division of old Gaul by the Emperor Constantine, made the Metropolis of the Province of Aquitania prima: of which this Country was a part. 2. Warron, or Varzon, pleasantly seated amongst Woods, Vines, and Rivers; the Rivers Arnon, Theo, Cher and Tenre, meeting hereabouts, built in or near the place of the old Avaricum, a Town of great note and strength in the time of Cæsar: the revolt whereof gave such a check to his proceedings, that he was fain to stretch his wits and valour on the very tenter-hooks, before it was again recovered. 3. Concerfant, on the River Souldre, beautified with a strong and magnificent Castle. 4. Chasteau-Roux, on the River Indre: of which little memorable. 5. Issaudun, on the River Theo, the Baligne for that part of the Country: 6. Montfaucon, an ancient Barony. 7. Argenton, on the River Creuse, the Title and Estate of Philip de Comines, hence called Signeur de Argenton, who writ the History of France under Lewis XI. in which he dived so far into, and writ so largely of, the greatest affairs of State, that Queen Katherine de Medici used to say, That he had made as many Hereticks in State Policy, as Author had done in Religion. 8. Sancerre, seated on a high Hill near the River Loire; by some Latine Writers called Nantodunum; but most generally said to be so called, quasi secernit Curvis, from the Goddess Ceres, herein worshipped in the times of Gentilism. A Town of great consequence and strength; and as such, assigned over to the Hugonots, An. 1569. as a Town of Caution for their security, and the better keeping of the Articles of Peace then agreed upon. Famous not long after, for enduring a most desperate and tedious siege under Charles IX. by whom those Articles were almost no sooner made than broken. Before which time it was not under the command of the French Kings, but under the direct Dominion of its own Princes, called the Earls of Sancerre, who had the Sovereignty thereof: but being taken by the Kings Forces upon this occasion, An. 1573. and the Walls thrown down, a Garrison was put into the Castle, to keep it for the time to come at the Kings devotion, the Rents and Profits of it still remaining to the true Proprietaries.

Here is also in this Province, the Town and Seigneurie of Aubigny, adorned with many Privileges, an ample Territory, and a beautiful Castle. Betwixt by Charles VI. on Robert, the second Son of Alan Stewart, Earl of Lennox in Scotland, for his many signal services against the English; and is still the honourary Title and Possession of the second branch of that Noble and illustrious Family, hence called by the name of Lords of Aubigny.

As for Berry it self; and the Fortunes of it, we may please to know, that the old Inhabitants of it, were the Biturigeri Cabi, (or the Biteriges Liberi, as some Writers call them) subdued but not without great difficulty, by the matchless Cæsar: in the first division of Gallia, made part of Aquitania; and in the new-modelling of that Province, by the Emperor Constantine, a part of Aquitania prima, won from the Romans by the Goths, and from them by the French, it was for long time under the command of Provincial-Governours, one of which, called by the name of Godfrey, obtained that dignity from Hugh Capet; and his Posterity enjoyed that Office under the Kings of France, till the days of King Henry I. of whom the Inheritance and Estate was bought by Harpin, one of the defendants of that Godfrey. But long he had not held it as Proprietary, in his own right; when desirous to make one in the Holy Wars, he sold it back again to King Philip I. (the better to furnish himself for that Expedition) An. 1096. to be united to the Crown after his decease. Since which time, the Sovereignty of it hath been always in the Crown of France; but the Possession and Revenue sometimes given, with the Title of Duke, for a portion to some of the Kings younger Sons, to be holden of them in Apanage, under the Sovereignty and Command of the Ducors, and his Successors. The first of those that held this title, was John, a younger Son of John King of France, and Uncle unto Charles VI. during whose Reign, betwixt this Duke and those of Burgundy and Orleans, the Realm of France was miserably distracted into Broils and Factions. The second was another John, Son of Charles VI. who dying in his minority, was succeeded in this Title by his Brother Charles, Successor to his Father in the Crown it self. The fourth and last, (for it had no more than four Dukes in all) was Charles, the youngest Son of King Charles VII. who siding with the Earl of Charolais, did so much trouble the Affairs of France under Lewis XI. by whom he was made Duke of Normandy, and of Guineu afterwards; but held neither long. After whose death, it was united to the Crown; never since separated from it: but though it never had Duke since, it hath had three Duchesses; first giving the Title of Dutchess to the Lady Joan, Daughter of Lewis XI. and Wife to Lewis XII. then Duke of Orleans, cited herein by her said Husband; when coming to the Crown he divorced her from him, to make room for the Lady Anne, Dutchess of Bretagne, the Widow of Charles VIII. his Predecessor. Conferred after her decease, but on more honourable grounds, by King Francis I. on the Lady Margaret his Sister, first married to Charles Duke of Anjou; and after his decease, to Henry of Albert, King of Navarre, the last that had this Title, being another Margaret, Daughter of the said King Francis, married to Philibert Emmanuel, Duke of Savoy.

II. POICTOU.

POICTOU is bounded on the East, with Touren, Berry, and Limouin; on the North with Bretagne, and Anjou; on the South with Xaintonge, a member of the Dukedom of Aquitania; and on the West, with the Aquitain Seas.

It is called in Latine, Pictavia, from the Pictores, as Præloxy, Cæsars, and some others; or the Pictavi, as Antoninus calleth them, the old Inhabitants hereof; and is a Country so great and plentiful, that there are numbered in it 1200 Parishes, and three Bishopsricks. A strong argument of the populousness and largeness of it. Besides the goodness of the Soil, it hath many other great helps to enrich it; that is to say, a larg large Sea coast, some capacious Harbours, not a few Navigable Rivers emptying themselves into the Sea: besides the benefit which redounds to it from the Clin or Clavin, the Croisil, and Vienne, their Rivers falling into the Loire; which also glides along on the North hereof.

The principal Towns and Cities of it are, 1. Poitiers, in Latine Pictavi, seated upon the Clin, or Clavin; by Præloxy called Augusturum: the largest City for compass of ground within the Walls, next to Paris it self, but containing in that circuit, Meadows, Cornfields, and other waste grounds. It is an University, especially for the study of the Civil-Law; and a See Episcopal: one of the Bishops hereof being St. Hilary, surnamed Pictavensis, that renowned Father of the Church, and a stout Champion of the Catholic Faith against the Arians, though contemned in their Heretic by the Emperor Constantine. 2. Saintes, on the River Charente, near the edge of Xaintonge. 3. Talmon, upon the shores of the Ocean. 4. Beaumont, a Sea-Town also, and a reasonable good Port, near the confines of the Bretagne. 5. Rochefort, so called from its situation on the Ton, or Jon; which gave the title of Prince to one of the Branches of the Royal race of Bourbon. 6. Lusignan, on the River Isa; also denominated the noble Family of Lusignan, sometimes Kings of Hierusalem, and afterwards of Cyprus; which last they had in exchange for the first, by the donation of King Richard the first of England. 7. Luçon, or Lusson, seated upon a navigable arm of the Sea: sufficiently famous in being the Episcopal See of the renowned Cardinal of Ribellien, who so long managed the affairs of France for King Lewis the thirteenth. 8. Malesmés, a Bishops See also. 9. Thouars, which gives the title of Duke to the ancient Family of Tremouille, from which the Dukes of Bretagne did derive themselves: from the time that Constance the Daughter and Heir of Conan, after the death of Geoffry Plantagenet her first Husband, had Guy of Thouars for her second. 10. Chastel Heraldu, (or Castrum Herald) on the River Vienne; of which James Hamilton, Earl of Arran, in Scotland, by the gift of King Henry the second of France, the better to assure him to the French Faction there, against the English, had the title of Duke.

In the Vine-fields of this Country, within two leagues of Poitiers, was fought that memorable Battle between John of France, and Edward the son of King Edward the third, surnamed the Black Prince. Who being distressed by number of the French, would willingly have departed on honourable terms: which the French not accepting, instead of Conquest, found a fatal overthrow. The greatness and particulars whereof, we shall hereafter see in the like of King John. For they presuming on their own strength, to their disadvantage, bereft the Enemy of all opportunity of retiring; whereas ordinary Policy would instruct the leader of an Army, to make his Enemy, if he would fly, a Bridge of Gold, as Count Foulton used to say. Hercupon Themistocles would not permit the Grecians to break the Bridge made over the Hellespont, by Xerxes, lest the Persians should be compelled to fight, and to happen to recover their former losses: and Charles the sixth, lost his Army, by intercepting of our Henry the fifth, in his march to Calice. For, where all way of flight or retreat is stop, the safest Soldier will rather dye with glory in the front of his Battle, than fly and be killed with ignominy. So true a Mistress of hardy resolutions, is Despair, and no less true this Proverb of ours, Make a Coward fight, and he will kill the Devil. On the contrary, it hath been the use of divers Politick Captains, to make their own Soldiers fight more resolutely, by taking from them all hope of safety, but by battle. So did William the Conqueror, who at his arrival into England, burnt the ships which transported his Army: thereby giving the Soldiers to understand, that their lives lay in the strength of their Arms, and courage of their Hearts; not in the number of their beads. Turris, the Leader of the Moor into Spain, burnt likewise all his Navy, one only Pinnace excepted; which he reserved to carry tidings of his success. So when Charles Martel encountered that infinite Host of the Saracens, (of which you have already heard) he commanded the people of Tours to open the Gates only to the Victors. Then he led his Army over the Loire, placing on the Banks thereof, certain Troops of Horse-men, to kill all such as fled out of the Field. Hereby informing his men, that there was to them no more France, than what they fought on, unless they were Conquerors. In like manner, the same Themistocles cunningly working the Persians to enclose the Greek Navy on every side, enflamed the Grecians with such courage, by a necessity of light, that they gave their enemies the most memorable defeat that ever happened on those Seas.

But to proceed, the people of this Province have more in them of the old Gauls, than any in France; as lying to betwixt the borders of the Goths and French, that it was never thoroughly planted or possessed by either. An argument whereof may be, that they are naturally more rude, subtil, crafty, and contentious, than the rest of their Country-men; and have a Dislike by themselves, much differing from the common French, having many words mixt with it, questionable some remainders of the ancient Gallick, which the natural Frenchmen understand not. In the division of Gant by the Emperor Constantine, they were reckoned for a part of Aquitania Secunda; and, as a part thereof, won from the Romans, with Limousin, Perigord, and Quercy, by Varicus King of the Goths in Spain. Of whose Kingdom it continued part, till those Goths were dispossessed of their hold in France, by Clodius the fifth King of the French, surnamed the Great. After which it belonged to the Kings of that people; by the posterity of Charles the Great, assigned to some Provincial Governours, with the title of Earls. One of which being named Edler, (of the old Gothish race, if I guess right) by the last Will and Testament of William the Debonair, Duke of Aquitania, and Earl of Auvergne, succeeded in that fair Estate. Poitou, by this means, made a part of the Dukedom of Aquitania, came with it at the last to the Kings of England, as shall there be shewn; and being theirs, was given with the title of Earl, by King Henry the second, to Richard, surnamed Cœur de Lyon, who was after King. Seized upon by the French, in that unfortunate Reign of King John, with the rest of the English Provinces, Anno 1202. Alphonso, Brother to Lewis the ninth, is made Earl of Fulston: and being again recovered by King Henry the third, it was by him conferred on his Brother Richard Earl of Cornwall. But Henry being entangled in the Barons Wars, and Richard wholly taken up with the affairs of Germany, of which by some of the Electors he was chosen Emperor; it was fully conquered by the French; and never since dismembered from that Crown, for ought I can find. For, though in the more active times of King Edward the third, some of the best Towns and pieces of it were possessed by the English; yet were they lost again soon after, according to the various successes and events of War.

22. LIMOSIN, 13. PERIGORT, 14. QUERCY.

These Provinces I have joyned together, because for the most part they have followed the same fortune; being sometimes French, and sometimes English, according to the successes of either Nation.

1. LIMOSIN, the largest of the three, hath on the East, Bourbonnois; on the West, Perigot; on the North and North-west, Poitou, and Berry; on the South, Auvergne. It is divided into the Higber, properly called Limosin and the Lower commonly called La Marche: both parts, but specially La Marche, which lieth towards Auvergne, being mountainous, and not very fruitful; but of a free and open Air: inhabited by a people of a more frigid and sober nature than the rest of the French, frugal in expence, and moderate in diet; only for great devourers of Bread, that they are grown into a By-word.

The chief Towns in La Marche, or the Lower Limosin, are, 1. Lutet, seated in a rough and hilly Country, a Bishops-See. 2. Uzerche, seated amongst the Mountains, on the River Vézère, a very fierce and violent current; with which so fortified on all sides, that it is thought to be a very strong and secure dwelling. 3. Trenac, 4. Doussenc, 5. Belmont, 6. Méjac, 7. Brive le Gaillard, &c. In the Higber Limosin, the chief Towns are, 1. Limoges, a Bishops See, the principal of the Lemoisiers, from whom denominated by Ptolemy called Ratiastum. A neat, but no large City; rich, populous, and inhabited by a people of so great an industry, that they compel every one to work; and is therefore by the French called the Prison of Beggars: seated on the Vienne. At the taking of it when revolted, Edward the Black Prince could by no means be allured to pity the distressed Citizens, till pursuing Enemies he saw three French Gentlemen make head against his Army; the consideration of whole magnanimity, drew him to pity, where before he avowed revenge. 2. Chalus, at the besieging of which, our Richard the First was slain by a shot from an Arballist; the use of which War-like Engine, he first shewed to the French. Whereupon a French Poet made these Verses on the person of Atropos.

*Hec volo, non alia Richardum morte perire,
Ut, qui Francigenis Baliste primitus usum
Tradidit, ipse sui rem primitus expiaret:
Quamvis aliis docuit, in se vim sentiat artis.*

It is decreed, thus must great Richard die,
As he that first did teach the French to dart.
An Arballist: 'tis just he first should trye
The strength, and taste the fruits of his own Art.

The man that shot him, was called Bertram de Gurdon; who being brought before the King, (for the King neglecting his wounds, never gave over the Assault, till he gained the place) boldly justified his actions, as done in the service of his Country; and for revenge of the death of his Father and Brother, whom the King had caused to be set at liberty, but gave him an hundred shillings sterling, in reward of his Gallantry. 3. Soubsterein, on the confines of Berry. 4. Confolant, Dorat, on the River Vienne. 5. Baillon, 7. Bivat, of which nothing memorable. 2. PERIGORT, hath on the East, Auvergne and Quercy, on the West, Xaintoigne, on the North, Lingus, and on the South, some part of Gascogne. The Country and people, are much of the same condition with that of Lingus; saving that Perigot is the more woody; and those Woods plentiful of Chastnut. The chief Towns of it are, 1. Perigean, the principal City of the Petrugarii, by Ptolemy called Viduna, now a Bishops See: some foot-steps of which name remain in a part of Perigean, (for the Town, it is divided into two parts) which to this day is called Vidune in which standeth the Cathedral Church, and the Bishop's Palace. The whole City seated in a very pleasant Valley invironed with Damns, adorning a most excellent Wine, and having in it, as a mark of the Roman greatness, the ruins of a large and spacious Amphitheatre. 2. Bergerac seated on the great River Dordogne. 3. Sarlat, a Bishops See. 4. Nortron, defended with a very strong Castle. 5. Miramon, 6. La Roche, 7. Mortet, where is a Well which ebbs and flows according to the pulse of the River of Bourdeaux. 8. Angoulême, in the North-west, towards Xaintoigne, the seat of the Engolismen, in the time of the Romans; now a Bishops See: seated upon the River of Charente, with which it is almost encompassed: the other side being defended by a steep and rocky Mountain. A Town of great importance when possessed by the English; being one of their best out-works for defence of Bourdeaux; one of the Gates thereof being to this day called Chande, seems to have been the work of Sir John Chandour, Banneret, one of the first Founders of the most Noble Order of the Garter; then recovered from the English by Charles the Fifth; it was bestowed on John, the third Son of Lewis Duke of Orleans, Grand-Father of King Francis the first, with the title of an Earldom only, An. 408. Afterwards made a Dukedom in the Person of the said King Francis, before his coming to the Crown. And for the greater honour of it as much of the adjoining Country was laid into it, as maketh up a Territory of about 24 French Leagues in length; and 15 in breadth: within which circuit are the Towns of Chastean-neuf, and Cognat, on the River of Charente. 3. Roche Fauton, 4. Chabamer, 5. Merville, 6. Villebois, &c. Since that united to the Crown, it hath of late times given the title of Duke to Charles Earl of Auvergne, An. 1618. the base Son of Charles the ninth, consequently extracted from the House of Angoulême.

3. QUERCY is encompassed about with Limosin, Perigot, Languedoc, and Auvergne. A populous Country, for the biggness, (being one of the least in all France) and very fruitful withal, though somewhat mountainous. The principal places in it, 1. Cabors, the chief City of the Cadurci, in the times of the Romans; still a great, strong, and well-traded Town, and the See of a Bishop, who is also the Temporal Lord of it: seated upon the River Loch. From hence defended and took name the noble Family of Canorots of Caducris, in Latine: out of which, by a Daughter of Patrick de Caducris, Lord of Ogmore and Kidwelly, in the Marches of Wales, married to Henry the third Earl of Leicester, come the Kings of England, and most of the Royal houses in Europe. 2. Montalban, a Bishops See also; built on the top of an high Mountain, and so well fortified by all advantages of art, that it is thought to be the most defensible of any in France: of which it gave sufficient proof in that notable resistance which it made to King Lewis the thirteenth, in his Wars against those of the Religion, An. 1622. 3. Soulac, upon the River Dordogne. 4. Nigrepellisse, another of the Towns possessed by the Protestant Party, reduced to the obedience of King Lewis the thirteenth, An. 1621, but in November following, they murdered the King's Garrison, and the next year denied admission to the King.

King. Taken at last, An. 2022. by the King in Person: the Punishment did exceed the Crime. For, the men were not only killed and hanged, as they had deserved: but many of the women also: some of them having their secret part rammed with Gun-powder, and so torn in pieces, by the unpardon'd Barbarism of the merciless and revengeful Soldiers. 5. Chateau-Sarasin, a strong Town on the Garond. 6. Nazaret, 7. Burete, &c.

The ancient Inhabitants of these three Provinces, were the Lemoisiers, the Petrocorii, and the Cadurci, before mentioned: of which the Lemoisiers, and Cadurci, were cast into the Province of Aquitania Prima; the Petrocorii, and Engolismen, into Aquitania Secunda. In the declining of that Empire, seized on by the Goths; but from them speedily extorted by the conquering French. Afterwards, when King Henry the third of England, released his right in the Provinces of Normandy, Poitou, Angoumois, Touraine, and Main; Lewis the 9th, to whom his Release was made, gave him in satisfaction of all former Interests, 300000 l. of Anjouan money, the Dukedom of Guienne, the County of Xaintoigne, as far as to the River of Charente, with the Province of Limosin. And on the Capitulation made betwixt Edward the third of England, and John of France, then Prisoner to him; Perigot and Quercy, (among other conditions) were assigned over to the English, discharged of all Rent and Homage to the Crown of France. After which times respectively, they remained all three in the possession of the English, until their final expulsion by King Charles the 7th. never since that dismembered from the Crown of France.

15. AQUITAIN.

THE Dukedom of AQUITAIN, the greatest and goodliest of all France, contained the Provinces of 1. Xaintoigne, 2. Guienne, 3. Gascogne; with the Isles of Oleron and Ree, and other Islands in the Aquitainick or Western Ocean.

XAINTOIGNE is bounded on the East with Limosin and Perigot; on the West with the Aquitainick Ocean; on the North with Poitou; and on the South with Guienne. So called from Saintes, one of the principal Cities of it; as that from the Santonnes, a Nation here inhabiting in the time of the Romans, whose Chief City it was. The River of Charente running through the middle; and so on the North border of it, emptieth it self into the Ocean, just opposite to the Isle of Oleron; having first taken in the Seugne, and the Boutonne, two lesser Rivers.

The chief Towns of it are, 1. Saintes; by Ptolemy called Mediolanum; by Antoninus Civitas Santonum, seated upon the Charente; a Bishops See, and the Senschalitie for the County. 2. S. John de Angélie, situate on the Boutonne, a Town once impregnablely fortified: whereof it hath given sufficient testimony in the Civil Wars of France about Religion, until the fatal time was come, in which the great power of that party was to be dissolved; at what time (viz. An. 1621.) after a siege of forty days, it was taken by King Lewis the thirteenth, the Fortifications demolished, the Town left open, and commanded from that time forwards, to be called by the name of Lewis Bourg. Bourg sur la Mer, upon the Dordogne; which for the wideness of it, is here called a Sea. 4. Reverette, seated near the confluence of the two great Rivers, the Garond, and the Dordogne. 5. Blaye, the most Southern Town of all this Country, defended with a strong Castle, and a goodly Garrison for securing the passage unto Bourdeaux; this Town being seated on the very mouth of the River which goeth up to it. 6. Rochele, Rupella in the present Latine; but anciently called Santonum Portus, as the chief Haven of the Santonnes; a well-noted Port in the most Northern part of Xaintoigne: from whence the Country hereabouts is called ROCHELOIS. The Town seated in the inner part of a fair and capacious Bay; the entrance of which is well-secured by two very strong Forts, betwixt which there is no more space, than for the passage of a good Ship: every night closed up with a maffy chain, and the whole Town either environed with deep Marishes, or fortified with such Bulwarks, Trenches, and other Works of Modern Fortification, that it was held to be, as indeed it was, the safest retreat for those of the Reformed Religion, in the time of their troubles; as may be seen by the story of it, which in brief is thus. At the end of the second Civil War, An. 1568, many Towns considering how light the former Peace had been observed, refused to take in any of the King's Garrison, or permit any of the Papists to bear Arms amongst them; of which Rochele was one; which also, contrary to the King's command, maintained a Navy for their safety by Sea, and continued their Fortifications for their defence by Land. So that neither the Queen of Navarre, and her Son, retired, as to a place of safety, An. 1572. Rochele alone, of all the French Towns, held good for the Protestants, and is by Monsieur Joyeuse on all sides blocked up: but the siege soon raised, and Rochele Montalban, Saintes, with others, made cautionary for the Peace ensuing, An. 1575, besieged by Biron the elder, with an Army of 50000 men, and 60 pieces of Artillery: Charles the ninth, Henry Duke of Angou, the Duke of Amal, &c. being also present at the service: it held out from the beginning of March till the 7th. of June, and was then freed, the City having in one month endured 13000 shot, and the King lost 20000 men amongst them, the Duke of Amal for one, A. 75 and 78, it was attempted by Landerneau, the Isle of Ree taken, but soon recovered: the King of Navarre, and Prince of Conde, after the defeat, being received in triumph. An. 1577, besieged to Sea-ward by Laufos; who being also beaten back, a Peace was made, and eight cautionary Towns more added to their former strength. In the troubles of 85, and 88, the Princes above named made it their retreat; and from thence issued to divert the purposes of the Duke of Mayenne. The next year, Henry the third being slain, and the King of Navarre seated in the Throne, the Protestants increased exceedingly in power, and number; and taking advantage of the minority of Lewis the thirteenth, governed themselves a part as a Free Estate, Rochele being made the Head of their Commonwealth; fortified to that end with 12 Royal Battions of Free-stone, with double Ditches, deep and broad, in the bottom, abundantly furnished with Powder and Ammunition, 150 pieces of Cannon, besides Culverins and smaller Pieces, with Victuals, and all other necessities, to endure a siege; and grown up to great wealth, that there were thought to be an hundred or six-score Merchants, worth 100000 Crowns apiece. This drew upon them the great Wars in the year 1621, and 1622. Which ended in the loss of their Garrisons, except Rochele and Montalban; those to remain in pledge with the Protestant Party, but for three years, on which time expired, the Rochele were again besieged both by Sea and Land, the Isle of Ree took from them, their Fleet broke at Sea, and the mouth of their Haven so barred up with ships chained together, and sunk into it, and other Works of stupendous greatness, in the very Ocean, that no Foreign succours out of England, (whosoever really intended, and bravely followed) had been able to come to their relief. In the end, having endured all the extremities of a tedious siege, they yielded themselves to the King's mercy. An. 1628. Montauban, Nismes, and other places newly fortified, submitted at the same time also. 7. Marans, a great Town, and of great importance, seated by the Ocean-Sea, in a low fenny place, as it were in a Peninsule, and so encompassed on every side with Marshy watry grounds, that there is no access to the Works thereof, but by very few, and those narrow passages. 8. Châtillon, and 9. Saintes, places of good strength also, but of great note: the first for giving a firmness to a Noble Family, out of which issued formerly the Earls of Blais, and of late times, Gaſſer de Coligny, and Monsieur D'Andalot, his Brother: the latter giving the title of a Duke to a younger Son of the House of Roban; as great a stickler in that Cause, as those Brethren were.

II. GUËNNÉ, the second Province of the Dukedom of Aquitain, is bounded on the North with Xaintoigne, from which parted by the River of Dordogne; on the South with Gaſſaigne, on the East with Perigord, and on the West with the Aquitainick Ocean, from the Pyrenean Hills, to the River of Bordeaux. The reason of the name I could never learn. Some think it a corruption of the old name Aquitain; but very probably. The Country generally plentiful of Corn and Wine; the one being vented into Spain, and the other into England. The people, as those of Xaintoigne also, tall of stature, of able bodies, haters of servitude and baseness, and well practised in arms; (being qualities of the mind, and constitution of body, which therein is different from the rest of France) it is possible enough they might have from the English, who for 300 years were possessed of the Country, and have left many tracks of their Language in it.

The principal Rivers of this Province, are the Garond and the Dordogne, meeting together at Retraite, a Town of Xaintoigne; and thence in one Channel falling into the Ocean; the Country betwixt these two Rivers, being called Le Pais entre les deux mers; or, The Country betwixt the two Seas: the Rivers hereabouts resembling a small Sea in wideness. Of lesser note are, 1. Jearne, 2. Baise, 3. Lot, and 4. Lisse, falling into the Garond in their several places.

Chief Towns whereof are, 1. Bordeaux, seated on the South bank of the Garond, not far from the Sea, amongst the Marishes. The chief City of the Bituriges, who possessed this tract; and for distinction's sake, were called Bituriges Ubisi; those of Bourges, being called Bituriges Cubi. It was after called Burdigala, and Civitas Burdigalensis, the Metropolis at that time of Aquitain, Secunda, consequently, an Archbishop's See, as it still continueth. After a rich, and populous City, beautified with many good buildings, an University founded here by King Lewis the 11th, and a large Cathedral. It was made Parliamentary for Aquitain, and the parts adjoining by King Charles the 7th, An. 1453, not long after the expulsion of the English thence; and is one of the most noted Empories in all the Kingdom; frequented very much by the Dutch and English, for Gaſſaigne Wines; over which last the French are so jealous, that they permit them not to come up the River, till they have unladed all their Ordnance at the Port of Blaye. The Country hereabouts is, from this Town, called Bordelejois. 2. Fronsac, lying in the Country betwixt the two Seas, (as they call it) which gives the title of a Duke to the Noble Family of the Earls of St. Paul, now Dukes of Fronsac, and to the Country round about, the name of Fronsadoise. 3. Libourn, at the confluence of the two great Rivers, opposite to Retraite in Xaintoigne. 4. Soulac, at the influx of the Garond, in the Peninsule, or demi-Island, called the Country of Medoc. 5. Baïonne, a Sea-Town, and Episcopal See fronting on the Coast of Spain. 6. St. John de Luz, at the foot of the Pyrenean Mountains; all about which, the People speak the Basquish, or old Gaſſaigne Language, being the same with that of Biscay. 7. D'Ager, an Episcopal See, by Ptolomy called Aque Agisla, (Civitas Aquensium, by Antonius) from whence this part of Gaul, had the name of Aquitain. These three last, being all of them Frontier Towns, are strongly fortified. 8. Bazas, (called Cosium by Ptolomy) the chief City of the Vasates, whom Antonius placeth in this tract: now a Bishop's-See, situate on the borders of Gaſſaigne: in the Country from hence called Bazados. Towns of less note, 1. Esparre, 2. St. Basil, 3. Reule, 4. Chasteau-Moron, 5. Mouſſeguer, 6. Saintierre, &c. Here is also in this Province, the Country of Buche, lying along the Sea-Coast, from Baïonne to Medoc's a barren, poor, and wretched Country, the worst piece of France; only remarkable for the Lords or Owners of it, formerly of the House of Foix: of which the most remarkable were Gaſſon de Foix, for his many signal services against the French, created Earl of Kendal, and Knight of the Garery, by the said King Henry; but better known in English stories, by the name of Capitoul, or Capain de Buche; the Lords hereof having no higher title than that of Captain.

III. GASCOIGNE, the third and largest part of the Dukedom of Aquitain, hath on the East, Languedoc; from which parted by the River Garond, on the West, the Pyrenean Mountains, which divide it from Spain: on the North, Perigord, Quercy, and some part of Guienne; and on the South, a main tract of the Pyreneer, running on to Languedoc. The Country generally fruitful, but of Wines especially; brought hence to Bordeaux, as the staple for that Commodity, and thence transported into England in great abundance.

The ancient inhabitants hereof, were the Ausci, Lelloraces, Convenares, Conseranti, &c. making up a great part of the Province of Novempopulania, united in this name of Gaſſaigne, on the conquest of it by the Vascones, a Spanish Nation, who fell in here during the reign of Dagobert the 11th King of the French. And though subdued by Clodius the second, son of Dagobert; yet they left their name unto the Country, divided afterwards according to the chief Seigneuries and Estates thereof, into 1. the Principality of Bearn, 3. the Earldom of Foix, 3. Comminges, 4. Begorre, 5. Armaignac, 6. Albert, and 7. the Country of Agnoin.

1. The Principality of BEARN, is situate at the foot of the Pyreneer, where they join to Languedoc; so called from Benarum, principal City of this tract, mentioned by Antoninus, and others of the ancient Writers. The Country of good pasture, though amongst the Mountains; affording plenty of Cattel, Butter, and in some places Wines also, little inferior in taste and colour, to the best of France; and many Medicinal Springs issuing from the Hills adjoining.

The Religion here, as generally in all Gaſſaigne, is that of the Reformed Churches, introduced about the year 1560, or rather, then confirmed by public Authority of the King and Queen of Navarre, at what time the Mafj; Tyber, Church-lands, and the Prelates Votes in Parliament; (according to the Genevan way of Reformation) were condemned together. And so it stood till the year 1620, when by the Power and Authority of Lewis the 13, King of France and Navarre, the Prelates were restored to their Votes and Land; the Clergy to their Tyber, and Mafj; caused also to be said in some of their Churches: yet yet so, that these of the Reformed were left unto the free exercise of their own Religion, as in former times.

The principal Towns hereof are, 1. Oribes, the same which anciently was called Benarum. 2. Lefcar, a Bishop's See, the ancient seat and habitation of the Princes of Bearn. 3. Oloron, a Bishop's See also, mounted upon a high hill, in the more mountainous parts of the Country. 4. Saint-Jerme, well garrisoned since the reduction of this Country to the King's obedience. 5. Pau, the Principal of all the Province, honoured with a Parliament or Court of Judicature for all the Country; and a fair Palace of the Prince, built by Henry of Alber, King of Navarre, and Lord of Bearn; the Seat of him and his Successors, till the coming of Henry the fourth to the Crown of France. 6. Grenade, upon the Frontier towards Begorre.

This Country for a long time followed the fortune of Aquitain; and in the general dismembering of the French Empire, had its own Proprietaries, who were the absolute Lords of it, acknowledging no superior for ought I can find. The principal of which was that Gaſſon (a name very frequent in this Family) who in the year 1118 accompanied with many noble persons of France, assisted Alphonso King of Navarre and Aragon at the siege of Saragossa; in the course of which action he did so good service, that he was not only much honoured, but liberally rewarded for it; both he and his Posterity enjoying many privileges in the conquered City. By the Heir general of this Gaſſon, married to William de Moncada Seneschal of Catalogne, and of great possessions in that Country, the Lordship and Sovereignty of Bearn fell unto that Family about the year 1220, but long it did not tarry in it. For William being slain in the conquest of the Isle of Majorca, An. 1228, left his Estates to Gaſſon de Moncada his eldest son: who much increased them by the addition of the Earldom of Begorre, and many other goodly pieces, accruing to him in the right of his wife Martha, his hereof, whereof more anon. Grown by this means to such authority and esteem in the Court of Aragon, that (being without issue male) Constance his eldest daughter was thought a match of great advantage to Alphonso eldest son of King James the first. But dying without issue by her, Anno 1260, the sovereignty of Bearn with all the Appendixes thereof both in France and Spain, became united to the Earldom of Foix, (an Estate equal to it both in power & patrimony) by the marriage of Roger Bernard the ninth Earl of Foix, who succeeded in that Earldom, An. 1262, with Margaret de Moncada another daughter of this Gaſſon, and Heir of Bearn. Afterwards being much increased both in power and honour (by the addition of the Earldom of Comminges, the Viceroyalty of Narbon, and the Signeury of Buche in Guienne, to this house of Foix) it was added to the Crown of Navarre, by the marriage of Gaſſon Earl of Foix, and Sovereign of Bearn, with Eleanor the Heir of that Kingdom, An. 1481. defending with that Crown upon Henry of Bourbon, King of Navarre, and afterwards of France, by the name of Henry the fourth; but governed by him always as a State distinct, without relation or resort to the Crown of France. But Lewis the thirteenth his son, finding some inconvenience in that distinction, incorporated it for ever to the rest of his Dominions, Anno 1620, though not without some opposition from the Subjects of Bearn, which he was fain to overbear by his personal presence, and the advantage of such Forces as he carried with him. Since reckoned as a part of that Kingdom, owed, as the rest of France, by *For*s and Carltons, and governed in Civil matters by the Parliament established at Pau: the Judges and Councillors thereof at the King's appointing.

2. The Earldom of FOIX, situate on the West of Languedoc, Comminges interposing betwixt it and Bearn, Chief Towns hereof, are, 1. Majors, on the Garond, a Bishop's See. 2. Parniers, a Bishop's See also, seated on the River Lagiere. 3. Foix, on the same River, called in Latin Fenium, and the Earls hereof Comites Fenensis; the chief seat of the Fluſſater, in the times of the Romans; now giving name to all the Country, 4. Mirande, in the County of Eſſores, and the chief thereof; but otherwise of no great account. 5. Savardam, and 6. Monbanti two strong pieces. 7. Mirepoix, (oppidum Mirepoſe) a Bishop's See also, but of no note otherwise. The old Inhabitants of this tract, besides the Fluſſater above-mentioned, were called Vascon, perhaps of the abundance of Kine bred in the pastures hereof: upon which ground, the Earls of Foix have for their Arms, 4 Cows passant Gules; horned and hooded Azure, in a Field Or.

The first of these Earls was Bernard de Carocassone, advanced to this honor by Raimond Earl of Thoulous, who had then the Sovereignty hereof, Anno 1062. The Patrimony hereof much increased by marriage (no one Family more) many fair Lands in the Marishes of Provence being added to it by Eſtmette, Wife of Roger the second; not a few Seigneuries in Catalonia, by Cecit Daughter of Earl Raimond, Wife of Roger the third; the Earldom of Catellon, by Brunicen Wife of Roger Bernard the first; the Earldom of Comminges by Eleanor the Wife of Gaſſon the second. Besides all which, in or about the year 1262, Roger Bernard, the ninth Earl, united Bearn to his Estate as before is said; whose Grandchild Isabel (the male issue failing) conveyed the whole Estate to Archibald, Lord or Captain of Buche, in the Province of Guienne. John, the Nephew of this Archibald by his eldest son John, was for his many good services to Charles the seventh, made a Peer of France: and did not only purchase this Viceroyalty of Narbon, from the Lords whereof he was defended by Mairgand, Wife of Roger Bernard the second; but by his marriage with Eleanor or Beauna Daughter and Heir of John King of Navarre, united that Kingdom to his house, though he enjoyed it not in his own person. By means of which Alliances, and other improvements of Estate, his Family grew to so great power and reputation, that there were four Queens at one time descended from it: viz. Katharine Queen of Navarre, German Queen of Aragon, Anne Queen of France, Anne Queen of Hungary and Bohemia. Before which time (I mean the Adding of Navarre to their other Estates) the Earls of Foix were in so high esteem in the Court of France, that in all public Ceremonies they took place of the Earls of Vendome, though extracted from the Royal Blood, and lived in a condition equal to most Kings in Chriftendom. In which regard, as also that the later Kings of Navarre and present Kings of France, are descended of them, it will not be amiss to subjoin here the Catalogue of

The Earls of Foix.

| A. C. | 1062 | 1 Bernard the younger son of Roger Earl of Carocasson, the first Earl of Foix. |
| | 1096 | 2 Roger, the son of Bernard, an adventurer in the first War for the Holy Land. |
| | 1111 | 3 Roger II. son of Roger the first. |
| | 1144 | 4 Roger III. son of Roger the second. |
| | 1188 | 5 Raimond, Roger son of Roger the third, a great stickler for the Earls of Thoulous, in favour of the Albigenſes, and their opinions. |
| | 1223 | 6 Roger Bernard, the inheritor of his Fathers opinions, as well as of his Estates and Fortunes. |

- 1241 7 Roger IV. surnamed Rosfer, a companion of the King S. Lewis in the Holy Land.
- 1255 8 Roger-Bernard II. Son of Rosfer.
- 1262 9 Roger-Bernard III. who added Bearn and its Appendices unto his Estates.
- 1306 10 Gaston the son of Roger-Bernard the third, and of Margaret de Moncade the Heir of Bearn.
- 1315 11 Gaston II. son of Gaston the first, a great enemy to the English in behalf of Philip de Valois; and as great a friend to the King of Aragon against the Moor, in which Wars he was slain.
- 1344 12 Gaston III. for his beauty surnamed Phœbus, inferior for Revenue and the Port he lived in, to few Kings in Christendom.
- 1350 13 Matthew Earl of Castellon, Son of Roger-Bernard Earl of Castellon, the second Son of Gaston the first: designed Successor to John King of Aragon, whose eldest Daughter he had married but dispossessed thereof by the Duke of Montlanc.
- 1399 14 Archembald Captain of Buche, and Isabel Sister and Heir of Matthew Earls of Foix.
- 1413 15 John Son of Archembald, a great Enemy to the English in behalf of Charles the seventh of France: his younger Brother Gaston, as great a friend unto the English, succeeding in the Estate of Buche. From Peter the second Son of this John, descended Odet de Foix, Lord of Laurere, so renowned in the Wars of Italy.
- 1436 16 Gaston IV. son of John, a principal Agent in the Conquest of Geneve from the English; by his marriage with Eleanor Daughter and Heir of John King of Navarre, advanced his house unto that Kingdom; Grandfather by John Viscount of Narbonne his second son to Gaston de Foix Duke of Nemours, slain at the taking of Rovenma, Anno 1512.
- 1472 17 Francis Phœbus Nephew of Gaston the fourth, and of Eleanor of Navarre by their Son Gaston Prince of Plaine, succeeded his said Grandfather in the Earldom of Foix, and his Grandmother in the Realm of Navarre about seven years after.
- 1483 18 Katharine the Sister and Heir of Francis, by her married with John Earl of Albert, added that Earldom also to the House of Foix.
- 1517 19 Henry of Albert Son of John and Katharine, King of Navarre, Sovereign of Bearn and Earl of Foix, by his marriage with the Lady Margaret, Sister to King Francis the first, added the greatest part of the Lands of Armaignac unto his Estate.
- 1556 20 Antony of Bourbon Duke of Vendosme, and Joan his Wife, Daughter and Heir of Henry of Albert, Kings of Navarre, Sovereigns of Bearn, and Earls of Foix.
- 1572 21 Henry II. Son of Joan and Antony, King of Navarre, Sovereign Lord of Bearn, and Earl of Foix; on the murder of Henry the third of France, succeeded also in that Kingdom by the name of Henry the fourth, Anno 1589. The Father of Lewis the thirteenth, and Grandfather of King Lewis the fourteenth, now reigning, An. 1648. And so having brought the Earls of Foix to the Crown of France, it is time to leave them. The Ann of these great Earls we have seen before.

3. The Earldom of BEGORRE is situate North of Bearn, at the foot of the Pyrænean Mountains: so called from the Biggerone, the old Inhabitants herof in the time of Cæsar. Scattered in which, and the adjoining Principality of Bearn, live a leprous and infectious people of noisem breaths, deformed bodies, and ghastly villages, in which regard, not suffered to have any commerce with other people, nor to inherit any Lands; but only to apply themselves to drudgery, and the basest of mechanic trades. From their great misshape heads called Capes or Gabets.

Chief Towns herof are, 1. Figueres, famous for Medicinal Baths. 2. Lourdes, of which nothing memorable. 3. Tarbes, (Antonine called Turfanica) seated upon the River Adour, honoured with a strong Castle, an Episcopal See, and the Senechalacie for all the Country of Begorre. Which Country having for long time its own Proprietary Earls, under the Sovereignty and Homage of the Crown of Navarre, from the Kings whereof they were extracted, or those Kings from them; was at the last, by the marriage of Petronilla, Daughter and Heir of Eziquib the last Earl, to Baïon Viscount of Marfan and Gabardon, added to that house. Whose Daughter Matthe, marrying to Gaston Prince of Bearn, increased that Principality with those goodly pieces of Marfan, Gabardon, and Begorre all brought into the house of Foix, by Margaret, Daughter of this Gaston, married to Roger-Bernard, as before is said.

The Arms herof were Azure, a Cross Argent; By Inigo Ardiha the son of Simon, Earl of this Country called to the Crown of Navarre, made the Arms of that Kingdom; whereas before that time, the Arms thereof had been Argent, on a Tree Vert, a Cross in chief, Gules. Which Arms are said to be took by Gratia Ximinez the first King of Navarre, from such a Sign appearing to him in the Sky, before his first battle with the Moor.

4. The Earldom of COMMINGES lieth betwixt Bearn and Foix, running betwixt both as far Northward, as to border Eastward on Begorre. Divided into the High and more mountainous part, situate at the foot of the Pyrænes, and the Lower, which hath somewhat more of the valley in it. The old Inhabitants of both, the Comvènes and Comfrans. The principal places at present in the Lower Comminges are, 1. Lombes, a Bishops See but of late creation. 2. Muret, upon the River Garonne. 3. Samatan. 5. Lisfe en Dordon. And in the High there is, 1. Comfrans, once the chief Town of the Comfrans, now a Bishops See, situate at the foot of the Pyrænean hills. 2. S. Bernard, of old called Civitas Convenarum, a Bishops See also, and the chief City of this Earldom. 3. S. Ecal. 4. S. Bregoa, 5. Muregan, or Mons Regine. 6. Silvère, &c.

Of the Estate of this Earldom I have little to say, but that it was united to the House of Foix, by the Marriage of Eleanor, the Daughter of an Earl herof, to Gaston the second of that name, and the seventh Earl of this House. Given afterwards notwithstanding to a Spanish called Rodrigo de Villandrado, by Charles the seventh. But in the end restored again to the house of Foix, by the prowess and great services of Gaston the fourth, who caused his Uncle Matthew, the youngest son of Archembald and Isabel Earls of Foix to be killed in it, according to the will and purpose of his Father Archembald, who had given it to him. But falling to the Crown again, was conferred on John de Lézan, a Baron of the Earl of Armaignac, who was Earl of Comminges, and one of the Marshalls of France in the time of King Lewis the eleventh. The Ann of these Earls were Gules, four Orelles in Saltier, Argent.

5. The Earldom of ARMAIGNAC, the greatest of all these Estates considered severally and apart, lieth on the North of Comminges, and so extendeth it self to the banks of the River Garona. Principal Towns are, 1. Aus, upon the River Grèz, anciently called Angusta Ausiorum; the the Metropolis or Head City of the Province of Novempopulania; by consequence an Arch-Bishops See: The Revenues whereof are said to be the greatest of any Prelates in France, computed at no less than 40000 l. per annum. 2. Lectoure, a Bishops See called of old Ligortium, in our modern Latine Lectodurum. A Town so well fortified, when in the power of the Earls of Armaignac, that it held out a siege of three months against the Forces of France; but since it came into the hands of the French Kings, so strengthened and embattled according to the modern Art of Fortifications, that it is held the strongest Bulwark of the Kingdom on this side, and their surest Fortresses against Spain. 3. Liste de Jourdain, which hath the title of an Earldom, bought at the price of 38000 Crowns, of John Duke of Bourbon, by John the fourth Earl of Armaignac, An. 1421. 4. Avallier, 5. Anzan, 6. Chabell-neau, 7. Mailbourquer. 8. Negter, of which little memorable.

The Earls of Armaignac fetch their Original from the Kings of Navarre. Sancho the great, having subdued some Lands in Gascogne, which he conferred on Gratias a younger son of his, with the title of Earl of Armaignac, Anno 1014. On which foundation it increased so fast, both in power and honour, that Bernard the fourth Earl herof, came to be Countable of France. And so did John the fourth of that name, by the favour of King Charles the seventh: who also writ himself, by the grace of God Earl of Armaignac; according to the title of Sovereign Princes. A man of so considerable power in these parts of France; that the marriage of a Daughter of his to our Henry the sixth, was thought the best means for establishing his Estate in Guienne. And I remember it was charged on the Duke of Suffolk, that by breaking of this alliance for that of Anjou, he had been the cause of the loss of the King's pieces in France. This greatness made him subject to the jealousy of King Lewis the eleventh, who worried him out of his Estate and his life together. Charles, (Brother of this John) succeeded by the favour of King Charles the eighth. After whose death the fair Estate was seized on to the use of the Crown; till given again by Francis the first to Charles Duke of Alençon, (whose Grand-father had married with a Sister of the said Earl John) and to the Lady Margaret his Wife, the said Kings Sister, who, after the decease of the Duke of Alençon, brought it to Henry of Albert, and King of Navarre; her second Husband; returning to to the Original from whence first it came.

The Arms of these great Princes, were quarterly 1. Argent, a Lyon Azure, 2. Gules, a Leopard Lyon Or, the 3. &c.

6. The Earldom of ALBERT is situate on the North-west of Armaignac, bordering upon Guienne. The chief Town whereof is 1. Nerac, seated on the River of Raizès the only place of strength and moment in all this Estate. 2. Chabell-Jalone, well seated to disturb the Trade betwixt Bordeaux and Gascogne, but not able to endure a siege. 3. Mont de Marfan and 4. Tartas, both seated on the River Ladour, and all four formerly Towns of Caution for those of the Reformed Religion; of which this Country is so full, that the Papists Religion had hardly any footing in all this Territory. Which, though the smallest of the six, and of least Antiquity, had yet the fortune to incorporate all the rest into it. For John, the son of Alan Earl of Albert, by his marriage with Katharine, Daughter and sole Heir of Gaston, son of Gaston of Foix, and of Leonor Princes of Navarre, added to his Estate the Signatures of Bearn, Foix, and Begorre. And Henry of Albert his son, by marrying the Lady Margaret, Sister of King Francis the first, united to it those of Armaignac and Comminges. By Joan the Daughter of this Henry, the whole Estate was brought Antony of Bourbon, Duke of Vendosme, and Father to King Henry the fourth becoming so united to the Crown of France, from which it was at first dismembered.

The Arms of these Earls. Were Quarterly 1. France; 2. Gules, a Border ingrailed Arg. The third &c. 7. As for the Country of AGENOS; the left part of Gascogne, it never had other hearts (after it left off to be French) than the Dukes of Aquitain. The principal Cities of it, 1. Agen, a rich populous and well-traded Town, seated on the Garonne, in a fruitful Country; a Bishops See, a Senechalacie, and held to be the fairest in Gascogne. 2. Condome a Bishops See also, from which the parts adjoining are called Condomois. 3. Villemaurie. 4. Clairac. 5. Marmar. 6. Fey, &c.

Thus having took a brief view of those several members which make up the great body of the Dukedom of Aquitain; let us next look into the Estate of the whole thus brought together: which in the declination of the Roman Empire, was given unto the Goths, before possessed of all Gallia Narbonensis, by Valentinian the third, as a reward for their service in driving the Alani out of Spain. Long the Goths had not held it, when they were outed of it by Clevis the fifth King of the French, continuing under his Successors, till Ludovicus Pius made it a Kingdom and gave it unto Pepin his youngest Son. But Charles and Pepin, the Son of this Pepin, being dispossessed by Charles the Bald, it was by him conferred on Ranulph, of the House of Burgundy, for his many good services against the Normans, Anno 844. Whose Successors take here in this order following.

The Dukes of Aquitain.

- 844 1 Ranulph of Burgundy, first Duke of Aquitain.
- 775 2 William, Earl of Auvergne, Nephew of Ranulph.
- 902 3 Ebles, Earl of Poitou, succeeded in Aquitain, and Auvergne, by the Will and Testament of Duke William.
- 911 4 Ebles II. Son of Ebles the first.
- 935 5 William II. the Son of Ebles the second.
- 970 6 William III. Son of William the second.
- 1019 7 Guy, the Son of William the third.
- 1021 8 William IV. Son of Guy.
- 1086 9 William V. Son of William the fourth.
- 1156 10 Lewis the seventh of France, in right of Eliane his Wife, sole Heir of William the fifth.
- 1152 11 Henry Duke of Normandy and Earl of Anjou, &c. in right of Eliane his Wife, divorced from Lewis on pretence of some consanguinity, alter King of England.
- 1169 12 Richard, King of England, the Son of Henry.
- 1199 13 John, King of England, the Brother of Richard, who forfeiting his Estates in France, on a judicial sentence pronounced against him for the (supposed) murder of his Nephew Arthur Duke of Bretagne; Aquitain and the rest of the English Provinces were seized on by the French, Anno 1202. But notwithstanding this Arrest, the English still continued their pretensions to it, till at the last it was agreed betwixt King Lewis the ninth of France, and Henry the third of England, An. 1259, that the English should rest satisfied with Guienne, the bounds whereof were to be the Pyrænes on the South, and the River of Charente on the North, comprehending therein also the Country of Limousin; and that on his investiture into this Estate, he should relinquish all his rights in Normandy, Anjou, Tourain, Main, &c. In consideration whereof, he should have 50000 Crowns in ready money. On this accord, the Kings of England became Homagers to

to the Crown of France, which sometimes they omitted, sometimes did it by Proxy, but never in person, till Philip de Valois required it of King Edward the third: and because such duties are not often personally done by Sovereign Princes, Du Serry shall describe the formality of it. The place designed for this exploit was the Church of Amiens, to which Edmund came (saith he) with such a Train, as was intended rather to the honour of himself than the French King. Royally attired he was, with a long Robe of Crimson Velvet, powdered with Leopards of Gold; his Crown upon his head, his Sword by his side, and golden Spurs upon his heels. Philip attended by the chief Officers of the Realm, sat upon his Throne, apparelled in a long Robe of Purple Velvet, powdered with Flowers de Luce of Gold; his Crown upon his head, and the Scepter in his hand. Viscount Melun, the great Chamberlain of France, commanded Edward to take off his Crown, Sword and Spurs, and to kneel down: which he did accordingly. Then taking both his hands, and joyning them together, he said unto him; You become a Liege-man to the King my Master, who is here present, as Duke of Guienne, and Peer of France, and promise to be faithful and loyal to him; say Yea: and Edward said yea, and rofe. But the Historian notes withal, that Philip paid yearly for this Payment, the young King never forgetting the indignity which was put upon him, till he had made France a field of blood. And here it is to be observed, that though the Kings of England by this new investiture, were entitled Dukes of Guienne only, yet they had all the power and privileges of Dukes of Aquitain, excepting the homage of the great Lords and Earls of Gascoigne, which formerly belonged unto them. Inasmuch as Richard the second, though Duke of Guienne only in title and title, invented his Uncle John of Gaunt in that brave estate, under the style and title of Duke of Aquitain; summoned to Parliament by that name by the said King Richard. From this Accord betwixt the Kings, the English had possession of the Dukedom of Guienne, according to the order of their Succession, from the fortieth of King Henry the third, An. 1259, to the twentieth of King Henry the sixth, An. 1452. (the intercalation of John of Gaunt excepted only:) when outed of all their old rights in France, rather by the good fortune, than by the valour of Charles the seventh; the English then, divided in Domestic Factions, and not at leisure to look after the affairs of France. Nor do I find, that Guienne being thus recovered, was ever dismembered from that Crown; but when King Lewis the eleventh assigned it over to his Brother the Duke of Berry, to take him off from joyning with the Dukes of Bretagne and Burgundy in a new confederacy; who held it but two years, and died the last Duke of Guienne, An. 1427.

The Arms of this Dukedom were Gules, a Leopard or Lyon Or, which joyned to the two Lyons of Normandy, make the Arms of England.

16. LANGUEDOC.

LANGUEDOC is bounded with the Pyrenean hills, the Land of Roussillon, and the Mediterranean, on the South; on the North, with Forret, Quercy, and Auvergne; on the East, with Provence and Dauphine; on the West, with Gascoigne. Whereas the other Frenchmen in an affirmation say Ors, these of this Country say Ocs; and therefore Oracini conjectures it was call'd Langue D'oc. But others think that it took denomination from the Goths, who reigning long in this Country, left behind them a smack of their Language; and therefore it was called Languegotia, and now Euphonia gratia, termed Langedotia, or Langedoc; that is to say, the Country which retaineth the Gothic Language. In reference to one or both of which Etymologies this Province is by Paulus Æmilius, promiscuously called Gobianca and Ostilana; and in relation to the rest, the people here in one of Calvin's Epistles, are given unto us by the name of Populus Lingue Ostilane.

The Country on those parts which lie next to Auvergne, is like the higher parts thereof, mountainous and not very fruitful, in all the rest, as rich and pleasant as the best provinces in France; and having the advantages of Olives, Raisins, Figs, Oranges, and other fruits not ordinary but here, and in the neighbouring Province; In that participating the Commodities both of France and Spain. The people have somewhat in them of the ancient Goths, and draw nearer to the temper of the Spaniards, than any other of the French; as being accounted very devout, great vaunters of themselves, affecting bravery above their condition and estates; not caring how they pinch it on the working days, or at home in private; so they may flaunt it in the street, and be fine on holy-days; The humour also of the Women, and in them more pardonable.

Principal Rivers of this Province, are 1. Aurance, 2. Liezan, and 3. Orbe, emptying themselves into the Rhodanus; and Alby, which disburdeneth it self into the Ocean. Chief Towns herof are, 1. Nismes (in Latin Lemausus) anciently a Colony of the Romans, now a Bishop's See; where there remain some marks of the Roman greatness, especially the ruins of a spacious Palace built by the Emperor Adrian. 2. Mont-pelier (in Latin Mons Pessulanus) situate on a high Mountain, as the name imports, some twelve miles distant from the Sea, an University for the study of Physick, and for that very happily seated, the Country round about affording great variety of medicinal Herbs. An Earldom of it self in the former times, conveyed by Mary Daughter of William the last Lord herof, to King Peter of Aragon her Husband; next, made a member of the Kingdom of Majorca; and finally by James, the last King of Majorca, sold to King Philip of Valois. Of late one of the strongest holds which those of the Reformed Religion had in this Country; and memorable for the notable resistance which it made against the whole forces of Lewis the 13. in the last Civil Wars about Religion. 3. Alais, and 4. Carrelesonne, both Bishop's Sees, both seated on the River Aude; the people of both speaking a corrupt French, with an intermixture of some Spanish. Which intermixture of Spanish with that broken French they either have originally from the Goths of Spain, of whose Kingdom this was once a part: or from their long subjection to the Earls of Barcelona, to whom they were conveyed, with other fair estates in this part of France, by the marriage of Raymond Borenger the seventh Earl thereof, with Almodia the Daughter of some of the great Lords who then ruled in Languedoc, about the year 1040. And to these Towns as also unto those of Nismes and Alby, the Earls of Barcelona, and the Kings of Aragon (in their right) did pretend a Sovereignty (though they had lost the possession of them) as those of France did to the Earldom of Barcelona: till mutual releases made on both sides of each others claims, by James the first of Aragon, and the King S. Lewis, An. 1260, or thereabouts. 5. Alby, commodiously seated on the River for called, the Civitas Albigensis of Antonine, the chief of this part of Languedoc, called from hence La Paix Albigens; remarkable in Church-history for those great oppositions to the corruptions and errors of the Church of Rome, called the Albigenses, 6. Beziers, upon the River Orbe, the Beire of Polomy, and Civitas Biterastrum of Antonine; a Roman Colony of old, now a Bishop's See. 7. Agde, called Agatha by ancient Writers, remarkable for a Council held there in the year 450. and for a well frequented Port, at the mouth of the River Egladon. 8. Narbon, seated on the mouth of the River Aude, the seat of the Phœcenians, and the first Roman Colony (next after Carthage) out of Italy. In Italy it self (to observe so much by the way) were no less than 150 Colonies; 57 in Africa, 29 in Spain, 26 in France, 4 in England only, in Syria 20, and in other Countries some, but very few in respect of the largeness of the Territories. These Colonies were instituted partly to repress Rebellions in the Conquered Countries; partly to resist a Foreign Enemy, partly to reward the ancient Souldiers, partly to relieve the poorer sort, and partly to purge and empty the City of the superfluity and redundancy of her people. Now if the question be asked, whether a Colony or Fortress be more behoveful, I answered with Sotenus in his Raggio delato, that a Fortress is more fit for sudden use, and a Colony for continuance; the former are quickly erected, and perhaps as soon lost; the other require some time of settling, and are after of a good sufficiency to defend themselves. As we see in our times, the Spanish Colonies of Centa and Tangier in Africa; and our own of Calais, which was the last Town we lost on the firm Land. This Narbon was in the Infancy of the Roman Empire, the most populous and greatest Town of all France; inasmuch as from it all this part of France was called Gallia Narbonensis. A Province of which Pliny delivered us this sentence; Narbonensis Gallia agrorum cultus, morum virorumque dignatione, opum amplitudine, nulli Provinciarum poltponenda; distinet; Italia potius quam Provincia; that is to say, that for fruitfulness of the soil, and the civility of the people, it was inferior to no Province in the Roman Empire. But to return unto the Town, being anciently the Metropolis of this Province, it had withal the honour of being an Arch-Bishop's See, which it still continueth: well fortified at the present as a Town of War, fronting Catalonia and the Land of Roussillon. 9. La Puy, the See of a Bishop, who in Latine is called Podiensis; the chief of that part of Languedoc, which is named Pelay, the ancient Seat of the Vellanni. 10. Viviers, on the River Rhodanus, (by Pliny named Alba Helvionum) from whence the Country adjoining hath the name of Vivariensis. 11. Rodez, or Rutena, the principal City of the Ruteni, now a Bishop's See; from whence the Country round about hath the name of Rouergis; though some account this Rouergis, a distinct Province, and no part of Languedoc. 12. Tholose, seated on the Garonne, anciently the principal City of the Telchages and the Telofates, placed by old Writers in this tract; now the chief of Languedoc, and one of the greatest in all France. The Seat of an Arch-bishop, and an University; so ancient, that some report it to be built when Deborah judged Israel. Here was a Parliamentary Court erected, for the administration of Justice in these parts, 1302. As for the story of Tholose, it was observed that certain Souldiers having stole sacrilegiously some Gold out of the Temples of Tholose, (when it was sacked by Cæsar a Roman Consul) came all to miserable and unfortunate ends: hence grew that Adage, Aurum habet Tholosanum; applied unto unhappy men.

But that which deserves most note in the History of it are large and spacious fields about it, called by the Writers of these times by the name of Campi Catalaunici, extending in length 100, in breadth 70 French Leagues.

In which fields, An. 1435, was fought that terrible Battle between Attila King of the Huns, and Ætius the Roman Lieutenant in France; Ætius was strengthened by the Goths, Franks, Burgundians, and Germans. Attila's Army consisted of Huns, Eruli, Sybels, Sarmatians, Suevians, to the number of 50000, of which 180000 that day lost their lives: Attila himself being driven to that desperate plunge, that making a Funeral pile of Horst Saddle, he would have burned himself. But his Enemies waded of well-doing, or Ætius politically tearing, that it Attila were quite destroyed, the Goths, Franks, and others of the Barbarians then confederate with him, would become too insolent; gave him leave to retire home through Italy; which he harassed with Fire and Sword, murdering the People, and ruining the Towns, so that he was then, and long after, called Flagellum Dei. Ætius, notwithstanding this good service, was by Valentinian the Emperor of the West, rewarded with the loss of his head: By which act, the Emperor (as one truly told him) had cut off his right hand with his left. And indeed, so it hapned. For not long after he himself was by Maximus murdered, and the Empire of Rome irrecoverably destroyed. Now that these Fields lay hereabouts, and not about Châlons in the Province of Champagne (as some learned and industrious men have been of opinion) I am assured by these three reasons. First, the improbability that Ætius having got the Victory, should suffer such a wait and numerous Army to pass through the whole length of France from one end to the other, and having waited all the Country, to break into Italy. And secondly, the testimony of Jornandes an ancient Writer, who telleth us, first, that before this fight, Attila had besieged and distressed the City of Orleans; and therefore was not vanquished in the fields of Châlons; and then; that immediately upon the Victory, Torismund the King of the Goths, (his Father Theodorick being slain) in Campis Catalaunicis, ubi et pugnatum, Regis Majestate subvinctus Tholosanum ingreditur; being proclaimed King in those very fields, entered with great estate and triumph into Tholose, the regal City at that time of the Gothic Kingdom. Which plainly proves the places of Battle to be near this City; though possibly by the name Campi Catalaunici (the great length and breadth thereof considered) we are to understand the whole Country of Languedoc.

The old Inhabitants of this Country besides the Helvis, the Vellanni, the Telchages, and Albigenses, formerly remembered, were the Agateses, Beterenses, Gabales, Volce, and the Areemici all which, together with some others of lesser note, made the Province of Narbonensis Prima, whereof the Metropolis was Narbon. In the falling of the Roman Empire aligned with the rest of Narbonensis, and some part of Spain, to Attilus King of the Goths, whom Honorius by this gift, and by bestowing on him his Sister Placidia, bought out of Italy. The Goths having got to good footing in Gaul, enlarged their bounds by taking in the most part of Aquitain, Quercy, and Auvergne; but forced to quit them to the French, who conquered that from them which they got from the Romans; and thrust them up within the limits of their former Donation. After this they declined as fast in France, as they thrived in Spain; losing Provence to Theodorick, King of the Osro-Goths, or Goths of Italy; whose Successor Amalasunta, fearing a War from Greece, resigned her interest in Provence to Theodorick the French King of Metz. Nothing now left unto the Goths of their Gallick purchases, but this Languedoc only; and this they they held as long as they had any thing to do in Europe, but lost it finally to the Moors, with all Spain it self. Recovered from the Moors by Charles Martel, and added to the rest of the French Empire; it was by Charles the Great given to one Thurfyn, of the race of the ancient Kings, with the title of the Earl of Thoulouze, on condition that he should be Christianized. But long it continued not in his Race, nor in any other; not being settled in a way of Lineal Descent, till the time of Raymond the eighth Earl, Brother to another Raymond Earl of St. Giler (a Town of Gauienne) whose Grand-child Hugh, being an adventurer in the Wars of the Holy Land, and wanting Money to provide himself for that Expedition, sold his Estate herein to his Uncle Raymond, the Earl of St. Giler before mentioned. From this time forward we find these Earls to be as often called the Earls of St. Giler, as the Earls of Thoulouze; and by that name frequently remembered in the Eastern Stories; as for his great valour in the course of the Holy Wars, especially at the taking of the City of Tripoli, given to him (after it became Christian) with the title of Earl. This Raymond worthily named the Great, Earl of Thoulouze, St. Giler, and Tripoli, had three Sons, all of them succeeding; of which the eldest was Bertrand, had a Base Son called Ponce, who succeeded him in the Earldom of Tripoli, the Father of Raymond, and Grandfather of another Raymond, both Earls of Tripoli, and both suspected to be false to the Christian Princes in the continuance of those Wars. Alphonso the third Son was also the Father of a Raymond, the Father of another Raymond, who proved a great Maintainer of the Albigenses; and in pursuance of that cause murdered a Legate of the Pope, sent to Excommunicate him, and strangled his own Brother Baldwin, because he found him not inclinable to his opinions. For this cause warred upon, and Vanquished by Simon de Montfort, Father of Simon de Montfort, the great Earl of Leicester; and after many troubles and continual Wars, left his Estate and Quarrel to his Son named also Raymond, the last Earl of this House; who proving also a strong Patron of these Albigenses, was condemned for a Heretic, cursed by the Pope, and persecuted by the French Kings, Philip the Second, Lewis the Eighth, and St. Lewis. This last willing to make a peaceable composition, married his Brother Alphonso, to Jane Daughter and Heir to Count Raymond, with this condition, That if it should happen these two to die without issue, then Languedoc should be incorporated to the Crown. Raymond agreed, the Marriage was solemnized. An. 1249. They both dyed without issue, 1270. and Languedoc returned to the Crown in the days of Philip the Third.

The Names and Succession of these Earls, in regard they were Peers of France, great Princes, and for the most part men of action, take in order thus.

The Earls of Thoulouze.

- An. Cbr.
 779 1 Thurfyn the first Earl of Thoulouze.
 803 2 William made Earl by Charlemagne, Peer of France at the first foundation of that Order.
 828 3 Hureit Thurfyn, Son of Thurfyn the first Earl.
 841 4 Bertrand, Son of Hureit Thurfyn.
 894 5 William II. of some other House.
 919 6 Ponce, a great Justiciar, but of unknown Race.
 963 7 Almaric, of as obscure Parentage as Ponce.
 1003 8 Raymond, the Brother of Raymond Earl of St. Giler, advanced by Robert King of France.

- 1052 9 William III. Duke of Aquitain, succeeded in right of his Wife, the Daughter of Raymond.
 1086 10 Hugh Aymon, Son of William the Third, fold his Estate and Earldom to his Uncle Raymond.
 1096 11 Raymond II. Earl of St. Giler, Thoulouze, and Tripoli; of great note in the War of the Holy Land.
 12 Bertrand, Son of Raymond the Great.
 13 William IV. Brother of Bertrand.
 1101 14 Alphonso, Brother of William the Fourth.
 1146 15 Raymond III. Son of Alphonso.
 1185 16 Raymond IV. Son of Raymond the Third, the great Patron of the Albigenses.
 1222 17 Raymond V. Son of Raymond the Fourth, vanquished and compounded with, by King Lewis the Saint.
 1249 18 Alphonso II. Brother of St. Lewis, and Husband of Joan, Daughter and Heir of the last Raymond; after whose death, and the decease of Joan the Countess, An. 1270. this Earldom was united to the Crown of France according to the Capitulations before mentioned.

The Arms of this Earldom were Gules, a Cross Pommele, of 12 points, Or.

17. PROVENCE.

PROVENCE is environed with Languedoc on the West; Dauphine on the North; the Mediterranean on the South; and on the East with the Alps, and the River Varus, which divideth from Piemont, the nearest of the Alpine Provinces.

It took this name from the Romans, who being called in by the Maffians, to revenge a private wrong done them by the Salii, the next neighbouring People, wholly possessed themselves of this Country, calling it arv' i'p'p'ar, the Province. The Country being now divided between several Princes, we must necessarily premise so much of the story of it, as serves to show the time and grounds of that division. In order whereunto we are first to know, that it long continued part of the Roman Empire, making up the whole Province of Narbonensis Secunda, and part of Alpes Maritimae. How it was given unto the Vifigeths, or Goths of Spain, and from them taken by the Othogaths, or Goths of Italy; hath been shewn in Languedoc. Being resigned unto the French, it became a part of the new Kingdom of Arles and Burgundy. Made a distinct Estate in the person of Hugh de Arles, (who afterwards succeeded in the Kingdom also) by Bofon the first. And by this Hugh de Arles upon his resignation of that Kingdom to Rodolph Duke of Burgundy beyond the Jour; given unto William his Son, with the title and title of Earl of Provence: confirmed therein by the Emperor Conrad the Second, on whom the Rights of that Kingdom had been transferred; to be held of him, and his Successors in the Empire. In his posterity it continued, till conveyed to the Earls of Barcelona, by the Marriage of the Lady Douce with Earl Raymond Arnold, Anno 1082. Carried, together with that Earldom, to the Crown of Aragon; and finally by Beatrice one of the Daughters of Raymond the third, the last Earl of this Family, conveyed in Marriage to Charles Earl of Anjou, Brother of Lewis the Ninth of France, An. 1262. whom Urban the Fourth, not long after Crowned King of Naples. By Joan the the first; the fourth from Charles, driven out of Naples by Lewis of Hungaria, and restored again by the power of Pope Clement the fifth; the City and Territory of Anjou (where the Pope resided at that time) is dismembered from the Earldom of Provence, and given in Fee for ever to the Church of Rome: partly to recompence that favour, and partly for discharge of some old Arrears of Rent or Tribute, pretended to be due to the See of Rome, for the Realm of Naples. A City which had formerly been under the Protection, and by that title in the actual possession of many of the Popes of Rome, ever since the conviction of Ramond Earl of Thoulouze, to whom it formerly belonged, but held by them in Fee of the Earls of Provence. Not long after this Donation, the said Joan adopted for her Heir and Successor, Lewis Duke of Anjou, Brother to Charles the Fifth of France, descended lineally from Charles Earl of Anjou, and King of Naples: possessed by this Adoption of the Earldom of Provence, and a title to the Realm of Naples, Rene, the Grandchild of this Lewis, having no issue-male surviving, made Lewis of Chalons, the Prince of Orange (another Signeury in this Country): and gave him therewithal full power to make Laws, coin Money, and pardon all Crimes; to write himself Prince of Orange by the Grace of God, with all the other Prerogatives of an absolute Prince. This was in the year 1415. So that now the Country stands divided betwixt the French King, the Pope, and the Prince of Orange; each of them absolute and independent in his own Estate: as long at least as the French King is pleased to give way unto it.

The whole is much of the same nature with Languedoc, before described, but in one part thereof, that namely between Marsilles and Arles, different from all the rest of France. By the French commonly called La Craie: by the elder Writers Campi lapidei, because all in a manner overspread with scattered stones; Supposed by Mela to be the place in which Hercules encountered Albion and Bergeson the Sons of Neptune: whom when he could not otherwise vanquish, he was by Jupiter his Father aided with a shower of stones; of which these were feigned to be the Remainders. A Country which takes up a good space of ground, and hath a few poor Towns in it but not much inhabited.

In that part of it which belongs to the King, the Towns of special note are, 1. Aix, seated on the Rhofne, the Metropolis of Narbonensis secunda, and at that time called Aque Sextie, from Sextius the Founder of it (by whom the Salii were subdued in the second year of that War) and the hot Baths here. Now, and of long time, an Arch-bishopps See, and the chief City of this Province: and for that reason made the Seat of a Court of Parliament for this Country, An. 1501. Most memorable in old story for the great discomfiture of the Cimbry by C. Marius, who not willing to venture on the Enemy united (for they were no fewer than 300000 fighting men) and lately fleshed in the overthrow of Maulius and Sepio, (two Roman Consuls;) permitted them quietly to pass by his Camp: The Barbarians who impudently to fear or cowardice, scornfully asking his Soldiers, What service they would command them to Rome. But when, for their easier passage over the Alpes, they had divided themselves into three Companies; Marius severally setting on them all, put them all to the sword. Ea victoria visus mireretur, ne ejus nati Rempublic pauciores. By this Victory, and this only, giving cause to the Romans (as Velleius hath it) not to be sorry for his birth. 2. Arles, in Latin, Arelatum, by Aufonius called the Rome of France, and in those times so highly prized, that Constantinus Flavius being chosen Emperor by the British Legions, in the declining times of the Western Empire, intended to have made it the Imperial Seat. And not less memorable in Church story for a Council here held in the time of Constantine the Great, Anno 313. in which was present Reftitutus the Bishop of London, and certain other Bishops of the British Church. It was anciently a Roman Colony, and now the See of an Arch-bishop; situate on the River Rhofne, in a low and marshy situation: which natural strength, seconded by the new works of King Henry the Fourth, have made it one of the best Bulwarks of France, on that side of the Kingdom. Selected for the Seat-Royal of the French Kings of Burgundy, who from whence were called Kings of Arles; as the Kings of Austrasia (or East-France) were called Kings of Arles, because they had made choice of that City for the Regal Seat. Between this City and the Sea, but on the other side of the River, runneth a deep Channel, cut with infinite charge and industry, by C. Marius, for conveyance of Victuals into his Camp, in his War against the Cimbri before named; by Protony called Poffe Mariane, by the French, Camargue, a corrupt word made of Catus Maris: the Country about which, called also by the same name for the space of 24 miles, is of excellent Pasturage, and breedeth great abundance of Horses; the chief Town of which is called, 3. St. Gills, 4. Marselles, a known Port on the Mediterranean, first built by the Phoenices, a Greek Nation of Asia Minor, who being banished their Country, came and planted here, about the Reign of Tarquinius Superbus, the last King of Rome. It was first only a Confederate City of the Romans, for whose sake, being molested by the Salii, and others of the neighbouring Nations, the Roman Legions first entered Gaul: afterwards, siding with Pompey in the Civil Wars, or at least desirous to stand neutral, it was forced by Cæsar, and made a Colony. In the property heretofore it drove a great Trade on the Mediterranean, and was the Mother of many fair and flourishing Colonies, Emporia, Forum Julium, Nicea, Olbia, displaced in the adjoining shores of France, Spain and Italy. 5. Glandeven, anciently called Glanum, a Bishopps See, seated upon the Maritime Alpes. 6. Toulon, by Protony called Traoentum, and by some Tholon, beautified with a fair and capacious Haven, well stored with Oyl, great quantity of Salt brought hither from the Isle of Ezer, about three Leagues off; and a kind of Almshouses called Province Almshouses; made by this means one of the most frequented Ports of the Mediterranean. 7. Antibi, (in Latin Antipolis) a Sea coast Town near the River Varus, one of the farthest of this Country towards Italy. 8. Fevins (the Forum Julium of the Ancients) on the Mediterranean, founded by the Maffians, as before was said, after a Colony of the Romans. 9. La Grèce, a Bishopps See, more within the Continent. 10. Ciffertou, on the Borders of Dauphine. 11. Brignols, 12. Mervin, and Chabriers, two little Towns amongst the Mountains, towards Dauphine; not otherwise of note but for the horrid Massacre of the Protestants, before described.

II. The Principality of Orange lyeth on the North-West of this Province, watered with the Rivers of 1. Durance, 2. Seize, 3. Meine, and 4. Eques; all helping to augment the Rhofne. The chief places of it are, 1. Orange, seated on the Meine, an Episcopal See; famous for many rare and wonderful Antiquities, demonstrating the Roman Greatness, of whom once a Colony; but of most note in the Church-History for a Council held there against the Semi-Plagians, in the year 444. called Arausiacum; the Latin name of this City became anciently Arausia, in some Writers Avianica; and of late Auranga.

vangia, 2. Estrang, 3. Bois de St. Pol, more properly, St. Paul de Vence, being the Civitas Vastensium of Antoninus, but not otherwise memorable.

As for the Princes hereof, they were anciently of the Noble Family of the Bausis, but Homagers and Tributaries to the Earls of Provence. By Mary Daughter and Heir of Reynold the last of this Family, it was conveyed in marriage to John de Chalons, one of the most Noble Houses of Burgundy, from the Earls whereof they were extracted. Lewis the Son of this John, obtained of Rene Duke of Anjou, and Earl of Provence, the Sovereignty hereof, as before was said. By Claude the Heir-general of this House, bestowed in marriage by King Francis the first, on Count Henry of Nassau, Ambassador from Maximilian the Emperor of Germany. Anno 1514. It was translated to that Family where it still remaineth.

The Princes of Orange.

- 1475 1 Lewis of Chalons, first absolute Prince of Orange.
- 2 William de Chalons, who submitted his Estate to the Parliament of Dauphine, to satiate King Lewis the 11, by whom restored again to his former Sovereignty.
- 3 John de Chalons, a bitter Enemy to King Lewis, in defence of the Rights of Mary Dutches of Burgundy.
- 1500 4 Philibert de Chalons, slain at the siege of Florence, where he commanded the Forces of Charles the 5th. Claude his only Sister, and next Heir of that House, being married to Henry Earl of Nassau. Anno 1515.
- 1536 5 Rene of Nassau, Son of Henry and Claude, adopted by Philibert his Uncle, whom he succeeded in this Estate: slain at the Siege of Landrecie in the Netherlands.
- 1544 6 William of Nassau, Cousin-german of Rene, by whose last Testament left Heir unto his Estates: the great Patron and Affector of the Belgick Liberties, against the Spaniard: slain by a Partisan of Spain, called Beltazar, at Delft in Holland. Anno 1584.
- 1584 7 Philip of Nassau, kept as an Hostage all his life by the King of Spain.
- 8 Maurice of Nassau, Brother of Philip, Commander of the Forces of the United Provinces.
- 1625 9 Henry of Nassau, II. Successor to his Brother Maurice, in his Offices, Estates, and Honours.
- 1648 10 William of Nassau II. the Son and Successor of Henry married to Princess Mary, eldest Daughter of Charles King of Great Britain, &c. on May-day 1641.

The Revenues of this Principality are about 30000 Crowns. The Arms are Quarterly Gules, a Bend Or, 2. Or, a Hunters Horn Azure, stringed Gules; the third as, &c. Over all, an Escutcheon of Pretence Chequie, Or and Azure. More briefly thus; Quarterly Chalons and Orange, under an Escutcheon of Geneva.

Southward of Orange, lieth the Country of PENAS-CINE, as the French call it; Comitatatus Venetinus, in the Latin: so called from Avenio (now Avignon) the chief City of it. Anciently it had Lords of its own, called Earls of Venice, (Venissa Comitatus in the Latin) united to the House of Savoie, by the marriage of Laurentia, a Daughter hereof, with Earl Humbert the Second, Anno 1080, or thereabouts. But this Family of the first Lords coming to an end, it fell (but by what Right, I find not) to the Earls of Tholouse, but held by them as Homagers, (for this Estate) for the Earls of Provence: on the conviction of Earl Raymond, condemned for Heretic, brought under the protection and patronage of the Popes of Rome; the more absolute Sovereignty hereof, and of the City Avignon, being settled on them by Queen Joan, as before is said. The principal Cities of this tract, are, 1. Avignon, the Avenio of Strabo, Pliny, and Mela; a very fair and flourishing City, pleasantly seated on both sides of the River of Rhone: famous for being the residence of the Popes for seventy years; which times the Romans remember till this day, by the name of the Babylonian Captivity: admitting, ever since, an Oath unto the Pope at his Coronation, not to remove his Seat to Avignon. The first Pope that removed thither, was Clement the 5. Anno 1300. when as yet the Popes had no more right in it, than that of Patronage and Protection; and returned again to Rome, by Gregory the 11. Anno 1377. In this City are said to be 7 Palaces, 7 Parishes, Churches, 7 Monasteries, 7 Nunneries, 7 Inns, and 7 Gates. So that if there be any Mystry in the number of seven, or any credit to be given to such Pythagorean divinity; the Arch-bishop of this City may as well be entituled Antichrist, as the Pope of Rome, if there be nothing but the mystery of this number to affix to him. It was made an University, at the time of the Popes first settling here; and so still continueth: Alciat the great Emblematisit: being here Professor. 2. Carpentras, by Pytolmy called Carpentoradica, a Bishop Sec: as is also, 3. Cavillon, (of old Caballio) once a Roman Colony on the River Durance: and 4. Tarascion, on the Rhone, opposite to Banconaire in Languedock; for the Popes dwelling here so long, could not be otherwise attended than by mitred Prelates. 5. Vaison, Civitas Vassonensis, of Antoninus.

The Revenues of the Popes here, are not very great, and those expended all in keeping of Ports and Garrisons, by reason of the ill neighbourhood of the Protestants of Orange. So that it is supposed, that it is rather a charge, than a profit to him; which maketh the people like very well to live under his Government, as bringing more money to them, than he gathereth from them.

The Arms hereof, when under the old Earls of Provence, were Gules, two Keys in Saltire Or, stringed Azure. Which seems to have in it some preface, (the Popes pretending to the Keys, as we know they do) that it should one day become subject to the Sec of Rome.

The old Inhabitants of the whole Country were, as appeareth, the Salii, Maffitenses, Vasomenses, and Voscones, before mentioned: besides the Deciates about Antibe, the Seniiti, and Sigeforiti, about Cistern; all conquered by the Romans in their first war in Gaul, called in to aid those of Marfille against the Salii. The Fortune of it since, hath been hewn before. Nothing remains now but the Catalogue of The Earls of Provence.

- 1 Hugh de Arles, supposed to be the Son of Latharicus, King of Austrasia, and Wladrada his Concubine; made the first Earl of Provence, by Bozon the first, King of Burgundy. He was later King of Burgundy and Italy also.
- 2 William de Arles, the Son of Hugh.
- 3 William II. surnamed the younger, Son of William.
- 4 Gilbert Earl of Provence, the Father of the Lady Dunce.

- 1082 5 Raymond Arnold, Earl of Barcelona, the Husband of the Lady Dunce, of Provence.
- 1131 6 Berengar Raymond the second Son of Raymond Arnold, and the Lady Dunce's his eldest Brother Raymond succeeding in Barcelona.
- 7 Raymond II. Son of Berengar Raymond.
- 1173 8 Alfonso King of Aragon, and Earl of Barcelona, the Son and Heir of Raymond Earl of Barcelona eldest Son unto Raymond Arnold, and the Lady Dunce.
- 1196 9 Alfonso II. second Son of Alfonso the first, succeeded in the Earldom of Provence, his eldest Brother Pedro inheriting the Realm of Aragon, and the Earldom of Barcelona.
- 10 Raymond III. Son of Alfonso, the last Earl of Provence of this Line.
- 1261 11 Charles of Valois, Earl of Anjou, and in right of Beatrix his Wife, one of the Daughters of Raymond the third, Earl of Provence. He was also King of Naples, Sicily, &c.
- 1282 12 Charles II. King of Naples, and Earl of Provence.
- 1310 13 Robert King of Naples, and Earl of Provence.
- 1342 14 Joan, Queen of Naples, and Countess of Provence.
- 1371 15 Lewis Duke of Anjou, the adopted Son of Queen Joan, Earl of Provence, and titularly King of Naples, &c. (of whose descent from Charles de Valois, Earl of Anjou and Provence, we have spoken elsewhere.)
- 1485 16 Lewis II. Duke of Anjou, Earl of Provence, &c.
- 1416 17 Lewis III. Duke of Anjou, Earl of Provence, &c.
- 1430 18 Rene, Brother of Lewis Duke of Anjou, &c.
- 1480 19 Charles Earl of Main, Son of Charles Earl of Main, the Brother of Rene, succeeded in all the Estates and Titles of his Uncle; and at his death gave Provence to King Lewis the 11th, his Cousin-german, as being the Son of Charles the 7th, and Mary Daughter of Lewis the second, Duke of Anjou, Sister of Lewis the third, and Rene, the preceding Dukes, and of Charles Father of this Charles, the last Earl of Provence. Immediately on whose death, Decemb. 19. Anno 1481, the King sent a Commission to Palamede de Forban, Lord of Sollier, Chamberlain of Earl Charles, to take possession of the Country in his name, and command therein as Lieutenant-General. Since which time, Provence never was dismembered from the Crown of France, so much as in the way of Appenage, or any Honorary Title amongst the Kings of Cherlen.

What the Revenues of it were to the former Earls, I am not able to say, having no good Authority to proceed upon. Only I find, that besides the Lands belonging to the Earls hereof, and other customary and casual Taxes, there was a Tax called, The Royal Impost, being fifteen Florens levied upon every fire: which reckoning 3500 fires (for such the estimate of them was) amounted yearly unto 56000 Florens. Now it is subject to the rigor and uncertainty of the Kings Taxations, as well as all the rest of France. And so much of those Provinces which properly made up the Kingdoms of the French and Goths, let us next look on those which at the same time were subdued by the Burgundians: whose History, Kingdom, and Estate are to be considered, before we come to the description of their several Provinces.

The Kingdom of BURGUINDY.

THE Kingdom of the BURGUNDIANS, at their first settlement in Gaul, contained all those Provinces of the Roman Empire, then called the Alpes Graie, and Pennine, Maxima Sequanorum, Langumensis Prima, and Vienne; now passing under the names of the Dukedom and County of Burgundy, Switzerland, the Grisons, Wallisland, Savoie, La Brisse, Dauphine, Lionois, Nivernois, and some part of the Dukedom of Bourbon. A fair and large quantity of ground, able at once to tempt and satiate an ambitious Nation. But the Burgundians came not into Gaul of their own accord, though of their own accord they drew somewhat near it. In their Original, they were a people bordering near the Vandals, if not a Tribe or Sept of them; and dwelling in those parts in which are now the Dukedom of Moldenburg, and Pomerania. At the time that Drusus and Tiberius warred in Germany, they were utterly barbarous, living in Teuts only here and there clapped up. Which being in their own Language called Burgi, gave them the name of Burgundians amongst the Romans; in the same sense as the wild Arabs had the name of Scinites, amongst the Greeks, from the like kind of living. In the year 418, at the instigation of the Vandals, they left their own seats, and planted themselves in the Towns and Villages belonging now to the Marquesses of Baden, and Electors of Rhene. About which time they received the Christian Faith, being then miserably oppressed by the Hunnes, breaking upon them out of Pannonia. Not finding any other way to free themselves of that Enemy, they betook themselves to the God of the Christians, and were universally baptized. After which, falling on the Hunnes, they flew no less than 30000 of them in one battle, from that time forwards, never troubled with that barbarous Nation. Christians then they were, and Orthodox in their profession, before their coming into Gaul: and for that reason called in by Stilico to oppose the French, then threatening an invasion of the Roman Provinces. Upon this invitation they passed over the River with an Army of 80000 fighting men, possetting themselves of all which lay from the farthest shore of the Loyre, to the Alpes of Italy: and from the Mountain Vange, to the Mediterranean; Provence only excepted, about that same time planted by the Goths. Their Government was under Kings: Many according to their Tribes, when they lived in Germany: Monarchical, when settled in the Realm of France, where they had their live.

Kings of the Burgundians.

A. Ch.

- 408 1 Tabia, who first brought the Burgundians into Gaul.
- 2 Gundioch.
- 3 Gondebani, who harassed Italy, then in possession of the Goths, with Fire and Sword; the Uncle of Clodiva, Wife to Claudio the fifth King of the French, by her perfwasion made inclinable to the Christian Faith.
- 4 Sigismund.
- 5 Gundamar, the Son of Sigismund, first set upon by Clodimir, the Son of Claudio King of Orleans, whom he slew in Battle near Auxon; but afterward outed of his Kingdom by Childebert and Claudio Kings of Paris and Saussure, in revenge of the death of their Brother

Clo-

Clodmire, and so the Kingdom of the Burgundians fell unto the French, after it had continued about 120 years: Gunttram the Son of Clotaire, and Clotus, one of the Sons of Dagobert the first; being in their times, honoured with the Title of Kings of Burgundy.

But the first time that the Kingdom of Burgundy settled amongst the French, in the way of Succession, was in the partage of that vast Empire of Charlemagne, amongst the children and posterity of Ludovicus Pius: in constituting of which Kingdom, Provence was added to the reckoning, to make this answerable to the other parts of that broken Monarchy. The first of these French Kings, was Charles, the youngest Son of Lotharius Emperor, and King of Italy, eldest Son of the said Lewis the Godly. The Succession in this order following.

The French Kings of Burgundy.

- A. Ch.
855 1 Charles, youngest Son of the Emperor Lotharius, died without issue.
858 2 Lotharius, the second King of Metz, and Lewis the second Emperor, Brethren of Charles, succeeded in Burgundy, the Mountain Four dividing and bounding their Estates.
876 3 Charles the Bald, King of France, and Emperor, Uncle to the three former Kings, all dying without issue, succeeded in the whole Estate; which he again divided into three Governments or Members: that is to say, Burgundy on this side of the Saône, containing the now Dukedom of Burgundy, with the Earldoms of Lions and Macon. 2. Burgundy, beyond the Jour, comprehending the Provinces of Savoie, Switzerland, Wallisland, and the Estates of the Grisons: and 3dly, Burgundy, on the other side of the Saône, lying betwixt the other two, containing the now Counties of Burgundy, Provence, La Breffe, and Dauphine. This last conferred with the Title of Earl, on Boson Earl of Ardenne, by Charles the Bald, who had married his Sister Judith; and not long after, in the person of the said Earl Boson, raised unto a Kingdom by Charles the Gros, by the name of the Kingdom of Arles and Burgundy. The Kings these that follow.
4 Boson, Earl of Ardenne, Husband of Hermingrade, the Daughter of Lewis the second, Emperor and King of Burgundy, was first by Charles the Bald, made Earl of Burgundy, beyond the Saône; and afterwards by Charles the Gros, created the first King of Arles and Burgundy, to be held by him and his Successors of the German Emperors.
5 Lewis II. Son of Boson and Hermingrade, chosen King of Italy, but ousted by the Faction of Berengarius.
917 6 Hugh de Arles, supposed to be the Son of Lotharius the second, by Waldrada his Concubine; succeeded by the gift of Lewis, and was chosen by his Faction there, King of Italy also. For the quiet enjoying of which Kingdom, he resigned this to Rodolph, Duke of Burgundy beyond the Jour, elected by another Faction, to that broken Title.
926 7 Rodolph Duke of Burgundy beyond the Jour, succeeded on the resignation of Hugh de Arles; his Brother Boson being settled beyond the Jour.

- 937 8 Rodolph II. Son of Rodolph, a Prince of so short a reign, or of so little note, that he is by some left out of the Catalogue of these Kings.
9 Bjfon II. the Brother of Rodolph the first; by whom the Dukedom of Burgundy beyond the Jour, was united to the Kingdom of Arles and Burgundy.
965 10 Conrade Son to Boson the second.
990 11 Rodolph III. Son to Conrade; who having no issue of his body, gave his Estate to Conrade the second, Emperor of Germany, and his Son Henry, surnamed the Black; whom he had by Gilse, the Sister of this Rodolph: by whom it was united to the German Empire, An. 1032. In the distractions whereof, following not long after his decease, the Provincial Earls or Governors for the German Emperors, made themselves Masters and Proprietaries of their several Provinces, (the Dukedom of Burgundy excepted, settled long before) out of which rose the great Estates of the Duke of Savoie, the Earls of Burgundy and Provence, the Dauphins of Viennais, and Lords of Bresse, together with the Common-wealths of the Spitzers and Grisons: every poor Birdatching also some Feather or other of this dying Eagle. Yet notwithstanding the dissenting and cantoning of this fair Estate, the succeeding Emperors of Germany claimed not only a pre-eminence over, but a disposal of all the Countries that ever were under the command of the King of Burgundy: inasmuch that the Emperors, Henry the sixth, receiving no small part of the money which our Richard the first paid to the Duke of Anglia, for his ransom, gave unto the said Richard the Kingdom of Burgundy, the Sovereignty of Provence, Viennais, Marceller, Narbon, Arles, and Lions, together with the Homages of the King of Aragon, and of the Earl of Digen and St. Giles. A Royal gift, if either the Emperor had any dominion over those Countries, or if they would have received any Prince or Officer of his appointing.

The Arms of this Kingdom under the old Burgundian Kings, are said to have been Azure, a Cat Arg, armed Gules. Which being said, we will proceed to the description of those Provinces of this broken Kingdom, which lie within the bounds of France; the rest, which lie beyond the Jour, having been spoken of already in the Alpine Countries, which made up the whole Continent of the Transjuran Burgundy.

18. DAUPHINE.

North of the Country of Provence, where we left before, lyeth that of DAUPHINE; having on the East, Savoie, and the Maritime Alps; on the West, Lionnois, and some part of Langue-doe, from which divided by the Rhône; and on the North, La Breffe; and those parts of Savoie which lie towards Piemont, so called, as some report, from Dauphine, Wife of Guigne the second; in like manner as Flanders is affirmed most probably to have took that name from Flandrina, Wife of Liderick the second, then one of the last of those Princes who governed in that Country by the name of Forgerers.

It is divided into the Higher and the Lower; the one mountainous, stony, and unfruitful, of the same nature with the Alpes, with whose branches it is over-run: the other tolerably fruitful, but not to be compared with the rest of France. The people of the Higher, and more mountainous parts, are generally gross and rude; not capable of Learnings, but well enough inclined to Arms and Traffic; and have a custom, that on the coming on of Winter, Winter, they send abroad all those which are fit for travel, whom they call Bies, or Bisnards; who seldom return back till Easter: none staying at home but old men, children, and impotent persons, which cannot go abroad to get their livings. Those in the Lower are more civil, but not more given to labour, than the Mountainers, nor very covetous of gain, so they may live in ease, without want or penury. In both parts generally good Soldiers, and well affected to their Prince.

The Lower Dauphine, together with that part of Provence, which lies next to the Rhône and the adjoining parts of Savoie, made up the Province called Viennais, from Vienna the Metropolis of it, situate on the Rhône, honoured with the Seat of the Præfatus Prætorius Galliarum; till the chief City of this Country, and Archbishop See, and a siege Præfidal. From hence the tract about it is called Viennois, and was the Title of the first Proprietaries of this Country, entituled, Dauphins of Viennais. To this Town, Archelaus, the Son of Herod, was banished by Augustus Cæsar. 2. Valence, the chief City heretofore of the Valentinis, then a Roman Colony; now a Bishops See, and an University for the Civil Laws: a rich, strong, and well traded Town, seated on the Rhône. The Country heretofore from hence called Valentinis; and hath given Honorary Title to two persons of more Fame than Honour: the first of which was Cæsar Borgia, the Son of Pope Alexander the sixth, who calling off his Cardinals Cap, was made Duke of Valentinis, by Charles the eighth: the other, Madam Diana, the great Minion and Paramour of Henry the second, under whom the much swayed the affairs of France, and honoured with the Title of Dutchess of it, 3. Grenoble, (in Latine Gratianopolis) the chief Seat heretofore of the Anciens; the most populous and best built of all this Province; and much resorted to by the Lords and Nobles, by reason of the Court of Parliament here erected. Anno. 1453. About this, lieth the Country called 3. Grisinandun, 4. Ternay, 5. Rosillon, 6. La Roche, 7. Mautelmar, all along the Rhône. 8. Romont, upon the confluence of the Rhône, and the Iffere. 9. Cremien, 10. St. Marcelin, 11. St. Andre. 12. Beaurepaire, more within the Country.

The Higher Dauphins, together with those parts of Provence which lie next to Italy, made up the Province of the Alpes Maritimæ; the Metropolis whereof was, T. Ebrodunum, now called Ambrun, an Arch-bishops See, and Siege Præfidal, seated on a high Rock, in the midst of a pleasant Valley, surrounded with Mountains, under which runs the River Durance. The Hilly Country heretofore is the highest of France. 2. Briançon, near the head of the River Durance, called Brigantia by Antoninus. 3. Gappe, now a Bishops See, formerly the chief City of the Apençensis; the track of whom is still found in the name of the adjoining Territory; called La Fais Gapensis: memorable for a Synod or Assembly of the French Protestants here holden, An. 1603. in which it was determined, and as for an Article of Faith, That the Pope was Antichrist, and where the Ministers then assembled, gave audience to the Ambassadors of Foreign States, as to a Common-wealth distinct from the Realm of France: audaciously importuning their King by their several Agents, for liberty of going (whensoever they listed) or sending whenever they pleased, unto the Councils and Assemblies of all Foreign Nations, which professed the same Religion with them: the Preamble to those Encroachments on the Royal Authority, which after proved the ruin of their Power and Party. 4. Tricastin, so called of the Tricastins, the old Inhabitants of these parts. 5. Die, the Dia Vocontiorum of Antoninus, a Bishops See, situate on the River Drofe:

from whence comes those final, but good Stomach-Wines, which we call Vin Die. Others affirm, (and perhaps more knowingly) that this Wine is of the growth of Champagne, most plentifully growing in the Fields of a Town called Hey 3 from whence it hath the name of Vin de Hey; and so contractedly, Vin Die. 6. Chorges, 7. Mombrian, 8. Esflers; of which little memorable.

The chief Inhabitants heretofore, in the time of the Romans, besides the Tricastins, Apençensis, Vocontis, and Acquisani, before mentioned; and the Allobroges, spoken of in the Alpine Provinces, were the Segulianis, about Valence; the Decenses about Die, and the Cavari about Grenoble. First conquered by the Romans, then by the Burgundians, and at last by the French: under whom made a part of the new Kingdom of Burgundy, till the surrender of the same to the German Emperors. Under them it continued till the year 1100, when Guigne, surnamed the Fat, Earl of Grisinandun, seeing the Emperor Henry the Fourth, over-borne by the Popes, and not able to assert his own rights, seized upon this Province under the title of Earl of Viennais, to which Guigne the second, his Son and Successor, gave the name of Dauphine, either from his Wife so called, as some; or from the Dolphin which he took for his Arms, as others say. In this Family it continued till the year 1349, under the Power and Government of these following Princes, entituled,

The Dauphins of Viennais.

- A. Ch.
1100 1 Guigne, surnamed the Fat, Earl of Alban and Grisinandun at the time of the dissolution of the Kingdom of Burgundy.
1135 2 Guigne II. the first and absolute Proprietary, Prince heretofore, by the name of the Dauphin of Viennais.
1146 3 Guigne III. Son of Guigne the second.
1152 4 Beatrice, Daughter of Guigne the Third, first married to Raymond the third, Earl of Toulouse; next to Hugh the third, Duke of Burgundy; and finally, to Guigne of Alban, of the house of the former Earls; all in her right entituled, Dauphins of Viennais.
1280 5 Andrew, the Son of Beatrice and of Guigne the Fourth.
1242 6 Guigne V. Son of Andrew.
1283 7 Humbert the fifth, in the sight of Anne his Wife, Daughter and Heir of Guigne the fifth.
1335 8 John the Son of Humbert, exercised in continual Wars, as his Father was, with the Earls of Savoie.
1322 9 Guigne VI. Son of John, taken Prisoner by Edward Earl of Savoie, An. 1329, and at last slain An. 1342.
1342 10 Humbert II. the younger Son of John, and the Brother of Guigne the sixth, the last Dauphin of Viennais, who being surcharged with Wars by Anne (or Amede) Earl of Savoie, entered into the Order of Dominican Friars, at Lions; selling his Country at a small rate, to Philip de Valois French King, upon condition, that the eldest Son of France should be entituled always, Dauphin of Viennais, and quarter the Arms of Dauphins, with those of France. The conditions willingly accepted; and Charles the Son of King John, the Son of Philip de Valois, admitted by his Grandfather both to the Title and Estate, in the very year of the surrender. Since this time, the eldest Son of France is called generally the Dauphin of France; sometimes the Dauphin only, by way of eminency; and many times, the the Prince-Dauphin, to discontinue him from the Dauphin (or Comte-Dauphin) of Auvergne, and perhaps some others. A Title to annexed unto them, that it is not usually laid by on the accession of a greater or superior Dignity: inasmuch as France the eldest son of Henry the second, (whom he succeeded in the Crown) being King of Scots in the right of Mary his Wife, was by the French commonly called La Roy Dauphin, or the King of Dauphin. Nor have they the bare Title of this Country only, but the commands, profits, and possession of it, sending their own Governors thence; who by an ancient Indulgence, have the greatest Privileges (confering all Offices within the Province) of any Governors of France.

19. LA BRESSE.

LA BRESSE is bounded on the East with Savoie; on the West with Lionois; on the North with Chablais in the Duchy of Burgundy, and some part of the Archevêché County, and on the South, with Dauphine. The reason of the name I find not. The Country is very fruitful and pleasant, embraced between the Rivers of Saône and Rhône, with which very well watered. Chief Towns herein are, 1. Bellay, a Bishops See. 2. Bourg, (for distinction sake called Bourgen Bresse) a Town so well fenced, and fortified with so strong a Citadel for command of the Country, that it was thought little inferior to the two impregnable Fortresses of St. Katherine, and Montmelian in Savoie. The Government of which Town and Citadel, was earnestly laboured for by the Duke of Brian, then Governor of Burgundy, after a repulse on the like suit, for that of St. Katherine; but being suspected to hold intelligence with the Duke of Savoie, at that time in ill terms with King Henry the 4th, it was also denied him: which drew him into discontent, and thereby to his fatal ruin. Afterwards, during the minority of Lenis the 13th, demolished by special Order of the Council of France, for fear of being surprised by the Duke of Savoie, during those confusions. It was of old time called the Forum Secusianorum, from the Secusiani, the ancient Inhabitants of this Tract. 3. Castillon, 4. Mont-Réal, 5. Bugy, 6. Vienne, of which nothing observable.

This little Province being anciently a part of the Kingdom of Arles and Burgundy, had its own Earls, Proprietary Lords hereof; who held it till the year 1285, at what time Sybill, the Daughter and Heir of Ulric Earl of Bresse and Bugey, (or Balge, as some Writers call it) conveyed the Estate in marriage to Ame, or Amadee, the 4th, of that name Earl of Savoie. In which House it continued till the year 1600, and then surrendered by Duke Charles Emmanuel, to King Henry the 4th, to silence the pretences which that King made unto the Marquisate of Saluzzars, and put an end to the War then begun about it: the poltick Duke choosing rather to part with an Estate on this side of the Mountains than to give that active King occasion to look into Italy; to which Savoie must have been a thorough-fair, Piemont an ordinary Pass; and where no end could be expected, but the loss of all. Surrendered then it was on good reason of State, and upon that Surrender united and incorporated with the Crown of France, and put under the Government of the Parliament of Digou, as it still continueth.

Arms hereof, are Azure, a Lyon Ermine, armed and langued, Or.

20. LIONOIS.

THE Country of LIONOIS is bounded on the East with Bresse, on the West with Beau-jolais, Forrest, and Auvergne; on the North, with Burgundy Duchy; and on the South, with Dauphine, and a part of Languedoc. So called from Lions the chief City; and under that Title made an Earldom by Charles the Great, in the cantoning and dismembring of the Kingdom of Burgundy. The Earldom containing at that time not only Lionois it self, but also Forrest and Beau-jolais, before described. The Earls hereof were at first only Provincia Governors; but under the distractions of the German Empire, they shifted for themselves and became hereditary: but long it held not in one hand. For first, the Earldom of Forrest, and the Lordship or Signeury of Beau-jolais being taken out of it about the year 950, the rest of the Estate fell in some tract of time to the Bishops and Church of Lions; but under the Sovereignty of the French Kings, as Lords Paramount of it.

The places in it of most note are, 1. Maison, (Maillecomen) a Bishops See, situate on the Saône, anciently a distinct Earldom from that of Lions, one of the five (as that of Lions was another) which made up the Dukedom of Burgundy on this side of the Saône: one of the Earls hereof, called William, flourishing in the year 1000, or thereabouts; whose Son and Successor, named Otho, married Elizabeth daughter of Humber, the first Earl of Maunienne, (a Title afterwards exchanged for that of Savoie). Continuing for some Ages after in this Posterity, it was purchased of William the last Earl hereof, and of Elizabeth his Wife, by King Henry the 6th, and afterwards subjected to the Jurisdiction and Court of Lionois, as it still continueth. 2. Ephebus, on the Rhône, on the South of Lions, opposite to Vienne, the chief City of the Lower Dauphine. 3. Dandilly, 4. Franchville, 5. Chamunot, and 6. Lebrille, all somewhat Westward of that River, but not much observable. 7. Lions it self, pleasantly seated on the confluence of the Saône and the Rhône, anciently a Roman Colony, (testified by many old Inscriptions) and honoured with a magnificent Temple, dedicated by the Citizens of France, to Augustus Caesar: now the most famous Mart of France, and an University; by our Latin Writers called Lugdunum. These Marts in former times were holden at Geneva, from thence removed hither by King Lewis the 11th, for the enriching of his own Kingdom. When Julius the second had excommunicated Lenis the 12th, he commanded by his Apostolical Authority, that they should be returned to Geneva again; but from his pleasure was never obeyed; the Marts continuing still at LIONS, as a place more convenient and capacious for that great resort of French, Dutch, and Italian Merchants, which frequent the same. As for the University, questions it is very ancient, being a seat of Learning in the time of Caius Caligula. For in those times, before an Altar consecrated to Augustus Caesar in the Temple (spoken of before); this Caligula did institute some exercises of the Greek and Roman Eloquence; the Victor to be honoured according to his merit: the Vanquished either to be persecuted, or with their own tongues to blot and expunge their Writings, or to be drowned in the River adjoining. Hence that of Juvenal, Ut Lugdunensis Rhetor diditur ad aram, applied to dangerous Undertakings. In the time of the Romans first coming into Gaul, it was the chief City of the Hedui, and Secusiani, afterwards the Metropolis of Lugdunensis Prima. The Archbishop hereof, is the Metropolitan of all France; and was so in the time of S. Irenaeus, one of the renowned Fathers in the Primitive Church, who was Bishop here.

In this Town lived Peter Waldo, a wealthy Citizen, about the time of Frederick Barbarossa, Emperor of Germany; who being a devout and conscientious man, sensible of the many errors and corruptions in the Church of Rome, distributed the greatest part of his Riches amongst the poor, and betook himself to Meditation, and studying of the holy Scriptures. In the carnal eating of CHRIST's Body, the subtraction of the Cup in the blessed Sacrament, in matter of Purgatory, the Supremacy, adoration of Images, invocation of the Saints departed, and many other points of moment, he held opinions contrary to those of Rome, and little different from those of the present Reformed Churches. And yet it may not be denied, but that amongst some good Wheat, there were many Tares; which gave the latter colour to their Adversaries to exclaim against them. Being much followed in regard of his Piety and Charity, he got unto himself and them the name of Pauperes de Lugduno, or the Poor men of Lions, given in derision and contempt. Afterwards they were called Waldenses, by the name of Waldo, the beginner of this Reformation; and by that name opposed and writ against by Fryer Thomas of Walden. The French, according to their manner of pronunciation, drowning the L, and changing the W into V, call them commonly Vandois, by which name they occur in the stories of that State and Language. But Lions proving no safe place for them, they retired into the more desert parts of Languedoc; and spreading on the banks of the River Alby, obtained the name of Albigenses, as before was said. Supported by the two last Earls of Tholouse, they became very masterful and insolent; inasmuch, that they murdered Trincamp their Viscount in Beziers, and dashed out the Teeth of their Bishop, having taken Sanctuary in S. Magdalens Church, one of the Churches of that City. Forty years after which high out-rage, the Divine Providence gave them over to the hand of the Croisades, under the conduct of the French Kings, and many other noble Adventurers, who sacrificed them in the self same Church, wherein they had spilled the blood of others. About the year 1250, after a long and bloody VVar, they were almost rooted out of that Country also. The remnants of them, being bettered by this affliction, betook themselves unto the Mountains lying betwixt Dauphine, Provence, Piedmont, and Savoie, where they lived a godly and laborious Life; painfully tilling the ground, rebuilding Villages, which formerly had been destroyed by VVar; tracing the very Rocks to yield good Pasture to their Cattel: inasmuch as places which before their coming thither, scarce yielded four Crows yearly, were made worth 350 Crows a year, by their care and industry. Lacrimosus in speech they used not: Blasphemy they abhorred; nor was the name of Devil (in the way of execration) ever heard amongst them; as their very Enemies could not but confess, when they were afterward in troubles. The Crimes alleged against them, were, that when they came into any of the neighbouring Churches, they made no address unto the Saints, nor bowed before such Crosses as were erected in the High-ways, and Streets of Towns. Great Crimes assuredly, when greater could not be produced! And to they lived, neither embracing the Pope's Doctrines, nor submitting unto his Supremacy, for the space of 300 years, untouched, unquestioned; even till the latter end of the reign of King Francis the first. But then the Persecution raging against the Lutherans, they were accused, condemned, and barbarously murdered, in the Massacres of Merindol, and Cabriers, before mentioned. After which time, joyning themselves with the rest of the Protestant Party, they lost the name of Vandois, by which called before; and pass in the account of the Reformed Churches of France; enjoying the same privileges and freedom of Conscience, as others of the Reformed do. And though I look not on these men, and their Congregations as Founders of the Protestant Church, or of the same Church with them, as I see some do: yet I behold them as Assessors of some Dodical Truths, and professed Enemies of the Errors and Corruptions of the Church of Rome, and therein as the Predecessors of the present Protestants.

The old Inhabitants of this Tract, were a part of the Hedui, that Nation overspreading not this Country only, but Bourbonnois, with the whole Dukedom of Burgundy. And of these Hedui, the Insubres are thought by some learned men to have been a Tribe, who passing over the Alps, together with the Senones, and others of the Gallick Nations, possessed themselves of those parts of Italy which now make up the Dukedom of Millain, Parma, Mantua, with the parts adjoining. The residue of the story which concerns this Country we have had before.

21. The Dukedom of Burgundy.

THE Dukedom of BURGUNDY hath on the East, the French County, and some part of Savoie, on the West, Bourbonnois; on the North, Champagne; on the South, La Bresse, Lionois, and some part of Beau-jolais. A Province so well watered with pleasant and profitable Rivers, that as Queen Katharine de Medices used to say of France, That it had more fair Rivers than all Europe: so we may say of this Country. That it hath more fine Rivers than all France: here being the Rivers of 1. Armançon, 2. Serein, 3. Our, 4. Torcy, 5. Valence, 6. Dove, 7. Brine, 8. Sein, 9. Lauche, and 10. Saône, (the Araris of the Ancient Writers) this last dividing the two Burgundies from one another. Yet notwithstanding this great plenty of Waters, the Country generally less fruitful than the rest of France: hardly yielding sufficient for its own Inhabitants, except VVines only.

Chief Cities in it are, 1. Dijon, the birth-place of S. Bernard; seated upon the Saône and Loche, in a Champaign Country: The Town large, populous, and of much resort, as being the Seat of the Gouverneur, and Parliamentary for the Province, a Parliament being here erected, An. 1476. VVell fortified on all parts, but especially defended by a strong Castle, called Talence, situate on a hill adjoining. It is called Diovis in the Latine; the Bishop hereof Diovisensis. 2. Chalon, (in Latine, Calabullinus) called for distinctions sake, Chalon upon Saône, to difference it from Chalon upon Marne, in Champagne: a Bishops See also, as the other is: and gives name to that Noble Family of Chalons, (out of which the Princes of Orange are extracted) being one of the four ancient Families of Burgundy, the other three, Vienne, Neuchâtel, and Virgie. 3. Autun, by Prology called Augustodunum, the chief City of the Hedui, now a Bishops See, heretofore the chief of all the Country, some marks of the old splendour being still to be seen: now very ordinary and mean, beautified only with some fair Churches, which the ruins of Time have not yet demolished. 4. Beaune, seated on the Burghleze, in the best and richest soil of all Burgundy; and yielding the best VVines in all France:

remarkable for an Hospital of so fair a building, that it is thought equal to any Princes Palace in Europe; and an impregnable Castle built by King Lewis XII. 5. Alize, now a small Village, but of great name and power in the time of Cesar, then called Alexia, the chief Forts of Vercingetorix, besieged herein by the said Cesar; but so besieged, that he had 70000 men in the Town for defence of the place, and an Army of 300000 Gauls at the back of Cesar, to relieve their Fellows. So that he was fain to fortify his Camp with two Walls, the one against them within the City, and the other against them without: which done, he kept such diligent watch and ward on both sides, that the besieged heard sooner of the discomfiture of their friends, than they did of their coming. Which fatal news being brought unto them, the Town was yielded. And Vercingetorix bravely mounted, rode round about Cesar; then sitting in his Chair of State, disarmed himself, took off his Horfes caparisons; and laying all upon the ground, fate down at Cesar's feet, and became his Prisoner. 6. Tournaï, encompassed with the Saône. 7. Sennu, consisting of three parts, each of them very well walled, and strongly fortified. 8. Verdun. 9. Nay. 10. St. Ligier, famous for Medicinal Baths. 11. Noyers, on the borders towards Champagne. 12. Auxerre, by Antoine called Antisiodorum, of most note for the Council held here, Anno 627, the Country about which, is called Auxerrois; and was an Earldom of it self. The Title and Possession of that Peter Earl of Auxerre, who was the third Emperor of the Latines reigning in Constantinople is to whom it came in Marriage with his first Wife Agnes, the Daughter of the last Earl of the former Race. On the failure of which house, it fell unto that of Chalons, by the Marriage of Isabel, Niece of the said Peter, by his Brother Robert, to John of Chalons, Earl of Burgundy: to whom succeeded John de Chalons, his eldest Son by that Venter, (his second Wife) and finally, was sold by John de Chalons, great Grandchild of the said John Earl of Burgundy, to Charles the Fifth of France, An. 1370. by whom united to the Crown; subjected to the Parliament of Paris, and made part of Champagne. Here is also within this Country, the great and famous Monastery of Cîteaux; the Mother of so many Religious Houses dispersed up and down in Europe; from hence denominated, and subject to the Discipline and Rules hereof.

Within the limits of this Dukedom, (on the South parts of it) stands the Earldom of CHAROLLOIS, heretofore the Title of the eldest Son of the Dukes of Burgundy: so called from Charolles, the chief Town hereof, situate in the borders of it, towards La Bresse: seized upon with the rest of this Dukedom, by Lewis XI. immediately on the death of Duke Charles the Warlike: reffered again to Philip the Second, King of Spain. by Henry the Second, of France, on the Peace made at Cambray, and subjected to the Parliament of Dole in the County of Burgundy, as a part or member of that Estate. So that neither the Gouverneur of the Dukedom for the French King, nor the Parliament of Dijon, have any thing to do in it. The Arms here are Gules, a Lion passant regardant Or, armed Azure.

The ancient Inhabitants of the whole Dukedom, according to the limits before laid down, were the Hedui, one of the most potent Nations of all Gaul: who calling in the Romans to aid them in their quarrels against the Sequani and Auverni, made them all subject unto Rome. In the prosperity whereof, they made up the Province of Lugdunensis Prima, of which Lions was the Metropolis or principal City. Afterwards, in the division of the French Kingdom of Burgundy, by Charles the Bald; this part thereof, being called the Dukedom of Burgundy, on this side of the Saône, was cantoned into the five Earldoms of Dijon, Chalons, Aunon, Lions, and Maison: whereof the three first laid together by Odo or Eudes King of France, during the Minority of Charles the Simple, were given unto his Brother Richard (both Sons of Robert Earl of Anjou) under the stile and title of Duke of Burgundy. The Issue of this Robert failing, it fell unto another Robert, Son of Hugh Capet, King of France: and the Male-issue failing of that Line also, it was devolved (partly by escheat for want of Heir male; and partly in the Right and Title of the Heir-general) to King John of France, the Son of Philip de Valois, and of Joan his Wife, one of the Daughters of Robert the Third; who with the consent of Charles his eldest Son, firnamed the Wise, gave it unto his second Son Philip, (more worthily firnamed the Hardy) together with the Marriage of the Heir of Flanders, Artois, and the County of Burgundy. An argument of no great Widow, as was judiciously observed by King Lewis the Eleventh. For by this means, those great Estates being united in one person, and afterwards these Estates improved by as prosperous Marriages; this House of Burgundy grew formidable to the Kings themselves, who never left practising against it, till they had brought it to ruin; and once again united this Dukedom to their own Estates, from which at first it was dismembered.

The Dukes of Burgundy.

- 890 1 Richard of Saxony, the second Son of Robert Earl of Anjou, Brother of Eudes, and Father of Rodolph, Kings of France.
- 938 2 Gilbert, the second Son of Richard.
- 964 3 Orto, Son of Hugh Earl of Paris, firnamed the Great, and Brother of Hugh Capet, King of France; was Duke of Burgundy, in right of his Wife the Daughter of Gilbert.
- 976 4 Henry, the Brother of Orto.
- 1001 5 Robert, King of France, Son of Hugh Capet, succeeded in the Dukedom, on the death of his Uncle Henry.
- 1004 6 Robert II. Son of this Robert, and Brother of Henry King of France.
- 1075 7 Hugh, the Nephew of Robert, by his Son Henry, became afterwards a Monk of Clugny.
- 1097 8 Odo, or Orto II. Brother of Hugh.
- 1102 9 Hugh II. Son of Orto the Second.
- 1124 10 Odes, or Orto III. Son of Hugh the Second.
- 1165 11 Hugh III. the Companion, but great Enemy of our Richard the First, in the VVars of the Holy Land.
- 1193 12 Odes, or Orto IV. Son of Hugh the Third.
- 1218 13 Hugh IV. an Adventurer with King Lewis the Ninth in the Holy Land.
- 1273 14 Robert III. Son of Hugh IV. which Robert was the Father of Margaret, the VVife of Lewis Huin, King of France and Navarre, and of Joan, the VVife of Philip de Valois, French King, and Grandmother of Philip the Hardy, after Duke of Burgundy.
- 1308 15 Hugh V. Son of Robert the Third.
- 1315 16 Eudes, the Brother of Hugh, was Earl of Burgundy also, in right of his VVife.
- 1349 17 Philip, the Grandchild of Eudes by his only Son Philip, Duke and Earl of Burgundy, by descent, (who if he had lived, had been also Earl of Flanders and Artois, in right of Margaret his VVife.) But dying young without

- without Issue, he was succeeded in all his Titles and Estates, by
- 1363 18 Philip II. firnamed the Hardy, Son of John King of France, Son of Philip de Valois, and of Joan Daughter of Robert the third, by King John his Father, with the consent of Charles the 9th, his Brother; (in whom the right of this Dukedom was then pretended to remain) made Duke of Burgundy, and married Margaret Daughter of Lewis de Malain (and consequently Heir of Flanders, and the County of Burgundy) the Widow of his Predecessor.
- 1404 19 John firnamed the Proud, Son of Philip the second, Duke and Earl of Burgundy, and Earl of Flanders and Artois.
- 1419 20 Philip III. firnamed the Good, who added most of the Neiberlands to his Estate.
- 1467 21 Charles the Warlike, Earl of Charolais, Son by Philip the Good. After whose death, slain by the Switzers at the battel of Nancy, Lewis the eleventh seized upon this Dukedom, An. 1476. pretending an Escheat thereof, for want of Heir males; and so uniting it for ever to the Crown of France: as by like colour of Escheat, King John had formerly entred on it, and given it unto Philip his younger Son, to the prejudice of the Earls of Euwen, descended from the daughter and heir of Lewis Huin, and of Margaret his Wife, the elder Sister of the Mother of the said King John.

Of the great VVealth and Potency of these last Dukes of Burgundy, we shall speak further when we come to the description of Belgium: the accession whereof to their Estates, made them equal to most Kings in Christendom. But for their Arms, which properly belonged to them as Dukes of Burgundy, they were Benaisins of Or and Azure a Border Gules. Which Coat is usually marshalled in the Scutcheons of the Kings of Spain; that of the Earldom being omitted, though in their possession. The reasons of which are probably (for I go but by guess) partly because this being the older and Paternal Coat, comprehends the other; and partly to keep on foot the memory of this Title to the Dukedom itself, in right of which he holdeth such a great Estate.

22. The County of Burgundy.

THE County of BURGUNDY hath on the East, the Mountain Jour, which parts it from Switzerland; on the West, the Dutchy of Burgundy, from which divided by the Saône; on the North, a branch of the Mountain Vange, which runneth betwixt it and Lorraine; on the South, La Bresse. It is reckoned to be 90 miles in length, about 60 in breadth: and with the Provinces of Dauphine, La Bresse, and Provence, made up the Dukedom of Burgundy beyond the Saône; on the Eastern side of which it is wholly situate. This part thereof, now generally called the French Comptee, or the Free County, be cause not under the command of the French Kings; but living in a more free Estate than any Subjects of that Kingdom.

The County in some parts very Mountainous, but those Mountains yielding excellent Vineyards, and having, in recompence of a little barrenness, an intermixture of most pleasing and fruitful Valleys, swelling with plenty of all natural commodities useful unto the life of man; and for the variety of fresh Streams; and delightful Riverets, inferior only to the Duchy.

The principal Towns and Cities of it are, 1. Besanzon, called by Cesar, Vesontio, then the chief City of the Sequani, as afterwards the Metropolis of the Province constituted, Maxima Sequanorum; by consequence an Archbishops See. Seated betwixt two Mountains on the banks of the River Doux, by which it is almost encompassed; such artificial Fortifications being added to it, as make it very strong both by Art and Nature. But this is an Imperial City, not subject to the Government and Command of the Earls of Burgundy; honoured with a small University, founded here An. 1540. by Pope Julius the second, and Charles the fifth. 2. Dole, seated on the same River Doux; for riches, strength, and beauty, to be preferred before any in all the County; of which it is the Parliament-City, and consequently of most resort for dispatch of business. Anciently it was an University for the study of the Civil Laws; but now the University is devoured by a College of Jesuits: who fearing left the Doctrine of the Reformed Churches might creep in amongst the people, not only have debarr'd them the use of the Protestants Books; but have expressly forbid them to talk of GOD, either in a good fort or in a bad. 3. Salines, so called from its salt Fountains, out of which came the greatest part of the Earls Revenue: in which respect, or that it was the title of Orto the Son of Frederick Barbarts, before he did attain the Earldom; the Earls of Burgundy since that time, and the Emperors of Germany, in their right, retain the name of Lords of Salines, in their usual Title. A City honoured for a while with the Seat of the Parliament, removed thither from Dole by King Lewis the eleventh, at such time as he held this Country, be holding to him (being a wife and politic Prince) for many wholom Ordinances, still observed amongst the 4. Poligny, the Baillie of the Bovay; as 5. Vesvial is of the Higher Burgundy. 6. Arbois, noted for the best Wines, and 7. Luxodol, for medicinal Baths. 8. Nazareth, on the borders of Switzerland, fortified with a very strong Castle; the ordinary feat and retreat from business, of the first Prince of Orange, of the House of Chalons, who had great possessions in this Country. 9. Gray, 10. Chastel-Chaillon, 11. Quingey, 12. Orgelet. Here is also the great and famous Abbey of Clugny, near the Town of Beaune; out of which of many Monasteries in the VVestern Church, had their first Original.

The old Inhabitants of this County, were the Sequani, a potent Nation, contending with the Hedui and Auverni, for the Sovereignty of Gaul, till the Frife was ended by the Romans, under whom it made, together with Switzerland, the Province of Maxima Sequanorum. In the declining of which Empire, it fell to the Burgundians; and by Rodolph the last King of the French, the Kingdom of Burgundy was given to Comade the second Emperor of Germany. After that, reckoned as a part of the German Empire, and governed by such Earls or Provincial Officers, as those Emperors sent thither. Orto of Flanders, Son to a Sister of the Emperor Comade, was the first that held it as Proprietary, the other three whom Paradise sets before him in his Catalogue of the Earls of Burgundy, being merely official. It was first united to the Duchy, by the marriage of D. Eudes, with Joan the Countess. But no Issue coming out of this bed, it fell into the House of Flanders; and with the Heir of Flanders, unto Philip the Hardy, the first Duke hereof, of the Royal Race of Valois, An. 1369. Philip the Grandchild of this Philip, united most of the Belgick Provinces unto his Estate: after whose death, and the death of Charles his Son, at the Battel of Nancy, the Duchy was surprized by King Lewis the eleventh, as holden of the Crown of France, escheated to him for want of Heirs-males. But the County, holden of the Empire, though subdued also by this Lewis, was restored again to Mary the Daughter and Heiress Charles, continuing hitherto in her Issue; as appears evidently by this Catalogue of.

The Earls of Burgundy.

- 1101 1 Orto Guillaume, the first Earl of Burgundy by the power and aid of Robert King of France.
- 1118 2 Reinald, Cousin and Heir of Orto.
- 1157 3 Frederick Barbarossa, Emperor, in right of Beatrix his Wife, Daughter of Earl Reinald, was Earl of Burgundy.
- 1183 4 Orto, the youngest Son of Frederick.
- 1200 5 Orto II. Duke of Meranie, part of the Province of Tirol in Germany, was Earl of Burgundy in right of Beatrix his Wife, the Daughter of Orto the first.
- 1208 6 Stephen, Earl of Chalon, next Heir of Gerard of Vienne, and Joan his Wife, the second Daughter of Orto the first, and Sister of Beatrix; acknowledged by his Faction there, for Earl of Burgundy, in the life of Orto the second, whom he dispossessed, and left the same unto his Son, to the prejudice of Alice the Daughter of Orto.
- 1234 7 John, Son of Stephen de Chalons.
- 1269 8 Hugh the Son of John, married to Alice Daughter of Orto of Meranie; so getting in that pretension also.
- 1279 9 Othelin, the Son of Hugh, Earl of Artois in right of Maud his Wife, Daughter of Robert Earl of Artois.
- 1315 10 Philip the Long, King of France; Earl of Burgundy and Artois, in right of Joan his Wife, Daughter and Heir of Othelin.
- 1331 11 Eudes, Duke of Burgundy, Husband of Joan of France, the eldest Daughter of King Philip the Long, and of Joan the Countess.
- 1349 12 Philip, Duke and Earl of Burgundy, Grandchild of Eudes, and of Joan his wife, by their Son Philip.
- 1361 13 Margaret, the Widow of Lewis Earl of Flanders, and second Daughter of Philip the Long, and of Joan the Countess, was Countess of Burgundy and Artois, after the death of her Cousin Philip.
- 14 Lewis de Malain, Earl of Flanders by his Father, and of Burgundy and Artois, by his Mother.
- 1383 15 Philip II. called the Hardy, Duke of Burgundy, by the gift of King John his Father, with the consent and approbation of his Brother Charles the fifth, was Earl of Burgundy, Flanders, and Artois; as also, Duke of Nevers and Reibel, in right of Margarine his Wife, sole Daughter of Lewis de Malain.
- 1404 16 Amoy the Proud, Duke and Earl of Burgundy, his younger Brother Philip, succeeding in the Earldoms of Nevers and Reibel,
- 1419 17 Philip III. called the Good, Duke and Earl of Burgundy.
- 1467 18 Charles the Warlike, Duke and Earl of Burgundy.

- 1476 19 Mary, the Daughter of Charles, married to Maximilian of Austria, Son of Frederick the third, Emperor of Germany; in which honour he succeeded his Father.
- 1482 20 Philip IV. Son of Mary and Maximilian, King of Castile, in right of his Wife Joan, daughter to Ferdinand and Isabel, King of Castile, &c.
- 1506 21 Charles, the Son of Philip, King of Spain, and Emperor of Germany, by the name of Charles the fifth.
- 1558 22 Philip V. of Burgundy, and the second of Spain.
- 23 Philip VI. of Burgundy, and the third of Spain.
- 24 Philip VII. of Burgundy, and the fourth of Spain; in whom resteth the possession of the County of Burgundy, and the Earldom of Charollois; herein not troubled by the French, upon the death of Charles the Warlike; partly, because it was accounted as a Feif of the Empire; but principally, for fear of giving offence to the Cantons of Switzerland, upon whom it bordereth: jealous enough already of the greatness and power of France; and so not willing to admit such a potent Neighbour.

The Arms of this Earldom are Azure, a Lion rampant Or, Semé of Billets Argent.

23. The Islands in the Aquitain and Gallick Ocean.

HAVING thus took a view of the several Provinces within the Continent of France, let us next look upon the ISLANDS which belong unto it, dispersed in the Mediterranean Sea, and the Western Ocean. Those in the Mediterranean Sea, are of little note; as 1. the Isles of Eres, and 2. Ponague, lying against Provence: 3. Maguelone, lying against Languedoc: and 4. L'Anguade, betwixt both, at the mouth of the Rhosne: of which there is nothing to be said, but that those of Eres are thought to be the Stoechades of Ptolomy; and his Blasphemy, to be Anguade. And if the Isles of Eres be the same with the Stoechades, then one of them must be the Lerina which we find in Pliny: of most note afterwards for a Monastery founded in it, which gave name to Vincentius Lerinensis, or rather Lirinensis, as most VVriters call him: the Island now called Insula Sancti Honorati, or Saint Honoratus, as Massons telleth us. And of as little note in the Western Ocean, are Belle Isle, against Vannes in Bretagne; the Isle de Dieu, having in it two or three good Villages: and Marmonville, plentiful in Salt, and beautified with a Monastery called the White Abby. Of which three last, that of Belle Isle hath been of late so fortified by Art, as of old by Nature, that it is thought to be impregnable: the Abbey of the last endowed with so plentiful a Revenue, that it was thought a competent preferment for Antonine of Bonbon, base Brother to King Henry the Fourth, to be made Lord Abbot of the same. Those of most note are, 1. Oleron, and 2. Re, on the Coast of Aquitain; and those of 3. Jersey, 4. Gernsey, 5. Sarky, and 6. Alderney, on the shores of Normandy: Of which, the four last are under the Kings of England; the rest possessed by the French.

I. O. I. E.

1. OLERON is an Island situate over against the Province of Xaintoigne, and South unto the Ile of Ree, from which little distant. It is the biggest of the two, and makes yearly a very great quantity of Salt, where-with most of the Provinces of the Western Ocean use to be furnished. But it is easie of access, and not very defensible; which makes it of less note both in ancient and modern stories. The principal Town of it is called Oleron, by the name of the Island. One thing therein for which indeed this Island is of special fame, and that is, that the Maritime Laws, which for near 500 years have generally been received by all the States of the Christian World which frequent the Ocean, (the Rhodian Laws being antiquated and worn out of use) for regulating of Sea-affairs, and deciding of Maritime Controversies, were declared and established here, and from thence called the Laws of Oleron. And here they were declared and established by King Richard the First of England, as Lord Paramount of the Seas, immediately on his return from the Holy Land: this Island being then in his possession, as a Member of his Dukedom of Aquitain: Quidam Leges & Statuta per Dominum Richardum quondam Regem Angliæ in reditu a Terra Sancta, correctæ fuerunt, interpretatæ, declaratæ, & in Insula de Oleron publicatæ & nominatæ in Gallica Lingua La Loy d'Oleron, &c. faith an old Record which I find cited in a MS. Discourse of my late learned Friend Sir John Burroughs, (once Keeper of the Records in the Tower of London, but afterwards Principal King of Arms, by the name of Garter) entitled, The Sovereignty of the British Seas. So powerful were the Kings of England in the former times, as to give Laws to all that traded on the Ocean.

2. The Isle of REE is situate over against Rochel: to which it served for an Out-work on that side thereof. It is in length ten English miles, and about half as much in breadth, well fortified with deep Marishes at the entries of it; to which the many Salt-pits every where intermingled, add a very great strength. Chief places in it are, 1. La Butte de Mont, 2. St. John de Mont, 3. St. Hillary, 4. St. Martins, the largest and strongest of them all; from whence the whole Island hath sometimes been called St. Martins. After the taking of this Town by Lewis XIII. An. 1622. (the Duke of Soubize then commanding in it for those of Rochel) it was very well fortified; and since made unfortunately famous for the defeat of the English Forces under the Command of George Duke of Buckingham. First thither to recover the Town and Island, on the instigation of Soubize, who before had lost it, An. 1628.

3. JARSET, by Antonine called Casarea; situate about ten miles from the Coast of Normandy, within the view and prospect of the Church of Constance, part of which Diocese it was: in length containing 11 miles, 6 in breadth, and in circuit about 33. It is generally very fruitful of Corn, whereof they have not only enough for themselves, but some over-plus to barter at St. Malo, with the Spanish Merchants: and of an Air not very much disposed to Discaise, unless it be an Ague in the end of Harvest, which they call Les Settembriets. The Country stands much upon Inclosures, the hedges of the ground well stored with Apples, and those Apples making store of Sider, which is their ordinary drink: watered with many pleasant Rivulets, and good store of Fish-ponds, yielding a Carp for tast and largeness inferior unto none in Europe, excepting those of Gernsey, which generally are somewhat bigger, but not better relished. The people, for the most part, more inclinable to Husbandry, than to Trades or Merchandize; and therein differing very little from those of Gernsey, who are more for Merchandize than Tillage. It containeth in it 12 Parishes or Villages, having Churches in them, besides the Mansions of the Seignours, and the chief men of the Country. The principal is St. Hillary, where is the Caba, or Court of Justice for all the Island. It is about the bigness of an ordinary Market-Town in England: situate on the edge of a little Bay, fortified on the one side with a small Block-house called Mont St. Aubin; but on that side which is next the Town, with a very strong Castle, called Fort Elizabeth, situate upon craggy Rocks, and compassed with two arms of the Sea: so named from Queen Elizabeth, who built it to assure the Island against the French, and furnished it with thirty pieces of Ordnance, and all other necessaries. There is also on the East-side, opposite to the City of Constance, high mounted on steep and craggy Rocks, the strong Castle of Mont Orgueille; of great antiquity, repaired by King Henry the Fifth; now furnished with forty pieces of Cannon, and made the ordinary residence of the Governours for the Kings of England.

4. ON the North-West of Jersey, lyeth the Island of GERNSEY, called Sarnia by Antoninus; in form Triangular, each side of nine miles in length. The Country is of as rich a soil as the other of Jersey, but not so well cultivated and manured; the poorer people here, being more given to Mammothers, (especially to the knitting of Stockings and VVatcoats) and the rich to Merchandize, many of which, are Masters of good stout Barques, with which they traffick into England, and other places. The whole Island containeth ten Villages with Churches; the principal of which, Saint Peter's Port, a very neat and well built Town, with a safe Peer for the benefit of Merchants, and the securing of the Haven, capable of handsome Barques: a Market-Town, beautified with a very fair Church, and honoured with the Pladerie, or Court of Justice. Opposite whereto, in a little Ile, standeth the Castle of Cornet, taking up the whole circuit and dimensions of it; environed on all sides with the Sea, having one entrance only, and that very narrow: well fortified with works of Art, and furnished with no less than 80 pieces of Ordnance for the defence of the Island, but chiefly, to command the adjoining Harbour, capable of 500 as good Ships as any fail on the Ocean. A piece of great importance to the Realm of England, and might prove utterly destructive of the Trade hereof, if in the hands of any Nation that were strong in shipping. For that cause made the Ordinary Seat of the English Governours, though of late times not so much honoured with the presence of those Governours, as a place of that consequence ought to be. Pertaining unto Gernsey, are two little Isles, the one called Jet-bow, the Governours Park, wherein are some few fallow-Deer, and good plenty of Conies: the other named Arme, some three miles in compass: a dwelling heretofore of Franciscan Friars; now not inhabited, but by Pheasants; of which, amongst the shrubs and bushes, there is very good store.

5. ALDERNET, by Antonine called Arice, by the French, Avignin, and Auney; is situate over against the Cape of the Lexandri, in the Dukedom of Normandy, which the Mariners at this day call the Hagge: distant from which, but six miles only. Besides many dwelling-houses scattered up and down, there is one pretty Town or Village of the same name with the Island, consisting of about an hundred Families; and having, not far off, an Harbour made in the fashion of a Semi-circule, which they call La Crabbe. The whole about 8 miles in compass; of very difficult access, by reason of the high Rocks and Precipices which encompass it on every side, and with with a small force easily defensible, if thought worth attempting.

6. And so is also SARK, the adjoining Island, being in compass six miles; not known by any special name unto the Ancients, and to say truth, not peopled till the fifth year of Q. Elizabeth: who then granted it in Fee-farm to Helier de Carteret, the Seigneur of St. Oen, in the Isle of Jarley, who from thence planted it, and made Estates out of it to several Occupants, so that it may contain now about 50 Households. Before which time it served only for a Common, or Beasts Pasture, to those of Gernsey: save that there was an Hermitage, and a little Chappel, for the use of fish as the solitariness of the place invited to those retirements.

These two last Islands are subject to the Governour of Gernsey; all four, to the Crown of England: holden in right of the Dukedom of Normandy, to which they anciently belonged; and of which now the sole remainder is in the power of the English. Attempted often by the French, (the two first I mean) since they seized on Normandy, but always with repulse and loss: the people being very affectionate to the English Government, under which they enjoy very ample Privileges, which from the French they could not hope for. Their Language is the Norman French, (though the better sort of them speak the English also) their Law, the Grand Coutumier of Normandy, attempted and applied to the use of this people in their lists and bulwarks, by the Baylis and Justiciars of the two chief Islands. Their Religion, for the main, is that of the Reformed Churches: the Government in Jarley, by the Dean thereof, Suffragan heretofore to the Bishop of Constance, now to the Bishop of Winchester; in Gernsey, by a mixt Consistory of Clergy and Lay Elders, according to the New-Model of Geneva: a Government first introduced in both Islands, An. 1565, being the eighth year of Queen Elizabeth, and abolished again in Jarley, An. 1619, being the seventeenth of King James.

But to return again to the story of France, thorow which we have now made our progress both by Sea and Land: It took this name from the Franks or French, a German people, who in the wane of the Roman Empire possessed themselves of it: not mentioned by that name by Cæsar, Strabo, Ptolemy, or any of the more ancient Writers. Nor was it taken up by them, for ought appeareth, till an hundred years after the death of Ptolemy: the first express mention of them, occurring in the Reign of Gallicus, then ransacking the Coasts of Gaul, and joyning with Posthumus the Rebel, against that Emperor. Afterwards often spoken of in the course of the Roman stories, under the Empire of Claudius, Probus, Dioclesian, and the Sons of Constantine: though only in the way of pillage and depredation. Their habitation in those times, was from the meeting of the Rhene with the River Moenus, not far from Frankford, where they confined upon the Almans, to the German Ocean: containing the particular Nations of the Bructeri, Sicambri, Salii, Chernisii, Frisii, and Tencteri, besides some others of less note: and taking up the Countries of Westphalen, Bergen, Mark, and to much of Cleve as lieth on the Dutch side of the Rhene, the Langravedom of Hessia, the Dutchy of Guelder, the Provinces of Zuuperen, Overicht, over-ysse, both Friesland, and to much of Holland as lieth on the same side of the Rhene. United in the name of Franks, to shew that liberty or freedom from the yoke of servitude which the Romans had endeavored to impose upon them; and wherewith all the Nations on the other side of the River were supposed to suffer: Governed by Dukes, till the year 420, when Pharamond first took upon himself the name of King. Mervoveus their third King, having dispossessed the Sons of Clodion, the Son and Successor of Pharamond, was the first that fixed his seat in Gaul: when seeing the Romans on the one side put to the worst by Theoderick and the Goths; and on the other side by the Burgundians, they passed over the Rhene, and possessed themselves of the Province of Germania Secunda, containing all the Belgick Provinces on the French side of that River, together with the District of Coleu, Gulick, and the rest of Cleve, then passing in the account of Gaul, his Victories and Fortunes were inherited by Chilperic, his Son and Successor, who added Picardy, Champaine, and the Isle of France, to the former Conquest; took Paris, and made it the seat of his Kingdom. Afterwards, when they had fully seated themselves here, and thereby opened a free passage to the rest of the Country, they quickly made themselves Masters of all that which formerly had been possessed by the Romans; whom they outed of their last hold in Soissons, under Clouis their fifth King, who also took Aquitain, and the parts adjoining, from the Vist-Goths, or Goths of Spain: for these and many signal Victories against the Almans, deservedly surnamed the Great: but greater in submitting to the Faith of CHRIST, and receiving Baptism, than by all his Victories. Childebert and Cloataire, the Sons of this Clouis, vanquished the Burgundians adding that Kingdom to their own: as Theoderic his Grandchild, King of Metz, or Austrasia, did the Country of Provence, resigned unto him by Amalsunda, Queen of the Ostro-Goths, or Goths of Italy, by whom it had been wrested from the Goths of Spain. In the person of Cloataire the second, the Realm of France impropriately dismembered into many Kingdoms, amongst the Children of Clouis the first; that is to say, the Kingdoms of France, Soissons, Orleans, and Austrasia, (of which, Orleans and Austrasia were of long continuance) were again united: whose Successor, Dagobert the first, was the last considerable Prince of the Merovingians. After this time, the reputation of the French Kings of this Line, began to diminish, scarce doing any thing that might enable and commend them to succeeding Ages; or leaving any Monument behind them, but their empty Names: which I shall represent in the following Catalogue, according to their several times: first taking notice, that though the Kings of this first Race did many times divide the Kingdom, as before was said; yet none of them were called Kings of France, but those that had their Royal Seat in the City of Paris, the rest being called only Kings of Soissons, Metz, or Orleans, according to the name of their principal Cities. And therefore, leaving those to their proper places, we will here only take a survey of those who passed in the common climate for the Kings of France.

The Kings of France, of the French or Merovingian Line.

A. Ch.

- 449 1 Mervoveus, Master of the Horse to Clodion the Son of Pharamond; from whom this Line of Kings were called Merovingians. 10.
- 459 2 Chilperic, the Son of Mervoveus. 26.
- 485 3 Clouis, the first Christian King of the French, 30.
- 515 4 Childebert, eldest Son of Clouis, his other Brethren reigning in their several places. 45.
- 560 5 Cloataire, Brother of Childebert, first King of the Soissons, afterwards sole King of the French.

- 565 6 Cherebert, Son of Cloataire.
- 574 7 Chilperic II. King of Soissons, and Brother of Cherebert, whom he succeeded in the Kingdom, 14.
- 588 8 Cloataire II. Son of Chilperic the second. 44.
- 632 9 Dagobert, Son of Cloataire the second. 14.
- 645 10 Clouis II. Son of Dagobert. 17.
- 663 11 Cloataire III. Son of Cloataire the second. 4.
- 667 12 Chilperic III. Brother of Cloataire the third, and Son of Clouis the second.
- 680 13 Theoderick, Brother of Chilperic. 14.
- 694 14 Clouis III. Son to Theoderick. 5.
- 698 15 Childebert II. Brother to Clouis the third. 15.
- 716 16 Dagobert II. Son of Childebert the second. 5.
- 722 17 Chilperic IV. Son of Childebert the second, and Brother of Dagobert the second, opposed by Charles Martel in behalf of Cloataire the fourth Son of Theoderick, and Brother of Childebert, the second. 5.
- 727 18 Theoderick II. Son of Dagobert the second. 15.
- 742 19 Chilperic V. Son of Theoderick the second, the last of the Merovingian Family; deposed by Pepin, Son to Charles Martel; the Pope giving approbation to his proceedings.

This Pepin and his Father Martel, were Mayres of the Palace to the former Kings; which Mayres were originally Controllers of the Kings House, and had nothing to do with the affairs of State. But Cloataire the third, to ease himself and his Successors of a burden so weighty, made the Mayres Vicars-general of his Empire. From henceforward the Kings followed their pleasures shewing themselves only on May-day; and then seated in a Chariot, adorned with Flowers, and drawn by four Oxen. As for the Mayres, he opened Paquets, heareth and dispatcheth Foreign Ambassadors, giveth remedy to the Complaints of the Subjects, maketh Laws, and repealeth them. An Authority somewhat like that of the Præfetti Prætorii, in the declining times of the Roman Empire; or that of the Sultans under the Mahometan Caliphs, and the Vice-Roys of the old Egyptian Pharaohs. An Office which had been long born by the Ancestors of this Martel, ever since the reign of Cloataire the second: in whose time the Palatine or Mayre was one Arnulphus, descended lineally from Utile, the second Son of Theodon the first Duke, and Nephew of Adalgerius the last king of the Boiarians, or Bavarians. Which Utile being a Military Prince, and having done good service to Theoderick the first King of Austrasia, or Metz, against the Danes, then grievously infecting the Coasts of the Lower Germany; was by him made Warden of those Marches, honoured with the Marriage of his Daughter Plithilda, and liberally endowed with fair possessions in that Tract. The fourth from Utile was this Arnulphus, the first Mayre of this House; which Office having long enjoyed, he resigned it to Ausgerius his eldest Son, (the first who drew unto himself the managery of the whole Estate) and bidding farewell to the affairs of the world, became a Priest, and died Bishop of Metz, Anno 641. Afterwards Canonized a Saint. Ausgerius dying in the year 679, left his Authority and Office to his Nephew Martin, Son of Ferdolphus his younger Brother. But he being slain by Ebroinus, one of the Competitors, who he while enjoyed it: Pepin surnamed the Fat, Son of Ausgerius, revenging his Cousins death upon Ebroinus, and against him, obtained that honour for himself. And having much advanced the affairs of France, by the conquest of the Sueves and Frisions, died in the year 714. Succeeded to in this great Office, after his decease, (for Grimold his only lawful Son, and Theobaldus the son of Grimold, whom he had successively substituted in the same, died not long before him) by Charles his natural son, begotten on Albeida his Concubine: from his Martial Prowess called Martel. VVho in his time did to the Kings of France great service, especially in routing that vast Army of the Moors and Saracens, in the Battle of Tours before mentioned: thereby not only freeing France from the present danger, but adding Languedoc to the Crown, formerly in possession of the Goths and Moors: for which he was created Duke or Prince of the French: yet would he not usurp the Kingdom, or the Title of King, though both at his disposal wholly; it being his ordinary saying, that he had rather rule a King, than be one.

To him succeeded Caroleman his eldest son, An. 741, who held the Office but a year, and then left it to his Brother Pepin. VVho being of less moderation than his Father was, made such use of his Power, that partly by that means, and partly under colour of an election, confirmed by Pope Zachary the first, he took the Kingdom to himself; and the unfortunate King Chilperic had his Poll shaven, and was thrust into a Monastery. For this investiture, both Pepin and Charles his Son, did many good services for the Pope, destroying, on their quarrel, the Kingdom of the Lombards, and giving them most of the Lands which formerly belonged unto the Exarchs of Ravenna. And on the other side, the Popes to requite these courtesies, confirmed the former in this Kingdom, by their Papal Power (which then began to bear some sway in the Christian World) and gave the last (besides the opportunity of attaining the VVestern Empire) the Title of Most Christian King, continued ever since unto his Successors. And, to say truth, he well deserved those honours, had they been far greater, by many Victories obtained against the Enemies of the Gospel; the several Heathens by his means converted to the Faith of CHRIST; the great abilities he had of Estate and Judgment, enabling him to support the Majesty of the Roman Empire. For he not only was sole Monarch of the Kingdom of France, not parcelled out as formerly, and in times succeeding, into several petit Kingdoms and Principalities, but had added thereto, by his own proper virtue, the greatest part of Italy, the best part of Germany, all Belgium, the two Tamonia's, and a great part of Spain.

But this vast Empire falling into weak hands, which were not able enough to manage it, decayed in as little time as it was in raising: partly by the unnatural ambition of the Sons of King Lewis the Godly, the next Successor of this Charles; who to make themselves all Kings, first deposed their Father, and then divided his Estate amongst them, into the Kingdoms of Italy, Burgundy, France, Lorraine, and Germany: four of which falling at last into the hands of strangers, ceased to be French, and passed into such Families as proved the greatest Enemies of the Crown of France: partly by alienating the best and goodliest Provinces of France itself, never again united till these latter days; which made the French Kings less considerable both at home and abroad; which we have touched upon before: and partly by the weakness and unworthiness of the Kings of his Race, there being no question to be made, but Lewis the Stammering, Charles the Bald, the Greeks, and the Simple, would have found better Attributes, if they had deserved them. For by this means, the issue of this brave Prince grew so despicable in the eyes of their subjects, that first Endes, the Son of Robert Duke of Angou, and after, Rodolph Duke of Burgundy, the Uncle of Endes (both of the Race of Witmundus, the last Prince of the Saxons, and consequently, both aliens to the House of Charles, possessed themselves severally of the Kingdom. And though they did not hold it long, being deprefsed and over-born by their opposite Factions: yet did they lay a fair ground for Hugh Capet to build his hopes on: Who being Son of Hugh the Great Countable of France, and Earl of Paris, the Son of Robert Duke of Anjou, younger Brother of Eudes, and near Kinsman of Rodolph; never left practising his party in the Realm of France, till he had got possession of the Regal Diadem, wherewith two Princes of this House had been invested formerly by the like Elections. But for the Kings of this second Race, founded by two brave Princes, but on the unjust grounds of an Usurpation they are these that follow.

The second Race of the Kings of France, of the Carolinian or Boiarian Line.

A. Ch.

- 751 1 Pepin, the Son of Charles Martel, succeeded in the Office of Mayor, An. 742, and having got the Regal Crown, vanquished the Lombards, made the Boiarians Tributary, and crushed the Saxons. 18.
- 769 2 Charles, surnamed the Great, the Son of Pepin, subdued the Kingdom of the Lombards and Saxons; conquered the Boiarians and Avars, and vanquished the Saracens of Spain: Crowned Emperor of the West, upon Christmas-day, by Pope Leo the 3. An. 800. 46.
- 815 3 Lewis the Godly, Son of Charles King of France, and Emperor, the last sole Monarch of the French, depofed by his ambitious and unnatural Sons: the Empire of the French, after his decease, being divided into the Kingdoms of Italy, Burgundy, Germany, France, and Lorraine; and France it self distracted into many Sovereign Estates and Principalities. 26.
- 841 4 Charles II. surnamed Calvus, or the Bald, youngest Son of Lewis, King of France, and Emperor; vanquished by Charles the Gros, in the War of Italy. 38.
- 879 5 Lewis II. surnamed Balbus, or the Stammering, Son of Charles the Bald, King of France, and Emperor. 38.
- 881 6 Lewis III. with Caroloman his Brother, the base Sons of Lewis the Stammering, Usurpers of the Throne, in the infancy of Charles the Simple.
- 886 7 Charles III. surnamed Craffus, or the Gros, King of Germany, and; Emperor called into France, and elected King, during the minority of Charles the Simple. 5.
- 891 8 Odo, or Eudes, Son of Robert Earl of Anjou, of the Race of Witigundus, the last King of the Saxons; elected by an opposite Faction, ousted Charles the Gros. 9.
- 900 9 Charles IV. surnamed Simplex, or the Simple, the Posthumus Son of Lewis the Stammerer, restored unto the Throne of his Fathers; which after many troubles raised against him by Robert the second, Earl of Anjou, (whom he slew in Battle) he was forced to resign. 27.
- 927 10 Rodolph of Burgundy, Son of Richard Duke of Burgundy, the Brother of Eudes, succeeded on the resignation of Charles the Simple. 2.

- 929 11. Lewis IV. Son of Charles the Simple, surnamed Trasnarine, in regard that during his Fathers troubles he had lived in England, restored unto the Regal Throne on the death of Rodolph; opposed therein by Hugh Earl of Paris and Anjou, the Nephew of King Eudes by his Brother Robert before mentioned.
- 958 12 Lotharius, Son of Lewis the 4. disturbed in his possession by Hugh Capet, the eldest Son of the said Hugh, on the pretension of that House, by which at last he got the Kingdom.
- 977 13 Lewis V. Son of Lotharius, the last King of the House of Charles the Great. After whose death, (being King only for a year) the Crown was seized on by Hugh Capet; Charles Duke of Lorraine, Brother of Lotharius, and Uncle unto Lewis the fifth, being pretermitted.

And now we are come to the present Race of the Kings of France, founded in Hugh Capet; so called from the greatness of his head; Son of Hugh the Great, Earl of Paris and Anjou, and Grandchild of Robert the second, Earl of Anjou: which Robert was the Brother of Eudes, and Cousin-german of Rodolph, Kings of France. Who partly by his own wits, but chiefly by the weakness of the Mungrel-Issue of Charles the Great, having got the Diadem, transmitted it unto his posterity; the Crown descending in a direct Line from Father to Son, till the death of Lewis the tenth, surnamed Hutin. But here we are to understand, that the Realm of France was at that time shut up within narrower bounds than it is at present: the large and rich Countries of Champagne, Normandy, Bretagne, Anjou, Poitou, Languedoc, and the great Dukedom of Aquitain; besides those Provinces which constituted and made up the Kingdom of Burgundy, being aliened and dismembered from it. How they became reduced to the Crown again, will be discerned in the ensuing History, and Succession of.

The third Race of the Kings of France, of the Capetine or Saxon Line.

A. Ch.

- 988 1 Hugh Capet, of whom sufficiently before. 9.
- 997 2 Robert, the Son of Hugh Capet, Duke of Burgundy also. 34.
- 1031 3 Henry, the eldest Son of Robert, his younger Brother Robert being settled in the Dukedom of Burgundy. 39.
- 1061 4 Philip, the Son of Henry, who added Berry to the Crown. 49.
- 1110 5 Lewis VI. Son of Philip, surnamed the Croft. 28.
- 1138 6 Lewis VII. Son of Lewis the Sixth, an Adventurer in the War of the Holy Land; as also was his Son and Successor.
- 1181 7 Philip II. surnamed Augustus, by whom Normandy, Aquitain, and Anjou, with their several Appendices, were taken from King John of England. 43.
- 1224 8 Lewis VIII. Son of Philip Augustus. 3.
- 1227 9 Lewis IX. surnamed the Saint, renowned for his Wars in Egypt, and the Holy Land. He restored Guienne to the English, and added the Earldoms of Tholouse and Alascun, to the Crown of France. 44.
- 1271 10 Philip III. Son of Lewis the ninth. 15.

- 1286 11 Philip IV. surnamed the Fair, King also of Navarre, in the right of the Lady Joan his Wife. 28.
- 1314 12 Lewis X. surnamed Hutin, King of Navarre in right of his Mother, whom he succeeded in that Kingdom, An. 1305, after whose death the Kingdom of France was to have descended to Joan his Daughter. 2.
- 1315 13 Philip V. called the Long, Brother of Lewis Hutin, partly by threats, promises, and other practices, caused a Law to pass to which he gave the name of the Salique Law, for dissembling Women from the succession to the Crown; and thereby quite excluded his Brother's Daughter: served in the same kind himself, by his Brother Charles; who following his example, excluded, on the same pretence, his Nieces, Joan, and Margaret the Daughters of Philip. 5.
- 1320 14 Charles IV. but in true account the fifth of that name, most commonly called Charles the Fair, Brother of Philip and Lewis, the two last Kings. After whose death began the Wars of the English for the Crown of France; challenged by King Edward the third, as Son and Heir of Isabel, the Daughter of King Philip the Fair, and Sister to the three last Kings. 7.
- 1328 15 Philip VI. surnamed de Valois, Son of Charles Earl of Valois, the second Son of King Philip the third, and Uncle to the three last Kings, succeeded under colour of the Salique Law: of which Charles it is said, that he was Son to a King, Brother to a King, Uncle to a King, and Father to a King; yet himself was no King. In this Kings days was fought the famous Battle of Cressell, An. 1343. in which the French Army consisted of about 70000 Soldiers; the English of 11800 only: yet the victory fell unto the English; by whose valor fell that day John K. of Bohemia, 11 Princes, 80 Barons, 120 Knights, and 30000 of the common Soldiers. He added unto his Estate, the County Palatine of Champagne, the County of Dauphine, and the City and Earldom of Montpelier. 22.
- 1350 16 John, the Son of Philip de Valois; in whose reign was fought the Battle of Poitiers, wherein Edward the Black Prince, (so called for his black acts upon the French) with an handful of wearied Soldiers, (but 8000 in all) overcame the French Army, consisting of 40000; of which they slew, besides the Nobles, 10000 of the common Soldiers, and took Prisoners King John himself, and Philip his Son, 70 Earls, 50 Barons, and 12000 Gentlemen. 14.
- 1364 17 Charles V. the Son of John; recovered all those places (except only Calice) which the English had before gotten from his Father and Grandfather. He is called commonly Charles the Wise; but Lewis the 11, would by no means allow him that attribute: affirming, that it was but a foolish part to give his younger Brother Philip the Dukedom of Burgundy, and withal, the Heir of Flanders to VVife. And so it proved in the event.
- 18 Charles VI. a weak and distracted Prince; in whose Reign, Henry the fifth of England, called in by the Faction of Burgundy, against that of Orleans, married the Lady Katherine, daughter of this King; and was thereupon made Regent of France during the Kings life, and Her apparent of the Kingdom. But he had first won the great Battle of Agincourt, Anno 1415, in which the English having an Army but of 15000

- vanquished an Army of the French consisting of 52000 men; of which were slain, 5 Dukes, 8 Earls, 25 Lords, 8000 Knights and Gentlemen of note, and 25000 of the Commons; the English losing but one Duke, one Earl, and 600 Soldiers. This unfortunate Prince lost what his Predecessor, Philip the second, had taken from King John of England, and had not been restored by King Lewis the ninth.
- 1423 19 Charles VII. Son of Charles the sixth, after a long and bloody War, recovered from the English (then divided by domestic diffention) all their Lands and Seigniories in France, except Calice only.
- 1461 20 Lewis XI. Son of Charles the seventh, added unto his Crown the Dukedom of Burgundy, the Earldom of Provence, (and therewithal a Title unto Naples and Sicily) and a great part of Picardy. A Prince of so great wants, or such fordid parsimony, that there is found a reckoning in the Chamber of Accounts in Paris, of two millions for new fleeces to his old Doublet; and three half pence for liquor to grease his Boots.
- 1484 21 Charles VIII. Son of Lewis the Elcventh, who quickly won, and as soon lost the Kingdom of Naples; which he laid claim to in the right of the House of Anjou. By the marriage of Anne the Heir of Bretagne, he added that Dukedom to his Crown.
- 1498 22 Lewis XII. Son of Charles, and Grand-son of Lewis Duke of Orleans, (which Lewis was a younger Son of the fifth) succeeded as the next Heir-male of the House of Valois. He dispossessed Ladovick Sforze, the Dutchy of Milvain, and divided the Realm of Naples with Ferdinand the Catholic; but held neither long. By his marriage with Anne of Bretagne, the VVidow of his Predecessor, he confirmed that Dukedom to his House; united after to the Realm by an Act of State. After his death, the English to prevent the growing greatness of Spain, began to clofe in with the French, and grew into great correspondencies with them; insomuch that all the following Kings, until Lewis the 13th. (except Francis the second, a King of one year, and no more) were all Knights of the Garter.
- 1515 23 Francis, Duke of Angouleme, Grand-son of John of Angouleme, one of the younger Sons of the said Lewis Duke of Orleans, succeeded on the death of Lewis the 12th. without issue male. Took Prisoner at the Battle of Pavie, by Charles the fifth, with whom he held perpetual VVars; he being as unwilling to endure a Superior, as the Emperor was to admit an Equal. 32.
- 1547 24 Henry II. Son of Francis, recovered Calice from the English, and drove Charles out of Germany, and took from him Metz, Toul, and Verdun, three Imperial Cities, ever since members of this Kingdom.
- 1559 25 Francis II. Son of Henry the second, King of the Scots also, in the right of Mary his VVife.
- 1560 26 Charles IX. Brother of Francis the second, the Author of the Massacre at Paris. 14.
- 1574 27 Henry III. elected King of Poland, in the life of his Brother, whom he succeeded at his death. The last King of the House of Valois, stripped of his life and Kingdom by the Guisan Faction, called the Holy League. 15.
- 1589 28 Henry IV. King of Navarre, and Duke of Pendefone, succeeded as the next Heir-male

to Henry the 3d. in the right of the House of Bourbon, defended from Robert Earl of Clermont, a younger Son of Lewis the ninth. He ruined the Holy League, cleared France of the Spaniards, into which they had been called by that potent and rebellious Faction; and laid La Bresse into the Crown, together with the Estates of Bearne, and Basque Navarre: and after a ten years time of Peace, was villainously murdered by Ravillac, in the Streets of Paris. 21.

1610 29 Lewis XIII. Son of Henry the Fourth; the most absolute King of France, since the death of Charles the Great. For to the reduction of the scattered and dismembered Provinces, (the work of his many Predecessors) he added the reduction of all the Forts and Garrisons held by the Hugonots in that Kingdom, (three hundred at the least in number) seized on the Dukedom of Bar, and surprized that of Lorraine; both which he held until his death. 32.

1642 30 Lewis XIV. Son of Lewis the 13th. and of the Lady Anne, eldest Daughter of Philip the third of Spain; succeeded at the age of four years, under the Government of his Mother: the 30th. King of the Line of Capet, the 43d. from Charles the Great, and the 64th King of France (or rather of the French) now living.

As for the Government of these Kings, it is merely Regal; or to give it the true name, Despotical; such as that of a Master over his Servants: the Kings Will going for a Law: and his Edicts as valid as a Sentence of the Court of Parliament. Quid principi placuerit Legis habet vigorem, was a Prerogative belonging to the Roman Emperors, as Justinian tells us in his Institutes: and the French Kings descending from Charles the Great, claim it as their own. The Kings Edicts always ending with these binding words, Car tel est nostre plaisir. For such is Our pleasure. And though he sometimes sends his Edicts to be verified, or approved, in the Parliament of Paris; and his Grants and Patents to be ratified in the Chamber of Accounts, there holden; yet this is nothing but a meer formality, and point of circumstance: those Courts not daring to refuse what the King propoeth. It is Car tel est nostre plaisir, which there goeth for Law. And by this intimation of his Royal pleasure, doth he require such Taxes, as the necessity of his affairs, the greediness of his Officers, or the importunity of Suitors, do suggest unto him: the Parity of the Crown being so exhausted by the riot and improvidence of former Princes, that the King hath no other way to maintain his State, decay his Garrisons, reward such as deserve well of him, and support those that depend upon him, but only by laying what he pleaseth on the backs of his Subjects; against which there is no dispute by the Common People, though many times the Great Princes have demurred upon it. And therefore to make them also instrumental to the publick Slavery, the Kings are willing to admit them to some part of their spoils, to give them some Exemption from those common burdens; and to connive at the oppressing of their Tenants, against all good Conscience: that being so privileged themselves, they may not interrupt the King in his Regal Courses.

As for the French Parliaments, or Assembly of the three Estates, which heretofore were of great credit and renown, and looked on as the principal Bulwark of the Publick Liberty, being first discontinued by reason of the sharp and continual Wars which the English made in this Kingdom for the space of 100 years and upwards, they afterward became much weakened by the Policy of K. Lewis the 11. and the Kings succeeding; and finally, by K. Lewis the 13. were laid by for ever. For, finding them to retain something full of their ancient stomach, and apt enough to clash with that absolute Sovereignty which his Predecessors had attained to, he resolved to make no more use of them for the times to come; instead whereof, he ordained another kind of meeting, which he called La Assemblée des Nobles; that is to say, the Assembly of some principal men, composed of some selected persons out of every Order or Estate, (of his own nomination) wherunto should be added some Counsellor out of every one of the eight Courts of Parliament; which, being fewer in number, would not breed such a confusion as the others did, and be withal more pliant and conformable to the Kings desires. Now the eight Courts of Parliament before mentioned, being but as so many Courts of Judicature, (like to ours in Westminster) are these that follow; that is to say, The Parliament 1. Of Paris, comprehending the Countries of France special, Champagne, Picardy, the Provinces and Estates of Anjou, La Beaulle, Berry, Poitou, the Provinces which make up the Dukedom of Bourbon, with the County of Limousin. 2. Of Rouen, for the Dukedom of Normandy. 3. Of Reims, for the Dukedom of Bretagne. 4. Of Bourdeaux, for the whole Dukedom of Aquitaine, (except only Bearne) with the Countries of Limousin, and Perigord. 5. Of Toulouse, for the Earldom of Languedoc and Quercu. 6. Of Aix, for the Earldom of Provence. 7. Of Grenoble, for the Country of Dauphine. And 8. Of Dijon, for the Dukedom of Burgundy, and the small Country of La Bresse; to which is added at late times by King Lewis the 13th. the little Parliament of Paris, for the Country of Bearne. Besides which Parliaments, there are certain other Courts in some principal Cities, called Cours Presidial, resembling those with us at York, and the Marches of Wales, whilst they continued in that Power and Jurisdiction which at first they had. And for the better ordering of the whole Estate, (with reference specially to matters military) it is divided into 12 federal and distinct Governments; that is to say, 1. Of the Ile of France, 2. Burgundy, 3. Normandy, 4. Guienne, 5. Bretagne, Champagne, 7. Picardy, 8. Languedoc, 9. Provence, 10. Dauphine, 11. Limousin, and 12. Orleans, for in this order they were ranked by the late King: over every one of which is placed a Governour, with such authority as the Lords Lieutenants had in England in their several Counties; all of them carrying matters with a very high hand on the common people, and sometimes standing on terms also with the Kings themselves; but instrumental notwithstanding to the common servitude, which hath been laid upon this Nation generally, as before is said.

The Power of the French King over his Subjects, being for ardent, it cannot be, but that his Forces must be very great, and would be greater than they are, but that they dare not trust the common people with the use of Arms, for fear they should refuse to pay the accustomed Taxes, or forsake their Trades, or turn their Farms back upon their Landlords. But for an Essay of what a French King is able to do in this kind, it is said, that Charles the 9th. in Garrisons and several Armies in the field, had 15000 Horse, and 100000 Foot, of his own Nation; besides 50000 Horse and Foot of Swisses, Germans, and others. Nor was this more than what was done by Lewis the 13. within few years past, who had at once five Royal Armies in the field, in Italy, Spain, Germany, and the Belgick Provinces; and kept no fewer than 120000 fighting-men in pay and action, for some years together. Nor did this late King keep up the Military Power of France for Laud-service only, at so high a pitch, but he also brought the Naval Power thereof into estimation. For whereas the French Kings before his time, were very weak and inconsiderable on the Seas, and had scarce any men of War: but what they either hired or borrowed from more Seafaring Nations: this King became so strong in shipping in a little space, (I doubt some neighbouring Princes in the mean time looked not well about them) that he was able to rigge and arm 1000 a full of good Ships, and upwards, fit for any service. But to return again to the power at Land, in which the force of these Kings doth consist especially; it is conceived by some, and affirmed by others, that he is able to bring into the field for a sudden service, no less than 60 Companies of Men of Arms, 20 Cornets of Light Horse, and 5 Companies of Harquebussiers on Horseback, which amount to 10000 in the total; together with 20 Ensigns of French foot, and 40 of Swisses, and yet leave his Garrisons well manned, and his Forts and Frontiers well and sufficiently defended.

What the Revenues are in a State so subject to the will and pleasure of the King, is hard to say; being also more or less, as the times and their occasions vary: according unto which, the Revenues of this Crown have much altered. Lewis the 11. gathered one million and a half of Crowns; Francis the first brought them to 3 millions; his successor, Henry the second, to six; Charles the ninth, to seven; Henry the third, to ten; afterwards they were increased to fifteen. And in the time of Henry the fourth, the Treasurer of the Duke of Mayenne did not shame to say, That his Master had more improved the Revenue of France, than any King had done before him, advancing it from two to five millions sterling. A fair Intrado, but far short of those infinite sums which are exorted from the people; whereof a tenth part comes not clearly to the Kings Exchequer. What need more be said, than that of Lewis the 11. who used to say, that France was a Meadow which he mowed every year, and as often as he lifted: and indeed their Impolitions cannot but be great, since there are no less than 30000 Under Officers employed to gather them. Hence I believe sprung that wish of Maximilian the Emperor, which was, that he (if it were possible) might be a God; and that having two Sons, the eldest might be a God after him; and the second, King of France. And this was also the cause, that in the VVars between Charles the fifth, and Francis the first, when the Emperors Herald had bid defiance to the King, from Charles Emperor of Germany King of Castile, Leon, Aragon, and Naples, Arch-Duke of Austria, &c. with the rest of his Titles; the King commanded the Herald to return the Challenge from Francis King of France; commanding him to repeat France as many times as the other had petty Earldoms in his title. And on the other side of no less bravery and fanie was the saying of the Duke of Alva, who being disswayed by one of his Commanders, from the VVar with the Netherlands, in regard of the great support they were like to have from the Queen of England, the King of Denmark, the Dukes of Saxony and Brunswick, the Earls of Nassau, &c. Tush man! (said he) there will be more Kings and Princes on our side, than theirs; that is to say, the Emperor of Mexico and Peru; the Kings of Naples, Sicily, and Sardinia, the Dukes of Burgundy and Milan, the Earls of Hapsburg, Charolais, &c. But letting pass these flashes and conceits of wit; certain it is, (to say the truth) considering the compactedness thereof within it self, the admirable fertility of the soil, the incredible multitudes of people, and the conveniency of situation betwixt Spain, Italy, and Germany; the name of France might balance all the others Titles.

The chief Orders of Knighthood in this Kingdom, were first of the Garter, founded by Charles Martel, Mayne of the French Palace; and so called either from Jane his Wife, as Haillan would have it, or from the Garter of Spain, over whom he triumphed at the Battel of Tours, as Bellay writeth. It ended in the days of S. Lewis. The Knights of the Order wore a Ring; wherein was engraven the form of a Garter.

2. Of the Pairrie, or twelve Peers, so called, quasi pares inter pares; said to be instituted by Charles the Great, in his VVars against the Saracens. Six of these were of the Clergie. 1. The Arch-bishop and Duke of Rheims, 2. the Bishop and Duke of Laon, 3. the Bishop and Duke of Langres, 4. the Bishop and Earl of Beauvais, 5. the Bishop and Earl of Noyon, and 6. the Bishop and Earl of Chalon. And six others of the Temporality: 1. the Duke of Burgundy, 2. Duke of Normandy, 3. Duke of Guienne, 4. Earl of Toulouse, 5. Earl of Champagne, 6. Earl of Flanders. These are they so much memorized in the Legends of the old French VVriters, but fallily, and on no ground: it being impossible that those should be of the foundation of Charles the Great, in whose time there were none of those Dukes and Earls, except the Earl of Toulouse only. Therefore with better reason it may thus be concluded on, that the Twelve Peers were instituted by Charles the Great, though that honour not by him appropriated unto any particular Estates and Titles; but left at large to be disposed of according to the personal merit of the best defenders: it being most sure, that neither Rowland, nor Oliver, nor Duke Naimes, nor Ogier the Dane, had any of the Titles above-mentioned. But for the fixing of this Dignity in the Dukedoms and Earldoms before named, it is said, by some, to have been done by Hugh Capet; others refer it to Lewis the 7th. in whose times all those Dukes and Earls were in Retenu Natura. But by whomsoever first ordained, the Temporal Pairries are extinct; and others of no definite number, created by the Kings, as they see occasion; to gratify a well deserver. Only at Coronations, and such publick Triumphs, the custom is, to chuse some principal persons out of the Nobility, to represent those Temporal Peers; as at the Coronation of Lewis the 13th, the places of the Temporal Peers were supplied by the Princes of Camde and Cony, the Earl of Soissons, the Duke of Nevers, Elbeuf, and Epemon: the Ecclesiastical Peers remaining as at first they were. So that though Charles the Great might devise this Order, and institute the first Twelve Peers, as is commonly said; yet was not that high honour fixed in any of those Temporal Princes, till the times succeeding; but given to men of several Houses, according to the Kings pleasure, and their well deserving.

3. Of the Star; begun by John King of France, Anno 1352. They were about their necks a Collar of Gold, at the which hung a Star: the word, Monfranc Regibus astra vivam. This Order was disgraced by his Son Charles, in communicating it to his Guards; and so it ended.

4. Of St. Michael, instituted by King Lewis the eleventh. Anno 1409. It consisted first of 30 Knights; which afterwards were augmented to 300. The Habit of the Order was a long Cloak of white Damask, down to the ground, with a border interwoven with Cockle-shells of Gold, interlaced and furred with Ermine; with an Hood of crimson Velvet, and a long tippet. About their necks they wore a Collar woven with Cockle-shells: the word, Inmensi tremor Oceani. It took the name from the Picture of St. Michael conquering the Devil, which was annexed to the Collar. Some think, that the invocation of St. Michael, was in allusion to the tenth of Daniel. Others say, he took St. Michael, in regard of an apparition of that Saint, to his Father Charles the seventh on Orleans Bridge, in his Wars against the English. The Seat thereof was first at St. Michael's Mount, in Normandy, a place which had held longest for the French Kings, against the English: but it was afterwards removed to Bois de Vincennes, not far from Paris. St. Michael's day, the time of the Solemnity: and Mount St. Michael, the name of the Herald which did attend upon the Order, which in most things are preceded that of the Garter.

5. Of the Holy Ghost; ordained by Henry the third, An. 1579. to redress the abuses which had crept into that of St. Michael, having been of late times given to unworthy persons: to reduce which to its first esteem, he ordered that the Collar of St. Michael should be given to none who had not first been dignified with this of the Holy Ghost; into which none to be admitted, but such as can prove their Nobility by three descents. Their Oath is, to maintain the Romish Catholic Religion, and persecute all Opponents to it. Their Robe, a Black Velvet Mantle, powdered with Lillies and Flames of Gold; with a Crofs and a Dove appendant to it. And hereunto he gave the name of the Holy Ghost, because he was on Whitsunday, chosen King of Poland.

I omit the other petit Orders, as those of the Cock, and Dog, by them of Montmorency; of the Porcupine, by them of Orleans, and of the Thistle, by them of Bourbon.

The Armes of the French Kings in the days of Pharamond, and his three first Successors, were Gules, three Crowns, Or. Clovis the Great altered them to Azure, Some of Flower de Luces, Or; and Charles the sixth to Azure, three Flower de Luces, Or. In which last changes, they were followed by the Kings of England; varying the Coat of France, which they enquartered with their own, as the French Kings did; and by the Princes of the blood, who bare the Arms of France, with some difference only, for the distinction of their Houses.

There are in FRANCE,

And so much for FRANCE.

THE

The Pyrenean Hills.

Berwixt France and Spain, are the Mountains called Pyrenai, the reason of which name is very differently reported. Some fetch the original thereof from Pyrene, a Nymph, the Daughter of one Bebrix; said by old Fablers to have been here ravished by Hercules: others conceive they were so called, because much stricken with Lightnings, those Celestial Flames. But being the name doth most undoubtedly proceed from a Greek word which significeth Fire. The more probable opinion is, that they took this name from being fired once by Shepherds, (these Hills being then extremely overgrown with Woods:) the Flame whereof raged so extremely, that the Mines of Gold and Silver being melted by the heat thereof, ran streaming down the Mountains many days together, the fame of which invited many Foreign Nations to invade the Country. VWhich accident they place 880 years before the birth of our Saviour. Hereunto Diodorus Siculus, an old Greek Writer, adds no small Authority; who speaking of this Conflagration, (as Aristotle and Strabo also do) addeth withal, τὸ μὲν ἔην διὰ τὸ ἀπὸ τῆς πυρρῆς τοῦ πυρρῆς ἀπὸ τῆς πυρρῆς: that is to say, these Mountains had the name of Pyrenes, from the fire, which many days together so extremely raged. And this Tradition backed by so good Authority, I should rather credit, than fetch the derivation (as Bochartus doth from Purani, a Phenician word, signifying dark or shady: though true it is, that these Mountains anciently were very much over-grown with woods, as before was noted.

But whatsoever was the reason why they had this name, certain it is, that they have been of long time the natural bound betwixt the great and puissant Monarchs of France and Spain; terminating (as it were) their desires and purposes against each other, as well as their Dominions: if any thing could put a bound to the designs of ambitious Princes. Yet not more separated by these Mountains, than by those jealousies and fears which they have long since harboured of one another; each of them manifestly affecting the Supreme Command. So that we may affirm of them, as the Historian doth of others on the like occasion, Aut monibus, aut munitis, mens separantur. The Mountains also make the Isthmus, or neck of Land, which conjoyns Spain to the rest of Europe: the Canabrian Ocean fiercely beating on the North-west, the Mediterranean Sea more gently washing the South-east thereof. Their beginning at the Promontory now called Oiarcho, (the Oasis of Protony) not far from the City of Batium in France, bordering on the Sea Canabrick, from thence continued South eastwards, betwixt both Kingdoms, to Cabo de Creux, (by the Ancients called Templum Veneris) on the Mediterranean, not far from the City of Rhoda, now Rasus, one of the Port-Towns of Catalonia.

The whole length, not reckoning in the windings and turnings, affirmed to be 80 Spanish Leagues, at a miles to a League. The highest part thereof, by the Spaniards called Camis, and by the Latins named Camus: from which, (as it is said by some) there is a prospect in a clear day, into both the Seas. But whether this be true or not, (for I dare not build any belief upon it) it is no doubt the highest part of all these Mountains; and took this name from the whiteness and hoariness thereof, as having on its top or summit, a Cap of Snow for most part of the year. In which respect, as the Alpes took their name, ab Albo; that, in the Sabine Dialect, being termed Alpum, which by the Latins was called Album, which before we noted: so did Mount Lebanon, in Syria, take its name from Leban, which in the Phenician Language significeth White; and Lebanon, Whiteness. Such people as Inhabit in this Mountainous tract, have been and shall be mentioned in their proper places. I only add, and go forwards towards Spain, that the Barbarous people of these Mountains compelled Sertorius, in his hasty passage into Spain, when he fled from the power of Sylla's Faction, to pay them Tribute for his pass: to which when some of his Soldiers murmured, as thinking it dishonourable to a Proconsul of Rome, to pay tribute to the barbarous Nations: the prudent General replied; that he bought only Time; a Commodity which they that deal in haughty Enterprizes, must needs take up at any rate.

O F

S P A I N.

HAVING thus crossed the Pyrenees, we are come to Spain, the most Western part of all the Continent of Europe; environed on all sides with the Sea, except towards France; from which separated by the said Mountains: but more particularly bounded upon the North with the Cantabrian, on the West with the Atlantick Ocean, on the South, with the Straits of Gibraltar, on the East with the Mediterranean, and on the North-east with those of Pyrenees. The figure of it compared, by Strabo, to an Ox's Hide spread upon the ground; the neck whereof being that Ibthmus which unites it to France.

This Country hath in divers Ages been as diversly named. 1. Hesperia, either from Hesperus, a supposed King hereof, or from Hesperus the Evening Star, under which it was supposed to be situate, as being the farthest Country Westward: to difference it from Italy, which many of the Greek Authors termed Hesperia, also named Hesperia minor. 2. It was called Iberia, either from the famous River Iberus; or from the Iberi, inhabiting that Country of Asia which we now call Georgia: as Celtiberia, from the mixture of those Asian Iberi, and the Celts of Gaul; by which name it occurth often in Appian of Alexandria, and sometimes Strabo. 3. Hispania, as the foundest Judgments agree, from Pannus the Iberian Captain. For the Grecians call it Ἰσπανία, Spania, as may be proved in many places, that especially of the 15 to the Romans, verſ. 28. Αἰσώσκειν Ἰβήναις εἰς τὴν Ἰσπανίαν, ἢ ἔλθωμι ἐν σοὶ Ἰσπανίαν. No doubt but from the Grecians, the old Romans borrowed the name of Spania, which they often used: to which the Spaniards, according to their custom, adding E, (as in Escola, Escuela, &c.) made it Espania, and now Hispania. In like manner as the famous City of Sevil, called at first, Spalis, (according hereto, the Bishop hereof, in the Council of Eliberis, subscribed himself by the name of Sabinus Spalenſis) in tract of time was called Hispalis. And yet I must not pretermitt the Fancy of Bochartus, who fetching the names of most places from the Punic Language, will have it to be called Spania, or Sphania, by the Carthaginians, or Phoenicians, at their first discovery, from Saphan, which in the Punic Tongue signifies a Coast, with which that Country much abounded in the former times, the Romans being hence furnished with them. Let the Reader it like as he list.

The greatest length hereof, is reckoned at 800 miles; the breadth, where it is broadest at 500: the whole circumference, 2480 Italian miles. But Marina measuring the compass of it by the bendings of the Pyrenees, and the creeks and windings of the Sea, makes the full circuit of it to be 2816 miles of Italian measure. And though according to the smallest computation, it be about 460 miles in compass, more than France; yet it is far short thereof in numbers of people: France being thought to contain in it 15 millions of living souls; whereas Spain is reckoned to contain but 8 millions only, which is little more than half the number of the French. The reasons of which disproportions, are, 1. The continual Wars which they had for 900 years together against the Moors in their own Country; by which they were consumed in the very growth. 2. The Expulsion of so many thousand Families of Jews and Moors, 124000 Families of the one, in the time of Ferdinand the Catholic; and 10000 of the other by King Philip the third: which was as the lopping off of a main Limb from the Body Politick, though without any loss to the Ecclesiastical. 3. The unnecessary Wars maintained against all the rest of Christendom, ever since the time of Charles the fifth, out of mere ambition, before they were well cured of their former Wounds. 4. The infinite Plantations made by them in the East and Western Indies, and all along the Sea-coasts of Africa; and those great Garrisons maintained in Milain, Naples, Sicily, the Low-Countries, and their Towns in Africa; consisting, for the most part, of natural Spaniards. 5. The barrenness of the Country in many places, unable to sustain great multitudes, but made more barren than it would be, for want of men to labour, and manure the Land. And 6. and last of all; the Impotency of both Sexes for Generation; the men being generally more hot upon their Lusts, than able for Generation; and the Women, for the most part, beginning to be Mothers so extremely young, that Nature is decayed and spent in them, before they have run half their course. And 'tis a most true and undoubted Maxime, That the greatness of Cities, and populousness of Kingdoms and Commonwealths, do much depend on the generative virtue of the men, and the nutritive virtue of the Soil in which they live.

It is situate in the more Southerly part of the Northern temperate Zone, and almost in the midst of the fourth and sixth Climates: the longest day being fifteen hours and a quarter in length, in the most Northern parts hereof; but in the extreme South, near to Gibraltar, not above fourteen. Which situation of this Country; rendreth the Air here very clear and calm, seldom obscured with Mists and Vapours; and not so much subject to distempers, as more Northern Regions.

They

They are a mixt People, descending from the Goths, Moors, Jews, and the ancient Spaniards. From the Jews they borrow Superstition; from the Moors, Melancholy; Pride from the Goths; and from the old Spaniards, the desire of Liberty. The Jews first planted here by the Emperour Adrian; who having totally banished them their native Country, sent them hither to dwell: the total number of which plantation is said to amount to 50000 men, women, and children; and yet their numbers much increased in the time of Uldor, Uler, the great Caliph of the Sarazens; who having made a Conquest of Spain, sent hither 50000 Families of Moors and Jews, the better to assure it to him. And so we have the coming in of the Moors and Jews; the Conquest of it by the Goths, and their settling here, shall be shewn hereafter: which several Nations, by long time, and intermarriages together, were at last incorporated into one. For their condition, it is said that they are highly conceited of themselves, great Braggards, and extremely proud, even in the lowestest of Fortune. Which last appeareth by the tale of a poor Cocker on his death-bed, who (as Barklaie in his Icon Animarum, reporteth the story) commanded his eldest Son, coming to him for his last blessing, to endeavour to retain the Majesty worthy so great a Family; Memineris (said he) in majestatem assergere familia tua dignum. The same Author relateth another story to the like purpose. A woman of this Country, attended on by 3 of her Brats, went a begging from door to door. Some French Merchants travelling that way, and pitying her case, offered her to take into their service the bigger of her Boys: but the proud, though poor, scorned as the said, that any of her lineage should endure a Prentiship, returned this answer; Qua auctu, ante ego, sciamus, in qua fata sis genus? For ought he or any other, her Son (imply as he stood there) might live to be King of Spain. Not much unlike to these, is that tale of a Spanish Cavaliero; who being for some faults by him committed, whipped through the principal streets of Paris, and keeping a sober pace, was advised by a Friend, to make more haste, that he might the sooner be out of his pain. But he, half in choler, replied, That he would not lose the least step of his pace, for all the whipping in Paris. For indeed, their gate is Genet-wife, very stately and majestic.

Of temperature they are hot and dry, which makes them very much given to women, and yet not very able for Generation. And this strong inclination unto women which they find in themselves, makes them so jealous of their Wives, that they permit them not to walk abroad, but when they go to Church; and then too veiled and so hooded, one can hardly see them; and not that neither only, but attended with their Damocles, and some trusty friend, that is to give an account of them at their coming back. Mendoza, an Ambassador from Spain in Queen Elizabeth's time, used to find fault with the promiscuous sitting of men and women in the Church used here in England, accounting it to be a very great incentive unto Lechery. To whom Doctor Dale, one of the Masters of the Requests, is said to have replied, That indeed in Spain, where the people even in the time of Divine Service, could not abstain from impure thoughts, and unclean gestures, that mingled kind of sitting was not so allowable: but the English were of another temper, and did not find any inconvenience in it. And it is possible, this humour of jealousy might be derived on them from the Moors, who in the strict guarding of their women, were the Spaniards Tutors; it being dead in Barbary, to this very day, for any man to see one of the Xeriffes Concubines; and for them too, if when they see a man, though but through a Casement, they do not presently cry out. A frenzie which much rageth in most Southern people, but not predominant in the Northern; who do not only suffer their Wives to sit with other men in the Church, but even in the open and common Baths also; two things which a true Spaniard would rather dye an hundred deaths, than give consent to. But though the Women are not permitted to stir abroad, the men take liberty enough, and are as good smell-Festivals as in any Country: it being observed of them by a very good Writer, that howsoever in their own houses they are temperate and content with little, yet when they go unto a Feast, they are as gluttonous, dainty, and desirous to eat good cheer, as any people whatsoever.

But not to conceal their Virtues, and make our selves merry at their Follies, (wherein all other Nations have a share with them) they are unquestionably a people very grave in their carriages, in offices of piety very devout, and to their King very obedient. whose Greatness they affect more cordially, than any Subjects in the World: exact in doing Justice upon all Offenders, which commonly they administer without partiality: indulgent unto one another, and of their duties to their betters not unmindful. But that which deferreth the greatest commendation in them, is an unwearied patience in suffering adversities, accompanied with a resolution to overcome them. A noble quality, of the which in their Indian Discoveries they shewed excellent proofs, and received as glorious rewards: withal, of very daring spirits, great undertakers for the most part; and to say truth, the greatest enlargers of their Dominions, (according to the advantage of their situation) of any Nation under Heaven. For having first either exterminated or subdued the Moors, which for many hundreds of years were possessed of this Continent, the Aragomians lying on the Mediterranean, added their Estate the Islands of Majorca, and Minorca; the Kingdoms of Sicily, and Sardinia, and the Realm of Naples: the Cathilians lying on both sides of the Straights, first took in some of the opposite Towns on the Coast of Africa, next, conquered the Canaries, or Fortunate Islands; and finally, discovered and subdued the most part of America: the Portugals lying with a long Sea-coast on the Western Ocean, possessed themselves of the Azores, most of the Sea-Towns of Morocco, and the Land of Guinea; and doubling the Cape of good Hope, made themselves Masters of many Parts of India and Islands of great consequence in the East-Indies; adding thereto, in fine, the large Country of Brazil, in that part of America which lay fittest for them: and the Navarros (to conclude, though looked up by their greater neighbours from all Trade at Sea, and consequently enlarging their Dominions that way) adding to their Estates the most part of Gascogne, the Palatinate of Champagne, the Earldom of Eureux, with many fair and large possessions in the Realm of France thereupon depending.

In reference to the French, it is said, that the French are wiser than they seem; and the Spaniards seem wiser than they are: wherein they agree with many particular men of other Nations, who according to the Philosopher, Sapientes potius cupiunt videri & non esse, quam esse & non videri.

In matters of War, the Spaniards are observed to be generally too heavy, slow, and dull; the French too heady and precipitate; the one losing as many fair occasions by delays, as the other overthroweth by too much haste: but between them both they make one good Souilder; who according to the present opportunities, is to make use of the spur of Courage, or the bit of Respite. But of the strange and many differences in temper, humour, and affections, between the Spaniards and the French, we have spoke more at large already when we were in France.

The VWomen are sober, loving their Husbands or Friends; wonderful delicate, curious in painting or perfuming; and though they have VVine in abundance, yet are they not permitted to drink it; verifying therein the old English Proverb, that none are worse than the Shoemakers Wife. Herein in worse condition than the VWomen of France; who though they are restrained from VVine before their marriage; yet, after that, they take what liberty they list, and are no more restrained from it, than the other Sex. But this is the least liberty which the French women have above the Spanish: these being watched and over-looked, that it is hardly possible for them to hold speech with any man, in business of most importance, and much less in matters of Gossips only; those having liberty to be courted at all times and places, even in the presence of their Husbands without any distrust or interruption. Heretofore they were wondrous strong; and, beyond belief, patient of the throws of Child-bed: Strabo relating how one of these women being hired for Harveest-work, and finding her travail come upon her; because she would not lose her days wages, withdrew her self into a Bush; where, being eased of her burden, she returned from one Labour to another. And many of them at this day use not to keep their Chambers above three days after their delivery, and then apply themselves to their Household-business, without either danger or delay.

The language is not the same in all places, though all called the Spanish. In Portugal, Catalagne, and some parts of Valencia, it hath a great mixture of the French; who in these parts have had much trade and negotiation. In Granada, and some parts of Andalusia, it partakes much of the Moor; and in the Mountains of Alpuccarras, the Arabick or Moorish language still remains in use. The Countries bordering on the Pyrenees, and Cantabrian Ocean, (but Biscay especially) have much in them of the language of the ancient Spaniards, before made subject to the Romans. That which is common to them all, is the vulgar Spanish or Castilian, and hath much affinity with the Latin; Breewood in his Enquiries reporting, that he hath seen a Letter, every word whereof was both good Latin and good Spanish. Merala shews a Copy of the like, pag. 300. By reason of which consonancy with the Latin, the Spaniards call their language, Romance. The other ingredients of this Tongue, are generally the Gablick, Arabick, and old Spanish; and in some places the French also, as before is said; those people having made great conquests, and having had great negotiations in this Country. It is said to be a very lofty swelling speech, as if it were fashioned to command.

And as their Language, so their Laws do owe a great part of themselves to the Laws of Rome: the Civil or Imperial Laws being generally used amongst them, but intermixt with many customs of the Goths, and the Edicts or Constitutions of their several Kings. Those of the Goths being first committed unto writing, and reduced to order by Enricus the first King of the Goths in Spain: those of Cassile digested by the command of Ferdinand: the third, Anno 1296. into seven Books, called the Partidas: not finished till the time of his Son Alphonso. Leges Hispaniarum quæ pariter vocantur, in volumen rediguntur, as Tarapha hath told us of him in his Spanish History. The like done by King James the first, for the Realm of Aragon, An. 1243. respectively confirmed and ratified by the Kings succeeding. Authorized to be read dispersed in the publick Schools, as well as the Decretals, the Code, the Pandect, or any other part of the Civil or Canon Laws.

The Soil herof, where it is fertile and productive of the Fruits of Nature, yields not to any part of Europe, for delight, pleasures, and Commodities; which here appear in greater ripeness and perfection, than in other places. But, for the most part, it is either overgrown with Woods, cumbered with wild and rocky Mountains, or of so hot a nature, and so sandy withal, that it is not very fit for Tillage; and so deficient in Water, as not good for Pasturage. So that we may affirm thereof, as of the Figs in the Prophet Jeremy, where it is good, no Country better; where bad and barren, few so inconvenient, and not any worse. But this defect of outward Beauty and Commodities, is recompensed by those within; affording great plenty of Mines, both of Steel and Iron, and some Mines of Silver; of which last so abundant in preceding times, that it was never free from the Rovers of all Nations; and it is said of Anibal, that out of one Mine only in the Country of the Turdetani, (now part of Andalusia) he received 3000 pound weight daily, for a long time together. The principal Commodities which they vend into other Countries, are Wines, Oyl, Sugars, Metals, Rice, Silk, Licorass, a fine sort of Wool, Cork, Rollin, Limmons, Rafins, Oranges, and Fruits of the like nature. In Corn, which is the staff of life, they are so defective, that they receive the greatest part of what they spend, from Italy, Sicily, and France. Their Cattel neither fair, nor many; the Country being not able to breed them; so that their Diet is on Salads, and Fruits of the Earth; every Gentleman being limited what flesh he shall buy for himself and his family, which if he send for the Butcher, or Poulterer, by the smallest Child, able to do the Errand for him, he is sure not to be defrauded in price, or quality. And yet they talk as highly of their gallant fare, as if they furnished with the plenty of all provisions: handsomely checked in that fond humour, by that worthy Soldier, Sir Roger Williams; of whom it is said, that hearing once of a Spaniard thus foolishly bragging of his Country Salads, he gave him this answer, You have indeed good fawce in Spain; but we have dainty Beefs, Veals, and Muttons, to eat with that fawce; and as God made beasts to live upon the grafs of the earth; so he made men to live upon them. And it is observed, that if a Spaniard have a Capon, or the like good Dish to his Supper, you shall find all the Feathers scattered before his door, by the next morning.

And as it is in private Houses, so for travelling also, the Inns and Vents of this Country are very ill provided: insomuch, that most men that would not go supperless to sleep, carry their provision at their Saddle-bows, and men of worth their bedding also. So poor and mean is the entertainment in these places.

Here lived in ancient times, the Giants Geryon, and Cacus, which were quelled by Hercules: and in the flourishing of the Roman Empire, 1. Seneca the Tragedian, and 2. the Philosopher of the same name; a man of that happy memory, that he could repeat 2000 names in the same order that they were rehearsed: as also 3. Quintilian the Orator, 4. Lucan, and 5. Martial, excellent in their kinds: 6. Pomponius Mela the Geographer, 7. Titus Pomponius, with his Epitomator: 8. Tullius, and 9. Pandus Orosius the Historian, this last a Christian. In the middle times, 10. Isidore Bishop of Sevil, 11. Tolison, and 12. Hildephonius, Bishop of Toledo; and after them, Eulogius the Saint and Martyr; yem learned for the times they lived in. Then for the later Ages, 1. The renowned Cardinal Francis Ximenes, and 2. Alvas Monimus, famous for the ditions of the holy Bible. 3. Mafius, a learned Commentator. 4. Ojorin, well seen in the Latin Elegancies; and before all as well in industry, as time. 5. Tostatus Bishop of Avila; a man so copious and industrious in his writings, that it is thought he writ more sheets than he lived days. But of late times we find but few of their works which have passed the Mountains; the Latin which they write, being very coarse, and favouring too much of the School-mans, (wherein their excellency consists) and therefore they let out their Works most commonly in their own Tongue only. The chief for Souldiers amongst them were formerly Virginius, who held out so long against the Romans. Trajan and Theodosius, both Roman Emperors. Theodorick the second, King of the Goths, the victorious Conqueror of the Svevians. Bernardo del Carpio, and Old Ruiz Diaz, famous for their achievements against the Romans. In late times, Gonsalvo the Great Captain who subdued Naples; Ferdinand Duke of Alva, who conquered Portugal, &c.

The Christian Faith, if we may believe the old Spanish Tradition, was first here planted by St. James the Apostle, within four years after the death of our Redeemer. To which Tradition, though they held very constant a long time together; yet of late days, Baronius, and other learned men of the Church of Rome, do most deservedly reject it. That St. Paul had a purpose of coming hither, is evident in his 15 Chapter to the Romans: and that he did come hither accordingly, is positively affirmed by St. Chrysostom, Theodoret, and divers others of the Fathers; which was in Anno 61. as Baronius thinketh. Nor did St. Peter want his part in this great service, but joynted with St. Paul; though not in the journey, yet in the sending of Bishops, and other Presbyters, to second the beginnings made by that Apostle. For it is said expressly in the Martyrologies, that Crispin, Enphrasius, Secundus, Cecilius, Tudela, Hadrianus, Hefesius, and Torgasius, being at Rome, ordained Bishops by the two Apostles, ad prædicandum verbum Dei in Hispanias directi, were dispatched into Spain to preach the Gospel. Bishops, most likely, of those Cities where they suffered death; the names of which occur in the Martyrology. Under the Empire of the Goths, the Faith of CHRIST, which at their coming hither they found right and Orthodox, was defiled with Arianism: nor ejected till the year 588. when that whole Nation did submit to more Catholic tendencies. But Spain being conquered by the Moor under the conduct of Mulsa, Lieutenant-General to Uladir Uli, the Arabian Caliph; and Mahometanism over-spreading the whole face of the Country; such Christians as remained under their obedience, but few name of Musarabe. Encrailing in estate and numbers, by the fortunate successes of the King of Leon and Napace, and other Christian Principalities growing up a accient service, distinct from that observed in the Church of Rome; this being called the Musarabique, the other the Gregorian Missal: the one pretending S. Isidore Archbishop of Sevil, the other S. Gregory Pope of Rome, for the Author of it. And it continued in this state, till the taking of the City and Kingdom of Toledo, by Alfonso King of Cassile and Leon, Anno 1085. At what time Bernard a Frenchman being made Arch-bishop of that City, and Primate of Spain, endeavoured the introduction of the Roman or Gregorian Service; but therein was opposed by the other Prelates, and generally by all the people, sufficiently tenacious of their ancient Forms. At last it was concluded (as the story telleth us) to commit the decision of the Controversie to a fiery trial: both Books being cast into the fire, the Gregorian leaping presently out, and the Musarabique remaining unhurt in the midst of the flames. Convinced by this experiment, that both Forms were pleasing to Almighty God; they yielded so far to the desires of the King, who was zealous in it) that the Musarabique being retained in fix of the Churches of Toledo, (where it is sung to this day in a Chappel of the great Church, called Corpus Domini) the Gregorian or Roman Service, should be entertained in the rest of Spain. According unto which Decree, the Musarabique (but not until some tract of time) came to be diffused; and the Gregorian Service first admitted in the Cathedral of Toledo, May 29. An. 1091. And after by degrees, in the rest of the Country.

Since that, they have been content to the Rites of the Roman Church, and of the Faith and Doctrine therein professed, notwithstanding the great intermixture of Jews and *Moor*s; especially since the setting up of the Inquisition: devised at first about the year 1478. by Pedro Gonsales de Mendoza, Arch-bishop of Toledo against such converted Jews and *Moor*s, as did return again to their superstition. But he, and those that had the first execution of it, being found so cruel, that, in the compass of nine years, no fewer than 3000 Families had been destroyed in that Diocese only. In the year 1481. it was thought fit to moderate the rigour of it, and to commit the managing thereof to some Jacobins or Dominican Friars, who in the first place were to have an eye unto such Apostates, and to Heretics, Magicians, Sadomites, Blasphemers of the name of God, &c. confirmed in this Authority, by Pope Sixtus the 4th. This Institution in it self was not only necessary, (as the condition of Affairs then was) but exceeding laudable, had it been kept within the bounds at first intended. But of late, instead of being used on the Jews and *Moor*s, it hath been turned upon the Protestants, and that with such violence, and extremity of torture, that it is counted the greatest tyranny, and severest kind of persecution, under Heaven: inasmuch that many Papists, who would willingly dye for their Religion, abhor the very name and mention of it, and to the death withstand the bringing in of this slavery among them. This is it that made the people of Aragon and Naples rebel, Countries where the people are all of the Papal side: and this was it which caused the irremediable revolt of the Low Countries; the greatest part of that Nation, at the time of their taking Arms, being Romish Catholicks: yet it is planted and established in Spain and all Italy, (Naples and Venice excepted) the managing thereof committed to the most zealous and rigorous Friars in the whole Pack: the least suspicion of Heresy, affinity, or commerce with Heretics, reproving the lives of the Clergy, keeping any Books, or Editions of Books, prohibited, or discoursing in matters of Religion, are offences sufficient. Nay, they will charge mens Consciences under the pain of damnation, to detect their nearest and dearest Friends, if they do but suspect them to be herein culpable. Their proceedings are with great secrecy and severity: for first, the parties accused shall never know their accuser, but shall be constrained to reveal their own thoughts and affections. 2. If they be but convicted of any error in any of their opinions, or be gain-sayed by two witnesses, they are immediately condemned. 3. If nothing can be proved against them, yet shall they with infinite tortures and miseries, be kept in the house divers years, for a terror unto others. And, 4. If they escape the first brunt with many torments, and much anguish; yet the second question or suspicion, brings death remediless. And as for torments, and kinds of death, Phalaris and his fellow-Tyrants, come far short of these Blood-hounds.

The

The administration of this Office, for the more orderly reglement and dispatch thereof, distributed into twelve Courts, or supreme Tribunals, for the several Provinces of Spain; no one depending on another, but in some sort subordinate to the general Inquisition, remaining in the Court near the Kings Person, which hath a kind of superintendency over those Tribunals: in all of which those of the Secular Clergy sit as Judges, the Friers being only used as Promoters to inform the Court, and bring more Grift unto the Mill. Of these Inquisitors, every one hath the title of Lord, and are a great terror to the neighbouring Peasants. There goeth a Tale, how one of their Lordships desirous to eat of the Peas which grew in a poor mans Orchard not far off, sent for the man to come unto him. which put the poor fool into such a fright, that he fell sick upon it, and kept his bed: being afterwards informed, that all his Lordships business with him, was to request a dish of Peas; he pulled up the Tree by the Roots, and carried it unto him with the Fruit upon it. And when he was demanded the reason of that rash and improvident action, he returned this answer, That he would never keep that thing in his house, which should give any of their Lordships cause to fend further after him. Certain it is, that by this means the people of this Kingdom are kept under, that they dare not hearken after any other Religion, than what their Priests and Friers shall be pleased to teach them; or entertain the truth if it come amongst them; or call in question any of those palpable gross impostures, which every day are put upon them.

For by this means, the people of this Kingdom have been, and still are punctual followers of the Church of Rome; and that too in the very errors and corruptions of it, taking up their Religion on the Popes Authority; and therein so tenacious or pertinacious, that the King doth suffer none to live in his Dominions, which profess not the Roman Catholic Religion. Of which they have been, since the times of Luther, such avowed Adversaries, that one of the late Popes being sick, and hearing divers men to moan his approaching end, uttered some words to this effect: My life (said he) can nothing benefit the Church, but pray for the prosperity of the King of Spain, as its chief Supporter. And though he spoke these words of King Philip the 2d. yet they hold good in his Successors ever since, being esteemed the greatest Patrons and Protectors of the Catholic Cause; which is indeed the proper interest of this King. For seeing that they have framed to themselves an hope of the Western Monarchy; and finding no fitter means of enlarging their own Temporal, than by concurring with the Pope in upholding his Spiritual Empire, they have linked themselves most fast to that See. To which end, they have taken upon them to be the Executioners of the Popes Excommunications; by which Office, Ferdinand the Catholic surprized Navarre, not without hope of working the like effect in some course of time, on the rest of the interdicted Estates of Europe; as may be seen by the eager following of the French War against Henry the 4th. till he had reconciled himself to the Church of Rome; and the like War managed for many years together against Queen Elizabeth of England. And the pursuit of this Spanish Monarchy is so hotly followed by the Jesuits, who in all their persuasions speak not more of one God, or of one Pope, than they do of one King; that they hold it forth for the only means to unite the differences of the Church, and subdue that great enemy of Religion, the Turk. Nor is this only a Conjecture, or a project of the Jesuits only, but a design avowed and declared in Print, that all the world may take notice of it:

and that too in a Book not only licensed by the Provincial of the Dominicans, and the Supreme Council of the Inquisition; but by order from the Lords of the Council, with the Kings Privilege and commendation prefixed before it. The Book entituled, La Convencion de los dos Monarquias Catholicas, &c. The agreement of the two Catholic Monarchies of Rome and Spain, set out in the year 1612. by one John de Puente. In the Frontispiece whereof are set two Scutcheons, the one bearing the Cross-Key of Rome, the other the Arms of Castile and Leon; In vinculo pacis, for the Motto. On the one side of this, there is a Portraiture representing Rome, with the Sun shining over it, and darting his Beams upon the Keys, with this Inscription, Luminare majus in prese Orbis & Orbis, the greater Light to govern the City and the World. On the other side, another Image designing Spain, with the Moon shining over that, and darting her Rays on the Spanish Scutcheon, with this Impression, Luminare minus in subdatur Orbis & dominetur Orbis, i.e. The lesser Light made to be subject to the City, (understand of Rome) but to govern all the VWorld besides. Over all in the top of the Front or Title page, in Capital Letters, Fecit Deus duo Luminaria magna, God made two great Lights. The whole Book being an indifferent large Folio, is but a Comment on this Text, which for substance is contained wholly in the Frontispiece, but more at large discoursed of in the Volume it self; and plainly shews what is intended, and by whom. And yet perhappes the Pope and the Jesuits both, may fail in that which is the main of their expectation; and if the project take effect, the Spaniard will then write himself Luminare majus, and make the Pope content with Luminare minus, for his part of the spoil; and glad to borrow all his light from the Sun of Spain. For, though the Kingdom of Spain, and Popedom of Rome, be thus strangely combined, yet herein the Popes have over-thrown themselves; in that leaning so much to the Spaniard, and so immoderately encreasing his Dominion, they do in a manner stand at his devotion, and may peradventure, in the end, be forced to cast themselves into his arms, as their good Lord and Master. For certain it is, that the Spanish Agents have openly braved the Cardinals, and told them, That they hoped to see the day, wherein the King should offer the Pope half a dozen to be made Cardinals, and he not dare to refuse any; and that they themselves should chuse no Pope, but one of their Masters naming. So great an inconvenience it is, more than possible it may be to the Pope, in making this Prince the one and only string to their bow; and saluting the dependencies of his Roman Catholicity upon him alone, excluding France and all the other Kings in Christendom, of the Romish Party, from the honour of it. And yet so firm they are to their Spanish principles, that no favours either granted to their Persons, or Religion, are of value with them, or thought worthy of their acceptations, if it come from any other Fountain of Grace, than the Court of Spain. Inasmuch as I have heard from a great Minister of State, that when some favours were obtained for the English Papists, on the Treaty of the Match with Spain, they were ready with great greediness to embrace the same. But when the same favours were obtained for them on the Treaty with France, not a man of them would accept them, For which some of their Chiefs being asked the reason, returned this answer; That by applying themselves to the French, they might lose the Spaniard; and it were great inconvenience in them, to change an old and constant Friend, who had never failed them, for one of whose affections they had no assurance, and such some at whose intolerant Heretics in his own Dominions, shewed that he was no fit Patron for the Catholics to rely upon.

The

The chief Rivers are, 1. Tagus, celebrated for his Golden Sands, of which the Scepter of the old Kings of Portugal is affirmed (by some Writers) to be made: but I have not Faith enough to believe the fame. The head of it is in the Mountain Seira Molina, near to Cuenca; from the which it runneth by the City Toledo; and then smoothly gliding by the Walls of Lisbon, doth pay his tribute to the Western Ocean. 2. Anas, (now Gadiana) which arising about the same place, runneth afterwards under the ground the space of 15 miles: and hence the Spaniards use to brag, that they have a Bridge whereon 10000 Cattel daily feed. An accident common to many others Rivers; as to Mole a small River in Surrey; Erfrausius in Greece; and Lyceus in Anatolia, of which laist, thus Ovid.

Sic ubi terreno Lycus est epotus biatus, Exiit procul hinc, alioque renascitur ora.

So Lyceus, swallowed by the gaping ground,
At a new mouth, far off, is rising found.

But having gotten up again, it loseth it self without recovery in the Western Ocean, on the South of Portugal, which is separated from Estremadura. 3. Batis, now called Guadalquivir, (which in the Arabic Language signifieth a great River) ariseth out of the Mountains of Sierra Morena, and passing by Corduba and Sevil, disburdeneth it self into the Southern Ocean, at the Haven of S. Lucar de Barameda, 4. Iberus, which having its head amongst the Mountains of Biscay, passeth on Eastwards by Saragossa and Torjola, into the Mediterranean; the whole course thereof being 460 miles, of which it is navigable 200. A River of such note in the time of the Romans that it divided this whole Country, into Citerior, and Uterior; of which more anon. 5. Duero, which rising in the same Mountain, passeth through Portugal, and so unto the Western or Atlantic Ocean. 6. Minaus, of which more in Portugal.

Chief Mountains next unto the Pyreneus spoken of before. 1. The Cantabrian Mountains, called by Pliny, Juga Aslurns; which rising out of a spur or branch of the Pyrenees, overprint the Provinces of Biscay, Asturia, and Gallicia, (coasting along the shores of the Cantabrian Ocean) where at last they end. 2. Idubeda, Jubalda, or Aurantiis Salsus, so called by Pliny, and others of the ancient Writers: which beginning not far from the head of the River Iberus followeth the course of that River, by the City of Burgos, and endeth not far from the influx of it into the Mediterranean. 3. Sierra Morena, by Cesar called Salsus Castellonenfis, and Mons Marianus by Ptolemy; which beginning about the Town Aleazar, coasting along the right-hand shores of the River Batis, to the Southern Seas. 4. Sierra Nevada, by Pliny called Mons Illipius, and Oropeda by Strabo; but by the Moors, the Mountains of Alpuxaras. A chain of hills which thwart the Kingdom of Granada, from East to West, and amongst which the people to this day speak the Arabic Tongue.

The Country is said to have been inhabited by Tubal, the Son of Japhet. Of whom it is affirmed in the Berosus of Frier Amnius, and by such Chronologers as he hath imposed on by the name of that Author; that in the twelfth year of Nimrod, which was 140 years after the Flood, he seated himself in the Asturia, a part of Spain, and there built the Town of S. Oual. A device so foolish and absurd, that it is not to be honoured with a confutation: for either Tubal must come hither by Sea or by Land: if by Land, then must he in the compass of a year or two, travel not less than 4000 miles (so far it is, at least, from Biscay, to the valley of Shinar) with women and children, through most unpassable Woods and Mountains, which no understanding man can give belief to. If by Sea, besides the short time he had to provide shipping for so great a company, and so long a voyage, nothing is more improbable to a sober man than that he should leave Italy and Africk upon either hand; or pretermitt the opportunity of possessing Valencia, Andalusia, Portugal, being fruit Countries; to fix himself in the most mountainous, woody, and barren Province of all this Continent. Yet most of our Berosians are so confident in it, that they make him the first King of Spain; from whom to Gargarus Melicela, they numbered 25 Kings more, who lasted 983 years: the chief of which are said to be, 1. Hisperus, who subdued also Italy, named both Countries Hisperia; but so that Italy was called Hisperia the greater; and Spain Hisperia the less. 2. Hispanus, whence they conceit the name of Hispania to be derived. 3. Tagus, 4. Batis, and 5. Anus, whence the three Rivers in Spain, so called must by all means derive their names. 6. Idubeda, Godfather, no doubt, to the great Mountain so named. 7. Scitilus, from whom the title of Sicily, is said to take denomination. 8. Hispalus who is reported to have built the City Sevil, or Hispalis. 9. Brigus, the Founder of Flavio brigas, and other Towns ending in Briga. 10. Luslus, who gave name to Lusitania, now Portugal. The Catalogue of which kings, I desire no man to believe farther, than that of our own State from Brunus to Cassibelm. A Catalogue so ill contrived, that whereas Jyslus speaks of Habis, and Herodotus of Agurthionis, Macrobis of Heron, and Plutarch of Indibilis, all Kings of Spain; none of these are mentioned in it. So that the coming of Tubal (in person) hither, is a silly vanity; though we deny not but the Spaniards, or some Nations of them, may derive their Pedigree from Tubal; as being the descendants of the Iberi, whom Jeseph saith to have been anciently called Thobelos: a name in which are all the Radical Letters of Tubal, and which differeth not much from it in sound. For somewhat before the supposed time of Gargarus Melicela, the Iberians are said to come in under Pannu: divided after his decease, amongst many petty Kings and Princes, for the space of 900 and odd years, even till the first attempt which the Carthaginians made upon it; who found here no such Universal or Supreme Monarch, as the Berosian Fablers dream of. During which time, we find nothing more observable and certain in the story of it, than the planting of Colonies on the Sea-coasts, by divers Nations, according to the Custom of those elder times. Of which four were the Towns of Emporea and Dianium, founded by the Masilians, Saguntum, by the Zacynthi, or people of Zam Rhodes, by the Rhodians, as some think; the City and Isle of Gades, planted by the Tyrians, who after spread themselves over all the Coasts of Andalusia. The first that came in bodies hither, in way of Conquest, were the Celts, a great and potent Nation of Gaul, who mixing themselves with the Iberi, caused the whole Country to be called Celtiberia: but the time when they came into it is very uncertain. Of the invasion of it by the Carthaginians, there is a greater certainty. Who being beaten out off Sicily by the conquering Romans, An. V.C. 512: and not daring to look any more that way, bended their Forces to the West, and passing through the Straights of Gibraltar, by the Isles of Gades, (their own long before) landed in Spain under the conduct of Amilcar, the Father of Annibal, four years after the loss of Sicily. In less than twenty years following, Amilcar, (Ashdrubal his Son in law) and Annibal the Son of Amilcar, had made almost all Spain subject to the Carthaginians, even from the Western Ocean to the Pyrenees; destroyed Saguntum, built new Carthage, and struck to great a terror into the Country, that had not Annibal's design carri'd him to Italy, the State of Carthage had been absolute Masters of it, without further opposition or resistance. But Annibal having taken all his Souldiers with him; and those that came from Carthage to command in chief, not being men of parts sufficient to go through with it; they lost it piece-meal to the Romans, but in less time than they had been getting it from the Spaniards; the valour and good fortune of Corn. Scipio, over-ruling the declining power of that mighty State. The last that here commanded for the State of Carthage was Asdrubal the Son of Gisco; who being beaten by Scipio into the Island of Gades, left that also to the keeping of Magnus, one of his Commanders; by whom being pillaged and deserted, it forthwith yielded to the Romans, the Carthaginians, after this never possessing foot of ground in all this Continent.

The Romans thus becoming Masters of a great part of it, divided it into Ulioreum, lying from the River Iberus, Westward, because furthest off from them; and Citeriorem, between the said River, and the Pyrenees. But having totally subdued it, they divided it into three main parts; 1. Tarracensem, so called of Tarragon, the chief City of it, containing Aragon, Navarre, Biscay, Galicia, &c. 2. Baeticam, so named of the River, Baetis, which runneth through it; comprehendeth the now Countries of Granada, Andalusia, and part of Extremadura. 3. Lusitanicam, denominated from the Lusitani, the most potent people of that part, differing in extent from the present Portugal, (though this called Lusitaniam by our modern Latinitas.) For the old Lusitania comprehended part of Extremadura, and some part of the two Castiles; and no more of the present Portugal, than what lieth betwixt the two Rivers, Ana and Duero; that on the South of Ana, being laid to Baetica; and that on the North of Duero, unto Tarracensem. Of these three parts, Baetica was in most esteem under the Romans; inasmuch that it contained 8 Roman Colonies, 8 Municipal Cities, and 29 other Towns, endued with the rights and privileges of the Latini. The reason thereof was, that the people of this Country having been formerly broken by the Carthaginians, with more quiet endured the yoke of the Romans; whereas the rest, for a long time resisted the entry and Empire of that prevailing City. But to proceed to the affairs of Rome in Spain, Scipio Africanus laid the first foundation of the Roman Government in this Country: which building, though undertaken by many excellent workmen, was not thoroughly finished till the days of Augustus, being almost 200 years since the first attempt. He rooted it, strengthened it, made it a principal building in his Monarchical City. For the old Incola were exceeding valiant and resolute, sometimes disgracing, sometimes endangering the Roman reputation; inasmuch that there were more Commanders lost in those Wars, than any other. At first the Romans fought not with the Spaniards; but with the Carthaginians in Spain: then perished both the Scipio's, viz. the Father and the Uncle of Africanus. Viriatus held War for 20 years, Numania held out almost 15, the Astures remained unconquered till the time of Augustus; and also resolutely maintained their particular liberties, Ut dijudicari non poterit (saith Paterculus) Hispania an Romanis plus esset in armis roboris, & nec populus alteri parvisset fore. Such manner of men were the ancient Spaniards under Rome and Carthage; the first people of the Continent of Europe, (excepting Italy) on which the Romans did begin to enlarge their Empire, and the last that wholly were subdued and conquered by them. But being conquered at the last, and brought under the form of a Province by Augustus Caesar; it was governed by their Proconsuls, Prætors, and other Magistrates, according to the division before-mentioned. But Constantine the Great in his new modelling of the Empire, laying some part of Africa to it, made it a Dioecesis of the Empire; and subject to the Præfatus Prætorius for Gaul, by whose Vicarius it was governed: the whole being then divided into these seven Provinces, viz. 1. Baetica, 2. Lusitania, bounded as before; 3. Gallicia, containing the modern Galicia, Leon, and Oviedo, the greatest part of the Old Castile, and so much of Portugal as lieth betwixt the two Rivers of Minio and Duero, 4. Carthaginensis, so called from the City of New Carthage, comprehending New Castile, Murcia, and Valencia with the part of the Old Castile, Aragon, and Andalusia. 5. Tarracensis, embracing all Biscay, Navarre, and Catalogne, with the greatest part of the Kingdom of Aragon. 6. Tingitana, so called from Tingis, (now Tangier) a Town of Africa, on the opposite Coast, in which are now the great Kingdoms of Fesse and Morocco. And 7. the Province of the Islands, containing Majorca, Minorca, Elba, and Frumentaria. Of which seven Provinces, the three first were Consulares, governed by Proconsuls; the other four, from their being under Præsidents, were called Præfidiarie. Being thus settled, it continued a Roman Dioecesis till about the year 400, when it was subdued by Gundericus, king of the Vandals; of which people, their beginnings, achievements, and final period, we will speak more when we come to Africa, where they fixed themselves: invited thereunto, partly to eschew the ill neighbourhood of the Goths, who began to grow too potent for them, and partly to satisfy the desire of Benifacæ, Governour of that Province for the Emperor Valentinian the third, against whom he had then rebelled, and wanted such support to make good his action. Those being gone, the Suevoi and Alani, who entered with the Goths, and afterwards dispossest of their Kingdoms also, (though suffered to remain in the Country still) as shall be shewn hereafter in its proper place. As for the Goths, (of whom we shall speak more in Sweden, and have already made some mention when we were in Gaul) having sacked Rome, and wasted Italy, under the conduct of Alaric; they were brought out of that Country by the gift of Narbonensis in Gaul, and so much of Tarracensis in Spain, as now makes up the Province of Catalogne: the composition being ratified by the marriage of Asinulfus, the Successor of Alaric with Placidia, Sister to Honorius the Western Emperor, Valia, or Wallia, the next of name and note, (for Sigis who interposed, reigned but one year only, and did nothing in it) Successor of Asinulfus, having beaten the Alani out of Lusitania and Carthaginensis, added those Provinces also unto his Estates, and confining the Vandals within Baetica, was the first of the Goths which entitled himself king of the Goths in Spain. By their agreement with the Romans, they were to keep those Provinces for the use of the Empire, which they did conquer and recover from the barbarous Nations; but contrary to all Faith, and the Articles of their Agreement having once beaten the Alani out of Lusitania by the Prowels of Valia, the Suevoi out of Baetica, under the conduct of Theodorick, the Brother of Tarismund, they fell upon the Romans themselves; whom Euricus, and his Successors, by little and little, dispossest of all Spain on this side of the Streights. Tingitana held out longest, as farthest off, unfortunately attempted tempted by Theodes the ninth King of the Goths, whose Souldiers being set upon by the Romans on the Lord's day or Sunday, refused to fight in their own defence, and were so miserably defeated, that there was never a man of them left to carry news of the overthrow. So early did the Superstition of a Lord's day Sabbath prevail upon this melancholic and devout people. But what this Theodes could not do, was performed by Suintilla; who in the short time of this reign. An. 642, made the Conquest absolute.

Let us next look upon the Goths as Lords of Spain, and we shall find them to have been Christians in Religion; and somewhat civilized by their long neighbourhood and conversations with the Gracians, before they turned their Forces into the West. Their company more desired in this respect, than that of the Vandals; who were not only Pagans, but far more barbarous. But these Goths, being for long time of the Arian Faction, did grievously afflict and persecute the Orthodox Prelates: continuing in this error till the death of Leinigild (or Leinigildus as some call him) the last Patron and Affector of it. Their Government Monarchical, but the Kings Elective, (though for the most part they kept themselves to the Regal Family): an Excommunication being laid on such, by the fifth Council of Toledo, as went about to alter that established course. Their Rule or Government was Custom, and that not left in writing, but committed to Memory and Tradition: written, Laws being first made by Euricus; which the ensuing Princes confirmed and perfected. What else concerneth them, we shall find in the close of this Catalogue of.

716	31	Roderick, the last King of the Goths in Spain, elected to the prejudice of the Sons of Vitiza, which after proved the ruin and overthrow of the Kingdom. For though the Kingdom went, for the most part, by Election, and that they had respect to the next of blood, (as at this time in Poland and Bohemia) very few interlopers being here admitted: yet some there were, who either by their merit, or some opportunity, got the possession of the Kingdom, though not at all relating to the Royal Family. Of which kind were Theodes an Offro-Goth, sometimes the Governour hereof for Theodorick King of the Goths in Italy, Protector of this Kingdom in the minority of Amalaric; and Theudehelm, or Theudegildus, Nephew to Torias, one of the Successors to Theodorick. The rest of principal note were, 1. Theodorick the first, slain in the battle near Tholouse, against Attila the Hun; in defence of his own Country, and the Roman Empire. 2. Theodorick the second, who beat the Nation of the Suevoi out of Baetica; and 3. Leinigild, or Leinigildus, who deprived them of Galicia also. 4. Reccardus the first, who first embraced the Catholic Doctrine of the Church, and rejected Arianism; and for that cause first honoured with the Title of the Catholic King; afterwards refused by Alfonso the first King of Leon, Arragon, &c. Grandfather unto Charles the fifth: 5. Exvil Policy, as Reccardus for Piety; as being the Lycinius or Legislator of this people; not governed till his time by a written Law, but either by uncertain customs, or at the pleasure of such Officers as the King let over them. 6. Suintilla Son of Reccardus the second, who having in the short time of his reign expelled the Roman Forces out of Tingitana An. 642, was the first Monarch of all Spain, whereof Tingitana, (though on the other side of the Sea) had been made a Province by the Emperor Constantine, as before was said. And of this Province was Julianus Governour in the time of Roderick, who being of the Faction of the sons of Vitiza, romanced his advancement to the Kingdom; and thereby got the greater portion of the King's displeasure; who sending him upon an Embassage to the Moors of Africa, in the mean time deflowered his daughter, named Cava: which the Father took in such indignation, that he procured the Moors (amongst whom he had gotten much credit) to come over into Spain. This request they performed under the conduct of Musa and Tariff, and having made a full Conquest, subjected it to the great Caliphs, or Mahometan Emperors. It is recorded in a MS. History of the Saracens, that at the first coming of Tariff into Spain, a poor woman of the Country being willingly taken Prisoner, fell down at his feet, kissed them, and told him, that he had heard her Father (who was Letter'd) say, that Spain should be conquered by a people whose General should have a Mole on his right shoulder, and in whom one of his hands should be longer than the other. He, to animate his Souldiers against the next encounter, unclothed himself, and shewed the mark, which so encouraged them, that they now doubted not the Victory. Roderick had in his Army 130000 Foot, and 35000 Horse. Tariff had 30000 Horse and 180000 Foot. The Battle continued seven days together, from morning to night; at last the Moors were victorious. What became of King Roderick, was never known, His Souldiers took one arrayed in their King's Apparel, whom upon examination they found to be a Shepherd; with whom the King, after the disfigurement, had changed clothes. It is written also in Roderick's Testament, that before the coming of those Saracens, King Roderick, upon hope of some treasure, did open a part of the Palace, of long time forbidden to be touched; but found nothing but Pictures which resembled the Moors, with a Prophecy, that whensoever the Palace was then opened, the people there resembled, should overcome Spain; and so it happened, An. 724.

The Moors, now Lords of Spain by the treason of Julian, (who having seen the miserable death of his wife and children, was starved in Prison by the Africans) permitted the free use of Religion to the old Inhabitants; left them seeking new dwellings for the Liberty of Conscience, should leave their native Soil desolate. The Moors finished their Conquest in five years say some, others, in two; and some again in eight Months. To keep the new-conquered Country in subjection, no way was so convenient, as to plant Colonies: but the Morisco women would not abandon their old seats. Hereupon Mulla and Tariff, by gifts, pardons, and persuasions, drew many Christian women to forsake their Religion, whom they married to the Soldiers. Not long after Uladir Olti, the great Caliph, sent over about 50000 Families of Moors and Jews, assigning them a convenient portion of Lands; to be held with great Immunities, and upon small Rents. These politic courses notwithstanding, the Moors long enjoyed not the sole Sovereignty herein: for the Christians having now recovered breath, chose themselves Kings, and the Authority of the Caliphs declining, gave the Moors liberty to erect divers petty Royalties, many of which, by little and little, were brought under the command of greater and more powerful Princes. So that at last, Spain fell into a fifteenfold division. viz. into the Kingdoms and proprietary Estates of 1. Navarre, 2. Biscay, and 3. Guipuzcoa, 4. Leon and Oviedo, 5. Gallicia, 6. Corduba, 7. Granada, 8. Murcia, 9. Toledo, 10. Castile, 11. Portugal, and the members of it, 12. Valencia, 13. Catalonia, 14. the Kingdoms of Majorca, and 15 that of Aragon: not to say any thing of the petty Kingdoms of Jaca, Algezira, and Sevil, besides others of like nature to them, erected by the fatigued and divided Moors, but of short continuance all of them, and of little note. All now reduced at this day, under the three Governments of Castile, Portugal, and Aragon; the Kingdoms and Estates of Leon, Navarre, Corduba, Granada, Gallicia, Biscay, Murcia, and Toledo, being under Castile; Portugal with Algarve, and the Isles of Azores, an entire Government of it self; Valencia, Catalonia, and Majorca, under that of Aragon.

I. NAVARRE

NAVARRE, the second Kingdom for antiquity in Spain, is bounded on the East with the Principality of Bearn, in the Kingdom of France; on the West, first with the River Ebro, or Iberus; and after, with a little River falling into it, near Calahorra, by which divided from Castile; on the North, with the Cantabrian Mountains, by which parted from Guipuzcoa, and on the South, with the River Aragon, by which divided from that Kingdom. Of larger extent anciently, than it is at the present; the little Province of Alava, lying toward Guipuzcoa, and the whole Country of Rioja, (on the West-side of the River Ebro) being taken from it, and reckoned members of Castile, by Alfonso the 4th. However, we shall look upon it in its ancient bounds, and shall accordingly take notice of the chief Cities and Towns thereof.

It was called at first, the Kingdom of Sobrarbe, from a Town of that name, situate in the most inaccessible part of the Pyrenees; and therefore chose by Garcia Xi- mines, the first King hereof, for the seat of his Kingdom, as most defensible against the fury of the Moors. Afterwards it took the name of Navarre, either from Navais, signifying a plain and Champaign Country, (first used by Inigo Arista, the sixth King, who having taken Pampelona, abandoned the Hill-Countries, and betook himself unto the Plains) or from Navarriete, the chief of the three parts into which that City was divided, not only at the taking thereof, but a long time after.

The Country, though environed on all sides with mighty Mountains, yet of itself is said to be reasonably fruitful, well watered, and for the most part plain and level, as before is said. It taketh up also some parts of both sides of the Pyrenees: the Spanish side being fertile, and adorned with Trees; the French side generally very bare and naked. That on the Spanish side, and on the summits of the Mountains, now possessed by the Spaniards, is called High Navarre: that on the French side, now called Basse or Low Navarre, estimated at a sixth part of the whole Kingdom, is enjoyed by the French; incorporated by King Lewis the 13, to the Realm of France, An. 1620.

Places of most importance in Basse Navarre, 1. S. Pelay, formerly the Place of Judicature for this part of the Kingdom; but in the year 1620, removed to Pau in the Principality of Bearn: both Bearn and Basse Navarre, which hath before been governed as distinct Estates from the Realm of France, being then incorporate to that Crown. 2. Navareux, a Town of great importance, seven Leagues from Pau, well fortified, and as well mounted, King Lewis the 13, finding it at his coming thither, An. 1620, no fewer than 45 Cannons all mounted, besides 40 Culverins and smaller Pieces; with Powder, Bullet, and Victuals, answerable thereunto. 3. Pied de Port, or St. John de Pied de Port, bordering on the edge of France against which formerly a piece of especial strength. 4. Roncevalis, or Roncevaux situate in the most pleasant Country of all Navarre, in the entrance of a small but delightful Valley: famous for the great Battle fought near unto it; in the Straights or entrances of the Mountains leading to this valley; betwixt the French under Charlemagne, and a great Army of Moors and natural Spaniards, confederate together in defence of their common Liberty. In which Battle, by the treachery of Ganelon, 40000 of the French were slain; and amongst them, Rowland Earl of Mans, the Nephew of Charles, and others of the Peers of France; of whom so many Fables are reported in the old Romances; the first Author of which Fables, passeth under the name of Arch-Bishop Turpin, said to be one of those Charles the Great, hath interlaced his Story with a number of ridiculous vanities: by means whereof, the noble acts of that puissant Emperor, and his gallant Followers, are much obscured and blemished by those very Pens, which in the times succeeding did employ themselves to advance the fame.

Of special note in High Navarre, 1. Victoria first built, or rather re-edified by Sancho the 4. King of Navarre, An. 1181, by whom thus named in memory of some victory obtained thereabouts against the Castilians; whereas before his time it was called Gasteiz: as in like case there had been many Towns built by Greeks and Romans, by the name of Nicopolis, or the City of Victory, which we shall meet withal hereafter. Situate in the place of the ancient Vellisca, but graced with the privileges and name of a City, by John the second of Castile, after it came under the Command of that Crown, An. 1432. A Town belonging properly to the little

Province of Alava, and the chief thereof. Which Province being wholly in and amongst the Cantabrian Mountains, was of old a member of Navarre: but being extorted from it, An. 1200, by Alphonso the 4th of Castile, it was in the year 1332, incorporated into that Crown, as a part thereof; as were some other Towns and Members of this Kingdom also, won by the Castilians. 2. Viane, on the East of the River Ebro, well fortified, after the taking of Logronno on the other side of the water, (from which distant not above a League) as the Frontier Town against Castile. Of greatest note for being the title of the eldest Son of Navarre, who was called Prince of Viane; advanced unto this honour by King Charles the third, An. 1421. in imitation of the like custom in Castile, where the eldest Son was called Prince of the Asturias: but not less memorable for the death of Cesar Borgia, slain near unto it in an ambush, after all his wanderings, and interchangeableness of fortunes. For being Son of Pope Alexander the sixth, by birth a Spaniard, he was by his Father made a Cardinal; but relinquishing that Title, by Charles the eighth of France, created Duke of Valentinis, in the Province of Dauphine: during his Fathers life, he had reduced under his obedience, divers of the Estates which anciently had belonged to the Church of Rome; but after his decease, imprisoned by Pope Julio the second, who was jealous (not without good cause) of his plots and practices. From Rome he stole unto Genoa, then Vice-Roy of Naples for Ferdinando the Catholic; who notwithstanding his safe conduct, sent him Prisoner to Spain: but breaking Prison (desperately sliding down a Window) he came at last into this Kingdom, and was here slain in an Ambuscade, as before was said. So many times was Maubieu, a great Politician over-reached by Book-men and Soldiers! 3. Sobrarbe, in the most inaccessible parts of the Pyrenees; for that cause made the first Seat of the Kings of Navarre, entitled from thence the Kingdom from Navarre, by Sancho the Great, who gave it to Gonsales his youngest Son: after whose death (not having issue) it was seized on by Don Raymir, the first King of Aragon, and made a member of that Crown. 4. Sanguessa, a Town of a large Territory and Jurisdiction, privileged with a Suffrage in the Convention of Estates, and a strong Fortrefs on the borders towards Aragon: for which cause formerly aimed at by the Kings thereof, who have had it sometimes in their hands. 5. Pampelona, in the Champaign Country, on the banks of the River Arga, the Metropolis of this Kingdom; and the Seat-Royal of its Kings, since the Conquest of it from the Moors by Inigo Arista, the sixth King of Navarre. Of old divided into three parts; that is to say, Bourg, Pempelun, and Navarriete; each having several Officers and Jurisdications, (the cause of many quarrels and much blood amongst them) till all united into one body, and reduced under the command of one chief Magistrate, by King Charles the third. An ancient Town, first built by Pompey at the end of his Wars against Sertorius; in memory of whom called Pempelun by our modern Latinists; but Antoninus, more near unto the present name, by Ptolomy and Antoninus: now an Episcopal See, the seat of the Vice-Roy, and one of the best fortified Towns of all Spain. 6. Moia, not far from the borders of France, where it joyneth on Guipuzcoa; a place of principal importance: the Castle whereof was one of the last pieces on this side of the Mountains, which held out for King John of Albert, against Ferdinand the Catholic, in his surprisal of this Kingdom. 7. Monreal, 8. Oite, and 9. Tallava; all yielded with the rest of this Kingdom, to Frederick of Toledo, Duke of Alava: who had the happiness to subdue this Realm to the Crown of Castile, as his Son Ferdinand had to conquer the Realm of Portugal. 10. Tudela, on the Eastern bank of the River Ebro, took from the man) coming with many other noble persons to the aid of Alfonso, King of Navarre and Aragon, at the siege of Saragossa, An. 1110. Given by that King unto him, for the reward of his service; and afterwards united to the Crown of Navarre, by the marriage of Magdalen daughter of Earl Rouen, with Garcia the seventh King of Navarre, Successor in that Kingdom to the said Alfonso. Of late times honoured with a little University there founded by Ferdinand the Catholic, on his surprisal of that Kingdom. 11. Calahorra, situate on the Western banks of the Iberus, or Ebro, by Ptolomy called Calagurris; by Strabo, Calaguris; now a Bishops See: taken from Sancho the eighth of Navarre, by Alfonso the fourth of Castile, and made a Member of that Kingdom. As also was 12. Logronno, in the Country of Rioja, on the same banks of the River also. 13. Eskala, bordering on Castile, to which adjudged (though on the Eastern side of the River) by Lewis the 11th. of France, made Umpire for the atonement of some differences betwixt Henry King of Castile, and John King of Navarre and Aragon; to satisfy that King for his charges in the former Quarrel.

The old Inhabitants thereof, were the Vascones, possessed not only of this tract, but of Biscay and Guipuzcoa also, from them denominated: who passing over the Pyrenees, made themselves Masters of that Province which is now called Cascoigne by the French, and Vasconia in Latin. Won from the Romans by the Celts, and from them by the Moors; it began to be a Kingdom under Garcia Ximenes, a noble man of the Gothish blood, who with 600 men only began to make head against the Saracens, An. 716. first under the title of the Kingdom of Sobrarbe; and after that, of Navarre, for the reasons formerly delivered. The sixth from Garcia Ximenes, was Inigo, surnamed Arista, (so named from his vehemency and heat in War) the Son of Simon Earl of Bizorre in Cascoigne; elected to this Kingdom on the death of Ximenes the fifth King, An. 840. or thereabouts, as the next Heir (but in the collateral Line) of Don Garcia Ximenes, the first King of Sobrarbe. To him the taking of his History is ascribed most generally, though Turpin in his History refers the same to Garcia the second King. But certainly the Town was in the hands of the Moors, till forced from them by the prowess of Charlemagne; by them again recovered after the defeat of Ronceval, and held till the time of this King, who possessed himself of it: To this King also is ascribed the first beginning of the ceremony of Crowning and Anointing, after the manner used by the Kings of France. But the old Roman Provincial, cited in the Titles of Honour, acknowledgeth only, in that time, to the Emperors of the East and West, the Kings of Hierusalem, England, France, and Sicily. And therefore probable it is, that the custom came into Navarre with the House of Champagne. Other Kings of most note in the course of Story, were 3. Forus, the second Nephew of Inigo Arista, by his Son Garcia the third; who added unto his Estate, the Earldom of Aragon, descended to him by his Mother, the Daughter and Heir of Afharis, or Aznaris, who was 4. Sancho the fourth, surnamed the Great, who first assumed unto himself the title of King of Spain: his Predecessors using no other title than Kings of Sobrarbe and Navarre; his Co-temporaries calling themselves Kings of Leon, Toledo, Sevil, Corduba; according to the names of their several Kingdoms; the Goths, Kings of the Goths in Spain; and so the Vandals, and the Suevi. Only the Earls of Barcelona, at their first erection by the French, entituled themselves the Dukes and Marquesses of Spain, as if all were theirs, with brag and vanity enough. But this Prince had some good ground for it, as being by inheritance possessed of Navarre and Aragon of Castile, in the right of his Wife Dona Agnes, or Elvira, Sister and Heir of Sancho the last Earl thereof; and by conquest of a great part of the Realm of Leon: so that almost all Spain, not possessed by the *Moor*s, was become his own. Had these Estates remained entire to his Successors, the *Moor*s, no doubt, had sooner lost their hold in Spain; and the whole Continent been brought under the obedience of one sole Monarch. But this King either loving all his Sons alike, or else offended with the eldest, who most unaturally had accused his own innocent Mother of the crime of Adultery, divided his Estates amongst them; giving to Garcia his eldest Son, the Realm of Navarre; with that part of Leon which he held by Conquest; to Ferdinand his second Son, Castile; and Aragon, to his base Son Raymir; both which he erected into Kingdoms: and finally, to Conseles his third Son, the Realm of Sobrarbe, then first dismembered from Navarre. By means of which impolitic course, his Sons being all of equal Title and Estates, instead of opposing the common Foe, quarrelled with each other, and left the Quarrel as a Legacy to their several Successors: which mischief might have been avoided, if he had not dignified them all with the title of Kings, or left the rest as Homagers unto one Supreme. 5. Sancho the fifth, Nephew of Sancho the Great, by his Son Garcia de Nagera; unaturally and trayterously slain by his Brother Raymir. After whose death, and the short interposition of his Murderer, this Kingdom was seized on by the Kings of Aragon; three of which, viz. Sancho Ramirez, Pedro, and Alfonso, did severally and successively enjoy the same. 6. Alfonso, the last of the three Kings of Aragon reigning in Navarre, firnamed the Warrior; who for a time was King of Castile also, in right of Urraca his Wife; in which respect he took unto himself the title of Emperour of Spain, though not acknowledged to by others. But finally, dying without Issue, and his Brother Raymir, or Raymond, called the Monk, succeeding in Aragon, the Kingdom of Navarre reverted to Garcia Raymir, Lord of Monjon, the direct Heir of Garcia de Nagera, by Raymir Lord of Calaborra, his younger Son. 7. Sancho the eighth, the Nephew of this Garcia Raymir, by his Son Sancho the seventh, firnamed the Wise, the last King of the Masculine and direct Line of the Kings of Navarre; the Kingdom, after his decease, passing by the Females, or Heirs-general, to the Earls of Champagne, and so unto the Kings of France, the Houses of Eureux, Foix, Albert, and Vendosme; but never holding above three decents in any one Family. By means whereof, these Kings being barred from gaining any thing on the *Moor*s, by the interposition of the Kings of Castile and Aragon; and having no way to enlarge their Revenue or Dominions, by any undertakings or adventures at Sea, as the Portugals did: incorporated to their Crown as fair and large possessions in the Realm of France, as any of the others did in the Spanish Continent. The Principality of Bearn, the Earldoms of Foix and Begorre, united in the person of Gaston of Foix; as those of Armaignac and Albert, in the person of John Earl of Albert; all lying together on the other side of the Pyrenes; all added to this Crown by marriage with the Heirs hereof: made up a fairer and wealthier Estate than Navarre it self, inferior to few Provinces in the Realms of Spain. Not to say any thing of the accession of the Country-Palatine of Champagne, exchanged afterwards for some Lands in the Country of La March in Limousin; or of the Earldoms of Eureux, and the Duchy of Vendosme, as lying further off, and of less importance: Nor of the great Kingdom of France, now herewith incorporate, as to the Person of the King, though not in the possession of this Kingdom also. With so much judgement and success did the ensuing Kings (not otherwise able to enlarge their Territories) bestow their Daughters, that the Diffault proved as happy to this little Kingdom, as the Sword to others. 8. Charles, the second of that name, and the 30 King of Navarre; whom I mention not for any glorious Actions achieved in his life, (for that was full enough of ignominy) but for the strangeness and hideousness of his death. He was a Prince much given to voluptuousness, and sensual pleasures, which he wasted his spirits, that in his old age he fell into a kind of Lethargy. To comfort his benumbed joys, he was bound and sewed up naked in a sheet, steeped in boiling Aqua-vita. The Chyrurgeon having made an end of sewing the sheet, and wanting a knife to cut off the thread, took a Wax-Candle that stood lighted by him; but the flame running down by the thread, caught hold on the sheet; which (according to the nature of Aqua-vita) burned with that vehemency, that the miserable King ended his days in the fire. 9. John of Aragon, the second Son of Ferdinand the first, in the life of his Brother Alfonso, was made King of Navarre, in right of Blanche his Wife, Daughter of Charles the third; and on the death of his Brother, King of Aragon also. And though his Queen died long before him, in whose right he reigned; yet he kept possession of the Kingdom till his death, (reigning fifty four years in all) notwithstanding the opposition made against him by Charles Prince of Viana, his only Son by that marriage; and their apparent of that Crown; whom he vanquished, imprisoned, and at last payoned: 10. John, Earl of Albert in Gascogne, King of Navarre in right of Katharine his Wife: in whose reign the Kingdom of Navarre was seized on by Ferdinand the Catholic, Son of the said John King of Aragon and Navarre, by a second Wife. The manner of it we shall relate with more particulars, when we have summed the whole Succession of.

The Kings of Navarre.

| 1610 | 40. | Lewis II. of Navarre , and XIII. of France . |
| | 51. | Lewis III. of Navarre , and XIV. of France , now living; with whom remain the rights, but not the possession of this Kingdom. For in the reign of Katharine and John of Albret , Ferdinand gathered an Army under the pretence of rooting out the Moor s, and surprised this Kingdom, altogether unprovided, and destitute of means to make the smallest resistance, Anno 1512. The pretended reason of this surprisal, was an Excommunication laid on these Princes by the Pope, of which this King took upon him to be Executor; but the true cause was an ancient desire which this King had to possess this frontier Kingdom, it being a strong Bulwark against France . It happened then, that Lewis the 12th, having incurred the pleasure of Pope Julius the second, was (together with all his adherents) excommunicated, and his and their Estates given to such as could or would subdue them. The King and Queen of |

Navarre were, at this time, both French Subjects: he, in respect of Albret, his Paternal Inheritance; and she, of her Estates of Foix and Bearn: and therefore sided with the French King. Ferdinand having (as we said) levied an Army under colour of extirpating the *Moor*s, turneth upon the French King, and demanded of these Princes not only a free passage through their Country, but also to have certain places of strength put into his hand, for his better assurance. These unjust demands the Navarrois denied. Whereupon Ferdinand with all expedition invadeth the Kingdom, the greatest part of which he took without a blow given; the French King being as backward in affording due assistance, as the other was unprovided of means for defence. The French settled with this loss, divers times attempted the recovery of it, but in vain: for the Spaniard still kepteth those parts of it which lye on that side of the Pyrenes, leaving the rest, which lyeth on the French side of those Mountains (being about a sixth part of the whole) to the Descendants of those Princes whom he had dispossessed.

The chief Order of Knighthood was of the Lily, begun by Garcia the sixth; their Blazon, a Pot of Lilies, with the Portraiture of our Lady engraven upon it, their duty, to defend the Faith, and daily to repeat certain Ave-Maries.

The Arms of Navarre, are Gules, a Carbuncle nowed Or. Which Carbuncle having a resemblance unto chains of Gold, is said to have been first taken by Sancho the 8th, in memory that he and his Forces had first broken the Fortification made with Chains, about the Pavilion of Mahomet Ensign, the Merammolin of Morocco, at the great fight in Sierra Morena; before which time the Arms of this Kingdom had been Azure, a Cross Argent.

3. BISCAY and GUIPUSCOA.

OF these two we shall speak together, because of the similitude and resemblances which are between them, both in the Country and the People: the names being also forged from the same Original: Bounded on the West, with the Kingdom of Leon, on the East with the Pyrenes, and Guyenne in the Realm of France; on the North, with the Cantabrian Ocean; and on the South, with Navarre and old Castile. Thus named from the Falcons, inhabiting the neighbouring Kingdom of Navarre, in the time of the Romans: part of which people, in the year 640, or thereabouts, passed over unto the further side of the Pyrenes, where they took up those parts of France, since from them called Casquegne. The rest continuing in their old Seat, or spreading more into the West, towards the Cantabrians, gave to those parts the name of Guipuscoa, and Viscaya, (for so the Spaniards write and speak it) now by us called Biscay: their language also (which is much different from the rest of Spain) being called the Basqueish, more near in sound to that of the Falcons, the original name.

The whole Country is very Mountainous and Woody, yielding but little store of Corn, and less of Wine: the defect of the first being supplied from other Countries; of the last, by Sider; for which end they plant Apples here in great abundance. But from those VVoods they draw continually great store of Timber for the building of Ships; and from those Hills there do not only issue pleasant Rivers, (some say 150 in number) of which Iberu and Duero are said to be two; but such infinite store of Iron and Steel, that no Country yieldeth better, or in greater plenty. Called and accounted for this cause, the Armory of Spain; and giving occasion unto Plainly to report, that there was in this Country a whole Mountain of Iron. Murimã Cantabrie parte; Mons præparit alius (incredibile dictu) totu ex ea materia est. lib. 33. cap. 45. Nor do they only furnish all Spain with Iron, which they make into Instruments of War, and others for domestic uses : but with Timber also for their shipping, with which so stored, that whole Fleets may be built and armed from this Country only.

It is divided commonly into two parts; the Eastern bordering on the Pyrænes, and the Realm of France, which is called GUIPUSCOA; and the VVestern, bordering on the Kingdom of Leon, which properly is called BISCAT : the Town of Monrice standing in the Confines of both. Both of them heretofore of the same Original, though by several means united to the Crown of Castile : both speak the same Cantabrian language, now called the Basquish; the people of both, being more rude and simple, than the rest of Spain; but standing much upon their Gentry, according to the custom of most mountainous and unconquered Nations. The difference is, that those of Guipuscoa, by reason of their traffick and commerce with other Countries, favour a little more of Christianity than the others do : in which the common Biscains are so far to seek, that though they have some general notions of God and CHRIST, yet very few of them are able to render an account of their Faith, in any tolerable measure. And thus a view being taken of those general notions in which both Countries are concerned; let us next look upon them in their several and distinct capacities, with reference to their chief Towns and Stories.

And first for GUIPUSCOA. The places of chiefest note in it are, 1. S. Sebastian, (Don Bastia, as the vulgar call it) a noted and well traded Port, at the mouth of the River Gurumio; beautified with a fair and capacious Haven, defended at the entrances with two strong Castles founded upon the opposite Rocks, and honoured with an Episcopal Sec. 2. Tolosa, (commonly called Tolofete) at the confluence of the Rivers Oria and Duaxo. 3. Placencia, on the River Denia, inhabited by noise but Blacksmiths, who do attend their Hammers with such endless diligence, that Vulcan's Forge may seem to be translated hither out of the Island of Lennox. 4. Guetaria, beautified with a safe and convenient Haven; defended from all VVinds by a little Island lying before it: the birth-place of Sebastian del Cabo, that famous Pilot, the first that sailed about the VVorld: Magehamm who went chief in that expedition, perishing in the Action. 5. Fon-tarabia, at the mouth of the River Videla, which divides this Country from Guyenne in France: for that cause very well fortified, and as strongly garrisoned. 6. Remeris, situate near a Brook abounding with most excellent Salmon. 7. Monrice, at the mouth of the River Denia; the farthest Town hereof on the edge of Biscay. Most of which stand upon or near the Sea, there being but few Towns of note within the Land, (though there enough of scattered Villages, as in Biscay also) because of the roughness of the Mountains.

As for the Fortunes and affairs of this part of the Country, after the subversion of the Kingdom of the Goths in Spain (for till that time they followed the same Fortunes with the rest of this Continent) it was at first a member of the Crown of Navarre; afterwards wrested from K. Sancho the sixth, by Alfonso the first of Castile, An. 1079; by whom committed to the Government of Lopes Diaz de Haro, Lord of Biscay. Restored again to the Kings of Navarre, upon some following Captulations: It is continued till the year 1200; when having experience of the Government of both Kingdoms, and liking better that of Castile, they offered themselves to the subjection of Alfonso the 4th; who though so much as one blow struck, became Master of all the Country, and left it settled and confirmed unto his Successors, as it hath ever since remained.

2. For BISCAT next; the principal Towns thereof are, 1. Larrabeechia, the chief Town of this Province in elder times; in the chief Church whereof, the Kings of Spain, as Lords of Biscay; use to be solemnly inaugurated, here making Oath to maintain the Liberties of the Country, and receiving the Homage and Allegiance of the people of it. 2. Berno, an old Town also, and amply privileged; the Franchises whereof, the Kings are solemnly sworn to keep, in the Church dedicated to the honour of S. Euphemie. 3. Guericia, the third Town for antiquity in this part of these Countries. Then of a later date, we have 4. Bilbo, or Bilboa, situate some two Leagues from the Sea, but on a fair and deep Creek thereof; on the other side surrounded with Mountains: built out of the ruins of the old Flaviobriga, by Diego de Haro, Lord of Biscay, An. 1200; and situate the half of any Town in this Country, for plenty of VViduels, especially for flesh, and most excellent bread. Exceedingly enriched by making of Armour, and all sorts of VVapours, (their chiefest Manufacture) the Bilbo-blades in such request being brought from hence. Besides which trade of Arms and Iron, they deal also in VVool; by the vent of which Commodities they are grown so wealthy, that here are many private Merchants which build yearly three or four good Ships for their own trade only. 5. Laredo, a Sea Town also, with a capable Port. The landing place of Charles the fifth, when he had relinquished the Empire, and all his other Estates, with resolution to spend the rest of his life in Spain, in a private manner: it being observable, that he was no sooner landed, but the Admiral ship in which he came, and the greatest part of the Navy which came with him, perished in the Haven; to thew him (as it were) that there was no receding from this resolution. 6. Portogaltre, commodiously seated on an Arm of the Sea, which floweth up to their very houses, and serveth them exceedingly fitly for the lading and unlading of their Commodities.

The old Inhabitants of this Tract, before the coming in of the Vascones, were the Cantabri; these subdivided into the several Nations of the Marbogi, the Caristi, the Amrigones, the Farduli, and the Cantabri properly so called. From these descend the modern Biscains. An argument whereof may be their Language, different from the rest of Spain; and said by some to have continued in this Country ever since the confusion at Babel. And though they overthrow themselves, that go as far as Babel for the Pedigree and Antiquity of it: yet that it was the ancient Language of Spain, is more than probable; because this people have ever continued without any mixture of Foreign Nations, as being never thoroughly subdued either by Romans, Carthaginians, Goths or *Moor*s; and so they remained, as in their Liberties not mastered, so in their Language not altered. In like manner the Arabick continueth uncorrupt, in the hilly parts of Granada, the Tongue of the old Britains, in our Wales; and the ancient Epirotick, in the high, woody, and more mountainous parts of that Country. And though those of Guipuscoa speak the same Language also, yet is it with a greater mixture of other words, (by reason of their neighbourhood with France, and commerce with Strangers) than it is in Biscay; where the old natural Language, whatsoever it was, is in far more purity.

Nor do the Biscains differ from the rest of Spain in Language only, but in Customs also; four of which I will here here set down as a light to the rest. First, they account themselves free from Taxes and Contributions to the Kings of Spain; yielding them obedience with their Bodiet, but not with their Purses. And when any of the Spanish Kings, in their Progresses, come to the Frontiers of this Country, he bareth one of his Legs, and in that manner entrench into it. There he is met by the Lords and Gentlemen there dwelling, who proffer him some few small Brass pieces (Maravedies they call them, whereof 600 go to a Crown) in a Leathern Bag, hanged at the end of a Lance: but withall they tell him, that he must not take them. Which Ceremony performed, they all attend the King in his journey. Secondly, They admit no Bishops to come amongst them; and when Ferdinand the Catholic came in Progress hither, accompanied, amongst others, by the Bishop of Pampelune, the people arose in Arms, drove back the Bishop; and gathering all the dust on which they thought he had trodden, cast it into the Sea. VVhich averrifes unto Bishops, as they first took up, in all probability, on some hard usage which they found at the hands of their Prelates; and still retain it out of a stubbornness of nature, most peculiar to them: so possible enough it is, that the want of Bishops, and of Episcopall Visitations amongst the Biscains is not the least cause of that ignorance and rudeness (spoken of before) which is found amongst them. Thirdly, they allow not any Priests to live in their Villages, except he bring his Concubine with him: conceiving it impossible for them to keep their VVives unto themselves, if the Curate hath not a VVoman of his own. Fourthly, the VVomen, at all meetings, do first taste of the Cup, and so dispose of it to the men: which custom they have had amongst them ever since Ogus, the Countess of Castile, attempted to have poisoned her Son Sancho, in a Cup of VVine.

But to return again to the old Inhabitants, they were a people of that courage, that they defended the liberty of their Country against the Romans, when the residue of Spain was subdued: and were at last, not without great effusion of blood, and manifest tokens of manly resolution, and heroic spirits on their parts, vanquished by the Darling of Fortune, Augustus. Such hilly and mountainous people, are always the last that are conquered, and the first that stand on their own guard: as besides those Biscains, the Navarrois and Asturians here in Spain, in respect of the *Moor*s; and our Britains, in relation to the Saxons. Whether it be, that living in a sharp air, and being inured to labour, they prove on occasion good and able men; or that the Forts of Nature's own building are not so easily won, as defended; or that the unpleasantness of the Country, and unfruitfulness of the Soil, yield no occasion to Strangers to desire an Adventure for it; I take not on me to determine. But being overcome at last, they were first cast into the Province of Tarracoenste; and so continued after the new modelling of Spain, by the Emperor Constantine. Under the Romans they continued, till that Empire fell; and then not conquered by the Goths, but resigned over to them by the Romans, with the rest of that Province. Nor lost they any thing of their ancient and natural courage, by the intermixture of the Vascons; continuing till good Souldiers both for Sea and Land; a stubborn, fierce, and courageous people; impatient of servitude, and not easy to be forced to any thing which they like not of. The last of all the Spaniards that submitted to the fury of the *Moor*s, (excepting those of the *Asturia*s, never conquered by them) and one of the first Provinces which shook off that yoke: animated and conducted in that undertaking, by Soria, defended of the Blood-Royal of Scot- land, Anno 870. made upon that good service, the first Lord of Biscay. After this, they continued a free and distinct Estate, under their own Proprietary Lords and Princes of the Noble Family of Haro; till that Nero of Spain, Don Pedro the Cruel, violently took it from Donna Jeanne, the right Heir of it, Anno 1358. From which Donna Jeanne, the eldest Daughter, married to Ferdinand the younger Son of Ferdinand de la Cerde, the right heir of Castile, issued the Lady Jeanne Manuel, the Wife of Henry the second, and Mother of John the first, both King of Castile: by which last, this Country was united to that Crown for ever, Anno 1379. The names of the Proprietary Lords of this Estate, we have in this following Catalogue of The Lords of Biscay.

A. Chr.

- 870 1. Soria, the Son of Lopes of Biscay, but Nephew by the Mother's side to a King of Scotland, the first Lord of Biscay.
2. Manfo Lopez, the Son of Soria.
3. Inigo the Deaf, Son of Manfo Lopez.
4. Lopes Diaz, the Son of Inigo.
5. Sancho Lopez, the Son of Lopes Diaz.
6. Inigo II. the base Son of Lopes Diaz; the two Sons of Sancho Lopez, by reason of their tender years, being left aside.
7. Lopes Diaz II. Son of Inigo the second.
8. Diego Lopez, surnamed the White, Son of Lopes Diaz the second.
9. Lopes Diaz III. Son of Diego Lopez; the first who took unto himself the surname of Haro, from a Town of that name, of his foundation.
10. Diego Lopez Diaz de Haro, Son of Lopes Diaz the third.
11. Lopes Diaz IV. Son of Diego Lopez Diaz de Haro.
- 1257 12. Diego Lopez Diaz II. assisted Sancho the second Son of King Alfonso the fifth of Castile, in excluding the Children of Don Ferdinand de la Cerde, his elder Brother; by which Sancho he was after slain. A reward not unfavourable to his bold attempt.
- 1289 13. Diego Lopez de Haro, the Son of Diego.
- 1290 14. Diego Lopez III. the Brother of Diego Lopez Diaz the second, the Founder of the Town of Bilboa.
- 1309 15. John of Castile, Brother to King Sancho, and Husband of Mary Diaz de Haro, Daughter of Diego Lopez the second.
- 1319 16. John the Blind; so called, because he had lost an Eye; Son of John of Castile, and Mary Diaz de Haro; slain by King Alfonso.
- 1329 17. John Nunges of Lara, in right of his VVife, Daughter and Heir of John the Blind, (whose name I find not) succeeded after the decease of Donna Maria Diaz.
- 1350 18. Nugno de Lara, an Infant of two years old, succeeded John Nunges of Lara, his Father.
- 1351 15. Jeon and Isabel, the Sisters and Heirs of Nugno de Lara, seized upon by Don Pedro; and the whole Signery of Biscay subjected by strong hand to the Crown of Castile, with many other fair Estates which depended on it.

The Arms of these Lords of Biscay, were Argent, two VVolves Sable, each of them in his mouth a Lamb of the second.

4. LEON and OVIEDO

THE Kingdom of LEON and OVIEDO, hath on the East, the Country of Biscay: on the North, the main Cantabrian Ocean: on the South, Castile: on the West, Galicia. So called from León and Oviedo, the chief Cities of it, and first Seat of their Kings; the ancientest Kingdom in all Spain. By a more ancient name it was called Asturia, from the Astures; who possessed it in the time of the Romans: divided into the two general names of Augustani, and Transmontani; but comprehending the particular Tribes or Nations of the Pesici, Gigari, Zoela, and Lancienfes.

The Country mountainous and woody, but formerly of some esteem for those small, though swift Horses, which the Romans (from hence) called Asturcones; we may read it, Hobbies; which afterwards became a common name for all Nags or Geldings: Asturo Macedonius, being used for a Macedonian Nag, by Petronius Arbitr.

It is divided commonly into two parts; that is to say, 1. Asturia de Oviedo, bordering on Galicia, towards the West: and 2. Asturia Santillana, confining on Biscay, towards the East. From which division of the Country, the eldest Son of Castile is called Prince of the Asturias in the plural number; which title some suppose to be given unto them, because it was the first Country which held up against the Moors. But indeed, the true Original hereof, is referred by the best Spanish Writers, to the time of the marriage of Catharine, Daughter of John of Ganne, and in right of her Mother Constance, the right Heir of Castile, unto Henry Son of John the first, then in possession of that Kingdom. For to this new married Couple it was granted, saith Mariana, that after the manner of England, where the Heir apparent is called Prince of Wales, they should be called Princes of the Asturias. Intimes succeeding, the Towns of Jaca, Ubeda, Biata, or Bacca, and Andajar, all situate near together in Andalusia, and each of them invested with a goodly Territory, were added to the Patrimony and Estate hereof; and so continue to this day.

Places of most importance in, 1. Sublance, now a small Village, but once a Town of so great strength, that it was destroyed by the command of the Emperor Nervus, lest it might animate these Mountainers unto a revolt, 2. LEON, situate at the foot of the Mountain, not far from the place of the old Sublance, (as it was then called.) The Town but mean, were it not beautified by a fair and large Cathedral; the Bishop whereof acknowledged not Metropolitan but the Pope alone. Recovered from the Moors, An. 722. Afterwards made the Regal Seat of the Kings of Leon: by some called Legio, because the seventh Legion was here lodged: by Prothomy called Legio Germanica; and by others, Gemina. 3. S. Andrea, so named from a Church there built to the honour of S. Andrew; by Prothomy called Flavianovie; now a welltraded Port on the Cantabrian Ocean. 4. Santillana, which gives name to the Eastern part of Asturia. 5. Llanes, where the two Asturias meet together, 6. Ciudad Real, in the Western part of Asturia, called Asturia de Oviedo, 7. Villa Viciosa, the only noted Port in this part of the Country. 8. Avila, on the borders of Galicia, near the Sea, and not far from the Promontory called of old Promontorium Sybeticum, but now Cabo de Pium. 9. OVIEDO, called for a time, the City of Bishops, because many of the Bishops of Spain, dispossessed of their Churches by the Moors, had retired thither; and there preserved the line of Episcopal Succession, till their Sees were filled again with Bishops in more happy times. Anciently it was called Lucus Asturum, and was of old a Bishops See; re-edified by King Froila the first, in the year 757. Famous enough in giving the Title of a Kingdom to the first Christian Princes, after the Conquest by the Moors; called from hence, Kings of Oviedo. Afterwards, An. 896, in the time of K. Ordoño the first, they began to be stiled Kings of Oviedo and Leon; and at last, Kings of Leon only; Oviedo being quite left out of the Regal stile, by Raymír the second, Anno 940. More towards the Islands of this kingdom, (now reckoned part of old Castile) are 10. Palencia, the Palencia of Prothomy and Amonimus, seated on the River Carion, once a small University, till the translation of it unto Salamanca, by King Ferdinand the third. This Town first felt the fury of the Suevians, when they mastered these parts of Spain. 11. Astorga, anciently called Augusta Asturica, when the Astures of this Tract were called Augustani; a Bishops See, fronting on Galicia: happy in this, that it felt not the fury of the lustful king Vitiza; who to secure himself in his unlawful pleasures, and to weaken his subjects if they should attempt any thing against him, dismantled all the Towns in his Dominions, except Leon, Toledo, and this Astorga. 12. Benevent, on the South-east of Astorga, which gave the title of Duke to Frederick the base Son of king Henry the 2d, of Castile, the stem of the potent Family of Spain, for the times they lived in. 13. Toro, the most Southern Town of all this kingdom: and for that cause well fortified against the encroachments of the Castilians, till the uniting of the kingdoms: made afterwards, (as lying nearest to Castile, and the Court of the king) the ordinary place of conference with the States of Leon.

Who were the old Inhabitants of this Country, hath been shewn already. When conquered by Augustus Caesar, they were made part of the province of Larracensis; part, afterwards, of the Province of Galicia, by the Emperor Constantine. Won from the Romans by the Goths; and from them, by the Moors; though long they did not lie under their command. For as the lust of Roderick, the king of the Goths in Spain, occasioned the coming in of the Moors; so the lust of Magnus, a Moorish Vice-Roy occasioned (though in long course of time) their expulsion thence. For Magnus having employed Pelagius, a young Prince of the Asturias, on an Embassy to Alfons the Lieutenant General of the Moors, then residing at Corduba, in his absence ravished his Sister, and at his return died by the edge of his Sword. Despairing of pardon for his act, he was fain to stand upon his guard, and fortify himself in the Mountainous places of this Country; to which many of the old Inhabitants resorted, put themselves under his command, and elected him to be their King: first by the name of king of the Asturias; and after by the title of king of Leon, when he had got that City into his hands; as being the City of most note, and the strongest Hold that he was possessed of. The kingdom at the first beginning, contained only the more mountainous parts of the two Asturias; enlarged a little further South, on the taking of Leon by this first Pelagius. Afterwards, by the valour of Ordoño the second, it extended over both Asturias's, Galicia, and the Old Castile: divided from the Moors by the Mountains of Avila, and Segovia; but more defended by the valour of the people, and Gallantry of their Princes, than it was by those Mountains. Kings of most note; besides the two before remembred, were 1. Mairegate, the base Son of Alfonso the first; who having by the help of Abderamen, King of the Moors, obtained the Kingdom, came to a base agreement with them; in which he bound himself to pay them, as an yearly Tribute, 50 Virgins of Noble Families, and as many of inferior birth: for which he died hated and detested of all men. 2. Raymír the first, who so discomfited the Moors at the Battle of Clavijo, near Calahorra, in Navarre, An. 836, that from that time the Power and reputation of the Kings of Corduba began to languish. 3. Alfonso the third, who refused to pay unto the Moors the said tribute of Virgins; and for his many Victories against the Moors, was named, The Great: who being outed of the Kingdom by his Son Garcia, not only patiently digested to great a wrong, but willingly became his Son's Lieutenant against the Moors. 4. Veramund the second, chosen King in the minority of Raymír the third; in whose time the Moors took Leon, and spoiled the Church of S. James in Galitia; but were after beaten to their homes with the loss of many of their own places. 5. Veramund the third, who making War against Ferdinand the first, King of Castile, was by him slain in Battle; the Conqueror seizing on his kingdom in right of Sancho his Wife, the Sister of Veramund; the three Kings next succeeding, being Kings of both. 6. Ferdinand the third, Son of Alfonso the 9th. and of Berengaria, the younger Sister of Henry King of Castile; by the Power and Policy of his Mother, seized on the Castiles, of right belonging to Blanch the elder Sister, Wife of Lewis, Son to Philip the second, King of France; and after the death of his Father, succeeded in Leon. Of whom we shall hear more when we come to Castile. After this time, these kingdoms never were divided, but incorporate into one Estate, called for a long time the Kingdom of Castile and Leon: though afterwards Leon was left out of the Regal style, and only that of Castile mentioned; except in Legal Instruments, Letters Patents, and Instruments of Negotiation with Foreign Princes. The whole succession of these Kings, the Histories of Spain thus present unto us.

The Kings of Oviedo and Leon.

- 716 1. Pelagius, of whom sufficiently before. 20.
- 736 2. Fajila, the Son of Pelagius. 2.
- 738 3. Alfonso, for his Piety named the Catholic, the Son in law of Pelagius, by his Daughter Ormiñde.
- 756 4. Phrulla, the Son of Alfonso the Catholic, the Founder, or Repairer rather, of Oviedo.
- 768 5. Aurelius, the Brother of Phrulla. 6.
- 774 6. Sillo, the Son in law of Alfonso the Catholic, by his Daughter Odeñide. 9.
- 783 7. Mauzeate, an Utriper, the bastard Son of Alfonso. 6.
- 789 8. Veramund, Son to Froilla. 6.
- 795 9. Alfonso II. named the Chaste, the Brother of Veramund. 29.
- 824 10. Raymír the Son of Veramund. 6.
- 830 11. Ordoño, Son to Raymír. 10.
- 840 12. Alfonso III. named the Great, the Son of Ordoño. 46.
- 886 13. Garcia, Son to Alfonso the third. 3.
- 889 14. Ordoño II. King of Galicia, the Brother of Garcia.
- 897 15. Phrulla II. Brother of Ordoño. 1.
- 898 16. Alfonso IV. Son of Ordoño. 6.
- 904 17. Raymír II. Brother of Alfonso. 19.

- 923 18. Ordoño III. Son of Raymír. 5.
- 928 19. Sancho, surnamed the Great, Brother of Ordoño the third. 12.
- 940 20. Raymír III. Son of Sancho. 17.
- 957 21. Veramund II. Brother of Sancho. 24.
- 981 22. Alfonso V. Son of Veramund. 46.
- 1027 23. Veramund III. Son of Alfonso. 9.
- 1036 24. {Sancho, Sister of Veramund. } 30.
 Ferdinand, king of Castile.
- 1066 25. Alfonso VI. the youngest Son of Ferdinand and Sancho: first King of Leon only; but after the death of Sancho elder Brother, he succeeded also in Castile. 41.
- 1107 26. {Urraca, the Daughter of Alfonso. } Alfonso VII. king of Arragon and Navarre. 13.
- 1120 27. Alfonso VIII. the Son of Urraca, by Raymond of Burgundy, succeeded in Leon and Castile. 35.
- 1155 28. Ferdinand II. younger Son of Alfonso, King of Leon only. 31.
- 1186 29. Alfonso IX. Son of Ferdinand. 42.
- 1228 30. Ferdinand III. Son of Alfonso, by Berengaria, or Berenguela, Sister of Henry of Castile, by the power and practices of his Mother, succeeded in the Realm of Castile, whilst his Father lived, An. 1217. to the prejudice of Blanch her elder Sister, married to Lewis the eighth of France; by whom she had Lewis the ninth, and other children. Which Lewis the ninth, on the marriage of Blanch his eldest Daughter, with Ferdinand eldest Son of Alfonso the fifth, surrendered all rights in the Crown of Castile, and so confirmed the same more absolutely to the house of Leon, Anno 1257; though neither this Ferdinand, nor Blanch, nor any of their Heirs, did attain that Kingdom, disfeized thereof by Sancho a younger son. The kingdoms never since that time disjoined, as they had been twice before since the first uniting.

The Arms of these kingdoms are Argent, a Lyon Pasant, crowned Or. Which Arms when it was joined to the kingdom of Castile, were quartered with the Coat thereof: that being the first time (as Camden notes) that ever Arms were born Quartered. Followed herein by Edward the third of England, who not only took unto himself the title of King of France, but (to shew his right unto that Crown) quartered the Flower de Lyces with his English Lions.

5. GALLICIA.

GALLICIA, or GALLESIA, is bounded on the East with the Asturias, from which parted by the River Meuro; on the South with Portugal, from which divided by the River Mio; on the North with the Cantabrian; and on the West with the Atlantic Oceans. The ancient Inhabitants of it, were the Gallaeci, (whence it had the name (distinguished into the several Tribes of the Bedij, Sueri, Cilmi, Capori, and Lemavi, spoken of by Prothomy).

The Country, like that of the Asturias, mountainous, and almost inaccessible, overpeered with the Cantabrian Hills; and so the fitter to hold out against Foreign Invasions, in defence of Liberty and Religion: in that regard chosen for a retiring place by the distressed and vanquished Christians, in their first Wars against the Moors: Not well inhabited to this day; not so much for for the hilliness of the Country, as for want of Water; which defect makes the people generally draw more towards the Sea, where they improve their Fortunes by trade and fishing: The barrenness of the Country recompensed heretofore by the rich Mines of gold and silver, which in this Country, and the Asturians, and some part of Lusitania, afforded yearly 20000 pound weight of gold unto the Romans, amounting in our money to two millions of Crowns: but now no such Mines found in it of any value. Instead of which, it yieldeth the best Mines for Iron, of any Province of Spain; for which their Waters are so proper, that they are faind to fortifie and improve the metal.

Places of principal importance, are 1. Compostella, an University and Arch-Bishops See, vulgarly called St. Jago, in honour of St. James, the Son of Zacharias, whom they pretend to be buried here, and of whom there is denominated an Order of Knights: his Reliques faind to be kept in the chief Church of it, worshipped by the Romans with great devotion: and drawing to this place a wonderful concourse of people, coming thither on pilgrimage. 2. Baiona, not far from the mouth of the River Mina. 3. Covunna, by Pliny called Flaviun Brigantium; by us English the Groy: often mentioned in the story of our Wars with the Spaniards, in Queen Elizabeth's time: then taken by the English: but since, very well fortified to avoid the like surprisall. Divided then, as now, into the High Town, and the Low, situate on the Canabrian Sea, betwixt the Promontory Trilennum, now Cabo Ortoal, lying towards the East; and that of old called Nerium, now Cabo Finis Terræ, as being the most Western end of the then known World. 4. Orense, upon the Mina, a Bishops-See, by Pliny called Auga Calida, from the Bathes here being, now much commended for the best Wines. 5. Xis, on the River, fronting upon Portugal: a Bishops See, in ancient Writers called Tude. 6. Pontevedre, 7. Ribadeo: both upon the Sea, both fitted with convenient Harbours.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof, as before is said, were the Gallaici, one of the last Nations which submitted to the Power of the Romans: by whom first made a part of Tarraconensis; after a Province of it self, by the name of Gallicia; the Asturias, and some part of the old Castile and Portugal, being added to it. In the declining of that Empire, the Suevi, a potent Nation of Germany, accompanying the Vandals and Alani in their transigrations, invaded Spain, and first possessed themselves of this Country. But not content with their Estate, they warred on the Silinges, (a Vandal-Tribe) then possessing Baetica, whom they vanquished, and took that Province from them, under the conduct of Rechila their second King. They added, shortly after, Lusitania, to their former Conquests: stopped in their career, by Theoderick the second, King of the Goths: by whom vanquished, and confined again within Gallicia, which they enjoyed till the final ruine of their Kingdom by Leutigild the Goth, Anno 858: reduced then to a Province of the Gothish Kingdom. Their habitation before their coming into Spain, was in the Eastern part of Germany, beyond the Elb. Their Religion at the first, under Recciarus their third King, was very Orthodox, and found. But vanquished by the Goths, and obliged unto them for the restoring of their Kingdom, they fell off to Arianism: persisting in that Heresie for the space of an hundred years, and then again returning to the Catholic Faith, under Theodoric their King: therein continuing constant till their final overthrow. The Kings hereof (as many as are upon Record) are these that follow.

The Kings of the Suevi in Gallicia.

1. Hermenericus; who first brought the Suevi into Spain, and possessed Gallicia, Arcadius and Homarius, then Emperors of the East and West.
2. Rhechila, who conquered the Silinges, and subdued Baetica.
3. Recciarus, the first Christian King who won Lusitania; afterwards vanquished and slain by Theoderick, King of the Goths; the Suevi for a time becoming subject to that King.
4. Masdras, restored unto the Kingdom by Theoderick.
5. Frumarus, the Son of Masdras.
6. Remismundus, brother of Frumarius, recovered some part of Lusitania, and fell off to Arianism.
7. Theodemirus, the Restorer of the Catholic Faith amongst the Suevi.
8. Ariamirus, Son to Theodemirus.
9. Eboricus, the Son of Ariamirus, deposed and slain Atanag by Andeca.
10. Andeca, the last King of the Suevi in Gallicia, or rather the usurper of the Regal Title, served in the same kind by Leutigild, King of the Goths, as he had served Eboricus his Lord and Master. After which time, Gallicia was made a Province of the Gothish Monarchy, and the name of Suevi no more heard of in Spain. In times ensuing, it became a part of the Kingdom of Leon, by the Kings whereof it was won piece-meal from the Moors, as their fortunes favoured them. Erected to a Kingdom by Alfonso the third, firnamed the Great, Anno 886; and given unto Ordago his second Son: by whose succession to the Crown on the death of his elder brother Garcia, it was again united to the Kingdom of Leon; but so as to continue a Realm distinct. In the year 955, the Gallaici not brooking the ill qualities of Raymir the third, elected Vernand for their King, the son of Ordago the third, and right Heir of the Kingdom: who, coming to the Crown of Leon on the death of Raymir, did once again unite it unto that Estate. Disincumbered from it once more by Ferdinand the first King of Castile and Leon, who gave it unto Garcia his youngest Son, Anno 1067; but conquered shortly after by Sancho the eldest Son of Ferdinand; by whom Garcia was discomfited and imprisoned, Anno 1081. Never since separated from the Crown of Castile and Leon: but when Leon was severed from Castile; going along with Leon in those separations till the union of those Kingdoms in the person of Ferdinand the second, Anno 1230; the Castilians being then grown better Statesmen, than to canon Kingdoms.

The Arms hereof were Azure, semee of Croissants Pasche a Chalice crowned Or.

6. The Kingdom of Corduba,

HAVING thus surveyed those Provinces under the Government of Castile, which lye at the foot of the Pyrenees, and on the shores of the Northern or Canabrian Ocean; we will next look on those which lye more towards the Straights of Gibraltar, and the Mediterranean, and so come round at last to Castile it self. And first, we will begin with the Kingdom of COR-

DUBA, which at first erection of it, contained all those parts of Spain conquered by the Moors, and not again recovered by the King of Leon and Navarre: contracted within narrower bounds, when subdued by the King of Castile; at that time comprehending only the Provinces of Andalusia, Extremadura, Granada, and the Ille of Gader. We will consider it, notwithstanding, in both capacities: in the first and largest notion, as unto the story and affairs thereof, till distracted by the Moors, into many Kingdoms: in the last and strictest, as to the Geography, and description of it.

The Kingdom of Corduba, as it stood when subdued by the Spaniards, was bounded on the East with Murcia, and the Mediterranean; on the West with Portugal, and the Ocean; on the North with the Mountains of Sierra Morena, and Castile; and on the South with the Ocean, the Straights of Gibraltar, and the Midland Seas: so called from Corduba, the chief City of it, and the Seat-Royal of their Kings.

It contained, as before was said, the Provinces of 1. Andalusia, 2. Gades, 3. Extremadura, and 4. Granada. But because Granada had the fortune to continue a Kingdom, when the rest were conquered, we will consider it by it self; and here proceed to the description of the other three.

1. Andalusia is bounded on the East with Granada; on the West with the Atlantic Ocean, and Algarve in Portugal: on the North, with Sierra Morena, and Extremadura: on the South, with the Ocean, the Straights, and the Mediterranean. By Pliny it is called Conventus Cordubensis, from Corduba, at that time the chief City of it: and after, Andalusia, quasi Vandalusia, from the Vandals; who having won it from the Romans, had for some time (and till their expulsion into Africa) possessed themselves of it.

This is the most rich and fertile Country of all Spain; extremely fruitful of Wine, Oyl, Oranges, (which last being shipped at Sevil, and so brought for England, are by us called by the name of Sevil Oranges) and better furnished with Corn than most part of this Continent; watered with the Rivers, 1. Andu, 2. Odier, 3. Baia, and 4. Tenot: which makes it flourish with a continual greenness of Olives, Vines, and other Fruits; of which the Hills, though watered only with the dew of Heaven, do partake also in reasonable measure. The Air hereof, by reason of its Southerly situation, is exceeding hot, inasmuch that their Corn there is ripe in April: but those excessive heats much moderated by those constant refreshings which the cool winds, breathing from the North, do bestow upon it. In which respect King Ferdinand the Catholic, did use to say, that it was best living in the Summer at Sevil, (one of the chief Cities of this Province) by reason of these cool refreshings and in the winter-time at Burgos in old Castile, which though situate more Northerly, in a very sharp Air, had yet many notable defences against the cold.

The principal Cities and Towns hereof, are 1. Corduba, seated at the foot of Sierra Morena, on the left shore of Guadalquivir, overlooking towards the South, a spacious and fruitful plain. First founded by Murellus a Roman Consul, An. V. C. 601; employed at that time in the Wars of Spain: the first Colony planted in this Province by the Romans, and the Chief City of Baetica. For a long time the Seat of the Moorish Vice-Roy, Lieutenant to the great Caliph of the Saracens; after, of its own Kings of that Nation, who built here for their Palace, a magnificent Castle. Reduced by Ferdinand of Castile, it was restored unto the honour of an Episcopal See; which anciently it had, and doth now enjoy. A City of great circuit, but of very few Houses, by reason of the multitude of Gardens in it. Famous in former times for the birth of Lucan, and both the Seneca's.

Duosque Senecas, unicumque Lucanum, Fecunda lequitur Corduba: such Marialis.

Corduba glorying in her fruitful field,
One Lucan and two Seneca's did yield.

Nor was it less fruitful of good wits in the times succeeding. For not to say any thing of Hesius that renowned Confessor, who was Bishop here in the times of Constantine, and before: it was a flourishing University in the time of the Moors: Avicen, Averroes, Rhazes, Almasfor, Messalabas, those famous Philosophers and Physicians, being Students or Professors in it. It is now vulgarly called Cordova; and hence cometh our true Cordovan Leather, made of the Skin of a Sardinian Beast. Near unto this City, is a Wood of 30 miles in length, having nothing but Olive-trees. 2. Jacen, a Bishops See, remarkable for nothing more, than that the Kings of Spain, ever since the first recovery of it, have filled themselves Kings of Jacen, and use it to this day amongst the rest of their Titles: it having been, before that time, the seat and title of some petty Kings amongst the Moors Not far from hence stood the famous Town of Illurguis, (by Pliny, Ilurgis) mentioned so often in the War betwixt Rome and Carthage. 3. Osuna, of most note for the Dukes hereof, and a small University founded here, Anno 1549. 4. Ecija, on the River Cieci, of more esteem formerly, than at the present: by Pliny and Antoninus called Astigi; by Pliny, Augusta Firma; a Roman Colony, and one of the four Jurisdical Reports of Baetica. 5. Marchena, situate on a Hill, where is said to be the best breed of Gemets, (a swift race of Horses) not of this Province alone, but of all Spain; the River Baia (as it was thought) conveying some secret virtue unto them. Of this Race was the Horse which Cæsar so loved, that he erected his Statue (when dead) in the Temple of Venus: and the ancient Lusitani thought they were begotten by the Wind. 6. Xerez, situate more within the Mid-lands, towards the borders of Granada, and therefore called Xerez de la Frontera, (the Asia of Pliny and Strabo) famous for the plenty of that Wine which we call Xerez-Sack: but more for that great and fatal Battle fought near unto it, betwixt King Roderick and the Moors; the loss of which, drew along with it the loss of Spain. 7. Medina Sidonia, so called to distinguish it from a Town of Castile, called Medina Celi: the Duke whereof was General of all the Forces both by Sea and Land, intended for the Conquest of England, Anno 1588. The Town called anciently Astinda, and Astido Caesariana; the Duke whereof is of the Family of the Guzmans, and the greatest Prince, for Revenue in all Spain; his Intrado being estimated at 130000 Crowns per annum. 8. Algeizre, on the Seaside; a Town of such strength and consequence, that it held out a siege 19 months, for the Moors of Africa, against Alfonso the fifth of Castile; to whom surrendered at the last upon Composition, Anno 1343. Since which, the Kings of Castile have filled themselves Kings of Algeizre; not yet discomfited. 9. Cadix, a Town on the Seacoasts, beyond the Ille of Gader, part of the Patrimony of the Duke of Medina Sidonia. 10. Gibraltar, a strong Town, seated at the mouth of the Straights from hence denominated, lying at the foot of the Mountain of Calpe, supposed to be one of Hercules Pillars; the furthest point Southwards of all Europe. 11. St. Lucar de Barrameda, (the Luciferi forum of the Ancients) the Port.

Port-Town to Seville, situate at the mouth of the River Baís, or Guadalquivir: where the Ships of that rich City ride, either for a fair wind to put to Sea, or for a tide to carry them up the River, as they come from América, 12. Tariffa, situated at the end of the Promontory which looks towards Africk; and so called, because Tariff, Leader of the Moor into Spain, here landed: recovered from the Moor by Sancho the third of Castile, Anno 1292, or thereabouts: the first Governor thereof being Alonso Páez de Guzmán, the first Founder of the now potent Family of Medina Sidonia. Supported by some to be the Carteia of the Ancients. And if so, then a Colony of the Liberitines (begotten on some unmarried Spanish Women, by the Roman Souldiers) placed here, and indulged the Privileges of the Latins, by Decree of the Senate, An. P. C. 600. Not far from these last Towns, in a little Island made by two branches of the Baís, where it falleth into the Sea, stood the famous 13. Tariffus, celebrated in most ancient VVriters, for the abundance of Silver which the Mines of it did produce. Which was so great, that as we read in Aristotle 1. book de Mirabilibus when the Tyrians or Phoenicians first came thither, ἡς πικρὴ ἔργον ὡσαύτως, ἡντιν ἐπιβλάσθαι οὐ δύναται, that their Ships were neither able to contain or transport it thence: inasmuch that they were fain to make their Anchors, and other Utensils, of Silver. The like commodity the Grecians found in their Voyages hither, of which Herodotus maketh mention, Lib. IV. Hereupon some have been perfwaded, that the ships which Solomon built to go for Tariffus, (whereof we read 1 Kings 10.22.) were bound no further than this place. As for the situation of it, that it was neither Tariff, as some, or Carteia, as others do conjecture, (though where Carteia was, beallike uncertain, if it were not the fame with Tariff) but in a small Island, at the mouth of the River Baís, as before is said, doth appear by Strabo; who telleth us, that Baís falls into the Sea with two mouths or channels, ἡντιν ἐπὶ τῷ ποταμῷ ὡσαύτως, ἡντιν ἐπὶ τῷ ποταμῷ ὡσαύτως, ἡντιν ἐπὶ τῷ ποταμῷ ὡσαύτως, &c. and that in the midst thereof there is a City called Tariffus, of the fame name with the River, (for Baís antiently was so named) from whence the whole Country thereabouts is called Tariffus. The like Pausanias saith expressly in his Eliaica. VVhich situation of this Town in an Island, at the mouth of Baís, occasioned Pliny, and some others of the antient VVriters, to give the name of Tariffus to the Isle of Gades; whereof more anon.

In the mean time go we on to 14. Sevil, (in Latin, Hispalis) the fairest City, not only of Andalusia, but of all Spain. It is in compass 75 miles, divided into two parts by the Baís; but joined together by a strong and beautiful Bridge; the whole environed with beautiful VValls, and adorned with many magnificent and stately Buildings, as Palaces, Churches, and Monasteries; amongst which is that of the Gerrifins, or Carthaginians, is endowed with 25000 Crowns of yearly Revenue. It is also the See of an Arch-bishop, under whose Jurisdiction are said to be 20000 Villages; and a most flourishing University, wherein studied Avicenna the Moor, that excellent and learned Scholar: Pope Sylvester the second, and Leander, who was Arch-bishop hereof, about the year 580; a stout defender of the Catholick tendries of the Church against the Arians. The University adorned with one of the greatest and goodliest Libraries in the Christian World; furnished by Diego, the Son of Christopher Columbus, the first Founder of it, with no fewer than 12000 Volumes, in several Languages, gathered together with extraordinary charge and care, and endowed with a very fair Revenue for the maintenance and enlargement of it. Famous in former times, for two Provincial Councils holden here; the first, Anno 584; the last, Anno 636; and at the present, for that here are continually maintained 30000 Gennets for the service of the King; but most of all, for the great traffick of the place. For from this Town the Carthagini sent forthwards towards América; and here they do discharge the Fleets of Gold and Silver, which they bring thence. To this Town come the Pearls of Cubagua, and the Emeralds of S. Martha, the Cochineils of Mexico, the Corals of Hispánola, and in a word, the whole treasure of the New-found-World. Here is the publick Emporie of all Spain, for her VVines, Oranges, and Oyls; sent from hence in so great abundance into all parts of Europe, that the people use to say in a word by a By-word, That if there enter not into Sevil 4000 Pipes of Wine every day in the year, the Farmer of the Cistons is sure to break; inasmuch as the Revenues coming out of this City only, are worth a very good Realm to the Carthick King: Maginus reckoning it at no less than a Million of Crowns yearly. Lastly here resteth the body of Christopher Columbus, the fortunate discoverer of the New World, with a Latin Epitaph upon his Tomb; but short (God knoweth) of the great merit of the Man: of which more hereafter.

As for the Fortunes of this City, as they relate to Ecclesiastical or Spiritual matters, it hath been next the See of an Arch-bishop, (as before is said) next in revenue and degree unto him of Toledo; his revenue estimated at 100000 Crowns per annum; his Jurisdiction reaching over all Andalusia, and the Fortunate Islands; in which are said to be contained 20000 Villages; the very Dioceses of which, being said to comprehend 2000 Benefices, besides Frieries, Nunneries, and Hospitals; which may make the former computation of the Villages, subject to his Power, as a Metropolitan, of more esteeme. Yet not so much considerable for its Wealth and Revenue, as for being once the See of Isidore, so much renowned (considering the time he lived in) for the universality of his learning; who was a Bishop here, called usually Isidore Hispaniensis, to distinguish him from another of that name in Egypt, called Pelusiata. As for the civil Fortunes of it, in the declining of the Moor, when their Estate was broken into many Realms and Principalities, it became a Kingdom of it self under a noble Moor named Alcorax, An. 966. One of the Kings whereof called Almunnu, was of so great power, that he had the Regal City of Corduba, and the greatest part of Andalusia, under his command, made subject with the rest of the Moor in Spain, to the Miramulins of Morocco, An. 1091, till the retreat of Mahomet Enafar into Africk, ann. 1214. After which, once more made a Kingdom in the person of Aben Lalle, a great Prince of the Moor; but no longer continuing in that Royal Dignity and Estate, than till the year 1248, when taken and subdued by Ferdinand and the second of Castile, and made a part of his Estate: but so, that it remaineth a Realm distinct in the Regal title; in which the Kings of Spain are said the Kings of Sevil.

2. South of Andalusia, at the mouth of Guadalquivir, stands the Isle of Gades, distant from the main land 700 paces, and joined unto it with a Bridge called Puerto de Suaco. It is length 13 miles, of a very fruitful Soil; besides the riches which it gets by Fishing, and making of Salt. First peopled by the Tyrians 562 years before the Birth of CHRIST; subdued by the Carthaginians, An. V. C. 236, being invited by the Tyrians to aid them in a defensive *VV*ar against the Spaniards: and was the last hold which the Carthaginians had in Spain; out of which beaten by the valour and good fortune of Scipio Africanus. Here stood in ancient times a Temple consecrated erated to the honour of Hercules; in which all Sea faring-men (at their being here) used to pay their vows, and offer sacrifice, as being arrived at the furthest parts of all the World.

Places of most importance in it, are 1. Porto Real, a fair and capacious Haven, between the Town of Cádiz, and the main Land of Andalusia. 2. Santa Maria, another Port more towards the North; 3. Cádiz, or Gades, the chief Town of the Island, and giving name unto the whole. Situate on the Western part of the whole Isle, on a large Baye serving as a Road for the Indian Fleet; by the resort and trade whereof, it is much enriched. First founded by the Tyrians, afterwards made a Municipal City by the Romans; and one of the Juridical Resorts for the Province of Basica: in whole times it was held to be the noblest and richest in all Spain, not yielding to any of the Empire, for greatness, magnificence, or number of Inhabitants of account and quality. In so much, that here lived, at one time 500 Roman Knights; which number was not equalled in any one place, except Padua only: besides the great concourse of Merchants from all parts of the World. Which great resort, occasioned Cornelius Balbus, a Native of it, to add a new Town to the old, the whole circumference of both being 20 Furlongs. By the Moor at their conquest of Spain, it was utterly ruined; but since repaired, well fortified, and made the Magazin for the Ammunition of the Spanish Navies. Taken, notwithstanding, in one day by the English, under the command of Charles Lord Effingham, Robert Earl of Essex, and Sir Walter Raleigh; in which they burned the Indian Fleet, consisting in 40 Ships, whose Lading was worth 8 Millions of Crowns; overcame the Spanish Navy, consisting of 57 Men of War; took the St. Michael, and the St. Andrew, two great Gallies; and their Luggage, spoiled and carried away more Martial Furniture, than could be supplied in many years; and forced the Town, in which they flew, and took Prisoners, 4000 Foot, and 600 Horfe, and brought thence a very great booty in the baggage of it, Anno 1596. The fortunacy of which enterprise, gave occasion to one of the Wits then living, to frame their excellent Anagram on the name of the Earl of Essex, (who was looked on as the greatest Adventurer in it) viz. Devereux; Vere dux; Which he afterwards callt into this Diffich.

Alcides vidit De'vereux; he did see

Thy beauties (Gades) but De'vereux conquer'd thee.

Near to this Isle, is that so celebrated Straight, called by some, Fretum Gaditanum, for the nearness of it to this Island; by others, Fretum Herculeum, not because Hercules did there break out a passage, to let the Ocean into the Mediterranean, as the Poets fable; but because of the two Pillars which he caused to be erected on each side of it, with the inscription of Nil Ultra, this being supposed to be the furthest Country *VV*estward. But when that supposition was proved untrue by the discovery of América, Charles the fifth being in those parts, caused two new Pillars to be placed where the old ones stood, or rather, where he thought they stood, and Plus Ultra to be written on them. As for those Pillars so much memorized in the ancient VVriters, some place them in the Temple of Hercules, within this Island; others, on the Promontory of Calpe in Spain, and that of Abila in Africk; and some again in two little Islands near those Promontories. This therefore being a matter doubtful, and not worth the looking after, let us return unto the Straight, called now the Straight of Gibraltar, from the Town and Castle of Gibraltar, situate on the brink hereof; the Straight being in length fifteen miles; and in breadth, where it is narrowest, seven.

EXTREMADURA hath on the East and North, Castile; on the West, Portugal; and on the South Andalusia. It was first called Baetia from the River Baís, which runneth through it; and for distinction's sake, Baetia Celtica, from the Celtici; then the Inhabitants of this taking those parts of Granada, and Andalusia, which lay nearest unto Tarracensis. And when first it had the name of Extremadura, it was of larger extent than now it is, reaching unto the Banks of the River Duero, the bounds at that time, of the Kingdom of the Morisco's, so called by the Christians, as lying on the extremities or furthest side of that River.

Principal places in it, are 1. Alcantara, on the banks of the River Tagus, situate near the ruins of Norba Caesaria, destroyed by Perennis and Africanus, two of Pompey's Captains, for adhering faithfully to Cæsar: now of most note for an Order of Knights here seated, and from hence denominated; whereof more hereafter. 2. Guadalupe, famous for its Mines of Silver and Gold. 3. Medina, situate also on the Tagus; first called Augusta Emerita, founded and made a Colony by Augustus Cæsar, who placed herein his old Soldiers, whom the Romans called Emeriti; hence it had the name. The chief City after that of Lusitania; and, by Antoninus, preferred before any in Spain: now ruinous, meanly built, and but ill inhabited: Famous for nothing, but the Bridge upon the River Tagus, a Monument of the Roman greatness. Nigh to this Town was fought that memorable battle between Wallia, the first King of the Goths in Spain; and Attila, King of Alani, and Silinges, (this last a people of the Vandals) the victory whereof falling to the Goths, caused the whole Nation of the Vandals to draw forth out of Spain. 4. Medellin, near which the River Guadiana hideth it self under the ground, for the space of ten leagues; but more famous for the birth of Ferdinand Cortez, the fortunate Discoverer and Conqueror of the Realm of Mexico. 5. Badajoz, a Bishop's See on the borders of Portugal. 6. Guadalupe on a River of the same name; renowned amongst those of the Church of Rome, for the Miracles and Image of our Lady of Guadalupe; as much resorted to in Spain, as our Lady of Loretto in Italy. 7. Placcenza, a Bishops See, near the Hills of Castile; amongst which Hills, (by reason of their strength and safety) Serranus made his last retreat, when persecuted by the Romans of the contrary Faction; and where he was most wickedly slain by Perennis, and some other of his own Associates. Not far from hence, if it be not in the self-same place, in a retired and solitary Valley, standeth the Monastery of Saint Justus, remarkable for a greater Miracle than any the Lady of Guadalupe is able to boast of: which is, that Charles the fifth, that most puissant Monarch, having resigned his Empire to his Brother Ferdinand, and all the rest of his Dominions to his Son Philip the second, did here bid farewell unto the World; spending the residue of his time in prayers and devout Meditations. The greatest Monument and Example of Self-denial, which these latter Ages have afforded. Far beyond any abnegation of the World by our Cloyster'd Monks, or any quitting of their Crowns by some Kings and Emperors in the darker Ages of the Church; who living in the time of Ignorance and superstition, saw not so clearly what they did, (or did it out of weakness, and want of spirit) as this Maculine and Heroick Emperor.

The old inhabitants of these Countries, were the Turduli, the Befligii, and the Turdiani, of Andalusia, and Granada; the Celtici, and some part of the Lufitani in Extremadura; all vanquished by the Romans, during the second Punic War, under the fortunate command of Scipio Africanus. From them extorted by the Vandals, who passing over into Africa, left it to the Suevians; lost by them to Theodoric the fourth King of the Goths, who hereby added all Basica to his other Dominions. Under the Goths it remained subject till their fatal overthrow by the Moors, who having made almost an entire Conquest of all the Continent of Spain, were at first subject to the Great Caliphs, Lords of the Saracemical Empire; governing here by their Lieutenants, from Ulidor Uli, under whom they first made this Conquest, Anno 714, to Abdalla, of the House of Alaveci, Anno 757. At what time Abderamen, of the line of Mahomet the Impostor, and first Emperor of the Saracens, flying the fury of Abdalla, by whom the old Line of the Caliphs, of the Race of Humia, (of which Race this Abderamen was) had been dispossessed of that Empire; came into Spain, and was with great joy entertained by the Spanish Moors, cordially affected to his House: whose Government he took upon him, discharged of all subjection and subordination to the Caliphs, or Mahometan Emperors, and making it an absolute Kingdom of itself. In his Race it continued without any fraction or subdivision, till the time of Hixen the second, the tenth King of these Spanish Moors; after whose death, distracted amongst many petty Tyrants, till they were all brought under by the Moors of Africa; of which more anon. In the mean time, take here the Catalogue of the Kings of these Moors of Spain, called commonly, from Corduba, their Royal Seat,

The Kings of Corduba.

- A. C.
 757 1. Abderamen, the first Sovereign-Prince of the Moors in Spain. 31.
 787 2. Hixen, the second son of Abderamen, by whom Zuleima, his elder Brother, was put by his Throne. 7.
 794 3. Hali Hatan, the Son of Hixen. 24.
 819 4. Abderamen II. Son of Hali Hatan, discomfited by the Christians in the memorable battle of Clavigno, Anno 836.
 839 5. Mahomet, Son of Abderamen the second, who reduced Toledo, then revolted, under his Command. 35.
 874 6. Almundie, the Son of Mahomet. 2.
 876 7. Abdalla, Brother to Almundie, and as little memorable. 13.
 889 8. Abderamen III. surnamed Almansor, too fortunate in his Wars against the Christians. 50.
 939 9. Hali Hatan II. Son of Abderamen the second.
 959 10. Hixen II. Son of Hali Hatan; in the 33 year of his reign, deposed for his sloath and negligence, by 989 11. Zuleima, an African Moor, of the Family of Alaveci; and he expelled by 993 12. Mahomet II. surnamed Almohadi, of the old House of Humia; ousted again by Zuleima, and made King of Toledo. Betwixt these three, and their several Factions, the Kingdom wretchedly torn in pieces, never restored again to its ancient lustre; and finally, made a prey to 1001 13. Hali, another African Moor. 2.

- 1003 14. Cacin, the Brother of Hali. 4.
 1007 15. Fliaia, the Son of Mahomet. Menf. 4.
 1007 16. Abderamen IV. a King of 4 week only.
 1008 17. Mahomet III. poysoned by his own Servants. 1.
 1010 18. Hixen III. deposed by the Moors; grown weary of the House of Humia, of which House he was.
 1011 19. Isar of Algeixire. 3.
 1014 20. Mahomet IV. the Son of Isar, the last King of the Moors in Corduba, before the second Conquest of these parts of Spain by the Moors of Africa. Concerning which, we are to know, that after the great Victory obtained at Clavigno, against Abderamen the second, by Laymir King of Leon, Anno 836, in which the Moor lost 60000 of his men; the power and reputation of the Spanish Moors began to decline, brought utterly to nothing, by the sloth and negligence of Hixen the second; after a long and unprofitable reign, deposed by Zuleima, who succeeded. But the Moors not easily brooking the command of a new Usurper, fell into many Factions and Divisions amongst themselves: every great man seizing on some part of the Kingdom, which he retained unto himself with the name of King; from whence we have a King of Sevil, another of Toledo, a third of Valencia, a fourth of Cordova, &c. the names of which last only, do occur in the former Catalogues; as they which did pretend a Sovereignty over all the rest. And 'twas a sign the Kingdom was in the expiring, when so many Kings succeeded in so few years, after one another: there passing from the deposing of Hixen the second, to the beginning of Mahomet the fourth, not above 34 years in all; during which time, we find no fewer than ten Kings. The often change of Princes, and short lives of Kings, are the apparent signs of a ruinous State, approaching very near to its expiration; as may be seen by the short lives and reigns of the last Western Emperors, none of them hardly reigning 20 years: as also, of the Kings of the Goths in Italy, of which the last held the Throne no longer than the nine Western Emperors had done before them. But to proceed: Mahomet the last King of this first Rank, having left the stage in the 13th year of his reign, Anno, 1027, we find no good constancy of his Successors in the Kingdom of Corduba; made inconsiderable by the withdrawing to many Provinces from the body of it: the pride and insolvency of which Royletels and petty Tyrants, forced them at last to call unto their aid the Kings or Miramomins of Morocco, by whom themselves, and all the rest of their Corrivals, were in fine subdued. Under 7 Princes of Morocco, the Spanish Moors continued subject about 120 years; that is to say, from the first coming in of Joseph Tephin, the Miramomine, Anno 1091; unto the going out of Mahomet, surnamed the Green, Anno 1214. During which time, the affairs of the Moors in Spain were so well conducted, that they lost nothing to the Christians, but Extremadura, taken from them by Alonso the second, in the conquest of Castile; the seventh, in conquest of Leon, Anno 1147: and the City of Lisbon taken from them in the same year also, by Alonso the first King of Portugal. But Mahomet the Green being vanquished in the great Fight at Sierra Morena, by the joint Forces of the confederated Christians, Anno 1214, left off all further care of the Moors in Spain; after his going thence, distracted once again into many Kingdoms, almost as many as great Towns, all of them swallowed up, in a little time, by the Kings of Castile, Aragon, and Portugal. And amongst them, the Kingdom of Corduba, not able to stand long on this new Foundation, was ruined and brought under the command of the Christians, by their their King Ferdinand the second, Anno 1236. Since that time there is no more mention of the Kingdom of Corduba.

The Arms whereof were Or, a Lion Gules, armed and crowned of the first, a Border Azure charged with 8 Towers Argent.

7. GRANADA.

GRANADA is bounded on the West, with Andalusia, on the East, with Murcia, and the Mediterranean; on the North, with New-Castile; on the South, with the Mediterranean only. So called from Granada, the chief-City, and Seat-Royal of it.

It is in length 200 miles, 100 miles in breadth, and about 704 miles in compass: a Kingdom of no great extent; but such as contained in it more fair Towns, strong Fortresses, and defensive places, than the like quantity of Ground in the World besides. The North part of the Country plain; the South parts overpread with the Alpuxerras, and other spurs and branches of the Oropeda. In the time of the Moors, wonderfully well inhabited, and full of all sorts of Commodities, the Hills planted with Vines and Fruits, the Plains and Valleys swelling with Corn and Gardens: since their expulsion neither much peopled, nor very fruitful, for want of men to dress and manure the Land.

The principle Cities of it, are 1. Granada, situate on two Hills, divided by a Valley, through which runneth the River Darien; consisting of four several parts, called Albora, Sierra de Sol, Granada, and Antequera: the two first standing on the Hills, the two last in the valley, the whole circuit being about 7 miles, and containing in the time of the Moorish Kingdom, about 200000 of Souls. Fenced with strong Walls, fortified with 150 Turrets, and replenished with abundance of wholesome and pleasant Springs. The Merchants and Gentry of the best sort, do dwell in that part which is called Granada: the houses of which, are for the most part built of Free-stone, with delicate and artificial Masonry, shewing great magnificence; Herein standeth the Cathedral Church, a work of admirable structure: of Figure round, as having sometimes been a Mahometan Mosque. Here is also the place which they call Alcazar, representing a little Town, to which are ten Gates. In the Albora is the Palace of the Moorish Kings, covered with Gold, indented with Mosaic work; and which, by reason of the structure, and multitude of Fountains which are about it, may be put amongst the Wonders of the world, having withal a goodly prospect over all the Town, lying under it upon the East; a spacious Champaign towards the North, and the snowy tops of Sierra Nevada, towards the South. This City is the ordinary Parliament, and Court of Justice, for all the Southern parts of Spain, as Valladolid is for the Northern: Madrid, which is the highest Court, having Jurisdiction over, and receiving Appeals from both. A Town first raised out of the ruins of Ileberis, situate not far off the Hill Elvire, much mentioned in the stories of Rome and Carthage. In the two other parts of the Town, there is nothing remarkable, inhabited only by Mechanicks of the poorer sort. 2. Albama, seated amongst steep and craggy Rocks, out of which issue Medicinal Waters, occasioning a great resort of the Spanish Gentry: the first Town taken by the Spaniards in their last long War against the Moors, for the recovery of this Kingdom, Anno 1483; and looked on, by the Moors, as a sad preface of a ruina-ted and expiring Empire. 3. Guadix an Episcopal See; about nine leagues from Granada. 4. Velez Malaga, by Prology called Cez; by Amsinon, Sexicarrum; situate at the foot of the Mountains called Alpuxerras; a large branch of the Oropeda overspreading a great part of this Country: heretofore platted with incredible numbers of Moors, who chose to dwell there for the strength and safety of the situation: since their expulsion, desolate, and unfrequented; nothing remaining of them now, but the Arabic Language, which is still spoke by these few people which inhabit in it. The Mountains in this Tract so high, that from the tops hereof a man may easily discern the whole course of the Streights of Gibraltar, together with the Towns of Centa, and Tangier in Africa. 5. Ronda, at the foot of another branch of the Oropeda, called from this Town, Sierra de Ronda: not far from which, by Munda, now a very small Village, was fought that memorable battle betwixt Cesar and the Sons of Pompey, the honour of which fell to Cesar, who then made an end of the Civil War, which that very day, four years before, were begun by Pompey the Father. In this fight was Cn. Pompeius slain, and his Forces broken; Cesar himself being so put to it, that seeing his Soldiers give back, he was fain to maintain the fight by his own great courage, bidding them Remember, that at Munda they fought their General. The shame of which reproach, and his noble example, encouraged them to a new onset, which was honoured with a signal and remarkable Victory: this being the last fight that Cesar was in; murdered not long after in the Senate-house. And of this fight he used to say, That in all other places he fought for his Honour, in this for his life. 6. Antequera, heretofore a well-fortified Town, bordering close upon Castile. 7. Muxaca, on the shore of the Mediterranean, supposed to be the Murgis of Prology. 8. Vera on the same shore; the furthest Town of Basica, and of this Country, towards Murcia: supposed to be the Virgo of Pliny from whence the neighbouring Creek or Bay was called Virgatum. 9. Loxa, on the River Darien, enjoying a situation both strong and pleasant. 10. Malaga, or Maiana, situate at the mouth of Guadalquivir, once sacked by Cassius the rich Roman, who flying out of Spain, to avoid the Fury of Marius and Cinna, who had slain his Father and Uncle, hid himself and his Companions, in a Cave hereabouts, for eight Months together: but after hearing of their deaths, issued out, and ranfacked, amongst many other Cities, this Malaga. A Town of great Traffick, and much Resort, especially for Railins, Almonds, Malaga Sack: well fortified, and of great importance, as a Town of War; and to the great prejudice of the Moors, taken by Ferdinand the Catholic, Anno 1487: the Conquest of the whole Kingdom of Granada, following not long after. It was since made a Bishops-See, or reformed rather to that dignity which it had of old. 11. Almeria, a noted Haven on the Mediterranean, the Adena of Mela; a Colony of the Carthaginians, and anciently a Bishops-See. 12. Carthema, 13. Caim, and 14. Baza, more within the Land: this last, the strongest Bulwark of the City of Granada, on the North-cast whereof it standeth. A place of great strength both by Art and Nature; and by the Moors defended with so great a gallantry, that it held out a siege of 7 Months against an Army of 13000 Horse, and 24000 Foot, King Ferdinand the Catholic, being there in person: and yielded at the last, Decemb. 4. 1489, upon better conditions than any Town had done before it.

As for the Fortunes of this Country, after the Conquest of it by the Moors and Saracens, it was a part or member of the Kingdom of Corduba, and so continued till that Kingdom was subdued by the Spaniards.

But the Moors were too stout to yield at once. Having yet ground enough both to secure themselves in, and endow their King: they are resolved, though they had lost one Kingdom, to erect another. And therefore Coraduba being taken, and that Kingdom ruined, the Moors, with Mahomet Aben Alhamar, their unfortunate, but valiant King, removed themselves unto Granada, and there renewed their strength and Kingdom, which lasted 256 years, under 20 Kings; whose names here follow in this Catalogue of

The Kings of Granada.

- A. C.
 1236 1. Mahomet Alhamar, the last King of Corduba, and the first King of Granada. 36.
 1242 2. Mahomet Mir Amir. 30.
 1302 3. Mahomet Aben Ezar. 7.
 1309 4. Mahomet Aben Evar. 10.
 1319 5. Ismael. 3.
 1322 6. Mahomet. 12.
 1334 7. Joseph Aben Agut. 20.
 1354 8. Mahomet Lagus. 23.
 1377 9. Mahomet Vermeil. 2.
 1379 10. Mahomet Guadix. 13.
 1392 11. Joseph II. 4.
 1396 12. Mahomet Aben Balua. 11.
 1407 13. Joseph III. 16.
 1423 14. Mahomet Aben Azar. 4.
 1427 15. Mahomet the little. 5.
 1432 16. Joseph Abud Almud. 13.
 1445 17. Mahomet Ojmen. 8.
 1453 18. Ismael II. 9.
 1462 19. Muley Alboacen. 20.
 1482 20. Mahomet Boabdellin, the last King of the Moors in Spain. Of all which, there is little left upon Record: their whole time being spent in defending their borders against the encroachments of Castile; or else in Civil-Wars and discords amongst themselves: in which they were so frequent and sometimes so violent, as if they had no Enemy near them. Mahomet Aben Evar, the fourth King, deposed by Mahomet Aben Levin; and he again thrust out by Hismael, the Son of Ferrachen, before he could enjoy the fruits of his treason. Mahomet, Son of Ismael, murdered by his Subjects. Joseph the Son of Mahomet, slain by Mahomet Lagus; and he again deposed by Mahomet Vermeil; who in the end was miserably slain by Pedro, the Cruel, of Castile, to whom he had fled for help and succour. After this time, they reigned and deposed one another, to the end of their Kingdom; but violently making way for himself to enter on the Government: even Mahomet Boabdellin, the last King hereof, not having patience to expect the death of his Father; but setting him besides the Throne, as he himself was for a time, by Muley Maadellin his Uncle; and thereby opening a fair Gate for Ferdinand, King of Castile and Aragon, to bring in his Forces to the subduing of them all. Such was the fortune of this Kingdom, that as it began under a Mahomet, a Ferdinand being King of Castile; it did end under a Mahomet, a Ferdinand being King of Castile also. In the first year, then, of this man's Reign, did the War begin, or rather in the last year of his Father, who by taking Zabara from the Christians, gave the first occasion: and in the tenth year of the War, (for so long it lasted) 1492, the Empire of the Moors ended in Spain, by the valour of Ferdinand the Catholic, and Isabel his Wife, after their first entrance into it, more than 760 years.

Such of them as; after the decay of their Kingdom, had a desire to stay in Spain, which had for so long time been their native Country, were suffered to do by the prudent Villors, (fearing a desolation of the Country, if they should abandon it) conditioned, that they would be Christened. And that they might be known to be as they professed, the Inquisition was established in the City of Granada, consisting of a certain number of Secular Priests, and Dominican Friars; who finding any counterfeit or Apostate Christian, were first gently to reprove and exhort them; and after, if no amendment followed, to inflict such punishment on them, as was accustomed in like cases. By the terror of which Inquisition, many professed, in shew, the Christian Faith. But being Christians only in the outward shew, and practising on all occasions against the State, the Kings of Spain resolved long ago on their Extirmination; but never had opportunity to effect it, till the year 1609. At what time Philip the third having made a Peace with England, and a Truce with Holland; and finding the Moors of Africk too imbrued in Wars, that they were not able to disturb him; put that extremity in execution, which had before been thought of in their consultations; 1100000 of them being forced to quit this Country, and provide new dwellings; under colour that they went about to free themselves from the Inquisition, and to recover their old Liberty lost so long before.

The Forces which the Kings of Granada, in the times of their greatest power, were able to raise, were far beyond the amasurement and extent of their Kingdom: not above 700 miles in compass, as before is said: but so exceeding populous, and well accommodated with all manner of necessities, that within two days space, the King hereof was said to have been able to draw together 50000 Horse, and 200000 Foot, for defence of this Kingdom. Turquet reports it so, in his Spanish History. But this proved more than they were able to do in their greatest need; when this Kingdom was finally invaded, and at last subdued by Ferdinand and Isabel, Kings of Spain: though possibly by reason of their divisions at that time, (some following the Party of Mahomet Boabdellin; and others, that of his Uncle Muley, chosen King against him) they might not join together in a common interest, for the defence of their Estate.

The Arms whereof were Or, a Pomgranate (or Apple of Granada) slipped, Vers.

8. MURCIA.

MURCIA is bounded on the West, with Granada; on the East and North, with Valencia, and a part of Granada; and on the South, with the Mediterranean Sea. So called from Murcia the chief City. In former times esteemed a rich and wealthy Country, stored with all sorts of fruits; and so abounding in Silver Mines, that when the Romans were Lords of it, they kept continually four hundred men at work, and received 2500 Drachmas of daily profit: now for the most part barren, and but ill inhabited.

Cities of note there are not many in so small a Country. The Principle. 1. Murcia, by Prology called Merulio, seated upon the River Segura, a Bishop's See, situate in a pleasant and delightful Plain, planted with Pomgranates, and other excellent Fruits: from this the Country had the name of the Kingdom of Murcia. 2. Carthagena, or Nova Carthago, first built by Ardubal of Carthage, the brother of Annibal, for the better receiving of 9. TOLEDO.

THE Kingdom of TOLEDO so called from Toledo the chief City of it, contained once the greatest part of that Country which is now called New-Castile; of which it is now reckoned only for a part or member: The Country lying next unto it, was anciently the Seat of Carpenanti, the nature of the Soil we shall find elsewhere.

Principal Cities of this Kingdom, 1. Toledo, of great antiquity, as being taken by Fulvius a Roman Praetor, in the time of Scipio Africanus; and then a City of good note. Pleasantly seated on the Tagus, beautified with many pieces of rare and excellent Architecture; and fortified with thirty Towers standing on the Walls. By reason of the situation of it in the very mid, almost, of Spain, it is passing well inhabited; as well by the Nobility, who reside there for pleasure, and by Scholars, who abide in it for their Studies; as by Merchants, who resort thither for their trade: besides such Soldiers and their Officers, who are continually garrisoned in it for defence thereof. The private buildings generally are but mean and ordinary; though, by far, more handsome in the inside, than the outside promisseth: most of them being furnished with water from the River Tagus, conveyed into them by the admirable invention of one Tamari, a native of Cremena in the Dukedom of Milain. The Streets narrow, cleft, hilly, and uneven, exceeding troublesome to walk or go upon, especially in slippery or dirty weather, by reason of its steep and uneven situation on the side of a Rocky Hill: by which, and by the River which almost surrounds it, it is naturally very strong, and well helped by Art. For that cause made the Seat of the Gothish Kings: by one of which, called Bombas, so repaired and beautified, (besides the addition of a strong Wall for defence of the place) that he is by some accounted for the Founder of it. For so we find it in these old Verbes:

Erexit (sauror Deo) Rex inclitus Urbem
Bambas, Juc celeberr protendens Gentis honorem.

That is to say,

King Bamba (God assisting) rais'd this Town, Extending to the ancient Goths renown.

When the Goths fell, it was in chief estimation amongst the Moors, and by them advanced unto the honour of a Kingdom; whereof more anon: but under both, (as it continueth to this day) the Sea of an Arch-Bishop, who is the Metropolitan of Spain, and President, for the most part, of the Inquisition. His Revenue answerable to his Place, the greatest of any Clergy man in the Christian World, next to the Popes of Rome; as being estimated at 300000 Crowns per annum. Finally, this City hath been honoured with no fewer than 18 National Councils, here holden in the time of the Goths; and is now a famous University for the study of the Civil and Canon Laws, and hath to this day the Temporal Jurisdiction over 17 Walled Towns, besides Villages. 2. Calatrava, the next Town of note, is situate on the River Ana; of most fame in these latter times, for an Order of Knight, called the Knights of Calatrava; of which more when we come to Castile. Neighbouring by the ruins of the strong and famous City Castulo, which being under the command of the Romans, was by the Gyreseni, a people that

This Country, being part of the Province of Carthaginensis, was by the Alani taken from the Romans, at their first entrance into Spain: from them recovered by Wallia, the first King of the Goths in this part of Europe. Together with the rest of Spain, it was subdued by the Moors of Africk in the distractions of whose Empire; after the going hence of the Moors of Africk, it was made a distinct Kingdom by Aben Hui, of the Race of the Kings of Saragossa, who had seized upon it, Anno 1228; and for a time was the most puissant King of the Moors in Spain, commanding over this Country, Granada, and a part of Andalusia. Invited to a Feast, made Drunk, and then basely murdered by Aben Arabin, a false servant of his. Anno 1236. One Aben Hudiel seized on the Realm of Murcia, disturbed in his possession by Alboaquis, the last King hereof. But he not able to defend himself against his Competitor, surrendered it to Ferdinand the second of Castile, whom he put into possession of the Fort of Murcia, and many other places of great importance; conditioned that Alboaquis should enjoy the Title of King of Murcia, as long as he lived, under the Sovereignty of Castile: and that Ferdinand should enjoy one half of the profits of it. This was in the year 1241, after it had continued in the state of a Kingdom but 12 years only, united to Castile without blood or trouble, and so remains ever since.

that dwelt on the other side of the River, suddenly entered and taken. But Serrorin following after them by the same Gate, put them all to the sword; and causing his men to apparel themselves in the clothes of the Enemy, led them to the chief City of the Gythesians; who supposing them to be their own Party, opened their Gates, and were all either slain, or sold for slaves. More of this Townanon, when we come to Castile, to which now belonging. 3. Tabora, commonly called Talavera de la Reyna, or the Queen's Talavera; and called for on occasion of an execrable Murder committed there by the command of Queen Mary, the Widow of Alfonso the sixth, on the Lady Leonor de Guzman, her Husband's Paramour. A proper and neat Town it is, pleasantly seated on the Tagus; supposed to be the Libora of Pliny, and now belonging to the Arch-bishop of Toledo, as chief Lord thereof. Medina Zelina, commonly called Medina Celi; of great importance when possessed or neighboured by the Moors. Now of most note for giving the title of Dukes to the illustrious Family of la Cerda, descended from Ferdinand, the eldest Son of Alfonso the fifth, claiming, by that descent, a title to the Crown of Castile. What other Towns belonged unto it, we shall see anon.

As for Toledo it self, in the time of the Romans it was the Metropolis of the Province of Tarracensis; after that, the Seat-Royal of the Gothish Kings; removed hither from Tholofis in Languedoc: forced by the Moors, at their first entrance into Spain, An. 716; more prudently aiming at the Head, than the Goths possibly expected from such Barbarians. In the Confusions of that Kingdom, betwixt the beginning of the reign of Mahomet the fourth, and the second coming in of the Moors of Africa, made a distinct Kingdom of it self; continuing in that estate, till taken from Haia Alchaduchir, the last King hereof, by Alfonso the first, King of Castile, An. 1083. This Alfonso being the youngest Son of Ferdinand, the first King of Castile and Leon, had the Kingdom of Leon for his part. Ejected out of that, by his Brother Sancho King of Castile, he lived in exile with the Moors; kindly received and entertained by Almenon the Father of this Haia, King of Toledo, till the death of his Brother. After which coming to the Crowns of Castile and Leon, Anno 1073, he picked a quarrel with his Host, and besieged Toledo; his long abode there making him acquainted with all advantages that might facilitate his designs; which notwithstanding held him a siege of five years, before he could make himself master of it, by him incorporated presently on the taking of it, with the rest of that Kingdom, and made the head of New-Castile. But for the Kings hereof, as well those who held it but for life, as those who left the same unto their Posterity, they are these that follow:

The Moorish Kings reigning in Toledo.

A. C.

1. Galefroy, King of Toledo, in the time of Charlemagne, under the Vassalage of the great Cathlips of Danefcens; subdued by Abderamen the first, King or Miromomolin of the Moors in Coriduba or the House of Humeia.
- 787 2. Zuleima, the eldest Son of Abderamen King of Coriduba, being dispossessed of the Realm of Coriduba, and the rest of his Estates in Spain, by Hizzen his younger Brother, reigned a while in Toledo; of which outed not long after: Toledo from that time continuing a Member of the Kingdom of Coriduba, till the latter end of the reign of Abderamen the second. At what time.

- 833 3. Aben Lope, (the Son of Mufa Aben Casia, a Goth by Nation and descent; but a Moor by profession, who had caused the Toledans, and others of the Moors of Spain, to rebel against Abderamen) assumed unto himself the title of King of Toledo: a strict confederate of Ordengo the 11th, King of Leon; by whom supported in his Wars against those of Coriduba; but at last vanquished and dispossessed by Mahomet, the Son of Abderamen, Anno 848.
- 990 4. Abdalla a great man among the Moors, during the contentions betwixt Zuleima and Hizzen the second, for the realm of Coriduba, seized on the City of Toledo; which he held as King; and kindly entertained Mahomet Almohadi, made King of Coriduba during those contentions; by whom succeeded in this Kingdom.
- 995 5. Mahomet, surnamed Almohadi, of the Regal Family of Humeia, King of Coriduba; and dispossessed thereof by the Faction of Zuleima, retired to Toledo; and was kindly entertained by King Abdalla, whom he succeeded in this Kingdom.
- 999 6. Obeidalla, the Son of Mahomet, slain in his Wars with Hizzen, the King of Coriduba, in the first or second year of his reign.
- 1000 7. Hairam, of the same house of Aben Humeia, and, probably, the next Kinsman of Obeidalla; succeeded him in this Estate, and left the same unto his Posterity, till subdued by the Spaniards.
- 1010 8. Hizzen, the Son of Hairam, of whom nothing memorable.
- 1045 9. Ali Maymon, or Almenon, as the Spaniards call him, the Son of Hizzen, who entertained Alfonso the sixth of Leon, when dispossessed of his Estate by his Brother Sancho.
- 1076 10. Hizzen II. Son of Ali Maymon.
- 1078 11. Haya, surnamed Alcadaribile, the Son of Ali Maymon, and Brother of Hizzen; a cruel Prince, and ill beloved of his Subjects; gave occasion unto Alfonso King of Castile and Leon, spoken of before, to invade this Kingdom; by whom at last it was subdued, and Toledo, with its Territories, added unto Castile, as before is said, Anno 1083. By which means there accrued to the Realm of Castile, besides Toledo it self, and the Towns spoken of already, those of Illesca, Ejcalona, Maqueda, Canales, Coria, Conjuerga, Berlanga, Guadalajara, Arienca, and divers others, now passing in the estimate of New-Castile.

But to conclude, Toledo thus reduced under the command of the Christians, was forthwith made the Metropolitan City of Spain, (in regard of Ecclesiastical or Spiritual matters) as it had been before in the time of the Goths; and shortly after honoured by Alfonso with the title of the imperial City; that King, upon the conquest hereof, having assumed unto himself the title of Emperor of Spain, but somewhat too affectedly, as the case then stood, there being other Kings in Spain as well as he. In which respects he gave unto this City the Arms hereof, in a Field Azure, a Crown Mitrail Imperial Or, garnished with sundry precious Gems Proper; changed afterwards by Alfonso the third of Castile, and eighth of Leon, affecting the same title of Emperor, to an Emperor sitting on his Throne in a Robe of Gold, with a Globe in his left hand, and a Sword in his right.

But the Blazon of these Arms I find not, nor much worth the searching: the old Coat being worn again after his decease.

10. CASTILE.

CASTILE is bounded on the East, with Navarre, Aragon, and part of Valencia; on the West, with Portugal; on the North, with Biscay, Cantabria, and the Asurias; on the South, with Extremadura, Andalusia, and Granada. The reason of the name we shall have anon.

This was the most prevailing Kingdom of all this Continent; to which the rest are all united either by Marriages or Conquest. Divided commonly into the New and old; parted from one another by the Hills of Segovia: the one being called the Old Castile, because it was the Ancient Patrimony of the Earls hereof; and the other named the New, from that addition which was made to the first Inheritance, by the Conquest of the Realm of Toledo, and other pieces, from the Moors. The Old Castile is the less fruitful of the two; more fit for Pasturage, than Corn, but better stored with that and all sorts of fruits than the neighbouring Countries, which lye betwixt it and the Northern or Cantabrian Ocean: the New more plain and Champian, better stored with Fruits, and furnished with sufficient plenty of Corn, and other provisions necessary for the life of man. The Old Castile watered with the Rivers of 1. Relanva, rising not far from Burgos. 2. Tormes, passing by Salamanca. 3. Duro, the Receiptable of the others. The New with 4. Guadarama, honoured with the neighbourhood of Madrid, 5. Tevina, and 6. Tagus, the most famous River of all Spain.

The OLD CASTILE is situate on the North of the New; and hath for the chief Cities of it. 1. Soria, of great note in the ancient Story, by the name of Numanitia; which for the space of 14 years, withstood the whole Forces of Rome: during which time they valiantly repulsed their Enemies, and forced them to dishonourable Compositions. But finding, at last, no hope of holding longer out, they gathered together all their Armour, Money, and Goods, laid them in a heap, then set fire on them, and, finally burnt themselves in the midst of the flame; leaving Scipio (who had brought them to that extremity) nothing but the bare name of Numanitia, to adorn his triumph. 2. Avila, situate under the great Mountains, which are called from hence, the Mountains of Avila. Known anciently by the name of Abule; and by that name giving the title of Abulensis to the renowned Tybalus, who was Bishop of it. A Man, who in his time was President of the Council to John King of Aragon; yet could find leisure enough not only to attend his Episcopal Charge, but to compose those learned and painful Commentaries on a great part of the Bible. Of which, and his other Abilities, (besides that which hath before been noted of him) we may take that Elogie which Cassaubon hath given him, in his book against Berovius, saying Laudo actum viri, si in meliora incidisset Tempora, longe maximi. 3. Saladilla a fine neat Town; and one of the ancientest Universities of Spain: discontinued for a time, by Students, and then restored again by King Philip the second, whose birth-place it was; and who erected here a College (amongst others) for the education only of young English Fugitives. Seated upon the River Pisuerga, and one of the Chanceries of the Kingdoms of Castile and Leon. By means whereof, and of the King's Court here residing in the Summer-times, it became, in little space, a fair, large, populous City, and of great resort, not yielding unto any in Spain, except Lisbon, and Sevil. It is called in Latin, Fiditi Olerum, and Fiditi Olerum, from the abundance of Olives growing near it: but by Pliny, Pimia. 4. Segovia, a Bishops-See, of great trade in clothing; situate under a branch of the Mountains Lubeda, called from hence, the Hills of Segovia. 5. Burgos, near the head of the River Relamor or Relanzon, at the foot of the great Mountain d' Oca, part of the Lubeda: built out of a certain Village lying hereabouts, by Nugno Bellides, a German Son in Law unto one of the first Earls of Castile. For a long time the seat of those Kings, since of the Archbishops hereof; the Cathedral being one of the fairest in Spain; built with such art, that Mass may be sung aloud in five several Chapels, without disturbing one another. This City doth contend for Primacy and Precedency, (in Civil matters) with that of Toledo, of which it hath the first place or vote in all Parliaments or Assemblies of the States of Castile. But yet to satisfy Toledo, the Controversy is still undecided, and was once finely taken up by one of the Ferdinands, saying, that he would first speak for Toledo, and then Burgos should do for it self. Without the Walls of this City, is a famous Nunnery, called Delas Huertat, consisting of 150 Religious Women, all of Noble Houses. 6. Ciudad Rodrigo, a Bishops-See, on the River Goda. 7. Zamora, a strong and well-built City, and a Bishops-See, the Seneca of Pliny: situate on the River Duro, and now famous for the best Bag-pipes. 8. Tordesillas, the Segifuna of the Ancients. 9. Lerne, not far from Burgos, the chief Seat of the Dukes so called; a Prince of great possessions, and the chief of the Family of Rois, and Sandovar. 10. Salamanca, the most famous University of Spain, especially for the study of the Civil and Canon Laws: first instituted by Ferdinand the second of Castile, Anno 1240; and by an Order of the Pope's, together with Paris, Oxford, and Bononia in Italy, created a Generale Studium; wherein there were to be Professors of the Greek, Hebrew, Chaldean, and Arabic Tongues. Besides those of the Arts. It was of old called Salamanca; is now a Bishops-See, situate on the River Tormes, as before was said.

Not far from this City, about the times of our Grand-Fathers was discovered in a Valley situate amongst high and impassable Mountains, a kind of Paraceti, or Savage people, never heard of in Spain before. The occasion, this: An Hawk of the Duke of Alva's, which he very much valued, flew over those Mountains; and his men not being able to find her at first, they were sent back by the Duke to seek her. Climbing from one Hill to another, they hapned at last upon a large and pleasant Valley, where they spied a company of naked Savage people, hemmed in amongst many craggy Rocks, The Salvages, gazing a while upon them, ran into their Caves, made in the hollows of the Rocks, the best Houses they had: which being observed by the Falconers, they return again unto their Lord, telling him, that instead of a Falcon, they had brought him news of a New world in the midst of Spain, and of a race of People which came in with Tubal. Strongly affirming what they said they obtained belief. And the Duke shortly after went with a Company of Musketeers, and subdued them easily; they having no offensive Weapons, but only Slings. They worshipped the Sun and Moon, fed upon nothing that had life, but had good store of excellent Fruits, Roots, and Springs of Water, wherewith Nature was well contented. And though their Language was not altogether understood by any; yet many of their words were found to be purely Rafquish. Reduced, on this discovery, to Christianity; but easily discernable from all other Spaniards; by their tawny complexions, occasioned by the reverberation of the Sun-beams, from those Rocky Mountains wherewith on all sides they are encompassed.

compassed. The truth hereof, besides the credit of James Howell, in his Influations for Foreign Travel; I have upon enquiry found to be attested by men of gravity and great place in this Realm of England; employed there in affairs of publick interest. Satisfied therefore in the truth of the Relation, I am partly satisfied in the men; whom I conceive to be some remnant of the Ancient Spaniards, who hid themselves amongst these Mountains for fear of the Romans. Their Language and Idolatry speak them to be such. For had they either fled from the Goths or Moors, there had been found some Crofs, or other Monument of Christianity, as in other places; or some such mixture in their Speech, as would have favoured somewhat of the Goths or Romans. But it is time I should proceed.

NEWCASTLE is situate on the South of the Old. The chief Cities there, 1. Signenca, a City heretofore of the Celubieri, now a Bishops See, beautified with a fair Cathedral, supposed to be the Candabara of Polomy. 2. Madrid, upon the Guadamarra, the Mannua of the ancient Writers, now the Seat of the Kings; whose residence there, though the Country be neither rich nor pleasant, hath made it, of a Village, the most populous City in all Spain. It is a custom in this Town, that all the upper Rooms in their Houses do belong to the King, except some composition be made with him for them. And of this Town the Spaniards do use to brag to strangers, that they have a City walled with fire; and then make good the boast, by saying, That it is situate in the midst of Quarries of Flint. 3. Alcala de Henares, (of old called Complutum) renowned for an University of Divines, founded here in the time of Ferdinand the Catholic, by Francisco de Ximenes, Cardinal and Arch-Bishop of Toledo; and by him furnished with the ablest men both for Divinity and the Tongues, that all Spain afforded. By whose joyful diligence and study in turning over so many Copies of the Bibles, gathered together at his charge from all parts of the World, he published the Complutensian Edition of the holy Scriptures in the Original Greek, Hebrew, and Vulgar Latin, with the Translation of the Septuagint into Latin also. A work of very great charge and pains, (taking up 15 years in doing) but of greater profit; there being at the end thereof, an Hebrew Dictionary, for the understanding of that Language. 4. Alevaraz, amongst the Mountainous tracts of Oropesda, called Sierra de Alevaraz; memorable for a great difcomfiture given unto the Moors, Anno 1034. 5. Molina in the same Mountainous Tract, hence called Monte de Molina, remarkable for giving the Title of Lord, to the Kings of Castile, who in the Regal file are called Lords of Molina: the Signeury hereof accruing to that Crown, by the marriage of Sancho the third, with Mary the Daughter of Alfonso, the last Leon Proprietary. The Territory large, and the Town of strength; well fortified in the times foregoing, both by Art and Nature. 6. Cuenca, seated at the Spring-head of the River Xucar, and not far from that of Tagu also, amongst the Mountains of Oropesda; built by the Moors on the top of those craggy Hills, whom it served for an impregnable Fortres against the Christians, till taken by Sancho the second of Castile, Anno 1177.

Here also is the Ejciurnal, or Monastery of S. Lawrence, built by King Philip the second, a place (saith Quade, who spendeth 13 pages in its description) of that magnificence, that no building; in times past, or this present is comparable to it. The front, toward the West, is adorned with three stately Gates, the middlemost where, of leadeth into a most magnificent Temple, a Monastery in which are 150 Monks of the Order of S. Jerome, and a College: that on the right hand, openeth into divers Offices, belonging to the Monastery: that on the left, unto Schools and out-houses belonging unto the College. At the four corners, there are four Towers of excellent Workmanship; and for height majestic. Towards the North, is the King's Palace; on the South parts divers beautiful and sumptuous Galleries; and on the East-side sundry Gardens and VValks, very pleasing and delectable. It containeth in all 11 several Quadrangles, every one encloftered; and is indeed so brave a structure, that a Voyage unto Spain were well employed, were it only to see it, and return. Here is also in this Tract the old Town of Castulo, (the Castlam of Strabo) then the chief City of the Carpentani, and the birth-place of Himilce, the VVife of Amibal, from whence this whole Tract had the name of Salus Castulanensis, and so called by Cesar; now a poor Village, known by the name of Castana la Veia; in which is somewhat to be found of the ancient ruins. But of this more already, when we were in the Kingdom of Toledo; to which it more properly belonged.

The old Inhabitants of these Castiles, were the Vaccii, Ventones, Arvacca, Oretani, Carpentani, Dittani, &c. From none of which, the name of Castile can be deduced: for that we must fetch it either from the Castellani, once a people of Catalogne; or from some strong fortified Castles erected in the Frontiers, against the Moors. This last conjecture may seem probable, because the Arms of this Kingdom are Gules, a Castle triple-towered, &c. Neither is it any way strange, for Provinces, especially smaller ones, such as at first this was, (though now much extended both in bounds and power) to take their names from a Castle. For (to go no further) even with us, Richmondshire was so called from the Castle of Richmond, there built by Alain, Earl of Bretagne; and Flintshire took denomination from the Castle built of Flint-stones, by Henry the second. VVe may see hereby, how much Celam Secundum Cuvio was deceived, who writeth, that Alfonso the third having overthrown Mahomet Enafer, King of Morocco, and put 60000 of his men to the Sword; assumed these Arms, that thus named this Kingdom, which was before called the Kingdom of the Bastitanes; because that Victory, like a strong Castle, had confirmed his Estates unto him. Whereas, in case there were no other error in his supposition, the Bastitanes were no Inhabitants of Castile, but of Valencia and Murcia, Provinces far enough off from the Old Castile, at the first taking of that name. And for the former Etymology, it appeareth most evidently, in that the people are by the Latins called Castellani: the Country, Castella: the same name with those elder Castellani which inhabited Catalogne. But not to stand upon the name, certain it is, that the Inhabitants hereof, having been conquered by the Romans, and made a part of their Empire, fell by degrees to the Alani, and from them to the Goths, as hath been shewed already on some other occasion. From them extorted by the Moors, with the help of Spain: recovered, foot after foot, by the Kings of Leon; governed under them, at first, by Presidential Earls, Commanders of so many Castles in the Country of the Vaccii, fortified and defended against the Moors. Ordengo the second, harbouring some suspitions against these Earls, caused them all to be cruelly murdered. The people upon this, revolted from the Crown of Leon; governed first by Judges, then by Earls again, as an absolute and free Estate. Ferdinand Gonfles, the first that re-assumed the Title of Earl of Castile, coming to the Court of Leon with a brave Retinue, sold to King Sancho an Hawk, and an Horle, of excellent kinds, for a sum of money; conditioned, that if the Money were not paid at the time agreed on, it should be doubled, and redoubled, till the Debt were

fatisted. This money, by the negligence of the King's Officers, who looked upon the Contract as a matter of jest, became to great a sum, that the King, to satisfy Gonfles, made him the first Proprietary-Earl of Castile, Anno 939; releasing that Estate from all acknowledgment to the Kings of Leon. Nuñez, or Evoira, as some call her, Sister and Heir of Garcia the fourth Earl hereof, brought this Estate by Marriage to Sancho, firnamed the Great, King of Navarre, Anno 1028; by whom it was erected into a Kingdom, and given to him by Ferdinand, his second Son, Anno 1034. Kings of most note and observation in the course of their story, are 1. Ferdinand, their first King; who added Leon to his Kingdom, in right of Sancho, his Wife, Sister and Heir of Ferdinand the last King thereof, of the race of Pelayus. 2. Alfonso the first, who subdued the Kingdom of Toledo, adding it, by the name of New Castile, unto his Estate. 3. Alfonso the Fourth, who only conquered from the Crown of Navarre, whatsoever lay on the Castilian side on the River Bieru, but also the whole Countries of Alava, and Guisqucoa, all which he united to Castile: but grew so great, that he caused himself to be solemnly crowned Emperor of Spain, in the Cathedral Church of Leon, by the Arch-bishop of Toledo; and gave his Son Sancho the title of King of Castile, in his own life-time. The chief of the Confederates against Mahomet Enafer, the Amir-momine of Morocco, whom he vanquished in the famous battel of Muradali, or Sierra Moracca, Anno 1213. 4. Ferdinand the third, who incorporated Leon and Castile into one Estate, and added the Kingdoms of Murcia, Corduba, and Sevil, taken from the Moors, unto his Dominions. 5. Alfonso the fifth of Castile, and the ninth of Leon, elected Emperor of the Germanies, but more famous for his eminence in Astronomy; the Author of the Alfonsine Tables: compiled by many Learned Men assembled together, by his means, in the City of Toledo, where, in the compiling of it, it is affirmed by a Spanish Writer, that he spent more than the Revenues of the Pope in ten years did amount unto. 6. Sancho the 3d. Son of this Alfonso, the Author of the great breach in the line of Castile: for having the hap to survive Ferdinand, firnamed de la Cerde, his elder Brother; he made himself so strong a Party in his Father's life time, that he succeeded in the Kingdom, depriving his Brother's Children of their Right therein, though many attempts were made, in their favour, afterwards. Don Alfonso, eldest Son of which Ferdinand married into France, was Father of Lewis Earl of Clermont; who by Leonora de Cipines, a Daughter of the new house of Medina Sidonia, was Father of Lewis, Tobu and Isabella de la Cerde, (in which last, the Male Issue being quite extinct) the whole Rights of that line remained: brought by her to her Husband Bernard, a base Son of the house of Foix, created by King Henry the second, the first Earl of Medina Cell; whose Son, called Garcia, left the name of Foix, and took unto himself that of de la Cerde; continued ever since in his Posterity advanced unto the honour of Dukes of Medina Cell, in the person of Lewis the first Earl, the better to preserve in memory their descent from, and lawful title to that Crown. And for the better keeping and preserving of their claim unto it, it is affirmed to be the custom of this House, once, at the least, in the life time of every Duke, to put up a Petition to the King then reigning, for restitution to the Throne; which the King receiving assensually, doth of course subscribe this answer to it, viz. Ne ego licet; that is to say, there is no room for him. 8. Isabel the Good, driven out of this Kingdom by Henry of Transilunare, his Brother, restored again, for a time, by the valour of Edward the Black-Prince, Son of Edward the third. 9. John, Son of Henry of Transilunare, who married his Son Henry, to Katharine Daughter of John of Gann, by Castile, one of the Daughters of Don Pedro the Earl; to uniting both Titles into one. The times in which the Princes, and the rest, did reign, appeare in these Catalogues of the Earls and Kings of Castile, which are as follow.

Of whose Acts, and life, we will make more ample mention when we shall come to speak of the Monarchy of Spain, which began in them, and hath been since continued in their posterity.

The chief Orders of Knighthood within these Kingdoms of Castile and Leon, long since united into one, were Three in all; partly Religious, partly Military; and one Order of Religious persons, not known in any Country but Spain alone.

This of the last sort, is called the Order of Mercy, or de la Merced; first instituted by King James of Aragon, in the chief Church of Barcelona, Anno, 1218. Admitted afterwards into the Kingdoms of Castile, where of most esteem; but so, that in remembrance of their first foundation, they still retain their ancient Arms, which are those of Aragon, viz. a Cross Argent, and Four Bends Gules, in a field Or. Their habit white; the Rule of their Order, that of S. Augustine's, the practice and profession of it, to gather Alms amongst the People wherewith to redeem such Christian Captives, as either by Piracy, the chance of War, or by some other means are enthrall'd to the Turks and Moors: sending their Agents yearly to Algiers and Fesse, to inform them of the state, age, and quality, of each several Captive, and after, on instruction from the Brethren of this Society, to deal in the redemption of them. A business which they manage with great care and Faithfulness, and are accordingly trusted with great sums of money, given and collected to that end: few men here dying, who give not some Legacy or other to this pious use. Nor are the Kings behind hand in so good a work, promoting it with a liberal purse, and giving as much ordinarily out of his Estate, as the Brethren have collected in all Spain besides. And to say truth, it doth concern him more than others, because they are his Subjects chiefly, for whose redemption the whole sum is given and gathered: Religious persons are ransom'd first; and then the Lazies; the young and servicable men, before old and impotent: if after the Redemption on the Spanish Captives, they have any stock left, they keep it not till another year, but therewith ransom Captives of some other Nations. So that this seemeth to succeed in the place of the now antiquated and useless Orders of Knighthood, which were heretofore of great authority and power: that is to say;

1. Of Calatrava, a Town of the Kingdom of Toledo, abandoned by the Templers, (to whom the defence thereof belonged) on the approach of the Moors, made good by Raymond, the Abbot of Pispiria, and the Monks of Cisteaux, Anno 1157. For the future preservation and defence whereof, they ordained this Order; which in process of time grew to such estate, that besides eight fair Priories, they enjoyed in Spain no less than 61 Towns and Castles. The Knights hereof do wear for their habit, a White Robe, with a Red Cross upon their breasts; confirmed by Pope Alexander the third, Anno 1164, under the Discipline of Cisteaux. Their residence is at the Castle Covo; bound, by their Order, to serve in the Wars against the Infidels: upon which services, they have been sometimes in the field with three hundred great Horse.

2. Of S. Jago, instituted by the Canons of Eloy, and certain Gentlemen of Castile, in imitation of the Order of Calatrava; for the security and entertainment of Christian Pilgrims, travelling to the Shrine of S. Jago, confirmed by the said Pope Alexander the third, Anno 1175, under the Rule of the Augustine. Their Habit is a White Robe, with a Red Cross like a Sword: the companions of it, according to the first Founders, being part Ecclesiastical and part Secular: whereof these last are only tied unto the vow of conjugal Chastity. They grew in little time unto such esteem, that besides two Colleges or Seminaries in Salamanca, and a College in Sevil; they had four Hermities in the Mountains, and five Hospitals well endowed for the entertainment of Strangers; together with 90 Towns and Castles in several parts of the Kingdom. The whole number of Gentlemen, besides Friers serving in their Cures, and other Ministers, are above 600. Their first residence at the Hospital of S. Mark, in the Suburbs of Leon, on a diflike with Ferdinand the second King of Leon, removed to Ucles in Castile, bestowed upon them by Alfonso the 4th. Upon this occasion being divided, they have since two Masters, or Comendadores, the one called the Comendador of Leon, who resides at St. Mark; the other the Comendador of Castile who resides at Ucles.

3. Of Alcantara, a Town of Extremadura, defended by Ferdinand of Leon, against the Moors; where he framed this Order; confirmed by Pope Lucius, Anno 1183. Others ascribe it to Alfonso, the Successor of that Ferdinand, Anno 1217; by whom endowed with all the Lands of the Calatravians in the Realm of Leon: but acknowledging the superiority thereof, and under the same Rule of Cisteaux. Their device at first was a Pear-tree Vert, in a field Or, to which hanged a pair of Shackles, as a sign of their subjection to them of Calatrava, changed, Anno 1411, to a White Robe, and a Green Cross on their breasts.

I omit here the order of the Dove and Reason, instituted by King John of Castile, because of small esteem, and but short continuance: nor shall I now speak any thing of the Arms of the Kingdom, which we have seen before on other occasion. And so much for Castile, the first of those Three greater Kingdoms of Spain, under which all the rest are now reduced; containing in this Continent all the Provinces and Estates before described; amounting to two third parts of the whole; and many large estates elsewhere, as shall be shewed hereafter in its proper place. Pass we on, next, to Portugal; the second, in repute, of the said three Kingdoms; not so much for the largeness of the Territories which it had on the Continent, as for its great Appendices in all other parts of the World.

II. The Kingdom of Portugal.

THE Kingdom of PORTUGAL containeth, 1. Portugal it self: 2. Algarve, or Regnum Algarbium, and 3. the Tercera's, or Isles of Azores: these last not reckoned parts of Spain, by any of our Writers, either old or new; but made by use part hereof, because situate over against Portugal, one of the first additions which was made unto it on the Ocean: and finally, because I know not under what head to reduce them better.

And first PORTUGAL it self, it is bounded on the North, with the Rivers Minio and Avia, which part it from Gallicia; on the South, with Algarve; on the West, with the Atlantic Ocean: and on the East, with the two Castiles, and Extremadura, from which divided by a Line drawn from Rivadania, standing on the Avia, to Badaioz, on the Anar, or Guadiana. Extended on the Sea-coast from North to South, 400 miles: the breadth of it, in the broadest place (not taken in the Islands into the account) 100 miles; in the narrowest, 80: the whole circumference, 879 miles: and in that compass, 1460 Parishes.

It was first called Lusitania, from the Lusitani, the chief Inhabitants thereof; and took the name of Portugal either either from the Haven or Port of Cale, now called Cala, sometimes a very rich and flourishing Empery; or rather from the Haven-Town of Portus, at the mouth of Duero; where the Gauls (or the French rather) used to land their Merchandise: which was therefore called Portus Gallorum; and which Town was given in Dower with Terefa, the Daughter of Alfonso the sixth, to Henry of Lorraine, with the title of Earl of Portugal. Whole Successors coming to be Kings, extended this name to all those Countries which they got from the Moors, as it continueth at this day.

The Air is very healthy, the Country for the most part hilly, and bare of Corn, supplied from France, and other parts of the North; that which they have, being as good as any in Europe, if not better. The soil, and people, in all places, not rich alike. For where the soil is richest, (as in the parts lying on the North of Duero) there the people are poorest; in regard of the great distance thereof from Lisbon; and so not benefitted by the trading of that wealthy City. And where the soil is poorest, there the people be richest, helping themselves by trade and manufacture; especially by making Silks and Salt, sufficient for themselves, and for other Countries. But where there is a defect of Corn, that defect is otherwise sufficiently recompensed with abundance of Honey, Wine, Oyl, Alloms, Fruits, Fish, Salt, white Marble, and some Mines of Silver, &c.

The people of a more plain and simple behaviour, than the rest of Spain; and (if we believe the old Proverb) none of the wisest. For whereas the Spaniards are said to seem wise, and yet to be Fools, the French to seem Fools, and yet to be wise: the Portugals are affirmed to be neither wise indeed, nor so much as to seem so. But little different from which, is the Spanish By-word, which telleth us of the Portugals, that they are Pocos y Locos; few, and foolish: which others vary with the addition of another part of their Character; saying, they are Pocos, Sotos y Devotos. Few and Foolish; but withal Devout. They have great animosities (if it be not grown to an Antipathy) against the Castilians, for bereaving them of their Kingdom and Liberty, though both of late, recovered by them: but, when most Fools, were counted for good Seafaring-men, and happy in the discovery of Foreign Nations.

Rivers it hath of all sorts, both great and small, almost 200. Those of most note, 1. Minio, full of Red-Led (from hence called Minio by the Latins), navigable with small Vessels 100 miles. 2. Lethes, now Lavada. 3. Mitadana, now Mondego. 4. Tagus. 5. Duero, and 6. Anar, these three last common also to the rest of Spain; Anar, or Guadiana, passing by Portugal but for 7 Leagues only; Tagus for 18, and Duero for 80. None of them navigable for any long space, by Ships of burden; the Rivers of all Spain being generally swift of course, restrained within narrow Channels, banked on both sides with very steep Rocks, which make them inconvenient for Navigation: inasmuch that it is reckoned for a great Privilege of Tagus, and the Realm of Portugal, that this River is there navigable with great Ships, fifteen or twenty miles within the Continent. But here that want is somewhat tolerably supplied with three excellent Havens: 1. That of Lisbon upon Tagus; and 2. Porto, on Duero, to the North of Lisbon; of which more anon: 3. of Setaval, South of Lisbon, situate on a Gulf of 20 miles in length, and 3 in breadth: a place of principal importance to those parts of the Realm. Rivers, however, of great fame; according to whose course the whole Country was divided; by the Roman, into Ulterior, lying beyond Duero, Northwards; 2. Citerior, on the South of Tagus; and 3. Interrimem, betwixt both.

Principal Cities of this part, 1. Lisbon, seated upon Tagus, a famous City for Traffic; the Portugals in all their Navigations setting sail from hence. By the Latins called Ulyssipus, and Ulyssippo; because, as some say Ulysses built it, coming hither in the course of his ten years travel: a thing merely fabulous, it being no where found that Ulysses did ever see this Ocean, but like enough it is, that this Town being seated conveniently for Navigation, and inhabited by Seafaring-men, might at the first be consecrated to the memory of so great a Traveller: as Athens, being a place of Learning, was dedicated to Minerva, whom the Greeks call Athena. It is in compass 7 miles, and containeth upwards of 30 Parishes, and in them 2000 houses: all of neat and elegant building. Turrets and Towers it numbeth upon the Wall, about 76; Gates toward the Sea-shore, 22. And towards the Continent, situate upon five small Hills, betwixt which is a Valley which runs down to the River: but by reason of the situation, serving not only for a Prison of men of quality: the entry of the River being defended by the Castle of Cascais; and nearer to the City, by the Fort of S. Julian, and the Rock of Belem; munitioned with 20 pieces of Ordnance. This City heretofore was honoured with the Seat of the Kings, since of the Vice-Royes, an Archbishopric-See, the Staple of Commodities for all the Kingdom, and thought to be more worth than the whole Realm beside, said, by some French Writers, to be the best peopled City in Christendom, next unto Paris; and by Betero an Italian, made to be the fourth Mart-Town of Europe, the other three being Constantinople, Paris, and Moscow. In which they do great wrong to London, as populous, and well-traded, as the best of them all. 2. Santarem, on the Tagus, so called from S. Irene, a Nun of Tomas, (a Monastery, in which the old Kings of Portugal did use to be crowned), here martyred by the Moors; by Ptolomy called Scaballus; then a Roman Colony, 3. Sintra, upon the main Atlantic, at the end of huge Mountains, called Monte Luna: whither by reason of the cool refreshings from the Sea, and pleasure of the Woods adjoining, the Kings of Portugal used to retire in the heats of the Summer. 4. Coimbre, on both sides the River Almondego, pleasantly seated amongst Vineyards, and Woods of Olives, a Bishopric-See, and an University; the Masters whereof made the Commentary on most part of Aristotle, called from hence, Schola Canimbricensis. Then on the North of the River Duero, betwixt that and Minio; are 5. Bragas, by Ptolomy called Bracoria Augusta, reckoned by Antonine for one of the four chief Cities in Spain, the Royal Seat, when time was, of the Suevian Kings, and now the See of an Archbishop, contending for the Primacy with him of Toledo. 6. Porto, the Haven of the Gauls, on the Mouth of Duero. 7. Miranda, a Bishopric-See on the same River. 8. Bragas, the Duke whereof is so great a Prince, that it is thought a third part of the People of Portugal are his Vassals, and live on his Lands: originally descended from Alfonso, natural Son to John the first; created by his Father, Earl of Borellia, after Duke of Braganca; the latter Dukes, since the time of King Emmanuel, being withal of the right Royal Blood; two steps of main advantage to the Regal Throne, lately attended and obtained by John Duke of Braganca, now called John the 4th. And finally, on the South of Tagus, betwixt that and the Kingdom of Algarve, there is 9. Ebora, in the midst of a large and spacious Plain, an Archbishopric See, and an University; this last of the Foundation of King Henry the Cardinal, i.e. Portelgre, a Bishop-See. 11. Olyvencia on the Guadiana. 12. Beia, by Pliny called Pax Julia, now Meas, and not very well inhabited; but antiently a Roman Colony, and one of the three Juridical Regions of Lusitania.

2. The Kingdom of ALGARVE lyeth on the South of Portugal, from which divided by a line drawn from Afóris, on the Western Sea, to Odebre, a Castle on the Guadiana: on the East, bounded by Andalusia; on the West and South, by the main Atlantic. This is the most wild and desert part of this Kingdom, barren and dry: peopled with few Towns, nor those very populous; hilly and mountainous withal; but yielding, by the benefit of the Sea, a great Trade of Fishing, of Tunny especially; whereof more caught upon this Coast, than in all the Kingdom.

The name is took from the Western situation of it, for so the word Algarve signifieth in the Arabic Tongue. The utmost end of it, called anciently Promontorium Sacrum; now the Cape of S. Vincent; because the bones of S. Vincent, religiously preserved by the Christians, were here burnt and scattered about for the Moors. Places of most importance in it, 1. Niebla, the Seat of Aben Mefad, once a King of this Country. 2. Silvis, an Episcopal See, seated in the lowland part. 3. Villa nova, situate beyond the Cape. 4. Tavilla, the Balsa, and S. Faro, the Ofensio of Platony, both noted Ports on the Atlantic. 6. Lagos, another Haven-Town also.

This Country, conquered by the Moors, with the rest of Spain, in the distractions of their Power, was for a time under the Sovereignty and Command of the Kings of Sevil. Recovered from the Moors of Sevil, by the Kings of Morocco, it became subject unto them till they left this Country; and, after their retreat, was parcelled among many Princes. One of which, called Aben Mefad, reigning in Niebla, and the parts adjoining, being dispossessed of his Estate by Alfonso the Wise, most of the other Towns and Princes submitted to him, and became his Vassals, Anno 1277. More absolutely subdued and made subject to the Crown of Portugal, by Alfonso the third, Anno 1260; to whom the said Alfonso, the tenth of that name in Leon, and the fifth in Castile, had given the same in Dowry with Beatrice his Daughter. From which Marriage issued Dionysius, or Dennis, King of Portugal, the first that ever used the title of Rex Algarbiorum, Anno 1279.

3. The AZORES are certain Islands lying in the Atlantic Ocean, opposite to the City of Lisbon, from which distant but 250 Leagues, Situate betwixt the 38 and 40 degrees of Northern Latitude; and one of them in the first Longitude; which is commonly reckoned from these Islands, as being the most Western part of the World, before the discovery of America.

They were thus called from the multitude of Goshawks which were found there in the beginning; (the word Azor, in the Spanish Tongue, signifying a Goshawk) though at this time there be none of them to be found. Called also the Flemish Islands, because first discovered by the Flemings; and the great numbers of them in the Isle of Faial, (one of the chief of all the pack) where there are yet some Families which resemble the Flemings both in their complexion and habit, and not far from the place of their abode, a Torrent, which the Spaniards call Ribera de los Flamencos, or the River of Flemings. They are also called the Tercera's, from Tercera the Isle among them.

The Air of those Islands are generally good, and subject unto few Diseases, except that which the Portugals call the Blood; being an impohtumation of the blood, breaking out at the eyes, or other parts of the body. Some other inconveniences they are subject to, proceeding from the humidity of the place; the great winds and storms, of such a violent and strange kind of working, that Bars of Iron as big as a man's arm, have in six years been worn as little as a Straw. All of them well stored with Fleish, Fish and other things necessary excepting Salt and Oyl, with which they are furnished out of Portugal. Wines they have also for their own use, but not to be transported far, because of their weakness: for which cause also, the richer men provide themselves of Canary Wines, or those of the Island of Madera. Of like nature is their Wheat, and other Fruits, which hold good above a year. All of them subject unto Earth-quakes, and fume to breathings out of fire, which continually sendeth forth fuming vapours. The chief Commodities which they transport into other Countries, are Canary-Birds for Ladies, Woad for the Diers, Joyners, work, which they fell to the Spaniards, and Bees for the victualling of such Ships as come there to be victualled.

The Inhabitants are generally laborious, excellent Husbands on their grounds; inasmuch as they make Vines to grow out of Rocks; much given to Journey; by which they make many pretty fancies, much esteemed by the Spaniards, but not so expert at it, as those of Nuremberg. They take great pains to teach the Cattel understanding; the Oxen being taught to know when their Master calleth them. In other things they conform to the Portugals, both in their Customs and Apparel, but with some snatching of the Fleming, which Nation they affect above any other.

The Islands nine in number; and distinguished by the several names of, 1. Tercera, 2. S. Michael, 3. Faial, 4. Gratiola, 5. S. George, 6. Pico, 7. Corvo, 8. Flores, and 9. S. Marie's; of which, S. Michael, and S. Marie's, lyeth next to Spain; Tercera, on the North-west of those, (by consequence) the third in Order, whence it had the name S. George's, Gratiola, Pico, Faial, on the West of that, and finally, those of Corvo, and Flores, nearest to America.

1. TERCERA, the chief of all the rest, 18 miles in compass; well stored with Peaches, Apples, Lemons, Oranges; and for the Kitchen, with Tunneys, Cabages, plenty of Pot-herbs, and as good Potatoes, (which are the best food the people have) as any in the world; but more esteemed in Portugal, than they be in this Island, by reason of their great abundance. Here is also great quantity of the best kind of Woad (which from hence is called Island Woad) and a Plant about the height of a man, which bears no fruit; but hath a Root as profitable as those that do, out of which the people draw a thin and tender filin, wherewith they fill their Matresses, instead of Feathers. Fowl enough for the use of man, and yet none of prey. No part of any safety in it, but that of Angra; and that made safe by Art, and not by Nature: the whole begirt with Rocks, which stick out like a pointed Diamond, able to pierce the feet of any who should venture over them. Places of most importance in it, 1. Praye, on the Sea-side well walled, but not very well peopled. 2. S. Barbara, 3. S. Sebastian's, 4. Gualne, and 5. Villa Nova, Burroughs of good note. 6. Angra, the chief, not of this Island only, but of all the nine. The residence of the Governor, and an Archbishop's See, who hath in his Cathedral Church: seated on a convenient Bay, made in the form of a Crescent, with two Promontories on each side, (like the two Horns of a half-Moon) bearing into the Sea; each Fortified with a strong Cattle for the defence of the Haven: the Town it self also well walled about, and environed with sharp Rocks on all sides. Both Town and Cattle well garrisoned, and no less diligently guarded. This, in regard of its great strength, and commodious Haven, is esteemed the principal of these Islands, and communicates it's name unto all the rest; though neither nearest unto Spain, nor the greatest in compass.

2. S.

2. S. MARIES, so called from the Saint (as S. George and S. Michael are) unto which it is dedicated; is the most Southern of these Isles, inhabited by Spaniards only; twelve miles in circuit, the making of Earthen Vessels, and those much given unto the making of Earthen Vessels. So naturally fenced with Rocks, that it is, and may be easily kept by the Inhabitants, without the charge of a Garrison. The chief Town of it hath the name of S. Maries also, which it cither giveth unto the Island, or borroweth from it.

3. S. MICHAEL'S, directly North of S. Maries, from which, little distant; the biggest in the whole pack, as being 20 miles in length, though the breadth not answerable; much subject unto Earth-quakes and fiery vapours. Of most note amongst our modern Geographers, who have removed hither the first Meridian (by which they divide the World into East and West) from the Cape, or Fortunate Islands; where it was fixed in the time of Platony, and others of the Ancient Writers.

And this remove seems countenanced even by Nature it self; it being observed that the Compsas when it cometh under the Meridian, drawn through this Isle, hath little or no variation at all, but pointeth almost directly towards the North: whereas in all other places, or less Meridians, East and West, it pointeth not so directly North, but more or less to the North-east, or the North-west; which the Mariners call the Variation, or the North-easting and the North-westing of the Compsas. And yet it's observed of late, that there is some more sensible variation of it in this Isle of S. Michael, than in that of Corvo; which therefore is conceived more fit for the first Meridian.

The chief Town hereof, besides many Burroughs and lesser Hamlets, Punta del Gada, seated upon a dangerous Sea, and without any Port; yet more frequented by Strangers, than the Port of Angra, because here they may go in, and out as they please; but not so in the other.

4. FAYAL, 17 or 18 miles in length; plentifully provided with all things necessary for the life of man, and well furnished with Woad, for which Commodity, much frequented by the Merchants of England. The chief Town of it, Dorta; defended with a Castle, and that guarded by Spaniards; both Town and island taken by Sir Walter Raleigh, Anno 1597. This action was called the Island-Voyage; undertaken as well to divert the War, which the Spaniards threatened to bring to our own doors; as, by seizing some of those islands, to intercept the Spanish Fleet in their return, and to hinder them in their setting out: by which means, wanting their Indian Gold, they might be brought to better terms with their Neighbour-Nations. And though the English were not able to hold it long, yet it was said, that the Booty got in this Expedition, amounted to 40000 Crowns; besides the honour of beating the Spaniards upon his own ground. It took his name from its abundance of Bees.

5. GRATIOLA, not above five or six Leagues in compass; but so well furnished with Fruits, that they feed much yearly to Tercera; inhabited by Portugals only, but so poor, that they are not able to bear the charge of a Garrison. The chief Town of it called La Plaisa.

6. S. GEORGE'S, twelve miles long, about three in breadth; mountainous, and full of Forests; but those Forests so well stored with Cedars, that they use them many times for Shipping, and sometimes for Fewel. The chief Town of it, called S. George, as the Island is.

7. PICO, lyeth on the South of the Isle of S. George, and took this name from an high Hill, in the form of a Pyramid, which the Portugals generally call a Pike, or Pico. Replenished with Fruits, some Cedars, and a tree called Teixo, of great bulk, and as much beauty; the wood thereof exceeding hard, red within, and waved; so admirably beautiful, that it is allowed only to the King's Officers, the other Subjects being interdicted the use of it, (but on special licence) by a publick Edit. In bigness, it is second only unto that of S. Michael, if not equal to it; hardly so much in length, but of greater breadth. The chief Towns of it, 1. S. Sebastian, 2. Caldeia de Nespim, both upon the Sea, and in the East parts of the Island.

8. FLORES, directly East from Faial, so called from its abundance of Flowers, (as Cravilla from the like flourishing Verdure of it) is in compass not above 8 miles; but plentifully furnished with Cattel, and good grounds to feed them. The chief Town of it, Santa Cruz. The Isle (though small, yet) twice as big as the Isle of

9. CORVO, so called from its abundance of Crows, situate on the North coast, and but little distant: both very unsafe, and both most miserable poor, by reason of the many Pirates which ly betwixt them, to intercept such ships as trade to America. But this, though much smaller than the others, may in time be of more esteem than any of them, in regard it is conceived to be the most natural place for the first Meridian, as before was noted: the Needle here pointing directly to the North, without Variation. Which whether it proceed from some secret inclination of the Loadstone to that part of the World, more in this place than any other; or that being situate between the two great Continents of Europe and America, it is drawn equally towards both, by the magnetic virtue of the Earth it self, I leave to be disputed by more able Judgments.

These Islands were first discovered and subdued by the Portugals, under the conduct, or by the direction of Prince Hemy, Son of John the first; who first made the Portugals in love with the Seas. And they were also the last Members of the Crown of Portugal, which held out for Don Antonio the Bastard, against Philip the second of Castile; against whom the island of Tercera was for a while gallantly defended by Emanuel de Silva, with the help of the French; but taken at the last by the Marquess of Santa Cruz, and the French, after promise of life, cruelly murdered in cold blood. After which, garrisoned at the first by none but Portugals. But upon some commotion happening in that Kingdom, it was thought fit, on some Reason of State, to make sure of those islands, by Spanish Garrisons; which accordingly were put into the Castle of Angra in Tercera; the Towns of Punta del Gada, in S. Michael; and Dorta in Faial. And to say truth, the Spaniards had good reason to be careful of them: these Islands being of such importance, as without them the Navigation of the Indies, Philippins, Brazil, and New Spain, could not be continued: because the Fleets which come from those Countries to Lisbon or Sevil, must, in a manner, of necessity touch upon some of them; as well in following their Course, if they come from the West, as in recovering such Winds as are useful to them, if they came from the East.

But to return again to the main Land of Portugal, know, that the ancient Inhabitants of it, were the Lusitan, dwelling betwixt Tagus and Duero, the old Lusitania being bounded within those Rivers, the Celtici and Turdiani, who took up also some part of Baetica, dwelling on the South of Tagus; and the Galaici Bracari, (so called to difference them from the Galaici Lukenesi, who possessed Gallitia) on the North of Duero. Subdued first unto the Romans; by whom accounted one of the three parts of Spain. In the declining of their Empire conquered by the Alani; and from them taken by the Suevians; who, for a time, made the City of Braga the Royal Seat of their Kings. The Suevians lost it to the Goths; and the Goths to the *Moor*s, as hath been shewn already in their several Stories. Recovered, in part, by the King of Leon, to whom that part continued subject, till given by Alfonso the sixth of Leon, in Dowry with his late Daughter Teresa, to Henry of Leira, (whose virtue and good service, merited no less reward) anno, 1099. Who having fortunately governed it by the title of an Earl for the space of 12 years, left his Son Alfonso, Her both to his Fortunes and Vertues; honoured with the title of King of Portugal, by the Sovereigns of Leon, for his most gallant, demeanor shewn in the Battel of Ovique, anno, 1139. He had, before the Assumption of the Regal Stile, ruled 27 years with a great deal of honour; and reigned here with no less, 45 years after that Assumption; revered by his friends, and feared by his enemies. So that the whole time of his sitting in the Chair of State, was 72 years: a longer enjoying of Sovereignty, than any Prince since the first beginning of the Roman Monarchy. His Successors we shall have in order of the following Catalogue. But we must first tell you, as in other places of this Work, that the Princes of most note in the whole Succession, are, 1. Henry of Lorraine, (whom some make a Burgundian of the City of Besconen) who coming into Spain to the Holy Wars, and deserving nobly in the same, was honoured by Alfonso the sixth, with his Daughter Teresa, and the Town of Porto for her Dowry: given to him with the title of the Earl of Portugal. He extended his Estate as far as Combriva, on the South of the River Duro; so that River being before that time, the utmost bound of it that way. 2. Alfonso the first King, who took Lisbon from the *Moor*s, anno, 1247, and made it the Seat of his Kingdom; which he extended Southward as far as Algarve. 3. Alfonso the 3d, who partly by Conquest, and partly by Marriage, added Algarve to his Estate, getting it by the Sword, and confirming it to him by the Bed. He also did prevail so far with Alfonso the Wife, (never the wifer for so doing) as to get his Realm discharged of the Homage which formerly had been done to the Kings of Leon, an, 1270. 4. Alfonso the 4th, confederate with the fifth of the same name in Castile, against Albacon the Miramon of Africk, at the sight near the River Salado not far from Tariff; where they discomfited the vast Army of *Moor*s, consisting of 70000 Horse and Foot. 5. John the first, the base Son of Pedro the first; setting aside the Lady Beatrix, Queen of Castile, the Daughter of Ferdinand the first, and the Lawful Children of his Father, being many in number; by force and colour of Election, obtained the Kingdom. Fortified it by his Marriage with the Lady Philipp, Daughter of John of Gauze, Duke of Lancaster, a strong Competitor, at that time, for the Crown of Castile: on which relation, this King, the four Kings next succeeding, and two of this Kings younger Sons, were made Knights of the Garter. 6. Edward the son and successor of John the first; of whom there goes a story, that on the day of his Coronation, he was advised by a Jew, (one of his Physicians) learned in Astrology, to defer the Ceremony until noon, in regard he found by his Art, that if they did proceed until it in that conjuncture, his reign would be very short, and full of trouble. But the King, either out of magnanimity, or contempt of that Art, going on with the Ceremony, the Jew's Prediction was found true; for he reigned not fully five years, and with ill success in his attempts against the *Moor*s. 7. Henry Duke of Viseo, (Vifcontinus the Latins call it) the second Son of John the first, created Knight of the Garter by King Henry the sixth, an, 1444. By whose encouragement and example, the Portuguese began to be affected to Foreign Voyages: discovering in his time, (and, for the most part, under his conduct also) the Islands of Azora, Madera, Holy-Port, those of Cabo Verde, and a great part of the Coast of Africk, as far as Guinea. He dyed anno 1465. 8. Alfonso the fifth, who warring on the *Moor*s in Africk, took from them the strong Towns of Tangier, Alcazar, and Arzila. 2. John the second, under whose reign the Portugals fully settled themselves in Guinea, and the Realms of Congo; discovering all the Coasts and Isles of Africk, (not before discovered as far as to the Cape of good hope, anno 1487: planting and fortifying as they passed: the whole discovery of Africk, the East-Indies, and Brazil, being perfected in the Reign of King 10 Emanuel under whom also they discomfited great Armies of the Turks and Sultans, of Egypt; bringing by Sea the riches of the East, into the West. 11. Sebastian, the Grandchild of King John, son of Emanuel, embarking himself unadvisedly in the Wars of Africk, lost his life (as it is generally supposed at the battel of Alcazar, in which three Kings fell in one day. But many of the Portugals are of opinion, that he was not killed, but that for shame and sorrow he returned not home; wandering from one place to another, and at last was found and avowed at Venice: thence carried to Naples, where he was kept three days in a dark Dungeon, without any furniture but a Knife and a Halter: brought into Spain by the King's Command, where at last he dyed. A man in whom so many circumstances met, to make up a truth, that the very Spaniards used to say, that either he was the true Sebastian, or else the Devil in his likeness. But whether true or not, it is not now material; Death having put an end to that dispute; though the controversy which ensued upon his death, for the Crown of Portugal, be not yet decided. For, though King Philip the second of Spain, succeeded in it next after Henry the Cardinal King (who only came upon the stage, that the Competitors might have time to declare their titles); and claimed the Crown as eldest Heir-male, and nearest Kinsman to King Henry; yet all the World was not well satisfied in the Justice and Equity of his Demands. In the carrying on of which Affairs, he seemed to deal very candidly to the eyes of men, not biased by their proper Interest: offering to submit his Title to a Disputation; professing, that the Laws of Portugal were more favourable to him, than the Law of Castile; and openly acknowledging that if he should chance to dye before the said Henry, his eldest Son, as being a degree further off, would come behind some others of the Pretendants to it, of whom himself had the precedence. But finding nothing done by Henry and meaning to make sure work after his decease, (Antonio the Bastard having got possession of Lisbon, and taking on himself as King, by a popular and tumultuous Election) he raised an Army under the command of Ferdinand de Toledo, Duke of Alva, and subdued all that stood against him; Katherine the Dutchess of Braganca, Daughter of Prince Edward, surrendering also all her interest and pretensions to him; so entering by a mixt title of Descent and Arms, anno 1580. Therefore years it was peaceably enjoyed by the King of Spain, when suddenly dispossessed by a potent Faction, appearing for John Duke of Braganca, defended from the youngest Son of King Emanuel, which wrought so cunningly and successfully in his behalf, (by the great wit and under-hand practices of Cardinal Richelieu, and others, Ministers of the French) that the King of Spain was sooner disfizd of Portugal, than he heard of any plot or practice set on foot against him, anno 1636. In which it is to be observed, that as King Philip the second, for the better obtaining of this Crown had embroiled the French, engaging, that King in a bloody War against the Protestants of that Kingdom; to make him sure enough from troubling him in his present Enterprize: so the French Ministers had caused a revolt in Catalogne; to the end, that when the King of Spain was busied in reducing that Province, the Portugals might have opportunity to redeem themselves from the power of the Spaniards; whom the Antipathy betwixt the Nations made less pleasant to them. Nor was it a partial defection only, or the loss of Portugal, and no more: but a general falling off of the whole Estate in Africk, Asia, America, in the Isles and Continents: the Acceffories (excepting only the Town of Ceuta in Barbary, and some of the Tercera's) going the same way as the Principal did. And here methinks that grave and deliberate Nation of the Spaniards may be justly taxed for committing a greater Solacism in point of State, than ever people did before them; in that, having got the full and peaceable possession of the Crown of Portugal and all the out-parts and Members of it; they continued all the Garrisons and strong Holds of the whole Estate, in the hands of the Natives. By means whereof, when Portugal itself fell off from the King of Spain, the Provinces and Plantations did the like, without any hesitancy, which, had some of the chief Pieces in every Province, Factory, and Plantation, been brought by little and little (if not all at once) into the power of the Castilians; might have been easily prevented. Nor hath the Spaniards hitherto attempted any thing material, for the recovery of that Kingdom: having been ever since too over-laid by the French in Catalogne, Nauarre, Biscay, Flanders, Arroy, and Italy; that he hath not had much leisure to attend that business. But leaving him and them to their own affairs, it is time to present you with a Catalogue of

The Kings of Portugal.

A. Ch.

- 1139 1. Alfonso, the second Earl, and first King of Portugal. 45.
1184 2. Sancho, the Son of Alfonso. 28.
1212 3. Alfonso II. Son of Sancho. 11.
1223 4. Sancho II. Son of Alfonso the 2d. 34.
1257 5. Alfonso III. Brother of Sancho the 2d. 22.
1279 6. Dennis the Son of Alfonso the 3d. 48.
1327 7. Alfonso IV. the Son of Dennis. 32.
1359 8. Pedro, the Son of Alfonso the 4th. 10.
1369 9. Ferdinand, the Son of Pedro, the last King of the lawful Issue of Henry of Lorraine. 18.
1387 10. John the base Son of Pedro, of whom sufficiently before. 48.
1435 11. Edward the Son of John, and of the Lady Philipp of Lancaster. 5.
1440 12. Alfonso V. the Son of Edward. 43.
1483 13. John II. the Son of Alfonso the 5th. 14.
1497 14. Emanuel, the Nephew of Edward, by his Son Ferdinand, Duke of Viseo. 26.
1523 15. John III. Son of Emanuel. 38.
1561 16. Sebastian, the Nephew of John the 3d. by his Son Dou John; unfortunately slain in the Fields of Alcazar. 21.
1582 17. Henry the Cardinal, Son of King Emanuel, the last of the Male-Issue of Henry of Lorraine. 2.
1584 18. Philip the second of Spain, Son of Charles King of Castile, and Emperor, and of the Lady Mary his Wife, Daughter of Emanuel. 18.

- 1598 19. Philip II. of Portugal, and III. of Spain.
1621 20. Philip III. of Portugal, and IV. of Spain.
During his Reign, the Portuguese weary of the Spanish Government, chose for their King.
1636 21. John D. of Braganca, the IV. of that Name: a Prince of great possessions, and of Royal Race, who hitherto hath peaceably enjoyed it.

Now that ye may the better see by what title both the Kings of Spain, and the Dukes of Braganca, claim the Crown of Portugal; and what other pretenders there weretoit, on the death of Sebastian; and what right as well Antonio the Bastard, (but alleging a sentence of Legitimation) as the Princes of the house of Savoy, did pretend unto it; we will lay down their Genealogies from King Emanuel, in this following Scheme.

Emanuel had these Children; { John, King of Portugal. } { John, Prince of Portugal. } { Sebastian King of Portugal. }
2. Lewis. } { Don Antonio. } { Christopher, and others. }
3. Henry the Cardinal, King of Portugal.
4. Edward. } { Mary, wedded to Almeida. } { Raimundo }
5. Mary, married to Charles. } { Kath married to John D. of Braganca. } { Earnest }
6. Beatrice, married to Charles Duke of Savoy.

By this it may appear how the Claims are grounded: but whether Title will prevail, cannot now be told. Suffice it, that as the Royal Line of Portugal did begin in an Henry, so it ended in an Henry also; the Male-Line failing in the person of the Cardinal King, and the Crown falling (on whomsoever it shall fall) on the Heirs of the Females.

The Principal Orders of Knighthood in this Kingdom, are 1. Of Aviz, so called from a Town of that name in Portugal, the Seat thereof: Founded by Sancho or Sancho the first, in imitation of the Order of Alcantara, whose Green Cross they wear: but equal to it neither in Power nor Riches.

2. Of CHRIST; instituted by Dennis King of Portugal, who conferred on them all the Lands and Possessions of the excommunicated Templers, confirmed by Pope John the twenty second, anno, 1231. Their Robe is a Black Cassock, under a White Surcoat; over which, a Red Cross, broaked in the midst with a white Line: their Duty, to expel the Moor out of Baiea, the next Neighbour to Portugal. To which Crown, they have added many gallant Countries in Asia, Africk, and Brazil; and so improved their own Estates, that all the Isles in the Atlantic do belong to them: besides, the Rents of the Mine of St. George, in Guinea, amounting to 100000 Ducats of yearly income.

The Arms are Argent, on five Escutcheons Azure, as many Bezants in Saltire of the first, pointed Sable, within a Border of Or, charged with seven Towers. Or. Which five Escutcheons were born in memory of five Kings, whom Alfonso, the first King, slew at the battel of Ovique, anno 1139; the Border, with the Towers or Castles, being added by Alfonso the third, on his Inveiture into the Kingdom of Algarve, by Alfonso the fifth of Castile, anno 1257, whose Daughter Beatrix he then married.

and so conceived himself to have some relation to the Arms of that Kingdom. And to proceed we on to those Provinces which are under the Government of Arragon: the third great Body of this State.

12. VALENTIA.

VALENTIA hath on the East the Mediterranean; on the West, part of Castile, and Arragon; on the North Catalogne; and Murcia upon the South. It is watered with the Rivers, 1. Xucar, called old Sucrum, and Suvru. 2. Guadalquivir, signifying a River of pure water: and 3. Millar.

This Country standeth in the most temperate, and pleasing Air of all Spain, full of Gardens and places of wonderful delight, where growth abundance of Rice, Sugar, Corn, and Fruit: garnished all the year long with sweet smelling Flowers, and miraculously fruitful of Pomgranates, Limons, and other delicacies. It hath also Mines of Silver, at Burios; of Gold, at Laudor; of Iron, at Finihrat; of Alabaster, at Piacem, and of Allom, Lime, and Plaster in many places. From thence also come the best Silks in the World, Cotton of Murcia, Crimson, Scarlet, and other precious Colours, and rich Perfumes. Finally, all the Senses of man may be delighted and refreshed with that which comes from this happy Region; in quality, and sweetness, much like that of Naples. The delicacy and great pleasures whereof, have made the Inhabitants of it to be thought less Warlike Than the other Spaniards. The Sheep of this Country also bear the finest Fleeces of any in Spain: first stocked with Cornwall Sheep from England, at the request of John King of Arragon, Anno 1465, by the imprudent courtier of King Edward the Fourth.

Places of most note in it are, 1. Alicante, a noted Port on the Mediterranean, whence come our true Alicant-Wines, made of their Juice of Mulberries; by Ptolomy called Illicita; By Mela, Rice: from whence the Bay adjoining is called Sinu Illicitanus, on the River Segura, came. 2. Oribuela, a Bishops-See on the River Segura, which divides the Province from Murcia. 3. Segorve, a Bishops-See, by Ptolomy named Segobriga, the chief City, in old times, of the Celbiberi. 4. Xelus, supposed to be the Inchibis of Livy, where Scipio defeated Hanno and his Carthaginians. 5. Valencia, a fair, pleasant, and well-traded City, the See of an Arch-bishop, and given name to the whole Province: in its first glory, one of the chief Roman Colonies in these parts of Spain: mislaid, the Royal Seat of the Moorish Kings of this Country. Situate three miles from the Mediterranean, not far from the mouth of the River Durius, now called Guadalquivir: and is by some said to have been heretofore named Rema, which signifyeth strength. But when the Romans mastered it, to distinguish it from their Rome, it was called Valentia, which in the Latin Tongue, is of the same signification with the Greek Βαλάντιον. Here is an University in which Saint Pominick, the Father of the Dominicans, studied. 6. Laurigi, now a small Village: once a Town of great strength, called Lauron: which Scetarius besieged, took, and burned, even then when Pompey, whole Confederates the Lauronites were, stood with his whole Army high enough unto the Flame, to warn his hands; and yet durst not succour it. It was formerly named Sueron, after the name of the River: and is famous in Plutarch, for the victory which Scetarius here got of Pompey; Pompey's Army being not only overthrown, but himself, with life, hardly escaping. 8. Moscedes, situate in or near the place of the old Saguntum: the People whereof, when besieged by Annibal, continued so obdurate in the expectation of aid from Rome, that they chose rather to burn themselves, than yield up the Town: the occasion of the second War between Rome and Carthage. First founded by the Zacynthians, and after this destruction of it, repaired, or re-edified, by the Romans, (they could not possibly do less) by whom made a Colony. 9. Gandia, which gives the Title of a Duke to the House of Borgia, and was the style of Francisco Borgia, the eldest Son of Pope Alexander the sixth, (of this noble Family) called commonly in Guicciardine, by the name of the Duke of Gandy. 10. Denia, seated on the brink of the Mediterranean, over which it hath a goodly prospect; the Marquisate of the Duke of Lerna: first founded by the Majestians, by whom called Dianium. Not far from which, is the Promontory of Ferraria, of old called Promontorium Dianium; the Refuge of Scetarius in his Wars against Pompey, and Metellus, both of great renown: the one aged, and of much experience; the other young, and of high resolutions. And yet Scetarius found himself more troubled with the old man's Gravity, than the young man's Gallantry: inasmuch as he was used to say, That bad it not been for the old Woman Metellus, he would have whipped the Boy Pompey home with Rods. For he had twice overcome this Great Pompey, before Metellus was joyined in the Action with him: the first time dangerously wounding, and the second time driving him out of the Field. But fighting against both, he was overmatched; and yet seemed rather to retire, than fly before them; the Spaniards behaving themselves very valiantly, in the time of these Wars, under him: to which Florus alludeth, saying, Nec unquam magis apparuit Hispani militis Vigor, quam Romano duci. At the last, when he had a long time upheld the Marian Faction, he was traitorously murdered by Peppeus, one of his Associates: for which, Metellus and Pompey had a Vindicta at Rome. So high an climax did they set upon the cald death of this Proscript.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof, were the Bastetani, the Edetani, the Comestani, and some part of the Celbiberi; originally of the Province of Tarracensis; afterwards (in the sub-dividing of that Province by Caesarian) of Carthaginensis. In the declining of the Empire, first subdued by the Moor, who were scarce war in their new dwelling, when displaced by the Goths. From the Goths taken by the Moor, of whose Kingdom reckoned as a Province, till the fatal overthrow given to Mahomet Enser, at the battle of Sierra Morena; and the departure of the Moor of Morocco, to their own Country; which followed presently upon it. By Zet Ahen-Zet, the Brother of this Mahomet, made a distinct Kingdom of it self, Anno 1214: but taken from him by our Zaen, a Prince of the Moor of Spain, under colour that he had a purpose of turning Christian, and making his Kingdom subject to the Crown of Arragon, (as indeed he did) Anno 1228, Conquered from Zaen the new King, before he could enjoy the sweets of a new raised Kingdom, by James King of Arragon, Anno 1238. Since reckoned a Member of that Kingdom, never dismembered from the body of it, since the first uniting. But still so overgrown with Moor, (not to be blamed for loving such an excellent seat) that at the final expulsion of that people by King Philip the third, there were reckoned no fewer than 20000 Families of them in this little Country.

The Arms hereof were Gules, a Tower embattled Argent purled (or pennon'd) Sable.

13. CATALONIA.

CATALONIA is bounded on the North-east, with the Land of Rouffillon, and the Pyrenies; on the East, with the Mediterranean, on the South, with Valencia; on the North, and North-west with Arragon. The Country somewhat mountainous, and full of Woods, and not very well cultivated: begotten more, in that respect, for Corn, Fruits, and other necessary Provisions, unto the courtie of the Sea, which serves them out of other Countries, than to the Goodness of the Land. And it is as well watered, as most parts of Spain; having in it, besides the Ebro, or Iberus, common to many other Provinces; and Cova, which runneth betwixt it and Valencia; the Rivers of, 1. Tardera, 2. Lobregat, 3. Segre, 4. Franelon, 5. Besone, and 6. Onbar.

The name of Catalonia, some derive from the Castellani, who formerly inhabited some part hereof: others will have it called Catalonia, corruptly, for Guthalania, from the mixture of the Goths and Alani, successively the Masters of it: and some, more improbably, from one Carthala, a Noble-man of this Country, who lived here they know not when. More like it is, that it took this name from the Catalani, an old French People of Languedoc, the adjoining Province, from whom the fields called Campi Catalaunici, near unto Tholose, took denomination. But from what root soever they came, certain it is, that they are generally a stout courageous people, as may be seen by their exploits in most parts of Greece, which they miserably spoiled and pillaged many years together, in the time of Andronicus the second; to whose aid called in. But then withal, they are a very perverse and obdurate people little observant of the pleasure or profit of their natural Princes: but on the other side, so zealous in defence of their own Privileges, that they have created more trouble to their Kings, under that pretence, than all the rest of the Subjects of Spain. Of which we need no other instance, than their late revolt unto the French, anno 1638. which drew after it the loss of the Realm of Portugal, and many Towns of great importance in Flanders, and the rest of the Netherlands.

Principal places in it are, 1. Barcelone, situate on the Mediterranean, near the River Lobregat; accommodated with a large and commodious Port, where commonly the Spanish Soldiers do embark, which are bound for Italy. The Town adorned with large streets, handom buildings, strong walls, and a very pleasant situation. Called Barcino by the ancient Writers, in whose time it was a Roman Colony, now honoured with a Bishops-See, and the Seat of the Vice-Roy. 2. Tarragon, seated also on the Mediterranean, East of the River Franelon: built, fortified, and peopled by the two Scipios, the Father and Uncle of Africanus, for a Counter-Port to Carthage (or New Carthage) not long before founded by the Carthaginians. Afterwards made the Metropolis of Tarracensis, hence denominated: but stripe of that honour by Toledo, and is now but two miles in compass, and containing not above seven hundred Families. Yet still it holdeth the reputation of an Arch-bishops-See, contending with Toledo, for the Primacy of all Spain (as Braga also doth in the Kingdom of Portugal;) the controversy being undecided to this very day. 3. Ampurias, on the same Sea also: once of great esteem, founded by the Massilians, a Roman Colony, and a well-traded Town, as the Name doth signify:

this being the Emporia, spoken of by Strabo and Ptolemy; now not observable for any thing, but a safe Road for Ships. 4. Blanes, 5. Palma, and 6. Rosus, all Ports on the same Sea, but subject unto divers Winds, and not very spacious, this last by Ptolomy called Rhoda, first founded by the Rhodiens, or people of the Isle of Rhodes, and by them so named. More in the Land, are 7. Girona, a small, but handomly built, and a well-traded Town; a Bishops-See, and the Title of the eldest Son of Arragon, called Prince of Girona. Which Title was first given to John, the eldest Son of King Pedro the fourth, immediately upon his Birth, anno 1351; and hath since continued. 8. Tortosa, on the River Ebro, in the most rich and pleasant part of all the Country: recovered from the Moor, by Raymond the fifth, Earl of Bavellone, and Prince of Arragon, about the year 1146. The principal Agent in that work, William Raymond of Moncada, Seneschal of Catalogne; rewarded for his good service in it, with a third part of the City. A goodly Town, and of good importance; garrisoned by the French, since the late revolt of Catalonia from the King of Spain; and like to draw a great part of this Province after it, will it continue in their power, or in the possession of their party. 9. Urgel, an Earl's Honour, and a Bishops-See, situate at the foot of the Pyrenies. 10. Montblanc, which heretofore gave the Title of Duke to the second Sons of the Kings of Arragon. 11. Moncada, once a Town of strength; but of more note for giving denomination to the Noble Family of Moncada, Hereditary Seneschals of Catalogne, and Lords of Bearn. Here is also on the East part, where it joyneth with the Land of Rouffillon, the Promontory called of old, Templum Veneris, now Cabo de Greus. And not far from Barcelone, the Mountain called Montserrat, on the sides full of Hermitages and Anchorets Cells; and having towards the summit of it, a Chappel dedicated to the Virgin Mary: much famed and resorted to by Pilgrims from all parts of the World, for her miraculous Image, which is there enshrined.

The old Inhabitants of this Province, were the Castellani, Ancusani, Indigites, Castiani, with part of the Ilerones, and Iaculani; all of them part of Tarracensis. In the declining of the Empire, seized on by the Alani; and they soon after vanquished, if not disposed, by the power of the Goths. Lost to the Moor, in the general ruine of the whole: from them recovered by the puissance of Charles the Great; who having taken the City of Barcelone, anno 801. gave it to one Bernard a French-man, with the Title of Earl, who governed the Country for that Emperor; as Wilfredus, or Godfredus, his Successor, did for Lewis the Godly. Godfredus, Son to this Godfred, by the gift of Charles the Great, was the first Proprietary; united unto Arragon by the Marriage of Alfred Raymond, with the Heir of that Kingdom. First held in Vassalage of the French, but that acknowledgment related to King James the first, anno 1260. by the King St. Lewis; the King of Arragon releasing, at the same time, his pretensions and rights of Sovereignty to Carcassons, Béziers, Albi, Nîmes, and some other pieces in France, of old belonging to that Crown. But before that, the Catalani had not given the acknowledgment of their subjection to that Crown; it being ordered by Alphonso the second King of Arragon, about the year 1180, That the year of the reigns of the Kings of France, should no more be used in any Instrument or Writings which concerned that People; but the year only of the Incarnation of our Lord and Saviour: which, in effect, was to disclaim the Sovereignty of the Crown of France.

The

The Earls of Barcelona.

- A. Chr.
884 1 Godfredus, surnamed the Hairy, Son of Wilfrido, the Provincial Governour for the Emperor Ludovicus Pius.
914 2 Miron, Son of Godfredus.
933 3 Godfredus 2. Son of Miron, by some called Sinsiofrid.
971 4 Borellus, Brother of Miron, and Uncle of Godfredus the second.
993 5 Raymond, Son of Borellus.
1017 6 Berengarius, surnamed Borellus; Son of Raymond.
1035 7 Raymond 2. Son of Berengarius Borellus.
1076 8 Raymond 3. Son of Raymond the second.
1082 9 Raymond 4. Son of Raymond the third, Earl of Provence also in right of Douce his Wife.
1131 10 Raymond 5. Son of Raymond the fourth, and Douce Countess of Provence, married Petronilla. Daughter of Raynir, or Raymond, the second King of Arragon; whom he succeeded in that Kingdom, anno 1134. Uniting these Estates together, never since disjoined: the chief Procurer of this Match, being William Raymond of Moncada, spoken of before.

The Arms hereof, were four Pallets Gules, in a field Or, now the Arms of Arragon. Which Arms were given to Geoffry, surnamed the Hairy, the first Earl hereof, by Lewis the Stammering, Emperor and King of France, to whose aid he came against the Normans with a Troop of Horfe; and being bloody in the fight, desired of the Emperor to give him some Coat of Arms, which he and his Posterity might from thenceforth use. Who drew dipping his four fingers in the blood of the Earl, drew them thwart his Shield, (which was only of Plain Gold, without any Device) saying, This shall be your Arms hereafter.

14. The Kingdom of Majorca.

THE Kingdom of MAJORCA, contained the Islands of Majorca, Minorca, Eubusia, and Frumentaria, in the Mediterranean; the Land of Roussillon, Sardaigne, or Cerdaigne in the Continent of Spain; and the Earldom of Montpellier in France.

The Land of ROUSSILLON, which is the first Member of this Kingdom, is situate betwixt two Branches of the Pyrenees; bounded on the south, with the Mediterranean; on the West, with Catalogue; on the North, with the said Pyrenees; on the East, with Languedoc in France. Places of most importance in it, are 1. Helna, a Bishops-See on the River Tech. 2. Colibrie, now a poor and ignoble Village, of note only for a safe and commodious Harbour; but formerly the great and famous City of Illiberis, so often mentioned in the Wars betwixt Rome and Carthage. 3. Perpignan, (in Latin, Perpinianum) built in the year 1008, by Guinau, Earl of Roussillon, in a pleasant Plain on the River Thelut, now a rich Town, well traded, and as strongly fortified against the French; to whose fury in the time of War, it is still exposed. Besieged by Henry, Son to King Francis the first, with a pu-issant Army, an. 1542. partly to be revenged upon Charles the fifth, who had before attempted Assaults in Provence; and partly to get into his hands the chief door of Spain, by which he might at all times enter into that kingdom. But he found here such strong resistance, that he was fain to raise his Siege, with as little honour as Charles had gotten by his Expedition which he made into Provence. 4. Salsus, (the Salsula of Strabo) a strong place on the Frontier of Languedoc; fortified according to the Rules of modern Fortification, and one of the chief Bulwarks against the French. 5. Roussillon, a Castle of more honour and antiquity, than strength or beauty; by Pliny, and other Ancients, called Ruscino, the Country Comitatus Ruscianensis, now Roussillon and the Land of Roussillon; accounted heretofore a part of Gallia Narbonensis; and added unto Spain in the time of the Goths. On the death of Gerrard, the last Proprietary Earl, it was added to the Crown of Arragon, by Alphonsus the second; by James the first, laid to the Kingdom of Majorca; united to the Crown again by King Pedro the fourth. After that, sold (or rather pawned) by King John the second, to Lewis the 11. of France, for the Sum of 300000 Crowns, anno 1462, and freely returned back again to Ferdinand the second, (after called the Catholic) by King Charles the 8. anno 1493; conditioned that he should not hinder him in the Conquest of Naples. Joining hereto, as a part of the Kingdom of Majorca, was the Country of Sardaigne, or Cerdaigne, the habitation of the Ceretani in former times, and afterwards accounted of as a part of Arragon. The chief Town of those Ceretani called Julia Lybica, the principal now being hath the name of Cerdano (or Sardano, as the Spaniards commonly pronounce) retaining some resemblance to the name of the Nation. The Country lying in the Vallies of the Pyrenees, and consequently in a corner somewhat out of the way, was thought fit to be added to the Land of Roussillon, (for the better endowment of this Kingdom;) the Fortunes of which, it hath since followed, as appendant on it: pawned when that was unto the French, and with that restored.

2. The Earldom of MONTPELIER, is situate in the Province of Languedoc, adjoining to the Land of Roussillon: so called from Montpellier, the chief City: for the description whereof we must send the Reader back to France, having spoken of it there already. All I shall here repeat, is this, That Mary, the Daughter of William the last Earl thereof, brought it by Marriage, to her Husbands Peter the second King of Arragon: and that it was sold to Philip de Valois, the French King, by James King of Majorca, of that name the third. Nothing else memorable in the story and affairs of this little Earldom, but the Fortunes of the two last Countesses of it. Of which the first being Daughter of Emanuel Commenus, Emperor of Constantinople, and affianced to Alphonsus the 2. King of Arragon, was brought as far as Montpellier, in her way towards Spain, and there lodged with her whole retinue, in the house of William, then Earl thereof, anno 1174. But hearing that Alphonsus, contrary to his word and promise, was in treaty of another Marriage with the Princess Sancha of Castile (which he celebrated very shortly after) and ashamed to return to the Court of her Father, after such an injury; she hearkened to the counsel of other Lords and followers, who persuaded her to marry with Earl William, then a lusty Bachelor: which was done accordingly. To him she brought a Daughter, named Mary, (their only child) afterwards married to Don Pedro the 2. Son of Alphonsus, and successor to him in that Kingdom: so that although the Mother could not have the happiness to be Queen of Arragon; yet the Daughter had. But being of no great beauty, the King her Husband grew weary of her, would have been divorced, had the Pope consented: whose consent not being to be had, he forsook her Bed, and betook himself to other Women. Which the Queen not being otherwise able to remedy, prevailed with one of the Grooms of his Chamber, called Pedro Flaviano, to bring her one night unto his Bed, (when some other Mistris was expected) and by him did conceive that night, as it after proved: the King perceiving the deceit on the morrow morning, was neither well pleased, nor much offended at the honest fraud they had put upon him. Of this conjunction was born a Son at Montpellier, whom they named James, Successor to his Father in the Kingdom of Arragon; and to his Mother (the last Countess of it) in the Earldom of Montpellier; united, in his person, into one Estate; and by him finally joined in it, in the erection of the new Kingdom of Majorca, as before was said.

3. The Island of MAJORCA is situate in the Mediterranean, just over against Valencia; from which distant about 60 miles; about 300 miles in circuit, the length above an hundred, the breadth somewhat under; the number of Inhabitants reckoned at 30000. The Land, on all sides, towards the Sea, is somewhat mountainous, and barren withal: the Inlands more Champian and fruitfully yielding sufficient quantity of Oyl, Corn, Wines, and Fruits, for the use of its people. The whole Island is divided into 30 parts (as so many Wapentakes) in every one of which are reckoned from 300 to 600 Families. No hurtful Creatures are here bred, except Conies only; and those not hurtful, but by accident: of which more anon.

Places of chief note, in the former times, were 1. Palma, and 2. Pollentia, which had the rights of Roman Citizens. 3. Ciutiva, and 4. Canic, which enjoyed the rights of the Latins: and 5. Cohri, (or Bachorum) which was in the condition of a Town confederate; besides divers others not so privileged. Of these none left, at this day, but Palma only, vulgarly called Majorca, by the name of the Island: a Bishops See, the Seat of the Viceroy for these Isles, and an University; the birth-place of Raymondus Lullius, a man of great Wit, and profound Judgment: the Author of some Books in the Art of Chymistry whose Works are read and studied in that University, as Aristotle's are in others. This is the greater of the two Islands called Baleares, whence it hath the name. Adjoining herunto, two others of inferior note, called Dragonera and Cabrera; of which nothing memorable.

4. MINORCA, so called, because it is the lesser of the Baleares; is situate Eastward of Majorca, from which distant near 100 miles, of about 60 miles in length, and 150 in circuit. More fruitful than the other, though less in quantity, of rich soil, which breedeth them great Herds of Cattel, and Mules of the largest size of any in Spain; accommodated also with two convenient Havens, the one called Maon, the other Fernessus. Other considerable places, are, 1. Minorca, now so called by the name of the Island; but anciently known by the name of Mago: situate in the East part thereof, first founded by the Carthaginians, as the name imports. And so was also 2. Janno, seated in the West, (Duo parva Oppida, quibus à Pœnis indita nomina, fuisse Sævus Bishop of these Isles, anno 1200, or thereabouts.) It is now called Cadadella, or the little City. Here was also in the mid-land, a third Town, called Sanfseraby Pliny; of which I find no track remaining.

5. EBUSA, now called TIFICA, lyeth between the main Land, and the Baleares, opposite to the Promontory of Ferraria, in the Realm of Valencia; from which distant about 50 miles, and near an hundred miles in compass, The Country plentiful of Corn, and all manner of Fruits, breeding no hurtful Creature, except Conies only which many times destroy their Harvest. The chief Town here, Tiçica of (old called Ebusus, the Inhabitants of which make yearly great store of Salt; wherewith they do not only furnish Spain, but some parts of Italy.

6. FRUMENTARIA, so called from the plenty of Corn, is distant ten miles from Tifca, and about 60 miles from the main Land of Spain: in circuit about 70 miles. Not well inhabited, by reason of the multitude of Serpents; from which called by the Græcians Ophiasis, and Calabraria, by the Latins. Both Islands anciently known by the name of Tiçise, and Pitipodes, from the abundance of Pines there growing.

About these Islands are six others of little worth, called 1. Veles, 2. Canivello, and 3. Dragonago. 4. another called Manolibre, betwixt Majorca, and the Influx of the River Iberus. 5. Afaguer, lying in the very Mouth of that River: and 6. Scombraria, (anciently called the Island of Hercules) over against Cartagena; so named from a kind of Tunny, in Latin named Scombris, of which great shoals use to ly about it. All these, together with the Baleares, make up the Province of the Islands, the seventh Province of Spain.

But the chief glory of these Islands, were the BALÆARES, so called (as the general conceit is) from the Greek word Balæon, which signifyeth to throw; because the people were so expert in throwing their Slings or Darts: but, as Bachartus will needs have it, (to the same effect,) from Baal-ivra, a Phœnician word signifying a Master in the Art of slinging. An Art so natural and innative to them, that Parents used to give no meat unto their Children, after some set age, but what they could hit down with their Slings from the top of a Beam. Of their dexterity in this weapon, there is much mention made in the ancient Writers, as well Historians, as Poets. And from this Exercise they had the name also of Infula Gymnasia; or else, because the people of it used to go naked to the VVars, (and possibly enough, in those first Ages of the world, as at other times also from the Greek word Tyaris, the fame with the Nidus to the Latin. Nor were they good at slinging only, but at swimming too; an exercise not ordinarily performed, but by naked people: at which the very women are at this day expert; Biddulph reporting, in the relation of his travels, that being becalmed about these Islands, there came a woman swimming from one of them with a Basket of Fruit to sell. But that which made them most talked of in former times, was their harm done them by their Conies; which here, and the neighbouring Continent, encreased so wonderfully, that Varro telleth us of a Town in Spain, undermined by them: and Strabo, that they did not only destroy their Plants, but rooted up many of their Trees. In so much that the Inhabitants did request the Romans to give them some new seats to inhabit in; ἐκδιδάλαξεν δὲ τὸν πόλιν (ἀνὰ τὸν ὄρειον), being ejected by those Creatures out of their Possessions, whose multitudes they were not able to resist. And when that could not be obtained, they moved Augustus Cæsar (as Pliny telleth us) for some aid against them; who, instead of Soldiers, sent them Ferrets, by which their numbers were diminished in a little time.

These Islands were first planted by the Tyrians, or Phœnicians, the founders of many of their Cities: one of which, in the Isle of Ebusus, had the name of Phœnissia: From them also they derived the Art of Slinging. Made subject to the Carthaginians, under the conduct of Hanno and Hamiles, anno M. 3000, or thereabouts, at what time the Decemviri governed Rome. Under that State they remained subject, till the end of the second Punic War: when Carthage was no longer able to protect them, made a State of themselves, till conquered by Metellus, the Brother of him who subdued Crete. The people were much given to Piracy: and seeing The Roman Navy sailing by their Coasts, supped them to be Merchant-men: assaulted them, and at first prevailed. But the Romans getting betwixt them and the Shore, discovered from whence they came, and forced them to an unwilling submission: for which Metellus them to an unwilling honour of a Triumph. Being rewarded with a Province of Spain, they always, after that, followed the Fortunes thereof. In the distraction of the Empire of the Moors in Spain, they were united into one Kingdom, by the name of the Kingdom of Majoreca: won from the Moors by Raymund Earl of Barcelona, with the help of the Genoese, anno 1102. By the Genoese delivered to the Moors again; and from them reconquered by James King of Arragon, descended from that Raymund, anno 1228.

Of these Estates consisted the Kingdom of Majoreca, erected by James the first, immediately (almost) on his recovery of these Islands, from the hands of the Moors; and by him given unto James his second Son, who, fearing the displeasure of his Brother, King Peter the third, submitted his new Kingdom to the Vassalage of the Crown of Arragon. Yet could not this satisfy the ambition or jealousies of those mightier Kings, as to preserve his Successors in possession of it. By Pedro the 4. extorted from King James, the fourth and last King thereof, under colour of denying his accustomed Homage. So ended

The Kings of Majoreca, of the House of Arragon.

An. Chr.

- 1276 1. James the first, Son to James the first, King of Arragon.
 1412 2. Sancho, Son of James the first.
 3. James the II. Son of Ferdinand, the Brother of James the Second.
 4. James III. Son of Ferdinand, overcome and slain in Battle by Pedro 4. King of Arragon. Majoreca, and other members of this little Kingdom, remaining ever since united unto that Crown; except Montpelier, sold by this James unto the French, in hope that by their aid, he might be enabled to recover his Kingdom. But being aided by them, and attempting the recovery of it, he was defeated and slain in the Isle of Majoreca, an. 1341, as before is said.

The Forces of this little Kingdom may be best estimated by the Army which the Moors brought into the field against James the first, for defence of the Island of Majoreca, consisting of 50000 Horse: but better, by the Army of James the last King hereof, in defence of his Estates against Pedro the 4. (for the Moors might possibly be aided by the rest of their Nation) consisting of 3000 Horse, and 15000 Foot, of his natural Subjects.

15. A R R A G O N.

ARRAGON, hath on the East, the Land of Rouffillon, and the Pyrenees; on the West, the two Castiles; on the North, Navarre; on the South and South-east; Catalonia, and some part of Valencia.

So called from the River Arragon, by which it is divided from the Realm of Navarre; where the first Princes of this House having won certain Towns from the hands of the Infidels, commanded as Lords Marchers, under the Kings of that Realm: and called themselves, for that reason, the Earls of Arragon: spreading the name, as they enlarged their bounds, by ensuing Conquests: as, in like manner, the great Earldom of Mojelle, founded by the diffident Sons of Cloidon, second King of the French, was named from that River; upon the course whereof, and the parts adjoining, it was first erected.

The Country lyeth on both sides of the River Iberus, and hath also several Riverlets, as Gallega, Senga, Xalon, and Cagedo, running like so many Veins through the body of it; yet it is generally so destitute of Waters, and so ill inhabited, especially towards the Mountains of the Pyrenees; that one may travel many days, and find neither Town, nor House, nor People. But where the Rivers have their course, the case is different, the Valleys yielding plenty both of Corn and Fruits, especially about Calatayud, where the Air is good, and the Soil fruitful.

The ancient Inhabitants were the Celiberi, who took up a great part of Tarracensis: divided into lesser Tribes not here considerable. These sprung originally from the Celtes, (as before is said) the greatest and most potent Nation of all Gallia: who being too populous for their Country, or willing to employ themselves upon new Adventures, passed the Pyrenees, and mingled themselves with the Iberi. From thence the name of the Celiberi, and Celiberi, according to this of Lucan:

—Profligant a gente vetusta Gallorum, Celtes miscentes nomen Iberi.

Who being chas'd from Qaul, thence home did flame;
Of Celte and Iberi mixt, one name.

Others of less consideration, were the Jacetani, and Lucetani, with part of the Edetani, and Ilergetes.

Places of most importance in it, are, 1. Jacca, the chief City heretofore of the Jacetani, seated amongst the Pyrenees; and for that cause chosen for the chief seat and residence of the first Kings of Arragon: continued there till the taking of Saragossa, by Alfonso the first. 2. Calatayud, seated on Xalon, in the best Country of Arragon: so called from Aud a Moors Prince, the first founder of it. Not far from which, upon an Hill, stood the old Town Bibilis a Municipium of the Romans, and the birth-place of Marial. 3. Venafque amongst the Pyrenees. 4. Balbastro, on the Senga, formerly called Burtina, now a Bishops-See. 5. Lerida, on the River Segre, as some say; but others place it on the Senga: which rising in the Pyrenees, divideth Catalonia from Arragon, and so passeth into Iberus: now an University; called formerly Ilerda, and famous for the Encounter, happening night unto it, betwixt Herculeius, Treasurer or Quaestor to Sertorius; and Manilius Proconsul of Gallia: wherein Manilius was so disappointed, and his Army, consisting of three Legions of Foot; and 1500 Horse, so routed, that he almost alone, was scarce able to recover this City, few of his Soldiers surviving the overthrow. 6. Moson, famous for entertaining the King of Spain every third year: at which time the people of Arragon, Valencia, and Catalogne, present the King with 600000 Crowns, viz. 300000 for Catalogne 200000 for Arragon and 100000 for Valencia. And well may they thus do, for at other times they fit Rent-Free: as it were, only, they acknowledge the King of Spain to be the Head of their Commonwealth. This Revenue is proportionably, 200000 Crowns a year; all which, if not more, the King again expends, in maintaining his Vice-Roy in their several Provinces. 7. Huesca, (called of old, Hefca) somewhat South of Jacca, an University; a place long since dedicated to Learning. For hither Sertorius cauled all the Noble-mens Sons of Spain to be brought, and provided them of School-Masters for the Greek and Latin Tongues; bearing their Parents in hand, that he did it not only to make them fit to undergo Charge in the Commonwealth, but indeed to have them as Hostages for their Fathers Faith and Loyalty towards him. 8. Saragossa, called at first, Salduba, by reason of the Salt-pits there: but being afterwards redified by Cesar Augustus, it had the name of Cesarea Augusta, (whence that of Saragossa had its origination) by whom first made a Colony of the Romans, and afterwards a Municipium, or Free-Borough, suffered to live according to the Laws of the Country. Under the Romans, it was one of the seven Judicial Reforts of Tarracensis: under the Moors, a peculiar Kingdom of its self: and now a Bishops-See, and an University. Amongst the Kings of it, when it was a Kingdom, two are chiefly famous, viz. 1. Marfilus, who joined with the Confederate Moors and Christians, against Charles the Great, in the Battle of Rouvenoux. 2. Agilard, of whom there goeth a tale in Archbishop Impine; that being by the said Charles persuaded to become a Christian, he came unto the Emperor's Court very well accompanied, according to the time appointed. Where finding many Lazars, and poor people before the Gates, attending for their usual Alms from the Emperor's Table: he asked what and who they were; and was answered, that they were the poor Servants of God. Upon which words he speedily returned again, protesting, that he would never serve that God, who could keep his Servants no better. Took from the Moors, by Alphonso King of Arragon and Navarre, an. 1118. it was made the Seat-Royal of the Kings of Arragon; removed thence from Jacca: and of late times hath been the Seat of the Vice-Roy for the Kings of Spain. Which together with being an Archbishop's See, and an University, hath so enriched it, that it is one of the fairest Cities in all Spain, for handiwork of Streets, and sumptuousness of Palaces, and public Buildings, containing fifteen Parish-Churches, and fourteen Monasteries; besides divers Chappels erected in most parts of it to the Virgin Mary.

Who were the old Inhabitants of this Tract, hath been shewn heretofore, tolled from the Carthaginians unto the Romans; from them to the Goths; and finally, unto the Moors. Recovered from the Moors, about the first beginning of the Kingdoms of Leon and Sobrarbe. At which time, one Aznar, a man of great puissance and action, possessed himself of some Lands on the banks of the River Arragon, to be holden by him and his Successors, of the Kings of Sobrarbe or Navarre, An. 775. The Title of Earl being given unto him, and them, for their better honour. The sixth of which, from Aznar, was Fortunio Ximenes, whose Daughter Urraca being married to Don Garcia Inigo, King of Navarre, anno 867, conveyed this Earldom to that Crown: of which it continued a Member, till Sancho the Great, King of Navarre, end Earl of Arragon, erected it into a Kingdom, and gave it unto Raymir his natural Son, anno 1034. The whole Succession I shall borrow from the Spanish Histories; first taking (as in other places) some short notes of the Princes which have been most observable in the course of the Story. Of which the principal were, 1. Aznarius, the first Earl, his Estate then containing some few Towns on the River of Arragon: not much enlarged, when made a Kingdom by Sancho, King of Navarre, furnished the Great, descended from Fortunio the second of Navarre, and Urraca the Sister and Heir of Fortunio Ximenes, the last Earl of Arragon. 2. Raymir the first King, bafe Son to Sancho the Great, advanced to this honour to the prejudice of Garcia, eldest Son of Sancho, for handing so generally in defence of Donna Elvira, the Wife of his Father, wrongfully and unaturally accused of Adultery, by the said Garcia her own Son; against whom he undertook to maintain her Honour in a single Combat. 3. Raymond, Earl of Barcelona, who by marriage with Petronilla, the Heir of Arragon, united Catalonia unto that Kingdom. 4. Peter the second, who on a superstitious zeal, first made his Kingdom tributary to the See of Rome, anno 1214. But presently repenting of it, he sided against the Pope, with the Albigenses: slain in their cause, by Simon de Montfort, and the rest of his Associates, in that war. 5. James the first, who conquered the Kingdoms of Valencia and Majorca; and was the first that enlarged his Dominions upon the Seas: being shut up from making any further imprest on the Moors, by the interjection of Castile betwixt him and them. 6. Peter the third, succeeding a Title unto Sicilia, in right of Constance his Wife, the Daughter of Manfred, King thereof; and by the last Will of Corradine, rightful King both of that and Naples; extorted that Island from the French, massacred by him at the fatal Sicilian Vespers. 7. James the second, by whom the Isle of Sardinia was added to the Crown of Arragon. 8. Martin, the last of the Masculine Race of the House of Barcelona: to whom succeeded, 9. Ferdinand of Castile, Son of John King of Castile, and Lemora, the Daughter of Peter the fourth of Arragon, an. 10. Alphonso, Son of Ferdinand, adopted by Queen Joan the second, got the Kingdom of Naples. Of Ferdinand the second, furnished the Catholic, we shall speak more anon, in the close of all.

The Earls of Arragon.

- 1458 20 Ferdinand 2. of that name, of Arragon, Son of John the second, King of Arragon and Navarre, by a second Wife : and the fifth of that name, of Castile and Leon : which Kingdoms he obtained by the marriage of Isabel, Elizabeth, Sister and Heir of Henry the Fourth : uniting thereby the great Estates of Castile and Arragon, and all appendices of either. In which regard, he may well challenge the first place in the Catalogue of the Monarchs of Spain, to be presented in due season.

In the mean time, to draw to a conclusion of the Affairs and Estate of Arragon, we are to understand, that of all the Kingdoms which belong to the Spaniards, it is the most privileged, and free from the absolute Command of the Kings of Spain : having in it such a temper or mixture of Government, as makes the Kings hereto to be well nigh Tiulars, or of little more authority than a Duke of Venice. For at the first erecting of this Estate, the better to encourage the People to defend themselves against the Moor, they had many Privileges, indulged them ; and, amongst others, the creating of a Judicial, or Popular Magistrate ; which, like the Episopi of Sparta, had, in some cases, superiority over their Kings, reversing their Judgments, cancelling their Grants, and sometimes censuring their Proceedings. And though King Philip the second, in the business of Antonio de Perez, had made a Conquest of that Kingdom, and annulled all their Privileges, yet after, of his own meer goodness, he restored them (in part) again, as they continue at this day.

Chief Orders of Knight-hood (besides that of Mercede, spoken of before) in this Kingdom, are 1. Of S. Savion, instituted by Alphonso the first, anno 1118. to animate the members of it against the Moor. Of the habit and customs of this Order, I have met with nothing.

2. Of Montesa, instituted by James the first, King of Arragon, anno 1270, or thereabouts endowed with all the Lands of the Templers (before dissolved) lying in Valencia ; together with the Town and Castle of Montesa, made the Seat of their Order, whence it took the name. Subject at first unto the Master of the Order of Catalava, out of which extracted ; and under the same Rule of Cîteaux. But after, by the leave of Pope Benedict the 13th. they quitted themselves of that subjection ; and, in sign thereof, changed the Habit of Catalava, which before they used, to a Red Crois upon their Breasts ; now the Badge of their Order.

The Arms of Arragon, since possessed by the Earls of Barcelona, are Or, four Pallets Gules : before which, they were Azure, a Crois Argent.

The Monarchy of SPAIN.

Thus having spoke of Spain, and the Estate thereof, when broken and divided into many Kingdoms ; let us next look upon it as united into one main body ; effected, for the most part, by Ferdinand the last King of Arragon before-mentioned. Before which time, Spain, being parcelled into many Kingdoms, was little famous, and less feared : the Kings thereof, as the Author of the Politick Discourse, &c. hath well observed, being only Kings of Figs and Oranges. Their whole Puissance was then turned one against another, and small achievements had they out of that Continent, except those of the House of Arragon ; upon Sicily, Naples, Sardinia, and the Baleares. Toussaint, a diligent Writer of the History of his own Times, (in some things he favour not more of the Party, than the Historian) telleth us, that before this King's Reign, the name and glory of the Spaniards, was, like their Country, hemmed in by the Seas on some sides, and the Hills on the other : Potiusque paucis exteri invadentibus, quam quicquam memorabile extra suos fines gessisset. 'Tis true, that Sancho the Great, King of Navarre, assumed unto himself the title of King of Spain, and that Alphonso the fourth of Castile, and the ninth of Leon, caused himself to be crowned Emperor of Spain, in the Cathedral Church of Leon : Titles ambitiously affected upon no good ground, and such as ended with their Persons. But this Prince, worthily named, The Great, seized on the Kingdom of Navarre, conquered Granada from the Moor, subdued the Kingdom of Naples, united Arragon to Castile, banished 124000 Families of the Jews, began, by the conduct of Columbus, the discovery of the Western Indies ; and finally by marrying his Daughter Joan, to Philip, Son of the Emperor Maximilian, Duke of Burgundy, and Lord of the greatest part of the Netherlands, laid the Foundation of the present Austrian Greatness. Continued since by so many inter-marriages betwixt the Spanish and Imperial Branches of that potent Family, that Philip the second might have called the Arch-Duke Albertus, Brother, Cousin, Nephew, and Son. A strange Medley of Relations. Thus by the puissance of this Prince, the Spaniards became first considerable in the eye of the World, and grew to be a terror to the Neighbouring Nations. Nomen Hispanicum obscurum antea & vicinis penè incognitum, (saith the same Toussaint) tum primum crevit, & aliusq; temporis in tantam magnitudinem excrevit, ut formidolosum ex eo & terribile totum terrarum Orbem effe cepit. And he saith true, with reference to the French and Italian Nations ; to whom the Spaniards have administered no small matter of fear and terror : though unto others, they appear no such dreadful Big beasts. But sure it is, and we may warrantably speak it without any such impressions of fear and terror, that this Kingdom, since that time, is wonderfully both enlarged and strengthened : strongly compacted in it self, with all the Ligaments both of Power and State, and infinitely extended over all parts of the World ; his Dominions beholding (as it were) both the rising and the setting of the Sun : which, before the Spaniards, no Monarch could ever say. A greater change than any man can as possibly imagine to have been effected in so short a time, as was between the first year of Ferdinand the Catholic, and the last year of Charles the fifth.

Concerning the title of the most Catholic King, re attributed to this Ferdinand, I find, that Alphonso the first of Oviedo, was so named for his sanctity : with whom it dyed, and was revived in Alphonso the Great, the twelfth King of Leon and Oviedo, by the grant of Pope John the 8th. After, it lay dead till the days of this Prince, who re-obtained this title from Pope Alexander the sixth : either because he compelled the Moor to be baptized, banished the Jews, and in part converted the Americans unto Christianity ; or because, having united Castile to his Dominions, surprized the Kingdom of Navarre, and subdued that of Granada ; he was, in a manner, the Catholic or general King of all Spain. The last reason seemeth to sway most in the reattribution of this attribute, in that when it was granted and confirmed on Ferdinand, by Pope Alexander the sixth, the King of Portugal exceedingly stomached at it : Quando Ferdinandus imperio universum Hispaniam, (sith Adriana) non obtinere, ejus tum ex magna parte penes Reges alios. It seems Emanuel could not think himself a King of Portugal, if the title of Catholic King did belong to Ferdinand. Wherein he was of the same mind, as was Gregory the Great, who when John of Constantinople had assumed to himself the title of the Occidental or Catholic Bishop, advised all Bishops of the World to oppose that arrogancy ; and that upon the self-same reason, Nam si ille est, Catholicus, non esset Episcopus : for, if John were the Catholic Bishop, they were none at all. But upon what consideration soever it was first re-granted, it hath been ever since assumed by his Posterity : to whole Crown ; as hereditary, and in common use, as the most Christian King to France, the Defender of the Faith to England.

And yet there was some further reason, why the Spaniards might affect the title of Catholic King, his Empire being Catholic in regard of extent, (though not of Orthodoxy of Doctrine) as reaching not over all Spain only, but over a very great part of the world besides. For in right of the Crown of Castile, he possessed the Towns of Melilla and Oran, the Haven of Majalquivir, the Rock of Velex, and the Canary Islands in Africa ; the Continent and Islands of all America, except Brasil, and some Plantations in the North, and in the Cambial Islands, of the English, Hollanders, and a few poor French. In the right of the Kingdom of Arragon, he enjoyed the Realms of Naples, Sicily, and Sardinia, with many Islands interspersed in the Mediterranean, and in the right of the House of Burgundy, the Counties of Burgundy, and Charolais, the greatest part of Belgium, with a title unto all the rest : besides the great Dukedom of Milain, the Havens of Telamon, and Plumbino, and many other pieces of importance in Italy, held by Inheritance from the Empire. To which if those Estates be added, which accrewed to Philip the second by the Crown of Portugal, we have the Towns of Cova, Tangier, and Maragon in Barbary, the Fortresses of Aguin, and S. George, in Guinea ; the Isles of Azores, Madeira, Cape Verd, S. Thomas, Del Principe, on this side of the Cape, and of Mozambique on the other : in Asia, all the Sea-coast almost from the Gulf of Persia unto China, and many strong Holds in the Molucces, Baniam, Zelium, and other Islands ; and finally in America, the large Country of Brasil, extending in length 1500 miles. An Empire of extent enough, to appropriate to these Monarchs the stile of Catholic.

The Monarchs of Spain.

- A. Chr.
- 1478 1. Ferdinand, King of Arragon, Sicily, Sardinia, Majorca, Valencia, Earl of Catalogne ; surprized Navarre, and conquered the Realm of Naples.
 - Isabel, Queen of Castile, Leon, Galicia, Toledo, Murcia, Lady of Bisney, conquered Granada, and discovered America.
 - Joan, Princess of Castile, Granada, Leon, &c. and of Arragon, Navarre, Sicily, &c. Philip, Arch-Duke of Austria, L. of Belgium.
 - 1516 2. Charles King of Castile, Arragon, Naples, &c. Archduke of Austria, Duke of Milan, Burgundy, Brabant, &c. Earl of Catalogne, Flanders, Holland, &c. Lord of Biscay, Frisland, Utrecht, &c. and Emperor of the Germans. He added the Realms of Mexico and Peru, the Dukedom of Gelderland and Milan, the Earldom of Zuphen, and the Seigniories of Overch, Over-Issel and Greyning, unto his Estates. A Prince of that magnanimity and puissance, that had not Francis the first in time opposed him, he had even swallowed all Europe. He was also, for a time, of great strength and reputation, in Tunis, and other parts of Africa, disposing Kingdoms at his pleasure ; but the Turk broke his power there ; and being hunted also out of Germany, he resigned all his Kingdoms, and died private. 42.
 - 1558 4. Philip II. of more ambition, but less prosperity than his Father ; fortunate only in his attempt on the Kingdom of Portugal ; but that is sufficiently balanced by his ill success in the Netherlands, and against the English, For the Hollanders, and their Confederates, drove him out of right of his Belgiek Provinces : the English overthrew his invincible Armada, intercepted his Plate-Flotts ; and by awing the Ocean, had almost impoverished him : and though he held for a time a hard hand upon France, in hope to have gotten that Crown by the help of the League, yet upon casting up his Accounts, he found that himself was the greater loser by that undertaking. So zealous in the cause of the Romish Church, that it was thought that his eldest Son Charles was put to death, with his consent, in the Inquisition-house, for seeming favorably inclined to the Low-Country Heretics, as the Spaniards called them. These four great Kings were all of the Order of the Garter ; but neither of the two that followed.
 - 1598 5. Philip III. finding his Estate almost destroyed by his Father's long and chargeable Wars, first made Peace with England, and then concluded a Truce for a 12 years with the States of the Netherlands : which done, he totally banished all the Moor out of Spain, and was a great stickler in the Wars of Germany.
 - 1621 6. Philip IV. Son of Philip the third, got into his power all the Lower Palatinate ; but lost the whole Realm of Portugal, and the Province of Catalonia, with many of his best Towns in Flanders, Artois, and Brabant, and some Ports in Italy : not yet recovered to that Crown from the power of the French. This Empire consisting of so many several Kingdoms united into one Body, may seem to be invincible. Yet had Queen Elizabeth followed the counsel of her men of VVar, he might have broken it in pieces. With 4000 men he might have taken away his Indies from him ; without whose Gold the Low-Country-Army, (which is the very best) could not be paid; and by consequence multitudes have been dissuolved. Nay, Sir Walter Raleigh in the Epilogue of his most excellent History of the World, plainly affirmeth that with the charge of 200000 l. continued but for two years, or three at the most, the Spaniards might not only have been persuaded to live at peace; but all their swelling and overflowing streams, might be brought back to their natural Channels, and old Banks. Their own Proverb faith, The Lion is not so fierce as he is painted; yet the Americans tremble at his name: it's true; and it is well observed by that great Politician Machiavel, that things which seem to be and are not, are more feared far off, than near at hand. Nor is this judgment built upon weak conjectures, but such as shew the Power of Spain not to be so formidable, as it's commonly supposed: which I find marshalled to my hand in this manner following: 1. The dissymmetry of his Realms, and other Estates, which makes one part unable to relieve or defend the other. 2. The slowness of his Preparations in offensive or defensive Wars; his Forces, of necessity, being long a gathering in places so remote from the Royal Seat, and being gathered, no less subject to the dangers both of Sea and Land, before united into a body, and made fit for action. 3. The danger and uncertainty which the most part of his Forinlike Revenues are subject to; many times intercepted by Pirates and open Enemies; sometimes too long delayed by cross Winds and Seas, that they come too late to serve the turn. 4. The different tempers and affections of a great part of his Subjects, not easily concurring in the same ends, or travelling the same way unto them, &c. The dissymmetry of the Aragonians, Portuguese, and Italian Provinces, not well affected, for their rugeture, and particular reasons, unto the Castilians; apt to be wrought on by the Ministers of neighbouring Princes, whom jealousies of State keep watchful upon all advantages, for the depressing of his Power. 6. And last of all, the want of People of his own natural Subjects, whom he may best rely on for the increase and grandeur of his Estates, exhausted and diminished by those ways and means which have been touched upon; without any politic or provident cause, to remedy that defect for the time to come. And this I look on as the greatest and most sensible Error in the Spanish Government. Therein directly contrary to the ancient Romans; who finding that nothing was more necessary for great and important enterprises, than multitudes of Men, employed all their inducements to increase their numbers, by Marriages, Colonies, and such helps; making their conquered Enemies free Denizens of their Common-wealth: by which means the number of the Roman Citizens became so great (all being equally interested in the preservation of it) that Rome could not be ruined (in Annibal's judgment) by any Force but her own. But, on the other side, the Spaniards, employ none in their Plantations, but their own native Subjects; and so many of them also in all their enterprises both by Sea and Land, that so many thousands go forth every year, in the flower of their age, not one of them returning home; and those few which return, either lame or old: the Country is not only deprived of the Men themselves, but also of the Children which might be born. A evidence whereof may be, that John the first of Portugal, who reigned before the several Voyages and Plantations of that people, was able to raise 4000 Men for the War of Africa: whereas Emanuel, who lived after those Undertakings, had much ado to raise 2000 Foot, and 3000 Horse, on the same occasion: and Sebastian, after that, found as great a difficulty to raise an Army of 12000.

As for the Forces which the King of Spain is able to make out of all his Estates, they may be best seen by his preparations for the Conquest of England, France, and Flanders. In his design for England, an. 1538, he had a Fleet consisting of 150 Sail of Ships, whereof 66 were great Gallies, 4 Gallies of Naples, 4 Gallies, the rest smaller Vessels: fraught with 20000 Soldiers for land-service, 9000 Saylers, 800 Gunners, 4000 Pioneers, 2650 pieces of Ordnance: not reckoning into this account the Commanders, and Volunteers; of which last there were very great numbers who went upon that service for Spain, Merit, or Honour. In the design of Charles the Fifth, for the Conquest of Provence, he had no less than 50000 in the field, and in that of Philip the second, for the reducing of Flanders, the Duke of Alva had an Army, at his first setting forward out of Italy, consisting of 8800 Spanish Foot, and 1200 Horse, all of them old experienced Souldiers, drawn out of Naples, Sicily, and the Dutchy of Milain; 3600 German Foot, 300 Lances, and 100 Harquebussiers on Horse back, of the County of Burgundy; all old Souldiers also: besides many Volunteers of great rank and quality, very well attended, and his old standing Army in the Belgick Provinces: a Strength sufficient to have conquered a far greater Country.

Of standing Forces in this Country, he maintaineth in three Realms of Spain, but three thousand Horse; and in his Forts and Garrisons, no more than 8000 Foot: his Garrisons being very few, and those upon the Frontiers only, and in Maritime Towns: his Gallies served with Slaves out of Turkey and Barbary. And yet he is able, on occasion, to raise very great Forces; partly, because the ordinary Subjects are so well affected to their Prince, whom they never mention without reverence: and partly in regard there is so great a number of Fendatories and Noble-men, who are by Tenure, to serve personally at their own charges, for defence of the Realm. And certainly, it must be a considerable Force which the Noble-men of Spain are able to raise, considering the greatness of their Revenue, and the number of Vassals which live under them: it being supposed, that the Dukes of Spain (of which there were 23 when my Author lived) were able, one with another, to dispend yearly from 50000 Ducats, to 100000; some going very much above that proportion; and that of 36 Marquesses, and 50 Earls, the poorest had 10000 Ducats of yearly Rent, and so ascending unto 50 and 60000. The Arch-Bishops, Bishops, and others of the greater Clergy, being all endowed with fairer Temporal Estates, than in most places in Europe, are also bound to serve (though not personally) on the like occasions. And to these services the Noble-men are for two reasons more forward than the other Fendatories: 1. Because their Honours descend not to the Son by the Father to the Son, unless confirmed to the Son by the Kings acknowledgment and compellation, which makes them more observant of him, than in France or England, where it is challenged as a Birth-right. 2. Because out of the gross body of these Noble-men, the King doth use to honour some with the title of Grandee, privileged to stand covered before the King, and to treat with him as their Brother: which being the highest Honour which that State can yield, keeps those great persons in readiness to obey his pleasure, in hope to come to an Honour of so high esteem.

For the Revenues of this King, which ordinarily arise out of his Estates, (taking Portugal into the Account) they are computed at Eleven Millions of Crowns yearly; that is to say, four from his Dominions in Italy, two from Portugal and the Appertinents thereof, three from the West-Indies, and the other two remaining, from his Kingdom

Kingdoms in Spain. Besides this, he receiveth yearly the Revenues of the Masterships of all the great Orders in his Kingdom, incorporated to the Crown by Ferdinand the Catholic, not without good Policy and reason of State: the Masters (or Comendadores, as they call them) of those several Orders drawing after them such Troops of the Nobility, Gentry, and other dependants; that their power began to be suspected by the Kings themselves. By which addition there accrueh to the Crown (besides the opportunity of preferring Servants of the greatest merit) above 150000 l. of yearly Rents. As for his Casuities and extraordinary ways of raising money, they are very great: reckoned by the Author of the General History of Spain to amount (according to divers Opinions) to 14, 18, and 23 millions of Crowns. For making up of which sum, he puts in the First Fruits, and some part of the Temples of Rectories; and other Church Preferments, amounting to three millions yearly. And the Author of the Politique Dispute, &c. affirmeth the Pardons sent to the Indies given him by the Pope, to be worth half a million of pounds yearly. Add hereunto the fall and disposal of all Offices, which make up a good round sum; and the free Gifts and Contributions of his Subjects, which amount unto a good Revenue. For the Kingdom of Naples presents him every third year with a million and 20000 Crowns; and Castile only at one time granted a Contribution of four millions, to be paid in four years: his Subjects generally being so well affected unto the Crown, that he can demand nothing in reason of them which they are not ready to grant; the King of Spain being called in that regard by the Emperour Maximilian, the King of Men. And yet this great King is not counted to be rich in Treasure, his expences being very great. First, in keeping Forts and Garrisons in many parts of his Estates against the Revolt of the Natives. Secondly, maintaining so many Frontier places against Foreign Invasions: Thirdly, in the continual pay of an Armada for conducting his Plate-Flots from America. And last of all, the many and unprofitable Wars of King Philip the second, so plunged the Crown in the Gulfs of Bankers and Money-Changers, that much of the Revenues of it stand engaged for payment to this very day.

There are in Spain.

Of the OCEAN and ISLES

Before we can arrive in Britain, the last Western Diocese, we must cross the OCEAN, that immense, and infinitum Pelagus, as Mela calls it: in comparison of which, the Seas before mentioned are but as Ponds or Gullies: a Sea in former times known more by fame than tryal, and rather wondrous at on the shore side, than any more remote place of it. The Roman ventured not on it with their Vessels, unless in the passage from France to Britain: and much famed is Alexander for his hazardous Voyage on this unruly Sea, he having failed in all 400 Furlongs from the shore. The Name and Pedegree take here both from the Poets and Etymologists. The Poets make Oceanus to be the Son of Caelum and Vesta, or of Heaven and Earth. They termed him the Father of all things, as, Oceanumque Patrem verum, in Virgil, because moisture was necessarily required to the continuation of all bodies: and usually painted him with a Bulls head on his shoulders, (whence Euripides called him Βουκεφαλόντα, Oceanus Tauvrius) from the howling and fury of the Winds; by reason from it came to the shore, and to which it is subject. As for the Children attributed unto him, they are doubtless nothing but the clouds and vapours hence arising. The name of Ouante, Oceanus, some derive from ουαν, cel, because of its swiftness; some from ουαν, findo, divido, because it cleaveth and interlatheth the Earth, and others make it ουαντι, quasi ouantia mare non ouant, a celeriter fluens, which agreeth in meaning with the first. Particular names it hath divers, according to the name of the shore, by which it passeth, as Cambriacus, Gallicus, Britannicus, &c. The chief Isles of it appertaining to Europe, besides those called the Azores or Isles of Terceira, which we have spoken of when we were in Portugal; those of the Aquitan Ocean, described in our History of France; those of the Netherland, and the Northern Seas, which are to be described hereafter in their proper places, are the British Islands: by many of the most ancient and approved Writers called simply BRITAIN, because united all in that common notion; though afterwards distinguished into the particular appellations of Great Britain, Ireland, and the rest. Of which, as lying in my way betwixt Spain and Germany; or rather as the next Diocese of the Empire to France and Spain, under the Prætorian Prefectus of Gaul, I am next to speak.

OF BRITAIN.

BRITAIN, according to the largest latitude of that name and notion, comprehendeth all those Islands both great and less, which lie in compass about Albion, or Britain properly so called : by Ptolomy called Britannia, in the plural number, For speaking of France he thus putteth joyneth, Ex adverso hujus Britannia Insula, Albionem fuit, quoniam fuit, cum Britannia omnes vocarentur, i. e. Opposite hereto lieth the Island of Britain which formerly by a more proper name was called Albion, the name of Britain comprehending all the Isles adjoining. And in this latitude and extent we now take the word ; the whole dominion of these Islands, distinguished into several names, being united in the person and under the command of the King of Great Britain : that name including all the rest, as appendants of it ; with reference to this called the Isles of Britain, or the British Islands. Thus Aristotle in his Book De Mundo (if the Book be his) Quin namque duo Insule Britannicae fuisse sunt, quarum maxima Albion & Ierna ; i. e. In which Sea there are situate two British Islands of great note and compass, Albion (or Britain properly so called) and Ireland. Ptolomy goeth to work more punctually, and he states it thus ; Completitur prima base Europæ tabulis duas Britannicas insulas, quas Diogenius Britannides vocat, Hiberniam nempe & Albionem, cum minimis aliquot adiacentibus insulis, in sunt Orcades, Eludæ, Thylye, Mona, & reliquæ suis nominibus expressæ : that is to say, This first Table of Europe, comprehendeth the two Islands of Br- tain, which Dionysius calls the Pretanides, namely Ireland and Albion, with some lesser Islands joining to it, as the Orcades, the Hebrides, Thule, Angleyes, (or Man) and others called by distinct names. By which we see first, that the general name of Britain or British Islands comprehended all those which are situate in the British Ocean : and secondly, that the greatest and most famous of them, more specially called Britain by the following Writers, was anciently called Albion by its proper name. And it was called Albion, as many Authors tell me, either from Albion the Brother of Bergion, the Son of Neptune, mentioned by Aeschylus, Dionysius, Strabo, Mela, Salmus, Pliny, and others; it being not improvable, that the greatest Island of the Ocean, should be denominated from a Son of the greatest Sea-god : or from the old word Aapor, signifying White amongst the Greeks; (from whence the Latins had their Albium;) by reason of the white chalky Cliffs, seen by the Mariners afar off as they failed those Seas.

those Seas. But to return again to Britain in the general notion, and to the several Islands which that name includeth, we may thus distinguish them into the Greater and the Lesser; the Greater subdivided into 1. Great Britain, or Britain properly so called, and 2. Ireland; the Lesser, 1. the Orkneys; 2. the Hebrides; 3. Man, 4. Anglessey, 5. the Islands of the Severn Sea, 6. the Sorlings, or Isles of Scilly, 7. Wight, 8. Thetou, 9. Sunderland, and 10. Holy Island.

GREAT BRITAIN.

TO speak much of GREAT BRITAIN or BRITAIN specially and properly so called, I hold somewhat superfluous; it being our home, and we therefore no strangers to it. Yet as Mela once said of Italy, De Italia, magis quam ordo exigit, quam quædam monstri feræ panes dædunt, ceterum sum omnia; so say I of Britain. It is fo-shy to the eye of every Reader, that he needs not the precedals of Letters. Yet something must be said, though for methods sake, rather than necessity. In this we will begin by laying out the bounds, thereof (as in other places) which are, on the East, the German Ocean, dividing it from Belgium, Germany, which divides it from Ireland; and to the North of that, with the main Peruvian or Western Ocean, of which the Ancients knew no shore; on the North, with the Hyberborean or Decadentian Ocean, as Proclus calls it, extending out to Island, Free-eland, and the ends of the then known World; and on the South, the English Channel, which divides it from France.

France. The length hereof from North to South, is reckoned at 620 Italian miles; the greatest breadth from East to West, measured in a right line, no more than 250 of the same miles, but by the crooks and bendings of the Sea-Coast, come to 320 miles : whole circumference accounted 1836 miles. The greatest Island in the World, except Java, Borneo, Sumatra, and Madagascar ; and therefore by Solinus and some other Ancients (to whom those late times were not known) called the Other World; by other of later time, the Lady and Mistress of the Seas. Situate under the 8th. 9th. 10th. 11th. and 12th. Climes : so that the longest day at the Lizard point in Cornwall, (being the most Southern part hereof) containeth 16 hours and a quarter; at Barwick which is the border of England and Scotland, 17 hours 3 quarters, and one hour more at Strailby head, in the North of Scotland; where some observe that there is scarce any night at all in the Summer Solstice, but a fading Twilight. To which alludes the Poet, saying, E minimam comentes nelle Britannias: and the Panegyrist in the time of Constantine, amongst other commendations which he gives to Britain, saith, that therein is neither extreme cold in Winter, nor any forcing heats in Summer, and that which is most comfortable, Long days, and very light some nights. Nor doth the Panegyrist tell us only of the temperateness of the Air or the length of the days; but of the fruitfulness of the Soil: affirming Britain to be blessed with all the commodities of Heaven and Earth; such an abundant plenty of Corn, as might suffice both for Bread and Wine; the Woods thereof without wild Beasts, the Fields without noisom Serpents, infinite number of milch Beasts, and Sheep weighed down with their own Fleeces. Whereto add that of Affred of Beverly, a Poet of the middle times, favouring thus of Britain.

*Insula prædives, quæ toto vix eget orbe;
Et cujus totus indiget orbis ope.
Insula prædives, cujus miretur & optet.
Delicias SOLOMON, Octavianus opes.*

A wealthy island, which no help desires,
Yet all the world supply from her requires;

Able

Able to glut King SOLOMON with pleasures,
And surfeit great Augustus with her treasures.

Proceed we next to the name of Britain, of which I find many Etiologies; some forced, some fabulous and foolish, and but few of weight. That which hath passed for current in former times, (when almost all Nations did pretend to be of Trojan race) was that it took this name from Brutus, affirmed to be the Son of Silvius, who was the Grandchild of Æneas, and the third King of the Latines of the Trojan blood. Which Brutus having unfortunately killed his Father, and thereupon abandoning Italy with his Friends and Followers; after a long Voyage and many wanderings, is said to have fallen upon this Island, to have conquered here a race of Giants; and having given unto it the name of Britain, to leave the Sovereignty thereof unto his posterity, who quietly enjoyed the fame, till subdued by the Romans. This is the sum of the Tradition concerning Brute: which though received in the darker times of ignorance, and too much credulity; in these more learned days hath been layd aside, as false and fabulous. And it is proved that there was no such man as Brutus, I. From the newness of his Birth, Geoffrey of Monmouth, who lived in the reign of King Henry the second, being the first Author which makes mention of him: for which immediately questioned by Newberghius, another Writer of that Age. 2. By the silence of all the Roman Historians, in whom it hath had been unpardonable negligence to have omitted an Accident so remarkable, as the killing of a Father by his own Son (especially when they wanted matter to fill up the times) and the erecting of a new Trojan Empire in so great an Island. 3. By the Arguments which Cæsar uith to prove the Britain to be derived from the Galls; as Speech, Laws, Customs, Dispositions, Making, and the like. 4. And left it might be said, that though the Britains in Cæsar's time were of Gallick race, yet there had been a more ancient people, who had their Original from the Trojans, Tartarus putteth off that dispute with an I pernamus: Qui mortales initio coluerint, parum conperimus esse, faith that knowing Writer. And 5. by the Testimony of all Roman Historicks, who tell us that Cæsar found the Britains under many Kings, and never under the command of one sole Prince, but in times of danger. Summa Belli administrandi communis consensu commissa esse Calvellaunus, as it is in Cæsar: Dum singulis pugnant, universi vincuntur, as we read in Tacitus. To omit therefore that of Britain, and other Erymnus is unlikely, but of less authority: the name of Britain is most probably derived from Brit, which in the Ancient British signifieth Painted; and the word Tain, signifieth a Nation: agreeable unto the custom of the ancient Britains, who used to discolour and paint their bodies, that they might seem more terrible in the eyes of their enemies. Britain is then a Nation of painted men; such as the Romans called Pitti in the times ensuing. Which I prefer before the Etymology of Bocharus, a right Learned man, but one that wretched all originations to the Punick, or Phœnician language; by whom this Island is called Britain or Britannica, from Bara, an, signifying in that Language a Land of Tyme, wherewith the VVestern parts of it do indeed abound. Other particulars concerning the Isle of Britain shall be observed in the description of those parts into which it now doth stand divided, that is to say, 1. England, 2. Wales, and 3. Scotland.

ENGLAND.

ENGLAND is bounded on the East with the German; on the West with the Iris; on the South with the British Oceans; and on the North, with the Rivers of Tweed and Solway; by which parted from Scotland: Environed with turbulent Seas, guarded by inaccessible Rocks: and where those want, preserved against all foreign Invasions by strong Forts and a puissant Navy.

Former times the Northern limits did extend as far as Edenburgh Fryth on the East, and the Fryth Dunbriton on the West, (for so far not only the Roman Empire, but the Kingdom of Northumberland did once extend, the intervening space being shut up with a Wall of Turfs by Lellius Obichus, in the time of Ammianus Pius. But afterwards, the Romans being beaten back by the Barbarous people, the Province was contracted within narrow bounds; and fortified with a Wall by the Emperour Severus, extending from Carlisle to the River Tyne, the track whereof may easily be discerned to this very day. A wall I make that at every miles end there is said to have been a Cattle, between every Cattle many Watch-Towers; and betwixt every Watch-Tower a Pipe of Brass, conveying the least noise unto one another without interruption: so that news of any approaching enemy was quickly over all the Border, and resistance accordingly provided. In following times the strong Towns of Bewick, and Carlisle, have been the chief Bars, by which we kept the back door shut: and as for other Forts, we had scarce any on the Frontiers, or Sea-Coasts of the Kingdom; though in the midland parts too many. VVVIII being in the hands of potent and factious Subjects, occasioned many to rebel; and did create great trouble to the Norman Kings, till in the latter end of the Reign of King Stephen, 1100 of them were levell'd to the very ground, and those few which remained dismantled, and made them servicable. The Maritime parts were thought sufficiently assured by those Rocks and Cliffs, which compass the Island in most parts; and hardly any Cattle all along the shore, except that of Dover; which was therefore counted by the French, as the Key of England. But in the year 1538. King Henry the Eighth, considering how he had offended the Emperour Charles the Fifth, by his Divorce from Queen Katherine; and incurred the displeasure of the Pope, by his falling off from that See; as also that the French King had not only married his Son to a Daughter of the Pope, but a Daughter of the King of Scots: thought fit to send for his own safety, by building in many places where the Houses were of plain and open, Castles, Platforms, and Block-Houses; many of which in the long time of Peace ensuing were much neglected and in part ruined.

His Daughter Queen Elizabeth of happy memory, provided yet better for the Kingdom. For the not only fortified Portsmouth, and placed it in a strong Garrison; but walled the Kingdom round with a most lately, royal, and invincible Navy: with which she always commanded the Seas, and vanquished the mightiest Monarch of Europe: whereas her Predecessors in their Sea service, for the most part, hired their Men of War, from the Hansemans, and Genoese. Yet did neither of these great Princes, Charles the the inward part of the Realm: herein imitating Nature, who fortifieth the head and the feet only, not the middle of Beasts; or some Captain of a Fort, who plants all his Ordnance on the Walls, Bulwarks, and Out-works; leaving the rest by these sufficiently guarded.

The whole Island was first called Albion, as before is said, either from the Giant Albion, or ab albis rupibus, the white Rocks towards France. Afterwards it was called Britain, which name being first found in Athenaeus, amongst the Graecians, and in Lucretius and Cæsar, amongst the Latines; followed herein by Strabo, Pliny, and all other ancient Writers, except Ptolemy only, by whom called Albion as at first; continued till the time of Egbert the first Saxon Monarch, who called the Southern parts of the Island by the name of England, from the Angles, who with the Jutes and Saxons conquered it.

It is in length 320 miles, enjoying a soil equally participating of ground fit for tillage and pasture: yet to pasture more than to tillage are our people addicted, as a course of life not requiring for many helpers, which must be all fed and paid; and yet yielding more certain profits. Hence in former times Husbandry began to be neglected, Villages depopulated, and Hinds for want of entertainment to turn way-beaters: whereof Sir Thomas Moor in his Utopia complaineth; saying, that our Flocks of Sheep had devoured not only men, but whole houses and Towns. Oves (saith he) que tam mites esse, tamq. exigui solent alii; nunc tam edaces, & indomita esse, ceperunt, ut homines devorant ipsos, agros, domos, oppida vastent, ac depopulentur. To prevent this mischief, there was a Statute made in the Fourth year of Henry the Seventh, against the converting of Arable Land into Pasture ground; by which course Husbandry was again revived, and the soil made to abound in Corn, that a dear year is seldom heard of. Our Vines are nipped with the cold, and seldom come to maturity, and are more used for the pleasantness of the shade, than for the hopes of Wine. Molt of her other plenty and ornaments, are expressed in this old Verse following;

Anglia, 1. Mons, 2. Pons, 3. Fons, 4. Ecclesijs, 5. Famina, 6. Lani.

That is to say,

For 1. Mountains, 2. Bridges, 3. Rivers, 4 Churches fair,
5. Women, and 6. Wooll, England is past compare.

1. For the Mountains lifting up here and there their lofty heads, and giving a gallant prospect to the lower Ground; the principal are those of Mendip in Somerset, Malvern Hills in Worcestershire, the Chilterns of Buckinghamshire, Cusford in Gloucestershire, the Peak of Derbyshire, York Wolds, &c. All of them either bowelled with Mines, or clothed with Sheep, or adorned with Woods. The exact description of which, would require more time than I can spend upon that subject. Proceed we therefore to

2. The Bridges, which are in number 87 5. The chief of which are, the Bridge of Rochester over Medway, the Bridge of Bristol over Avon, and the Bridge of London over Thames. This last standing upon 19 Arches of wonderful strength and largeness supporteth continual ranges of Buildings, seeming rather a Street than a Bridge; and is not to be paralleled with any Bridge of Europe; though of late by some defect made by fire, anno 1632 the Buildings are not so contiguous, as they were before.

3. The Rivers of this Country are in number 325. The chief is Thamesis, compounded of the two Rivers, Thame and Isis; whereof the former rising somewhat beyond Thame in Buckinghamshire, and the later beyond Gloucester in Gloucestershire, meet together about Dorchester in Oxfordshire: the issue of which happy conjunction is the Thamis or Thames. Hence it flyeth betwixt Berke Buckinghamshire, Middlesex, Surrey, Kent, and Essex; and so weddeth himself to the Kenilth Medway, in the very jaws of the Ocean. This glorious River in fewest the violence of the Sea more than any River in Europe: clogging and flowing twice a day, more than 60 miles: about whose Banks are so many fair Towns, and Princely Palaces, that a German Poet thus truly spake,

*Tot campos, sylvas, tot regatæ, tot hortos,
Artifici excolitis, tot vidimus arces;
Or nunc Antonio Thamisi cum Tibride ceterq.*

We saw for many Woods and Princely Bowers,
Sweet Fields, brave Palaces and stately Towers:
So many Gardens drest up with curious care,
That Thames with Royal Tiber may compare.

The second River of note, is Sabrin or Severn. It hath it's beginning in Plinlimmon Hill in Montgomeryshire, and his end about seven miles from Bristol: walking in the mean space, the Walls of Shrewsbury, Worcester, and Gloucester. 3. Trent, so called, for that 30 kind of Fishes are found in it, or that it receiveth 30 lesser Rivers; who having his Fountain in Staffordshire, and gliding through the Counties of Nottingham, Lincoln, Leicester, and York, augmenteth the turbulent current of Humber, the most violent stream of all the Ille. Yet Humber is not, to say truth, a distinct River, having a spring-head of his own; but rather the mouth or Æstuarium of divers Rivers here confluent and meeting together, namely, Touze, Danwent, and especially Ouse and Trent. And as the Danwent, having received into its Chanal the Rivers Dravus, Saunus, Tibiscus, and divers others, changeth his name into Isse: so also the Trent, receiving and meeting the waters above named, changeth his name into this of Humber; Abus, the old Geographers call it. 4. Medway, a Kenilth River, famous for harbouring the Royal Navy, 5. Tweed, the North-East-bound of England, on whose Northern bank is seated the strong & impregnable Town of Barwick. 6. Tyne, famous for New-Castle, and her inexhaustible Coal-pits. These and the rest of Principal note are thus comprehended in one of Mr. Drayton Sonnets:

Our Flood Queen Thames for Ships and Swans is crown'd,
And lately Severn for her shore is prais'd,
The Chrysal Trent for Fords and Fish renown'd,
The Avon fame to Albions Cliffs is rais'd.
Carleion Chester vaunts her holy Dee,
York many Wonders of her Ouse can tell,
The Peak her Dove, whose fanks so fertile be,
And Ken will say her Medway doth excel.
Canswol commends her Isis to the Thame,
Our Northern Borders boast of Tweeds fair flood;
Our Western parts extol their Willie Fame,
And the old Lea brags of Danish blood.

4. The Churches, before the general suppression of Abbies, and spoiling the Church Ornaments, were most exquisite; the chief remaining, are 1. the Church of St. Paul, founded by Erhelbert King of Kent, in the place where once was a Temple consecrated to Diana: A Fa-brick

brick of the largest dimensions of that kind, of any in the Christian World. For whereas the much celebrated Temple of S. Sophia in Constantinople hath but 260 foot in length, and 75 in breadth: this of S. Paul is 690 foot long, and 130 foot broad, the main body being 102 foot high, over which the Steeple of the Church was mounted 482 foot more. Which Steeple being made with Timber, and covered with Lead, was by the carelessness of the Sexton, in the fifth year of the Reign of Q. Elizabeth, consumed with fire, which happening in a thundering and tempestuous day, was by him confidently affirmed to be done by Lightning, and was so generally believed till the hour of his death: but not many years since to disabuse the world, he confest the truth of it; on which discovery, the burning of St. Paul's Steeple by Lightning, was left out of our Common Almanacks: where formerly it stood amongst the ordinary Epoche, or accounts of time. A Church of such a gallant Prospect, and so large dimensions, that had not the late reparation of it been discontinued, it would have been the stateliest and most majestic Fabrick in the Christian World. 2. The Collegiate Church of S. Peter in Westminster, (wherein I have the honour to be a Prebendary) famous for the Inauguration and the Sepulture of the Kings of England, the Tombs whereof are the most sumptuous, and the Chappel the most accurate piece of Building in Europe. 3. The Cathedral Church at Lincoln. 4. For a private Church, that of Radcliff in Bristol. 5. For a private Chappel, that of Kings College in Cambridge. 6. For curious Workmanship of the Glafs, that of Christ-Church in Canterbury. 7. For the exquisite beauty of the Fronts, those of Wells and Peterborough. 8. For a pleasant light House Church, the Abbey Church at Bath. 9. For an ancient and reverend Fabrick, the Minster of York. And 10. to comprehend the rest in one top Lady-Church in Salisbury, of which take these Verses.

*Mira cavam, solum quot continet annus, in ima
Tam numerosa, ferunt, ade fenestra micat.
Marmorisq. tenet fufus tot ab arte columnas,
Compensat horas quot vagus annus habet.
Totq. patent portæ, quot mensibus annus abundat:
Res miras, at veras celebrata fide.*

How many days in one whole year there be,
So many Windows in one Church we see
So many marble Pillars there appear,
As there are hours throughout the fleeting year.
So many Gates, as Moons one year do view;
Strange tale to tell, yet not so strange as true.

5. The Women generally are more handsome than in other places, sufficiently endowed with natural beauties, without the addition of adulterate Sophistications. In an absolute Woman, say the Italians, are required the parts of a Dutch-Woman, from the girle downwards; of a French-Woman, from the girle to the shoulders; over which must be placed an English face. As their beauties, so also are their Privileges the greatest of any Nation; neither so furiously subservient as the French, nor so jealously guarded as the Italian: but keeping so true a decorum, that as England is termed the Purgatory of Servants, and the Hell of Horfes; so it is acknowledged the Paradise of Women. And it is a common by-word among the Italians, that if there were a Bridge built over the Narrow Seas, all the Women of Europe would run into England. For here they have the upper hands in the freets, the upper place at the Table; the thirds of their Husbands estates, and their equal share in all Lauds, yea even such as are holden in Knights-service: Privileges wherewith other Women are not acquainted. Of high esteem in former times amongst foreign Nations, for the modesty and gravity of their conversation, but of late times so much addicted to the light garb of the French, that they have lost much of their ancient honour and reputation amongst the knowing and more sober men of foreign Countries, who before admired them.

6. The Wool of England, is of exceeding fineness especially that of Cusford in Gloucestershire; that of Leam in Hertfordshire; and of the Ille of Wight. Of this Wool are made excellent Broad-cloths, dispersed all over the World, especially Hig-Germans, Muscovy, Turkey, and Perfia, to the great benefit of the Realm: as well in return of so much money which is made of them, as in setting to work so many poor people, who from it receive sustenance. Before the time of King Edward the third, English men had not the art, or neglected the use of making Cloth: till whose time our Wool was transported unwrought. And as his Successors have laid impositions on every Cloth sold out of the Realm, so his Predecessors had, as their occasion required, some certain Customs granted on every flock of Wool. In the beginning of this Edward's Wars with France, the Cities and Towns of Flanders being then even to admiration rich, combined with him, and aided him in his Wars against that King. And he for his part by the composition then made, was to give them 140000 l. ready money to aid them by Sea and Land, infeed required, and to make Bruges, then one of the great Mart-Towns of Christendom, the Staple for his Wools. Here the Staple continued 15 years, at which time the Flemmings having broke off from the King, and he having by experience seen what the benefit of those Staples were, removed them from Bruges into England. And for the ease as well of his Subjects in bringing their Wools unto the Ports, as of such Foreign Merchants that came to buy, he placed his Staples at Excester, Bristol, Winchester, Westminster, Chichester, Canterbury, Norwich, Lincoln, York, and Newcastle, for England; at Caermarthen for Wales; and at Dublin, Waterford, Cork, and Tredeg, for Ireland. He further enacted, that no English, Irish, or Welsh men should transport this Stapled commodity, no by Licence (if any such should be granted) on pain of Confiscation, and imprisonment during the Kings pleasure. Lastly, he allured over his divers Flemmings, which taught our men the making of Clothes (who are now grown the best Cloth-workers in the VWorld; and to encourage them in that Art, it was by a Statute of the 27th of Edward the third, Enacted to be Felony, to carry any Wools unwrought. VVhen England had some short time enjoyed the benefit of these Staples, the King removed them to Calice, which he had conquered, and desired to make wealthy. From hence they were at several times and occasions translated, now to one, now to another Town in Belgium: and happy was that Town, in what Country soever, where the English kept a house for this Traffick; the confluence of all people thither to buy, infinitely enriching it. Answer in Brabant long enjoyed the English Merchants, till upon some differences between King Henry the Seventh, and Maximilian Arch-Duke and Lord of Belgium, they removed: but at their return again, were received by the Antwerpians, with solemn Processions, Princely Triumph, sumptuous Feasts, rare Banquetings, and other expressions of much Love, but more Joy. And giving of some Cusford Sheep by Edward the Fourth, to Henry of Castile, and John of Arragon, An. 1465, is counted one of the greatest prejudices, that ever happened to this Kingdom.

The Wool transported bringeth into the Kingdom no less than 1500000 l. and the Lead half the sum, so that Lectis

Lewis Guicciardine reporteth: That before the Wars of the Low-Countries, the Flemmings and the English bartered Wares, yearly to the value of 12 Millions of Crowns.

The next commodity to the Wool, though not mentioned in the re foregoing, are the rich and inexhaustible Mines of Cole, Lead, and Tin: to say nothing of the Mines of Iron, as bringing more damage to the publick by the spoil of Woods, than profit to particular persons in the increase of their estates. The Mines of Cole chiefly enrich Newcastle in Northumberland, and by that the great City of London, and many other good Towns besides: which could not possibly subsist in this general decay of Woods, and neglect of planting, but by this Commodity. The Mines of Lead are most considerable in the Peak of Derbyshire; those of Tin in Cornwall, where they dig Tin not much inferior to Silver in fineness. A Commodity which brought great wealth to England in former times, the art of making it not being elsewhere known in Europe; till one of the Tin-workers, flying out of England for a Murder, passed into Germany, an. 1243 and there discovered some Tin-Mines in Mihnia, not known before, and set on foot that Trade amongst them, to the great prejudice (saith my Author) of the Earls of Cornwall, who had before the sole Monopoly of that useful metal.

To these particulars being matter of profit and necessity, if I would add such things as are for delight and pleasure; I might subjoin the Bells and Parks; for which this Kingdom is as eminent among Foreign Nations as for any of those mentioned in the said old Verse. The Bells so many, tunable, and of such excellent Melody to a Musical ear (brought more to the command of the skillful ringer than in former times) that is thought there are more good Rings of Bells in this part of the Island than in half Christendom besides. Parks more in England than in all Europe. The first of which kind for the enclosing of Venison, being that of Woodstock, made by King Henry the first: whose example being followed by his Successors, and the Lords and great men of the Realm; the number so increased in a little time, that at the last, besides 55 Forrests, and 300 Chafes, there were reckoned 745 Parks in England; all well replenished either with Red or Fal-low Deer.

And that the Deer might graze with pleasure, and the Sheep with safety, great care was taken by our Progenitors for the destruction of Wolves. I know it hath been a tradition of old VVriters, that England never had any Wolves at all, and that they would not live here brought from other places; but it is not so: here being store of them, till Edward King of England commuted the 20 l. of Gold, 300 l. of Silver, and 300 head of Cattel imposed as a yearly tribute by King Abellane upon Idwallo Prince of Wales, for the like yearly tribute of 300 Wolves: by which means they were quite rooted out in time, the Welsh protesting at the last they could find no more.

The Air of this Country is very temperate, neither so hot as France and Spain in the Summer, because of its Northernly situation; nor so cold in the Winter; because the air of this Kingdom being gross, cannot so soon penetrate as the thin air of those Countries. For to say truth, the air in the Winter time is thick and foggy, cloudy, and much disposed to mists; especially near the Sea, and the greater Rivers: in which many times, the Sun is not seen to shine out clearly for some weeks together. And thereupon there goeth a tale, that the great Constable of this Castle being Ambassadour to King James in the first Winter of his reign, and tarrying here about a month, is said not to have seen the Sun all the time of his stay: which occasioned him at his going on ship-board, to desire such Lords and Gentlemen as attended him thither, to prefist his humble service to the King their Majesty, and to the blessed Sun of Heaven when they chance to see him. And something also touching the temperature of the Air, may be ascribed unto the Winds, which participating of the Seas, over which they pass unto us, do carry with them a temperate warmth.

But if warmth were all the benefit we received from the Seas, it might indeed be said, that we were come from Gods blessing into the warm Sun: but it is not so. For there are no Seas in Europe that yield more plenty of Fish than ours. Our Oylers were famous in the times of the old Romans, and our Herrings are now very beneficial unto the Netherlands, to whom, the English-men, referring to themselves a kind of Royalty, (for the Dutch by Custom demand liberty to fish, of Scarborough-Castle in Tenckshire) have yielded up the commodity; by which those States are exceedingly enriched, and our Nation much impoverished and condemned for laziness and sloth. Besides the loss of employment for many men, who using this trade might be a seminary of good and able Mariners, as well for the Wars, as for further Navigations and discoveries, cannot but be very prejudicial to the strength and flourishing of the Common-wealth, and Empire of England.

But to make this appear more fully in all particulars, I shall extract some passages out of a M.S. discourse of the late Learned Knight Sir John Burroughs, principal Clerk of Arms by the name of Garter, entitled, The Sovereignty of the British Seas. By which it doth appear, that there is fishing in those Seas for Herrings, Pilchards, Cod, Ling, or other Fish, at all times of the year: and that too in so plentiful a manner, that not long since near Mimral on the Coasts of Devonshire, 900 Ton of Fish were taken in one day, and 3000 pounds-worth in another, near S. Joes in Cornwall, the Hollanders taking at one draught 20 Laft of Herrings.

Secondly, That almost all Nations hereabouts, as French, Spaniards, Netherlands, and those of the Hanse, do mightily improve themselves both in power & wealth, by the benefit of the English Fishing; inasmuch as 10000 Sail of Foreign Vessels (of which 1400 from the Town of Emden in East Friseland only) are thought to be maintained by This Trade alone.

Thirdly, That the Hollanders in particular employ yearly 8000 Vessels of all sorts for this Trade of Fishing on our Coasts, whereby they have a Seminary of 15000 Sailors and Mariners, ready for any publick Service: all which maintain treble that number of Men, Women, and Children, of several Trades upon the Land.

Fourthly, That for the holding up of this Trade, the said Hollanders, inhabiting a Tract of Land not so big as many of our Shires, do build 1000 Sail of Ships yearly; and thereby furnishing all the parts of the world (even as far as Brasil) with our Commodities; returning home those of other Countries in exchange thereof, which they sell to us many times at their own prices.

Fifthly, That the said Hollanders (as appeared upon computation) made in one year of the Herrings only, caught upon these Coasts, the sum of 5 Millions of our pounds, (the Customs and tenth Fish advancing to the publick Treasury no less than 800000 l. Sterling;) it being thought, that the Herrings caught by those of the Hanse Towns, and other Nations, amount to as great a sum as that.

Sixthly, and finally, That by erecting only 250 Brecks, (Vessels of great Bulk and Stowage, but not swift of sail) for the Herring Fishing, (which is not a sixth part of those which are employed yearly by the Hollanders neither at the publick charge of the State of England, or private

Adv.

Adventurers thereto authorized and regulated, there would be found employment yearly for 1000 ships, and at least 20000 Mariners and Fishers at Sea, and consequently for as many Tradesmen and Labourers at Land; by means whereof, besides the vindication of our credit now at such a loss, there would arise in Customs, Tonnage, Poundage, and other Impots, no less than 300000 l. per Annum to the publick Treasury. The prosecution of which Project (if not in greater proportion than that before) as it was once designed by Mr. Attorney Noy my much honoured Friend, to do I heartily commend it to the Care of the State, and to his Successors in that Office, as the fittest remembrancers to advance it: there being no readier way than this to make the people wealthy, and the Nation formidable.

For notwithstanding these advantages of Fish, the Diet of England is, for the most part Fleish; in London only there are no fewer than 67500 Beefs, and 675000 Sheep slain, and uttered in a year, besides Calves, Lambs, Hogs-flesh, and Poulterers ware. To prove this, suppose there be in London 60 Butchers Free of the City, whereof every one, and one with another, killeth an Ox a day, as at least they do. Then reckon (as the London Butchers do affirm) that the Foreigners in the Suburbs and Villages sell four for their one. Lastly, count for every Ox ten Sheep, (for this is also certainly known) to be killed and sold, and you have both the numbers above-mentioned. The Earl of Goudomar, once the Spanish Liege here, having in some former City days seen the several Shambles of this great Market, said to them who made the discovery with him, That there was more Fleish eaten in a Month at that Town, than in all Spain in a year. Now had I his skill who by the length of Hercules Foot, found out the proportion of his whole body, I might by this provision of fleish consumed in the head, guess at the quantity of that which is spent in the body of the Realm: But this I leave to be determined by an after hand. The usual and natural drink of the Country is Beer, so called from the French word Boire, (for Wines they have none of their own growing, as before is said) which, without contrivance, is a most wholesome and nourishing Beverage: and being transported into France, Belgium, and Germany, by the working of the Sea is so purged, that it is among them in highest estimation; celebrated by the name of la bonne Biere d'Angleterre. And as for the old drink of England, Ale, which cometh from the Danish word Oela, it is questionless in itself, (and without that commixture which some are accused to use with it) a very wholesome drink; however it pleased a Poet in the time of Henry the Third, thus to dificant on it:

*Nescio quid monstrum Stygiae conforne paludi,
Cervicium plerique vocant; nil piscium illa
Dum bibitur, nil clarius est dum mingitur; ergo Constat quod multas Ecce in ventre relinquit.*

In English thus;

Of this strange drink so like the Stygian Lake, Men call it Ale, I know not what to make.
Folk drink it thick, and pils it very thin;
Therefore much Dregs must needs remain within.

Now to conclude this general discourse concerning England, there goes a tale, that Henry the seventh (whose breeding had been low and private) being once pressed by some of his Council, to peruse his title unto France, returned this Answer: That France indeed was a flourishing and gallant Kingdom; but England in his mind was a fine Seat for a Country Gentleman, as any could be found in Europe.

Having said thus long in taking a Survey of the Country it self, together with the chief commodities and pleasures of it; and amongst them of the Women also (as the method of the old Verse led me on: it is now time that we should look upon the men. And they are commonly of a comely feature, gracious countenance, for the most part gray-eyed, pleasant, beautiful, courteous, and much resembling the Italians in habit and pronunciation. In matters of War, (as we are ready to prove) they are both able to endure, and resolute to undertake the hardest enterprises: in peace quiet, and not quarrelsome; in advice or counsel, sound and speedy. Finally, they are active, hearty, and cheerful. And yet I have met with some Gentlemen, who upon the strength of a little travel in France, have grown to un-Englished (and so affected or besotted rather on the French Nation) that they affirm the English in respect of the French, to be an heavy, dull, and Phlegmatick people; of no dispatch, no mettle, no conceit, no audacity, and I know not what not. A vanity, meriting rather my pity, than my anger. Perhaps in vilifying their Nation, they had consulted with Tullius Scalliger, who in the 16. Cap. of his 3d Book De re pectiva, giveth of the two most noble Nations, English and Scottish, this base and unmanly Character, Gothi bellae, Scoti non minus Angli perfidi, infasti, ferri, contemptores, solidi, amantes, inopes, inhospitaliter, immanes. His bolt (you see) is soon shot, and so you may happily guess at the quality of the Archer. A man indeed of an able learning, but of his own worth so highly conceited, that if his too much learning made him not mad, yet it made him to be too preeminent and arrogant. To revenge a National disgrace on a Personal is an ignoble victory. Besides Socrates resolution in the like kind in my opinion was very judicious, et si meo indolent, idcirco an ducit videri puer; If an Afs kick us, we must not put him in the Court. To confute his sentence in every point, would be to him too great an honour, and for me too great a trouble; it being a task, which of it self would require a volume. The best is, many should make the burden light; and other Nations are as deeply engaged in this quarrel against that proud Man, as ours: for so maliciously hath he there taxed all other people, that that Chapter might more properly have been placed among his Hypercriticks.

How the English and Germans, which of all Nations are thought most given to their bellies; do agree and differ in this point; the same Scalliger hath thus shewed in one of his Epigrams.

*Tres sunt Comedae, Germanus, Flander & Anglus; Dic quis edat melius; quis melius bibat.
Non comedit Germanus, bibit; tu non bibis Angle, Sed comedis; comedis Flander, bibisq; bene.*

Dutch, Flemmings, English, are your only guests;
Say which of all doth eat, or drink it best.
Th' English love most to eat, the Dutch to swill;
Only the Flemmings eat and drinks his fill.

Thus was it in his time with the English Nation; though since, I fear, we have borrowed too much of the Dutch, and learnt a great deal more than needs of the Flemmings also.

This Nobility of this Country is not so much unlimited Power, as they are (to the prejudice of the State) in other Countries; the name of Dukes, Earls, and Marquesses, being merely titular: whereas in other places they have some absolute, some mixt Government, so that upon any little distast, they will stand on their own guards, and fight the power of their Sovereign. And on the other side, the Commonalty enjoy a multitude of Privileges above the other Nations; being most free from Taxes, and burdensome Impositions, but what they take upon themselves by their own consent. They were twice in a year (a laudable custom no where else to be seen) Justice administered even at their own doors, by the Itinerary Judges of the Kingdom: an Order first instituted by King Henry the second. They dwell together with the Gentlemen, in Villages, and Towns, which makes them favour of civility and good manners: and live in far greater reputation, than the Yemen in Italy, Spain, France, or Germany; being able to entertain a stranger honestly, diet him plentifully, and lodge him neatly.

The Clergy was once of very great riches, as appeareth by that Bill preferred to King Henry the fifth, against the temporal Revenues of the Church; in which it was suggested, that they were able to maintain 15 Earls, 1500 Knights, 6000 men of Arms, more than 1000 Almshouses, and yet the King might clearly put up 20000 l. per Annum into his Exchequer. How true this was, I cannot say. But after this, King Henry the eighth took his Opportunities, to pare away the excrecences of it; demolishing the Monasteries, and Religious Houses, and paring off the superfluities of Bishopsricks and Cathedral Churches: in which he found not a few followers among the Ministers and great Officers of State, and Court, in the time of King Edward the sixth, and Queen Elizabeth. Yet if they not the Clergy to poor and naked, or destitute of the encouragements and rewards of learning, but that they have been till the objects of a covetous envy, (that which the former Harries left them, being thought too much) thought for abilities of Learning (I dare boldly say it) not to be paralleld in the World. For besides 5439 Parochial Benefices, being no Improprations; and besides the Vicarages, most of which exceed the competency beyond the Seas; there was left in England at the time of the Reformation under Queen Elizabeth. 26 Bishopsricks, (taking those of Wales into the reckoning) 26 Deaneries, 60 Archdeaconries, and 444 Dignities and Prebends; most of which, places of fair Revenue. And as for the maintenance of Priests, Monks, and Friars, before the Reformation there were reckoned 90 Colleges, besides those in the Universities, 100 Hospitals, 3374 Chantries and Free Chapells, and 645 Abbies and Monasteries: more than half of which had above the yearly income of 200 l. in old Rents, many above 2000, and some 4000 almost. So studious were our Ancestors both in those times of blindness, and these of a clearer light, to encourage men to learning, and then reward it.

The Souldiery of England is either for the Land or for the Sea. Our Victories by Land are most apparent over the Irisls, Scots, Cyprits, Turks, and especially French, whose Kingdom hath been fore shaken by the English many times, especially twice by King Edward the Third, and Henry the Fifth: this latter making for absolute a conquest, that Charles the seventh, like a poor Roy d'Judee, confined himself to Bourges, where (having cashier'd his retinue) he was found in a little Chamber at Supper, with a Napkin only laid before him, a rump of Mutton, and two Chickens. And so redoubted even after our expulsion from France, (our civil dissensions rather causing that expulsion than the Frenchmens valour) was the English name in that Country: that in the Wars between King Charles the Eighth, and the Duke of Bretagne, the Duke, to strike a terror into his enemies appalled 1500 of his own Subjects, in the Arms and Cross of England. But as the Afs, when he had on the Lions Skins, was for all that but an Afs and no Lion: so these Britons, by the weak resistance they made against their Enemies, shew'd that they were indeed Britons, and no Englishmen. Spain also tasted the valour of our Land-Souldiers, when John of Gaunt purfuing his Title to Spain, was sent home with 8 Waggonss laden with Gold, and an Annual Pension of 10000 marks; as also when the Black Prince re-established King Peter in his Throne. And then also did they acknowledge, though they felt not the puissance of the English, when Ferdinand the Catholic surprized the Kingdom of Navarre. For there were then in Fontarabia, a Town of Guipuzcoa, 6000 English Foot, who lay there to joyn with this Ferdinand in an Expedition against France. Concerning which, Guiccardius gives this Item, That the Kingdom of Navarre was yielded rather for the fear and reputation of the English Forces than by hands, than by any puissance of the King of Arragon. Since those times the Spaniards much esteemed us, as appeareth by this Speech of theirs to our Souldiers at the Siege of Amiens, Tou are tall Souldiers, and therefore when you come down into the Trenches, we double our guards, and look for blows; but as for those safe and cowardly French, when they come, we make account we have nothing to do, but play, or sleep on our Rampart. The like the Netherlands can testify; only this is the grief of it; The English are like Pyrrhus, King of Epirus, fortunate to conquer Kingdoms, but unfortunate to keep them. Not to say any thing of the late, but great experience, which the English Souldiery hath gotten by the Civil Broils among themselves; at which my heart is ake, and my hand to tremble, that I shall only add in the words of Lucan,

*Hec! quantum potius caeli pelagique paravis,
Hoc quem Civiles fuderunt sanguine dextra!*

That is to say,

How much both Sea and Land might have been gain'd
By their dear blood, which Civil wars have drain'd!

As for their power and valour at Sea, it may evidently be perceived in the Battel of Selso, wherein King Edward the 3d; with 200 Ships, overcame the French Fleet consisting of 500 Sail; of which he sunk 200 and flew 30000 Souldiers. Secondly, at the Battel in 88, wherein a few of the Queens Ships vanquished the invincible Armada of the King of Spain consisting of 134 great Gallies, and Ships of extraordinary biguels. Sir Francis Drake with 4 Ships took from the Spaniard one million and 182000 Ducats in one Voyage, An. 1587. And again with 25 Ships he awed the Ocean, sacked S. Jago, S. Dominio, and Carthagena; carrying away him, besides Treasure, 240 Pieces of Ordnance. I omit the Circumnavigation of the whole World by this Drake and Candlish, and the voyage to Cales: as also how one of the Queens Ships named the Revenge, in which Sir Richard Greenville was Captain, with 180 Souldiers (whereof 90 were sick on the balaft) maintained a sea fight for 24 hours against above 50 of the Spanish Gallies. And though at last after her Powder was spent to the last barrel, she yielded upon honourable terms; yet she was never brought into Spain: having killed in that fight more than 10000 of their Souldiers, and sunk four of their greatest Vessels. I omit also the discovery of the Northern passages, by Hugh Willoughby, Davis, and Forsbergh; concluding with that of Keckermans, Hoc certum est, omnibus hodie gentibus navigandi indivisa & perita superioris est Anglor: & post Anglos, Hollandos. Though now I know not by what neglect, and discontinuance of those honourable employments the Hollanders begin to brave us of our ancient Glories, and would fain account themselves Lords of the Seas, and probably had been so indeed, had not his Majesty by the timely re-inforcing of his Naval Power, An. 1636. recovered again the Dominion of it.

The English language is a De-compound of Dutch, French, and Latine; which I conceive rather to add to its perfection, than to detract any thing from the worth thereof; since out of every Language we have culled the most significant words, and equally participate of that which is excellent in them; their imperfections being rejected. For it is neither so boylerous as the Dutch, nor so feminine as the French; yet as significant as the Latine, and in the happy conjunction of two words into one little inferior to the Greek.

The Christian Faith was first here planted as some say, by S. Peter and Paul: more probably (as others say) by Joseph of Arimathea, whose body they find to have been interred in the Isle of Avallonia where the Abbey of Glastonbury after stood. But that of his plantation being almost rooted out by long Persecutions, and no supply of Preachers sent from other places; Lucius a King of Britain (and the first Christian King of Europe) An. 180. or thereabouts, sent his Ambassadors to Eusebius the then Pope of Rome to be furnished with a new supply of Pastors, if not to plant, yet at the least to water, and confirm the Gospel planted here before; but almost rooted out again by prevailing Gentilism. At which time Lucius did not only receive the Faith himself, but by the piety of his example, and the diligence of the first Preachers sent from Rome (being both of them natural Britons) it spread by little and little over all his Dominions; and in some tract of time over all the Island. Which being thus recovered to the Faith of Christ, was forthwith furnished with Bishops and Metropolitans, according to the number of the Provinces and principal Cities (twenty eight in all) continuing here as long as Christianity it self. For not to trust herein to the authority of the British History, we find three Bishops of this Isle subscribing to the Council of Arles, An. 314. viz. Eborac Bishop of York, Restitus Bishop of London, and Adelfus Bishop of Colechester, there called Colonia Londinensium; and some of them also present in the Council of Sardica, An. 358. concurring with the rest in voting to the condemnation of the Arian Heretics: and the same or others the next year in the Synod of Arimin. And when the Britains were expelled their native Country, or shut up in the mountainous parts of the Oradoires, and Silures, which we now call Wales; they carried Christianity and Bishops along with them: Augustine the Monk finding no fewer than seven Bishops in the British Church, when he was sent by Gregory the Great to convert the English. And yet it is no fabulous vanity, (as some men suppose) to say that Augustine the Monk first Preached the Gospel in England; because it must be understood, not with Relation to the Britains, but the English Saxons: from whom these parts of the Isle had the name of England; and from whom both the Britains, and the Faith it self were driven into the Mountains of Wales and Cornwall, and Heatenism introduced again over all the Kingdom. Long after which it pleased God, that Gregory the Great, (but at that time a Deacon only in the Church of Rome) seeing some handson youths to be fold in open Market, demanded what and whence they were: to whom it was answered they were Angli: and well may they be so called (said he) for they deem as Angels. Asking again of what Province they were amongst the Angli; and answer being made of the Province of Deira (part of the Kingdom of the Northern Britons) I therefore (said he) De ira Dei tunc liberandi. And lastly understanding that the King of their Nation was named Ale; how fitly (said he) may he sing Alleluia to the most High God: After which time he seriously endeavoured the Conversion of the English Nation; which, being Pope, he happily effected, by the travel and diligence of Augustine the Monk, the first Archbishop of Canterbury. And so well did the work prosper after this beginning, that not only all the Saxons did receive the Gospel, but communicated the Light of it to other Nations: the Hassians, Francia, and Thuringians, being converted by Winfred; the Frisons or Hollanders by Witkind the first Bishop of Utrecht; the Saxons of Westphalen, by Weldrode, the first Bishop of Crene; all of them being English Saxons, as we find in Beda and some others.

Now as these parts of Britain were the first which generally entertained the Gospel, so were they the first also in these latter times, which universally submitted to the Reformation of such corruptions, as had been brought upon them by the power and tyranny of the Church of Rome. Endeavoured first in France, by the Abissens, and Waldenses, as was said before. Who being suppressed and ruined by the Sword of the King of France, sheltered themselves in the mountainous parts of Galsigne and Guienne, then in possession of the English; who by that means became acquainted with their Zeal; who by them here publicly by Wiclef, and spreading under-hand amongst the people of this Kingdom, till the times of Luther and the Reformation by him aimed at. Which being in most other Countries received tumultuously, by the power of the people; was here admitted upon mature deliberation, by the authority and consent of the Prince and Prelates; in this great work, without respect unto the Dictates of Luher or Calvin, looking only on Gods Words and the Primitive Patterns, abolishing such things as were repugnant unto either, but still retaining such Ceremonies in Gods publick worship, as were agreeable to both, and had been countenanced by the practice of the Primitive times. A point wherein they did observe a greater measure of Christian prudence and moderation, than their neighbour Churches; which in a meer detestation of the See of Rome, allowed of nothing which had formerly been in use amongst them, because defiled with Papish Errors and abuses: and thereby utterly averting those of the Papal party from joining with them in the work, or coming over to them when the work was done. Whereas had they continued an allowable correspondence in these extrinsecals of Religion, with the Church of Rome; their party in the world had been far greater, and not so much stomached as it is. And so it was conceived by the Marquess de Rhodis, after Duke of Sully, and Lord High-Treasurer of France, and one of the chief men of that party there: when being sent Ambassador to King James, from King Henry the fourth, he had observed the Majesty and Decency of Gods publick Service, in some Cathedral of this Kingdom; Religion would be soon defeated and trod under foot if not preserved and fenced about with the hedge of Ceremonies.

As for the Government of the Church since the last Conversion, as by the piety and example of Lucius, there were founded three Archbishopsricks, and 25 Bishopsricks, according to the number of the Arch-Bishopricks, and Flamines (whose great Revenues were converted to more sacred uses in the times of Idolatry:) So by the like pious care of Pope Gregory the Great, by whose means this last Conversion happened; Archbishopsricks, and Bishopsricks were designed to convenient places. The number 26 in all, to each Province twelve, besides the two Archbishopsricks and Metropolitans: wherein he had the happiness to have his desires fulfilled, though the number was not made complete till these later days, nor with such equal distribution, as he did intend. For in the Province of Tork, laid waste and desolate by the Danes, and not so soon converted as the other was; the number of the Suffragan

l. I. Bishops

The third and last Division, though the second in course of time, is that of Shires made by King Alfride, both for the easier Administration of justice; and to prevent such Outrages and Robberies, as (after the example of the Danes) the natural Inhabitants of the Realm began in all places to commit. For over every one of these Shires or Counties, there was appointed a certain Chief Magistrate, called a Sheriff; who had under him divers Officers,

Counties, he appointed an High Sheriff and divers Under Sheriffs, to see into the behaviour of private men, and to punish such as were delinquent : and in times of war either already begun, or intended, he instituted a Posse Comitatus : to whom he gave authority to see their officers, their provision of arms, and if occasion served, to punish such as rebelled or mutined. This wife King ordained also, that his Subjects should be divided into tens or tithings, every of which severally should give bond for the good appearing of each other; and he who was of that diffolute behaviour, that he could not be admitted to these tithings, was forthwith conveyed to the house of correction. By this course every man was not only careful of his own actions, but had an eye to all the nine for whom he stood bound, as the nine had over him : inasmuch that a poor girl might travel safely with a bag of Gold in her hand, and none durst meddle with her. The ancientest of these 10 men were called xxv tything-men, the Tithing-men, 10 of the nighest and neighbouring tithings, made the lesser Division which we call hundreds : which name cannot be derived from the like name of Villages, for none of our hundreds are so large : and of them there is in Berkshire, which containeth five hundreds only. We have then a division of the Realm into 40 Shires ; of the Shires into divers hundreds, and of the hundreds into ten tithings. And this division made by Affrids still remains in force : as also doth the High Sheriff, and the rest of the subordinate Officers of the High Sheriff confining especially at this time, in executing Arrests, afflicting the Itinerary Judges, gathering the Kings Fines and Amerciaments, and railing the Tolls-Comitatus if occasion be. But for the Civil part of government in the several Counties it is most in the hands of such as we call Justices of the Peace, authorized by Commission under the great Seal of England : appointed first by that prudent Prince King Edward the first, by the name of Justices Pacis, Guardians of the Peace, and first, called Justices of the Peace in the 36. of King Edward the 3d. Cap. 11. A form of Government so much conducing to the propriety of the Country, and the security of the People ; that King James the first Monarch of Great Britain, established it by law in the Kingdom of Scotland. Then for the Courts which are still kept in every shire, they are either the County Court holden every month, wherein the Sheriff or his sufficient deputy commonly presideth ; or the Affices and court of Goal-delivery held twice a year by the Justices Itinerant affixed by the Justices of the Peace and other in Commission with them. There are also two Offices in every hundred chosen out of the Townsmen, whom we call the Constable of the hundred : who receiving the Precepts or Warrants of the Sheriff, or Justices, dispatcheth them to the Tithing-man or Pent Constable of each Town, and Village, in their several Divisions. And in each hundred, a Court kept once in three weeks, by the Steward of the hundred, or his Deputy, capable of Pleas or Actions under the value of 40s. though in some few of these Courts also (as in that of Slough in hundred in Gloucestershire) the value of the Action, by some special Charter, be left unlimited. The like Court also holden in some ancient Burroughs. And besides these, in every Village are two lesser Courts, and these two holden twice a year if occasion be, held by the Steward of the Manor is Enquiry made into which called the Court Leet, there is Enquiry made into Treasons, Felonies, Murders, and other Cafes, falling between the King and the Subject ; and in the other, which we call by the name of Court-Baron, such only as concern the Lord and Tenants, and these last for the most part founded at the will of the Lord: So that Comines had (we see) good reason for this Affirmation, that of all the Signories in the World that ever be knew, the Realm of England was the Country in which the Common-wealth was best governed.

To return again into the Shires, some of them take their names from the old Inhabitants, as Cumberland and from the Cymbris or ancient Britains, Essex, and Suffex, from the Eaft and South Saxons: some from the fiteuation of them, as Northumberland, Northfolc, Southfolc, Devonshire this laft is fo called from Devina, a Welch or Britifh word fignifying Low Vallies, of which it very much confifteth: Some from the form or figure of them, as Cornwall, from the refemblance which it hath to an horn; and Kent, (in Latine, Cantium) becaufe it lyeth in a Ganton or Corner of the Iland. Some from fome Accidents therein, as Berkshire, or Berackshire, from the abundance of Bee, which the Saxons call by the name of Bee: the moft part from the principal Town of all the County, as Gloucefter, Oxford, and the like. Of thefe Shires the biggeft beyond all compare, is the County of York, out of which 70000 men may be raied for prefent fervice, if need fo require. And in them all are comprehended 8709 Parifhes befides thofe of Waler not reckoning in fuch Chappels as we call Chappels of Eafe, in greatnels not inferior to many Parifhes; 22 Cities, 585 Market Towns which have no Cities; and in the Towns and Villages to the number of 144 Castles, or ruines of Castles; few of them places of importance, and fuch as are belonging generally to the Kings, who fuffer not any of their Subjects to neet themfelves in Strong Holds and Castles.

Cities of most observation in it, i. London, seated on the Thames, by which divided into two parts, conjoined together by a stately and magnificent Bridge, spoken of before. The River capable in this place of the greatest Ships, by means whereof it hath been reckoned a long time for one of the most Famous Mart-Towns in Christendom: and not long since, had so much got pre-eminence of all the rest, that the greatest part of the wealth of Europe were driven up that River. A City of great Note in the time of the Roman Conquest; to whom it was first known by the name of Londonium: a Town at that time of great Trade and Riches; and by them honoured with the Title of Augusta. Increased of late very much in Buildings: contiguous to some Towns and Villages, from which in former times disjoyined by some distant intervals. So that the circuit may contain 8 miles at least: in which space are 132 Parish Churches; the Palace of the King, the Houses of the Nobility, Colledges for the Study of the Laws, I mean not the Civil Law, which is Jus Gentium, but (as we call it) the Common Law, appropriate only to this Kingdom. It is wondrous populous, containing well nigh 60000 people; which number is much augmented in the Term time. Some compare London with Paris thus: London is the richer, the more populous; and more ancient; Paris the greater, more uniform, and better fortified. But for my part, as I do not think that London is the more populous, so neither can I grant that Paris is the greater City, except we measure them by the Walls. For taking in the Suburbs of both, and all that passeth in Account by the name of London: I cannot but conceive, that if London were cast into the same orbicular figure, the circumference of it would be larger than that of Paris. For uniformity of Building, Paris indeed doth go beyond it; but may in that be equalled also in some tract of time; if the Defign begun in King James his Reign, tending to the advancement of such Uniformity, be not interrupted.

For

For other things, certain it is that London is the antienter City, as being an Archbishops's See in the time of the Brittain, when the name of Paris was scarce heard of ; a Bishops See at the first conversion of the Saxons : increased so much in wealth and honour from one Age to another, that it is grown at last too big for the Kingdom ; which whither it may be profitable for the State, or not, may be made a question. Great Towns in the body of a State, are like the Spleen or Milt in the body natural, the monstrous growth of which impoverisheth all the rest of the Members, by drawing to it all the animal and vital spirits, which should give nourishment unto them : And in the end cracked or furcharged by its own fulcile, not only feeds unwholful fumes and vapours unto the head, and heavy pains unto the heart, but draws a consumption on it self. And certainly the overgrowth of great Cities is of dangerous consequence, not only in regard of Famine, such multitudes of Mouths not being easily to be fed : but in respect of the irreparable danger of Injurations, if once those multitudes, sensible of their own strength, oppressed with want, or otherwise distempered with faction or discontent, should gather to an head, and break out into action. Yet thus much may be said to the honour of London, though grown by much too big now for the Kingdom, that it is generally so well governed, and in so good peace, that those Murders, Robberies, and Outrages so frequent in great and populous Cities beyond the Seas : are here seldom heard of. 2. York in the West Riding of that Country, the second City of England, as the old Verse hath it :

Londinum caput est & Regni urbs prima Britanni,
Eboracum à prima jure secunda venit.

That is to say,

In England, London is the chiefeſt Town;
The ſecond place Tork claimeth as its own.

And fo it may, being indeed the fecond City of the Kingdom, both for fame and greatness. A pleafant, large and hatefully City, well fortified and beautifully adorned, as well with private as publick Edifices ; and rich, and populous withal. Situated upon the River Oufe, or Eure, which divides it in twain ; both parts being joyned together with a fair ftone Bridge, confifting of high and mighty Arches. A City of great elevation in the time of the Romans, the Metropolis of the whole Province or Diocefs of Britain ; remarkable for the death and burial of the Emperour Severus, and the birth of Conftantine the Great ; by confequence the Seat of the Primate of the Britifh Church, as long as Chriftianity did remain amongst them, Nor ftrooped it lower when the Saxons had received the Faith : and notwithstanding thofe mutations which befel this Kingdom, under the Saxons, Danes, and Normans, it fell preferved its ancient luftre, and increafed it too. Adorned with a ftately and magnificent Cathedral, inferior to few in Europe ; and with a Palace of the Kings, (called the Manor-houfe) the dwelling in thefe later days, of the Lord Preſident of the Court or Council here eſtabliſhed by K. Henry the 8th, for the benefit of the Northern Subjects, after the manner of a French Parliament, or Preſidial Sieges. 3. Briſtol, the third in rank of the Cities of Eng-land, ſituate on the meeting of the Frowe and Avon, not far from the influx of the Severn into the Ocean : in that regard commodiouſly feated for Trade and Traffick ; the Ships with full fail coming into the City, and the Citizens with as full purſes trading into moſt parts of the World, with good Faith and Fortune. A Town exceeding populous, and exceeding cleanly, there being Sevens made under ground, for the conveyance of all filth and natimets, into the Rivers. Churches it hath to the number of 18 or 20, reckoning in the Cathedral, and that of Raciliff. The Cathedral first built by Rob. Fitz-Harding, Son to a King of Denmark, once a Burger here, and by him foreord with Canons Regular, Ann. 1248, but made a Bishop-See by King Henry the 8th, Ann. 1548. The principal building next the Church, is an ancient Cathedral, a piece of which strength, that Maud the Emperess having took King Stephen Prisoner, thought it the safest place to secure him in. 4. Nerwich, the fourth City of the first rank, of which more hereafter. 5. Oxford, the first of the second rank of English Cities feated upon the Ouse, or Ifa: but whether so called as Fadell, Idios, Uel, or dor, or the Ford of Ouse; or Fa-la-boun (as the Greeke had their *Belphe*re in former times) I determine not. Ancient Town, and anciently made a seat of Learning, co-eval unto that of Paris, if not before it; the University herof being restored rather than first founded by K. Alured, an. 806 after it had been overborn a while by the Danish Furies; but herof as an University, more anon. This only now, that for the stateliness of the Schools and publick Library, the bravery and beauty of particular Colleges, all built of fair and polished stones, the liberal endowment of those houses, and notable encouragements of Industry and Learning in the salary of the Professors in most Arts and Sciences; it is not to be parallell'd in the Christian World. The City of it self well built, and as pleasantly seated, formed in the Figure of a Cross, two long streets thwarting one another, each of them near a mile in length; containing in that compais, 19 Parish Churches, and a See Episcopal founded here by King Henry the 8th, Ann. 1541. The honourable Title of twenty of the noble Family of the Ferres, now Earl of Oxon. 6. Salisbury, first feated on the Hill, where now stands old Salisbury, the Sorbidudunum of the Ancients. But the Cathedral being removed down into the Vale, the Town quickly followed, and grew up very suddenly into great Renown; pleasantly feated on the Avon. (a name common to many English Rivers) which watereth every street thereof; and for the populousness of the place, plenty of Provisions, numbers of Churches, a spacious Market-place, and a fair Town-hall, esteemed the second City of all the Wef. 7. Glocester, by Amenie called Gloem, by the Britains Cair Glow, whence the present name; the Saxons adding Ceffer, as in other places. A fine neat City, pleasantly feated on the Severn, with a large Key or Wharf on the banks thereof, very commodious to the Merchandize and trade of the place: well built, consisting of fair large Streets, beautified with a fair Cathedral; for the magnificence of the Quire, elegance of the Cloisters, and gratiouness of the Bell tower there scarce to be followed in the Kingdom: and situate in such a Vale, that there is nothing wanting to the use of man except only Wine, which life or luxury may require. 8. Chester, upon the River Dee, built in the manner of a quadrate, inclosed with a Wall, which takes up more than two miles in compais; containing in that compais 12 Parish Churches, and an old Cathedral dedicated anciently to S. Werburg. Daughter of Welfre, K. of the Mercians, and the Vitricels of all the Monasteries of England. But made a Bishop's See by King Henry the 8th. The buildings generally fair, the Streets wide and open, with Galleries before every door under which a man may walk dry from one to the other. The rest of chief note shall be specified on another occasion, with this advertisement, that the ordinary Cities of England are not to be compared with those of France and Italy: First becaufe the Nobles and Gentry of those Countries live for the most part in the Cities, ours in the Country-Villages; and secondly, becaufe the Londoners to ingrois all trading, that they draw thither all the Wealth and treasure of the Kingdom. By means whereof that every day increaseth in wealth and beauty; the rest (except Brigflon) do decay as sensibly: that City being like the Spleen in the body natural, the moi- tuous growth whereof staueth all the rest of the Mem- bers. Liene excrefcence, reliquum corpus comabescit, as the Doctors have it.

There are in England but two Univerfities, which may equal six, nay ten of all other Countries (so that Paris be not in the number) most of them being no better than our Colleges of Westminster, Eton, or Wincheſter; and none ſo liberally endowed, as ſome one of thoſe in the Univer- ſities. Of which there are 16 in Cambridge, ſome of them called only by the name of Halls, but theſe endowed with Lands and Fellowſhips as the others are. In Oxford there are 18 Colleges endowed with Lands, beſides ſix Halls, where Students live at their own charges in both of them Profeſſors of the Arts and Sciences, as alſo of Divinity; Law, Phyſick, and the Learned Languages, with liberal Salaries, and each to the number of 3000 Students; ſo regular in their lives and converſation, as are not to be found in the World beſides. The fairer and more an- cient, Oxford, which of long time, together with Paris in France, Bononia in Italy, and Salamanca in Spain, hath been honoured with the Title of Generale Studium. For that the Univerſity of Cambridge, (though giving upper hand to her Siſter of Oxford, the may take place of all the Univerſities in the World beſides) is not ſo long ſtanding as that of Oxford, is evident by the teſtimony of Roberts de Remington, cited by Maſter Camden, viz. Reg- name Edwardo primo, (it ſhould rather be read ſecundo: de ſtudij Granbridge ſatis eſt Academia, ſeu Oxonium: where the word ſeu doth not import an identity of the time; but a relation to Oxford, as to the pattern. We ſee this truth yet clearer in the Bull of Pope John the 21, the contemporary of our Edward the Second, as I find in the work of that great ſearcher of Academic Antiquities Mr. Brian Twiſſ Apollis Auctoritate ſtatuimus (ſaith the Bull) quod Collegium Maſſiliorum & Scholarium ejus- dem ſtudij (ſpeaking of Cambridge) Univerſitas ſit conſe- cranda, &c. But what need more than the Reſolution of the Commons of the firſt Parliament holden under K. James? For when the Clerk of that Houſe had put the name of Cambridge before Oxford; they taking diſdainfully that Hyſteron Proteron, commanded the Antiquities of both Univerſities to be ſearched, and after ſearch made, gave the place to Oxford. But to proceed the Univerſity of Cambridge as it was much of later Foundation, ſo was it long before it grew into eſteem: inſomuch, that when William of Waiſſefle Biſhop of Wincheſter, and Founder of Magdalen College in Oxon, (whereof I was once an unworthy Member) perſuaded King Henry the Sixth to erect a College in Oxford, as ſome of the Kings his Predeceſſors had done before him: imò potius Cantabrigia (replied the King) ut duas fieri poſſit in Anglia Aca- demias habere. Now, ſaith the King in Cambridge rather, that ſo, if poſſible, I may have two Univerſities in my Realm of England.

As for the Story of this Country, that it was firſt peo- pled out of Gaul, is affirmed by Cæſar, and proved by ma- ny ſtrong and concludng Arguments; as their Religion, Manners, Languages, Customs, and the nearneſs of the one to the other. To omit therefore the Fable of Brute, and the Catalogue of 68 Kings, which are ſaid to have reigned here ſucceſſively before the coming of the Romans: Certain it is, that Cæſar found the Country cantoned in- to many Kingdoms (four in Ken alone) and the people to be very rude and illiterate. Such Learning as they had was locked up in the breaſts of the Druides; who commit- ted nothing unto Writing, and by that means kept the People in continual ignorance: communicating what they knew to none but thoſe of their own Order, and therein being taught to by the Druides or Priests of Gaul: who came over into this Iſland to them, and did from them re- ceive the knowledge of their ſacred Myſteries. Being con- quered or diſcovered rather by Julius Cæſar, it was not ſo much as looked after by the two next Emperors: Auguſtus and Tiberius counting it an high point of Wiſdom, not to extend the Empire beyond the Ocean Caligula had once a mind to the Adventure, but he durſt not follow it: But Claudius, his Succeſſor, undertook the Enterprize, ſolli- cited thereunto by Bericus a noble Briton, who for ſedition and ſome practices againſt the publick, was expelled the Country. Hereupon Aulus Plautius was ſent over with ſome Roman Forces, by whom and P. Oſtorius Scapula, his Succeſſor, Conſtantinus and Caracalla two Kings of the Britains, were ſeverally overcome in battle, a Roman Co- lony planted at Camolodunum, (now Maldon in Esſex) and the Southern parts thereof reduced to the form of a Province. After this time by little and little the whole was conquered, as far as to the Fyries of Dunbarton and Edenburgh. Agricola in the time of Domitian, having the happineſs and good fortune to go beyond the furtheſt of his Predeceſſors; and to much moderation not to venture further, where there was nothing to begot but blows, cold, and hunger.

At the firſt entrance of the Romans, the Iſland was di- vided into ſeveral Nations, each governed by its own Kings and particular Princes, different in their ends and counſels, and ſo more eaſily ſubdued by united Forces. The principal of which (for it is needleſs to make mention of inferior Clans) where P. the Danuvii, containing Deuon- ſhire, and Cornwall, whoſe chief Cities were Iſles, now Exeter and Velca near the Town of Palenut in Corn- wall. 2. The Dunwights, inhabiting only in the County of Dorſet; whoſe chief City was Durnovum or Dunnoturum, which we now call Dorcheſter. 3. The Belge, planted in the County of Somereſet, Southern, and Wilt, whoſe chief Cities were Aqua Calida, now Bath; Venta Belgarum, now Wincheſter; and Sorbidunum, the feat of old Salisbury. 4. The Atrebatii, confined within Buck- ſhire only, the chief City of whom was Gualleda, where now is Wallingford. 5. The Regni, poſſeſſed of Wilt and Surrey, whoſe chief Cities were Vindeliſ, now Vincheſter; and Nemagus, ſituate ſome ten miles from London. 6. The Kantiani, or the Kemithi, having Dovernum, now Canterbury; Dubris, now Dover; and Ramp- pie, now called Richborough, for their principal Cities. 7. The Trinobantes of Middleſex, and Esſex, where Lon- don called afterwards Auguſta Trinobantum; and Camolodunum the firſt Roman Colony, now called Maldon, the Seat-Royal of Canobelinus, King of the Trinobantes in the time of the Romans. 8. The Cariaceni, dwelling in the Counties of Buckingham, Bedford, and Harford, whoſe Towns of moſt importance were Magiſtinum, now called Dunſtable; and Verulamium, (near S. Albans) the ſtrong- eſt Hold the Britains had in their Wars with Cæſar. 9. The Icenii, living in the Counties of Suffolk, Norfolk, Hunting- don, and Cambridge; their principal Cities being Villa Faſſingii, now S. Edmundsbury; Sito-Agæus, now Ther- ſford; Durois, now Godmancheſter; and Canbarion, or Cambridge. 10. Coritani, who took up the whole Coun- ties of Lincoln, Leiceſter, Rutland, Nottingham, North- hampton, and Darby; principal Towns of which were Lindum, now Liſcoln; Rhaſe, where now is Leiceſter; Gualleda not far from Stamford, now called Brigs-Ca- ſtella; Ageſcolis, now Littleborough, a ſmall Village near ſterton; Ageſcolis, now Littleborough, a ſmall Village near Newark upon Trent; Triptonum, now Toreſter, not far from Northampton. 11. The Brigantes, the greateſt Na- tion of the Iſland, filling all Yorkſhire, the Biſhoprick of

ham,

Durham, Cumberland, Wefmerland, and the County Pa- latine of Lancaster, in a word all the North of England, (except Northumberland, the dwelling of the (12) Atta- tani, whoſe chief Town was Bremennium, thought now to be Ribcheſter in Riddelſdale.) Principal places of which large and potent Nation were Iſaurium, now Aldborow in the North Riding; Eboracum or York, in the Weſt Rid- ing; and Petruaria thought to be Beverley in the Eaſt Rid- ing of Yorkſhire; Floviolum, where now is Bincheſter, in the Biſhoprick; Epiacum, now Fap Caſtle in Cumberland; Calatun, now Wharfedale Caſtle in Wefmerland; and Rhi- godunum, now Rible-Caſtle in the County Palatine of Lancaster. 13. The Cornavii, ſituated in the Counties of Cheſter, Salop, Worceſter, Stafford, and Warwick, whoſe Principal Towns were Deuonavia, or Legio vicina Vi- trix, now Weſt-Cheſter; Uronium, now Wrexeter, an ignoble Village; Pennocinium, now Penkridge, not far from Stafford; Brannegium, now Percheſter; Mandu- eſſedum, now Mancheſter, on the River Amber. 14. And laſt of all, the Dolui of Oxford, and Glouceſterſhire: Principal Places of the which were Dorcinia, now Dorcheſter, ſeven miles from Oxford, and Corinium, or Cy- rencheſter, near the head of the Thames. Such names as are comprehended under the name of Wales, and Scot- land, ſhall be remembered when we come to ſpeak of thoſe Countries.

Theſe, and the reſt of Wales and Scotland (as far as the Romans did proceed) being once ſubdued, Britain became a Member of the Roman Empire; yet ſo that many of the Tribe had their own Kings, and were ſuffered to govern by their own Law: it being a known Cuſtom amongſt the Romans, as we find in Tacitus, habere ſervitutis in- ſtrumenta & Reges, to permit Kings ſometimes in the conquered Countries, making them instrumental to the peoples bondage. And it ſaid of Lucius Verus the Roman Emperor, that having put an end to the Partian War, Regna Regibus, Provincias Comitibus ſuis reſtituit deſiderio he gave thoſe Kingdoms he had conquered to be ruled by Kings; the Provinces to be governed by Provincial Earls. Kings of which kind were Codrigus and Pratiſagus, ſpoken of by Tacitus: Lucius before men- tioned, the firſt Chriſtian King, and Coilus the Father of Helena, Mother of Conſtantine the great. But as after- ward in the Heptarchie of the Saxons, that King who over- ruled the reſt, and was of moſt power and eſtimation, was called the Monarch of the Engliſh: ſo probable enough it is, that amongſt the Britiſh Kings, who was in moſt credit with the Romans, or of moſt power amongſt his neigh- bours, might be permitted to aſſume the Title of King of Britain. The Catalogue of whom from Caiſſiblane to Conſtantine, I have here ſubjoined, according to the tenor of the Britiſh Hiſtory,

The Kings of Britain after the coming in of the Romans.

A. Ch.

1. Caiſſiblane, King of the Trinobantes, Commander of the Britains in the War againſt Julius Cæſar.
2. Theomantius.
3. Gymbeline.
4. Gaidierus.
45. Arviragus, by Helſer Boſtius, called Pratiſa- gus, in whole time Britain was ſubdued by Aulus Plautius, ſent hither from the Emperor Claudius.
73. 6. Maris.
125. 7. Coilus, the ſuppoſed Founder of Colcheſter.

180. 8. LUCIUS the firſt Chriſtian King of Britain, and of all the World: who dying without Iſſue, left the Roman Emperor his Heir.
207. 9. Severus Emperor of Rome, and King of Brit- ain.
211. 10. Maximus Caracalla, Son of Severus, Emperor of Rome after his Father, who loſt the King- dom of Britain to.
218. 11. Caracalla, a Native of the Iſland; who rebel- ling againſt Caracalla, obtained the King- dom for himſelf.
225. 12. Allectus.
232. 13. Aſclepiodorus.
260. 14. Coilus, II. the Father of Helena.
289. 15. Conſtantius Emperor of Rome, in right of Helena his Wife, ſucceeded on the death of Coilus the 2d.
16. Conſtantine the Great, the Son of Helena and Conſtantius, who added his Elites in Brit- ain to the Roman Monarchy.

But to proceed, Britain being thus made a Member of the Roman Empire, it was at firſt divided into three Pro- vinces only, that is to ſay Britannia prima, (ſo called becauſe firſt ſubdued) containing all the Countries on the South ſide of the Thames, and thoſe inhabited by the Trinobantes, Icenii, and Catioclenii, whoſe Metropolis or chief City was London. 2. Britannia ſecunda, com- priſing all the Nations on the Further ſide of the Severn, whoſe chief City was Caer Leon upon Uk, in the County of Monmouth; and 3. Maxima Caſarienſis, including all the reſt of the Northern border, whereof the Metropolis was York: each Province having ſeveral Cities, 28 in all. Accordingly, the Church conforming to the Platform of the Civil State, there were appointed for the Govern- ment hereof eight and twenty Biſhops, reſiding in thoſe ſeveral Cities: three of the which reſiding in the principal Cities, were honoured with the Title of Metropolitans; and a ſuperiority over all the Biſhops of their ſeveral and reſpective Provinces, and in this ſtate it ſtood till the time of Conſtantine, who in his new moulding of the Empire, altered the bounds, and enlarged the number of the Provinces; adding two more unto and out of the former, viz. Valentia, containing all the Country from the Fryth of Salway, and the Pitt-wall on the South, to the Fyries of Edenburgh and Dunbarton North; and Flavia Caſarienſis, comprehending all between Thames and Humber, the reſt betwixt the Humber and the bounds of Valentia, continuing under the old name of Maxima Caſarienſis, though now made leſs than any of the other four. The number of the Provinces being thus enlarged, he made the whole a full and complete Diviſion of the Roman Empire (whereas Spain had Septimus added to it, as be- fore was heaven) ſubordinate, as Spain was alſo the Pre- feſtus Prætorio Galliarum, and governed by his Vicarius or Lieutenant General. Of which diviſion, or rather ſub- diviſion of the Roman Provinces, there was no other al- teration made in the Eccleſiaſtical government, but that the Britiſh Church became more abſolute and independent than it was before; and had a Primate of its own (as each Diocels had) reſiding in the ſame City with the Vicar or Lieutenant General (which was then at York) of as great power and juuriſdiction in the Iſle of Britain, as any Patriarch of Alexandria, Rome, or Antioch, in their ſeveral Patriarchates. The Metropolitans were no more than before they were: It being ordered by a Ca- non of the Council of Chalcedon, that their number ſhould not be augmented by any alteration made of the Roman Provinces. As for the Forces which the Romans kept here in continual pay, as well to keep their Coaſts and

From

Frontiers against the Enemies, as for retaining of the Natives in their due obedience; they came in all (if Panciv be not mistaken in his reckoning) to 2300 Foot & 2000 Horse: three Legions keeping here there constant and continual Residence, that is to say, the sixth Legion, first named Vidrix, at Tork; the 20th Legion, first named Vidrix, at West-Chester; and the second Legion sometimes at Uca Strunum, which is now Caer Leon upon Uk. Which Legions with their Aids and Coberts, may well make up the number spoken of before. Of so high estimation was this Island in the State of Rome.

Yet could not all these Forces to preserve the Country from foreign Enemies, but that in the declining of the Roman Empire, the Saxons made great spoils on the coasts thereof; as did the Scots and Picts on the Northern borders: against all which the Romans held out well enough, and made good their ground; till the recalling of the Legions out of Britain for defence of Italy it self, then waited and destroyed by the barbarous Nations. Which happened in or about the year of Christ 407, and some 470 years from the first invasion; Honorius being at that time the Roman Emperor, and Vitorinus the last Governor for the Empire, in the Isle of Britain. For though the noble Atius, on the Petition and complaint of the slaughtered people, unmercifully butchered by the Scots and Picts, sent some small Forces to assist them against those Enemies; yet were they presently called back for the defence of Gaul, against the Hunnes breaking in upon it. And then the wretched Britains hopeles of all help from Rome, and being unable, by their own strength to repel the Enemy, by reason of their long ease and dilute of Arms, applied themselves to Aldroenus King of Armorica in France, (called Little Britain) a Prince extracted from the same stock, for relief and succour. Whose Brother Constance (according to the British story) passing over with a competent Army, and having valiantly repelled the barbarous people, was crowned King of Britain, the first of a new race of Kings, which swayed the Scepter, with much trouble and continual conflicts, either against the Scots or Saxons, till they were finally subdued and shut up in Wales. Those of most observation in the course of the story, were, 1. Constance the first King, and the restorer of the Country to Peace and quiet, traitorously murdered by a Pict. 2. Vortiger, E. of the Guyfers, (now Cornwall) Protector of Constance the Son of Constance, taken out of a Monastery; after whose Death, (wherein he was conceived to have had an hand) he got the Kingdom to himself, but being unable to defend it against the Enemy, and make his title also good against the other children of Constance, first called in the Saxons. 3. Vortimer, eldest Son of Vortiger, who overthrew the Saxons in many battles; but in the midst of his Successes was poisoned by the Remena Saxon Lady, second Wife of Vortiger. 4. Arthur, one of the Worlds nine Worthies, of whom the Monkish Writers, and other Legendaries, report so many idle and impossible actions. Doubtless he was a Prince of most perfect virtue, a great preserver of his Country from approaching ruins, and worthy the Pen of an able Panegyrist; by whom his brave achievements might have come entire into us, without the intermixture of those fables of Chivalry ascribed to him and his Knights of the Round Table. For by the overtraining of some Monkish Writers, Custory of Monmouth, and the rest, they have given too just occasion to posterity to suspect that virtue, which they intended to advance; and filled us with as much ignorance of the story, as admiration of the persons. But this hath not been the ill hap of King Arthur, and his Nobles only; of Charlemaign, and the Twelve Peers of France, men of great virtue and renown, suffering as deeply in the same kind, by the folly of the French Romances. It is affirmed of this Arthur, (but how true I know not) that he began the custom of celebrating the Nativity of our Lord and Saviour for the twelve days following, with such pastimes and sports as are (or have been used of late) by the Lords of Misrule in some Gentlemens houses: an Institution which the Scottish Writers of those times much blame. Perhaps not unjustly; it being a time more fit for our devotions than such rude disorders. But to proceed, King Arthur dying left the Crown to the 5. Constance, the Son of Cador Duke of Cornwall, his nearest Kinsman, slain by Aurelius Conanus, his own Nephew, who succeeded after him: which faction did so weaken the distressed Britains, that they were forced to withdraw themselves beyond the Severn: as 6. Careticus, or Caradoc, by the joyned Forces of the Saxons, to change the plain Countries beyond the Severn for the safer, but more fruitless Mountains. Of the rest, till Cadwalader, there is little left of any certainty, but their names only; which are thus ranked in the second race of

The Kings of Britain after the withdrawing of the Romans.

After whose death, his Successors were no longer called Kings of Britain, but Kings or Princes of Wales. And there we shall cease to find them.

And so the Britain leave the Stage, and the Saxons enter; a great and potent Nation amongst the Germans, but greatly by the aggregation of many people, under their name and service, than in themselves: the Jutes and Angles joyning with them, and passing in Accompt as the same one Nation, their Countries different as their names until this Conjunction; but neighbouring near enough to unite together: the Angles dwelling at the first in that part of the Cimbrian Chersoneuse, which we now call Sleswick, where fill the Town called Angelen, doth preserve their memory: the Jutes upon the North of them, where there is still a Province called by the name of Juteland; the Saxons South of both in the Dukedom of Holftein, situate in the very neck of that Chersoneuse where it joyneth with Germany; Joining their powers, they spread themselves with good success to the South and West; of which more hereafter. And growing Master of the Seas, infested with continual Piracies the Coasts of Britain; occasioning herein an Officer of great trust and power, appointed to defend and scour those Seas, in the Navitia, called Comes Littoris Saxonici. Known by this means amongst the Britains, they were called in by Vortiger, to aid him against the Scots and Picts; whom they overcame in a pitched pitched field near Stain'ora, in the County of Lincoln: for so far had the barbarous people marched without any resistance. Rewarded for this Victory with the life of Thanes, and after with the whole County of Kent, they began to quarrel with their Hosts, whom by degrees they dispossest of all the Country on this side of Severn; parceling it into seven Kingdoms, called the Saxons Heparchie, that is to say, 1. Of Kent, 2. Of the South-Saxons, 3. Of the West-Saxons, 4. Of the East-Saxons, 5. Of the East-Angles, 6. Of the North-Humbors, and 7. of the Mercians. The beginning, period, and Kings of which several Kingdoms, and the uniting of them into one Monarchy, we are next to shew.

1. The Kingdom of KENT, confined within that County only, was begun by Hengist, who with his Brother Horfus had the leading of the Saxons Forces, at their first entry into Britain, An. 455. being the sixth year after their first coming in: who restoring Paganism to this Country, when the rest of the Isle was Christian, occasioned the distitution of Kent and Christendom. The Kentish afterwards the first of the Saxons who received the Gospel, by the preaching of Augustine the Monk, the Apostle of the English Saxons. Principal Cities of this Kingdom, where 1. Canterbury, once the Regal seat of the Kings of Kent, till given by Eihelbert, on his conversion to Augustine the first Archbishop thereof and his Successors; afterwards the See of those Archbishops, who had here their Palace and Cathedral, the Kings removing to Reidwiler. Seated in the East part of the Country, about seven or eight miles from the Sea, a little Brook serving it thence with some commodities. A City of more Antiquity and fame, than beauty; is now ruinous and decayed, and having nothing in it worth observation, but the Cathedral Church, first founded by Eihelbert before mentioned; but afterwards new built upon his foundations, in the form it now stands, by Archbishop Lauf Frank, Will. Carboile, and some other, of their Successors in the said See. The Arch-episcopal Palace is a goodly building, and the ruins of S. Augustines Monastery shew what once it was. 2. Dover, anciently called Dubris, seated on the Sea-shore, where the passage is shortest into France; for that cause Fortified with a strong and (in those days accounted an) impregnable Castle; esteemed one of the keys of England and the chief of the Cinque Ports; now giving the Title of an Earl to the house of Hunford, chief of the Family of the Caries, nearly allied to Queen Elizabeth of Famous memory. 3. Rechefer, seated on the Medway; not far from Charham (the station of the Royal Navy) and ancient City, but of no greatness; in former times called Dubrovris, after that Koffa, whence the name of Reff-Chester; a Bishops See, the second for Antiquity in all the Island. 4. Maidstone, upon the Medway also near the head thereof, the largest and most beautiful in all this Country, and most commodiously seated for publick buisness.

II. The Kingdom of SOUTH-SEX, or of the SOUTH-SAXONS, was begun by Elia, a noble Captain of that People, an. 488. It contained only the two Counties of Suffex and Surrey, which were thence denominated, the first so called quasi South-Sex, the Country of the South-Saxons; the second quasi South-Rey, as lying on the South-side of the River Thames, in the same sense as S. Maries Church on the other side of that River (in respect of London) is called S. Mary Over Rey. The Christian Faith suppressed here, as in other places, was restored again in the time of King Edilwalch, by the preaching of S. Wilfride, Archbishop of York, living here in Exile. Places of most importance in it, were 1. Chichester, built by Cissa the 2d King hereof, and called Cissaucifer, encompassed almost round with the River Lavant, falling not far off into the Sea: the chief Town of Suffex, and a Bishops See, removed hither from Sealfy, a Deiny Island, in the time of the Norman Conqueror, where it was first planted by Archbishop Wilfride, 2. Hastings, one of the Cinque Ports, in Suffex also; the landing place of the Normans, and famous for the overthrow of King Harold in the fields adjoining. 3. Guleford, upon the River Wey, the chief Town of Surrey, well built, and having in it two Parish-Churches. 4. Arundel, in a Dale or Valley on the River Arum, and from thence so named: belonging to the Crown in the time of the Saxons, when given by the Testament of King Alfred, unto Amhelm, his Brothers Son. Of great note for a beautiful and capacious Castle; but more for giving the title of Earl to the noble Families of the Albany, the Fitz-Alans, and the Howards: this last of such a large and diffused Nobility, than in the year 1641, there were no fewer than 8. Howards, in the house of Peers. 5. Kington upon the Thames, so called to distinguish it from Kington upon Hull in Yorkshire; heretofore Famous for the Coronation of the Monarchs of the English Saxons, whence it had the name of Kington, or the Kings Town. This Kingdom had only three Kings, crushed in the infancy thereof by more potent Neighbours.

The Kings of the South-Saxons.

- 488 1. Elia, the first King.
 - 514 2. Cissa, the Son of Elia, who lost his life and Kingdom to Cerdic King of the West-Saxons.
 - 530 3. Cheulm, King of West-Sex, called himself King of the South-Saxons.
 - 4. Edelwalch, or Eihelwulf, the first Christian King, overcame and slain in battle by Cadwal, King of the West-Saxons, anno 687. After whose death Berthan and Ambun, two Brethren, took on themselves the Government, with the title of Dukes or Captains; and held it for a little while. But not being able to withstand the puissance of the West-Saxons, this Kingdom was subdued by Iua, the Successor of Cadwal; by whom united to that Crown.

III. The Kingdom of WEST-SEX, or the WEST-SAXONS, the third in order, and that which died in fine M m prevaill Prevail over all the rest; contained the Counties of Cornwall, Devon, Somerset, Dorset, Wilt, Salisbury, and Dorset; begun by Cardic, a noble Commander of the Saxons, arriving with new Forces out of Germany, Anno 495. who having overcome the Britains of this Western Tract, conducted by Natanland their Chieftain, entitled himself King of the West Saxons, Anno 522. The Christian Faith supplanted here, as elsewhere, was restored again in the time of King, their first Christian King; by the preaching of S. Birinus Bishop of Dorchester near Oxford; then a great City, of no fewer than ten Parishes, now reduced to one.

Chief Cities of this Kingdom, were 1. Exeter, a fair and goodly City, and a Bishops See, removed hither from Cridington or Kinton, by Leofricus, An. 1049. Seated upon the Bank of the River Ex, whence the name of Excester; environed with deep ditches, and very strong Walls, in compass about a mile and half besides the Suburbs, in which are contained in all 15 Parish Churches, besides the Minster, a beautiful and stately Fabric. 2. Bath, so called from the Baths there being, the chief City of Somerset, by the Latins called Aqua Solis; by the Greeks Thermae for the self same reason. Situate in a low Valley, environed about with Hills very steep and high, from whence come many Rivulets and fresh Springs, to the great Commodity of the people. A fine neat Town, and beautified with as neat a Church, heretofore a Monastery, partner with Wells, the Bishop's See, in the title of Episcopate; and gives the Title of an Earl to the Noble Family of the Bourchiers. 3. Falmouth in Cornwall, seated upon a large and capacious Bay, so full of Creeks and Roads, capable of the best Ships, that it is said, an hundred Sail of Ships may be lodged therein with such convenience, that from the top of the one, the Mast of another is not to be seen; the mouth or entrance of it defended for the greater safety with two very strong Castles built by Henry the 8th. that of S. Maudis on the East, and that of Pendennis (commonly called Pendennis) upon the West. 4. Dorchester, the chief Town of Dorsetshire, which is thence denominated, by Antoninus called Durnovaria, the principal at that time of the Durotriges: an Inland Town, and consequently of no great trading: not so much famous for ought else as giving the Title of a Marquess to Henry Earl of Kingston, of the noble Family of the Pierreponts. 5. Wilton, the head Town, in those times of Wiltshire, and a Bishops See, honoured with the residence of several Bishops. But by translating of the See to Salurn (or Salisbury) as the fitter place, and carrying thither therewithal the thowfare, which before was here; it fell by little and little into decay; and is now hardly worth the reputation of a Market Town. 6. Winchester called Venta in the times of the Romans, by the Saxons, Vent-ceaster, situate on the banks of a pleasant River, the seat Royal of the West Saxons Kings, who had here their Palace called Wolsey: so named from the Kings of the WVallian Family, and the situation of it in the circlings of the forsed River, which the old Saxons called an Eye: not from the wool-Staple here kept, as some; much less from Cardinal Wolsey, as others most absurdly think. The house given after to the Bishops, and made their Palace. The Town in compass two Miles, besides the Suburbs; commodiously seated in a low place, between very steep Hills, by which it is defended both from cold and wind. Afflicted very much since those times being by War and Fire, half of the ground within the Town both by Fields and Gardens; but still adorned with a Magnificent Cathedral, and a gallant (but no great) Castle, bravely mounted upon an Hill for defence and prospect; besides a College, and an Hospital added since those days. 7. Southampton, conveniently seated on an Arm of the Sea, capable of Ships of burden to the very Key; which maketh it one of the richest Towns in those parts of England. Well built, of fair large streets, beautified with five Parish Churches, and fortified with high Walls, a double Ditch, and a right strong Castle; but the Castle now decayed and ruined. 8. Reading, on the banks of the River Reunis, where it falleth into the Thames, by which means it hath the convenience of both Rivers: A Town of great Trade for clothing, well built, and of three Parish Churches; heretofore beautified with a strong Castle, and a goodly Monastery, but both decayed. 9. Windsor, called Windlestone in the old Saxon, situate near the banks of the Thames on a rising ground, which gives it a fair prospect over all the Country; adorned in succeeding times with a Palace Royal of the Kings of England, and the Seat of the Order of the Garter. 10. Wallingford, the Gualena of the Ancients, and then the chief Town of the Aureliani, was after-wards (in the time of the Saxons) of the County of Berk: a mile in compass at that time within the Walls, fortified with an impregnable Castle, and adorned with twelve Parishes. So desolated by a Plague, an. 1348, that there is now but one Church left, hardly Inhabitants enough to keep that in repair; and nothing of the Walls left (as not much of the Castle) but the track and ruins.

IV. The Kingdom of EAST-SEX, or the EAST-SAXONS, was begun about the year 527, by Erchwin, descended from Woden, the common Proprietor of the Saxons, from whom we have the name of Wedeslaff, or Vodenlaff, as they called it formerly. It contained only the Counties of Middlesex, Essex, and so much of Hartfordshire, as is in the Dioecesis of London. The Christian Faith expelled here as in other places, was restored again in the time of Sebert, the Founder of the Abby Church of S. Peter in Vestminster, by the Preaching of Mellius the first Bishop of London after the entrance of the Saxons, suppressed again by Seward, and Sigebert, the Sons of Sebert; but settled stronger than before by Ceddus the next Bishop. Principal Cities of this Kingdom, besides London, spoken of already, were; 1. Vestminster, situate in those times a mile from London, now adjoining to it. The See of the Archbishop of London in the time of the Britains: afterwards by the Saxons called Thorn-ey or the Thorny Island; till the new Minster built by Sebert as before is said, and the Vestern situation of it in regard of St. Paul's, built at the same time by Ethelbert the King of Kent; gained in this new name. A City honoured with the Seat of the Kings of East-SEX, and since those times with that of the Kings of England; the name of the Old Palace of the one, and the New-Palace of the other, still remaining there; beautified upon that occasion with more stately and magnificent houses, belonging to the Kings, Bishops, and Nobility, than all the other in the Kingdom, having of late a new Town added to it in the Crown Garden (a place belonging formerly to the Monks of Westminster) for uniformity of building, and handsome streets, inferior to no City of France or Italy. 2. Canterbury, the chief Town of East-SEX, situate near the Sea, on the River Chin; a Colony of the Londoners in former times, thence called Colonia Londinensium, and Colonia only, then a Bishops See: from which, or from the River, with the Addition of Caesars, after the manner of the Saxons, came the name of Canterbury. A fair and well built Town, and of good resort, fortified with an old Roman Wall, and having in it to the number of 14 Churches. 3. Ichenes or Deneg Hundred, where S. Ceddus the second Bishop of London, baptised the related East-Saxon. 4. Hartford, the chief Town of the County so called; by Beda named Herulford, and of great note in his time for a Synod there held in the dawning of the day of Christianity amongst the Saxons; in which S. Augustin the Monk, the first Apostle of that people, had a conference or consultation with the British Bishops: More memorable in the following times, for giving the title of an Earl to the illustrious Family, surnamed De Clare; the addition of an Honour, and a goodly Patrimony to Tobin of Gannet, Duke of Lancaster; and at this time, title of Earl, and Marquess to the noble Family of the Seymours.

V. The Kingdom of the EAST-ANGLES, so called from the Angle of English, which possessed these parts, and that Eastern situation of it; begun by Offa, a great Commander of the Saxons, anno 575. contained the Counties of Norfolk, Suffolk, Cambridgeshire, and the life of Elm. The Christian Faith first planted here in the Reign of Redwall the third King, by the Ministry of Felix a Burgundian, the first Bishop of the East-Angles, the See whereof was afterwards removed to Norwich, Places of most importance in it, were 1. Dunwich on the Sea shore, the first Bishops See of the East-Angles, for the County of Suffolk; then a Town capable of that dignity, how ruinous, decayed, and for the greatest part worn into the Sea. 2. Ipswich in the same County of Suffolk and the chief of the County, a rich, populous, and well traded Empory, consisting of no fewer than twelve Parish Churches.

ches. 3. Norwich, the head City of Norfolk, situate on the River Tare, which runs thence to Yarmouth, lying out in length a mile and an half, half as much in breadth, & in that Circuit comprehending about 20. Parishes well walled in with many a Tower, & 12 Gates for entrance; but hath within it much waste Ground, the City suffering great loss both in wealth and buildings, by Kets Rebellion, in the time of King Edward the sixth. Recovered of the first blow by the Dutch Manufacturers, of the last still languishing: yet still it glorieth in the beauties of a fair Cathedral, the three Palaces of the Bishops, the Dukes of Norfolk, and the Earls of Surry, and the ruins of an ancient Castle of the Saxons building. 4. North Elmham, the Bishops See of the East-Angles, for those parts which we now call Norfolk; both this and that at Dunwich ruined in the Danish Wars, but this reviving at the end of 100 years and here continuing, both Sees united into one, till removed to 5. Thetford, another Town of this County, situate on the confluence of the Thet, and the lesser Ouse; a larger Town than either of the other two, from whence at last removed to Norwich. 6. Cambridge, the chief Town of that County, by Antonine called Cambrivium whence the Modern name: unless we rather fetch it from a Bridge over the River Cam or Gram (for some call it Grambridge) as perhaps we may. A Town well built by reason of the University, said to be founded by Sigebert, King of the East-Angles, of whom it is affirmed by Beda, that he founded a School for the education of Children in the ways of good Learning; but he speaketh neither of University, nor nameth Cambridge for the place. 7. Ely, situate in the Isle so named, occasioned by the divided streams of Nen and Ouse, with the over-flores of other Rivers; turning a great part of this tract into Fens and Marshes, the Inhabitants whereof were called Girvii. A place of no great beauty or reputation, as situate in a foggy and unhealthy air; but only for a fair Monastery built by S. Ethelred, Wife of Egfride, King of the Northerners, by her made a Nunnery; afterwards rebuilt and replenished with Monks by Ethelwald Bishop of Winchester, anno 970. or thereabouts; finally made a Bishops See in the time of King Henry the first, anno 1109.

St. Edmundsbury, in the County of Suffolk, took denomination. After whose death the Kingdom was possessed by the Danes, till vanquished by King Edward the Elder, by whom it was united unto the rest of England.

VI. The Kingdom of NORTHUMBRIA, AND, so called from the situation on the North of Humber, contained the Counties of York, Lancashire, Durham, Westmerland, Cumberland, and Northumberland, properly so called; and all the Southern parts of Scotland, as far as to the Frythes of Edinburgh and Dumblinton, formerly reckoned as Members of the Roman Empire. Extorted from the Britains by Oswa the Son, and Elna the brother of Hengist, Conductors of new Forces hither, (all of the Nation of the Angli) by the leave of Vortiger, upon pretence of guarding these Countries from the inroads of the Scots and Picts. By them divided into two Provinces, the one called Deira, extending from the Humber, to the River of Tees; the other called Bernicia, reaching from Tees, to the two Frythes before-mentioned: both governed a long while by Dukes, under the Sovereignty and homage of the Kings of Kent. In the year 547. Duke Ida takes unto himself the title of King of Bernicia, and An. 559. Duke Ida, doth the like in Deira. The Towns of most notice in this last (for the former is now reckoned as a part of Scotland) besides York (spoken of before, were 1. Lancaster, the chief Town of that County, situate on the River Len, which with addition of Caster most used by the Saxons, made the name thereof; called for the same reason Lengoustric by the Emperor Antonine. The Town not very well peopled nor much frequented, but of sufficient fame in our English Annals for those Noble persons which have successively borne the titles of Earls and Dukes of it; the greatest Princes for Revenue, of any Subjects in Christendom, 2. Kendal, or Candale, situate in a dale on the River Carn, whence it had the name; the chief Town of Westmerland: built in the manner of a Cross, two long and broad streets thwarting one another. A rich, populous and well traded Town, especially for the making of fine woollen cloth, but of more fame for giving the title of an Earl to John Duke of Bedford, Regent of France; and to John de Foix, created Earl thereof by Henry the sixth. 3. Carlisle, upon the River Eden, a frontier Town betwixt the Romans and Scots, as now between the Scots and English: returned to ashes in the time of the Danish furies; afterwards rebuilt by William Rufus, made an Episcopal See in the Reign of K. Henry the first, and beautified with a Cathedral founded at the persuasion of Abelwulfus, the first Bishop thereof. 4. Mosely-chester, on the Northern banks of the River Tine, which maketh there a safe and capacious Haven. Of no great note till the Norman Conquest, when from a Castle built by Robert Son of William the Conqueror, it was called New-Castle: growing from that time forwards to such wealth and trading, by the neighbourhood of the Cole-mines there, that it is now the goodliest Town in all the North; fortified with strong Walls, beautified with five fair Churches, and giving to the L. Will. Cavendish, Viscount Mansfield, the honorary titles of Earl and Marquess. 5. Hagulfade, or Hextald, by the Romans called Aselodunum, by the Normans. Hexham: a Bishops See in the first time of Christianity amongst these Northumbrians, specially so called, converted to the Faith in the time of Oswald their tenth King, by the Ministry of Aidan the first Bishop of Lindisfarne: Eata the fifth Bishop, erecting here an Episcopal See, for the better propagation of the Gospel among this people; after a succession of ten Bishops ruined and suppressed by the Danish furies. 6. Dunholm, now Durham, situate on a Hill, as the name importeth, a Bishops See, translated hither with the body of St. Cuthbert, anno 990.

or thereabouts, from Lindisfarne, a small Island on the Coast of Northumberland, where it was first erected by S. Aidannus, the first bishop thereof: planted in Lindisfarne, because of the solitude of the place; translated hither to avoid the fury of the Danes, who then raged extremely in these Quarters. And being settled here, was fortified with such ample privileges and possessions, by the Saxon Kings: that the bishops were reputed for Count Palatins; at and before the Norman Conquest. 7. Halifax, in the west Riding of Yorkshire, of great wealth by making of Cloth. 8. Rippon, in the same, adorned with a fair Cathedral or Collegiate Church, subordinate to that of York. 9. Gedmanham, (by Beda called Garmadin Gahan) famous in those days for a Temple of the Saxon-Idols, burnt down and utterly destroyed by Canis, the chief Priest thereof, converted to Christianity by Paulinus the first Archbishop of York, and the Apostle of the Northumbrians in these parts. The Catalogue of the Kings of this mighty Nation, by reason of the division of it into two Kingdoms, as before is said, is very intricate and confused, the Kingdoms being sometimes united, and sometimes disjoined. But in regard the most prevalent King of either, was called King of Northumberland, the other of Bernicia or Deira only, I shall accordingly subjoin them in this order following.

After whose death, slain by his treacherous and rebellious Subjects (as many of his Predecessors had been before) the Kingdom became distracted into parts and Factions, invaded by the Danes on the one side, the Scots and Picts on the other, who during these distractions had possessed themselves of all the Countries on the other side of the Tweed . At the last Anno 827. they yielded themselves to Egbert , the most Potent King of the West-Saxons , ruled by his Deputies for a while, then subdued by the Danes, and finally recovered, to the Crown of England , by Albistan and Edred , anno 950. or thereabouts. Content since that to give the Title of an Earl to some eminent persons both of English and Norman Races: as it hath done since the first year of King Richard the second; to the Noble Family of the Perceys , defended by Joseline of Brabant , Brother of Adelice the second Wife of King Henry the first, from Charles the |

the Great, Emperor and King of France, and that too in a clearer Light than the Dukes of Lorraine, who so much brag of it.

VII. The Kingdom of MERCIA, was begun by Crida, or Criada, a great Commander of the Angli, or English Nation, who settling in the heart of Britain, where the people were least used to arms made themselves Masters of the Counties of Gloucester, Worcester, Hereford, Salop, Chester, Stafford, Derby, Nottingham, Leicester, Rutland, Lincoln, Huntingdon, Northampton, Warwick, Oxen, Buckingham, Bedford, and the rest of Hartfordshire, which bounded in a manner by all the rest of the Saxon Kingdoms, had the name of Mercia, from the word Mearc, which signifies a bound or limit. The Christian Faith suppressed here, as in other Kingdoms of the Saxons, was restored again in the Reigns of Penda, Peda, and Wulfere, by the preaching of St. Chad the first Bishop of Lichfield.

Places of most observation it, 1. Hereford, seated on the Banks of the River Wye, in the middle of most flourishing Meadows, and no less plentiful Corn fields; raised out of the Ruines of Ariconium here placed by Antonine, the tract of which name it doth still retain. A Bishops See in the time of the Britains, restored to that dignity by the Saxons, An. 680. the honourable title of the Bishops, once Earls heretofore; and afterwards of Henry of Bullingbrook, Duke of Hereford. 2. Worcester, pleasantly seated on the Severn, over which it hath a very fair Bridge with a Tower upon it. A Bishops See, Anno 672, beautified with a fair Cathedral, and every way considerable for situation, number of Churches, neat Buildings, the industry of the Inhabitants, and giving the Title of an Earl to the Noble Family of the Somerfords, extracted by the Beaumonts from John of Gannet. 3. Lichfield, the first Bishops See amongst the Mercians, founded there Anno 646, by Osui King of the Northumbrians, but fixed and settled by St. Chad in the Reign of Offred King of the Mercians; endowed in the very Infancy with such fair possessions, that in the year 793 Adulfus the Bishop heretofore, was made Archbishop of the Mercians. But it proved only a personal honour, and died with him. 4. Cowenry, so called from an old Coven or Religious house, which gave name unto it; Situate in Warwickshire, and now the principal of that County, though esteemed a County of it self: beautified with a goodly Wall, two fair Parish Churches, large Streets, and very handfom Houses. A City of great Trade & Riches, though destitute of all advantages which a Navigable River might afford it; heretofore of great Fame for a stately Monastery, to which the See Episcopal was for a while removed from Lichfield, now a ruin only. 5. Leicester, once a Bishops See, the Dioecesis taken out of Lichfield, An. 733, removed to Dorchester near Oxon, and thence to Lincoln. Beautified in those days with a fair Collegiate Church, a magnificent Abbey, and a strong Castle; and decayed and ruined by the iniquity and injury of these latter times: the Town remaining in as good plight both for Trade and Buildings, as most Towns do which want a Navigable River. Of most fame for the Earls thereof, Algar and Edwin, noble Saxons, Simon de Montfort the Castile and great Incendiary of this Kingdom, the Princes of the House of Lancaster, who bore this Title; with some others since. 6. Derby, upon the River Derwent, a well-traded Town, and of good reformation; adorned with five Churches, a goodly Stone Bridge, and a large Market-place; the honorary title of the Noble Family of the Stanleys, created Earls heretofore by King Henry the Seventh. 7. Nottingham seated on the Trent, but very high upon an hill, which overlooks it. For Buildings, fair, streets, and a spacious Market-place, not giving way to many Cities; but of most fame for a Royal and magnificent Castle, which for strength, stateliness, and prospect, may justly challenge the precedence of most in England. 8. Lincoln, a Town in those days of great strength and note, one of the best peopled Cities in all the Heptarchy; and of great Merchandise and Traffick both by Sea and Land: infomuch that Remigius, then Bishop of Dorchester thought fit to translate hither the Episcopal See. Now much decayed, and thence the Proverb, that Lincoln was, London is. &c. The chief fame which now it hath, is for the Minster, one of the stateliest Piles in England, and perhaps in Christendom; high seated on a Hill, and from thence dispersed over all the Country. 9. Huntingdon, or the Hunters Town, from the great sport the Hunters found in the neighbouring Forest, commodiously seated on the Northern bank of the River Ouse, rising out the North with a soft ascent, consisting of four Parish Churches, and shews the ruins of a Castle built by Edward the Elder, An. 917. 10. Peterborough, seated in a Nook or Angle of Northamptonshire, where formerly had been a Gulf or Whirlpool of exceeding depth; but made firm ground by Wulfere King of the Mercians, when he laid the Foundations of the Monastery, Anno 633, dedicated to St. Peter, whence it had this name; before then called Medanbeld. A Town, but for the Church, of no great esteem; standing out of the way for Trade, and in no plausible place for health or pleasure; yet shewing two handfom streets, a large Market-place, and a fair Parish Church (besides the Abbey) made an Episcopal See by King Henry the 8th. 11. Northampton, built on the Northern Bank of the River Antona, (now Nen) whence it had the name. A Town which for the beauty and circuit of it need not give way to many Cities; fortified heretofore with a very strong Castle, and seated in so good an Air, that once the Students of Cambridge had a purpose to remove their University hither. The Noble Family of the Comptons are now Earls heretofore. 12. Bedford, so called from Beds and Lodgings on the Ford, built on both sides thereof for the use of Travellers, growing in time to so great bigness as to contain in it five Parish Churches: famous in former times for the great Battle fought in the adjoining fields, Anno 572, in which Cuthwulf the Saxon vanquished the Britains, and became Master of the Country: But more famous for giving the title of Duke to John of Lancaster, Regent of France for King Henry the sixth, and Tasper of Halsfield, Uncle to King Henry the 7th. 13. St. Albans, so called from a famous Monastery, here founded by Offa, the great King of the Mercians, in honour of St. Albans, the Protomartyr of Britain, a Citizen of Verulamium, near adjoining to it: out of the ruins whereof: decayed by age, and destroyed by War, arose the present greatness of St. Albans, the fairest and best traded Town in the County of Hartford. 14. Buckingham, the chief Town of the County so called, situate on the River Ouse: fortified by King Edward the Elder against the Danes, Anno 915, otherwise not much observable, but for those many noble personages which have had the title of Dukes heretofore.

839 19 Berthulf.

852 20 Burdred, a substituted King of the West-Saxons, and the last King of the Mercians (the short Reign of his six Predecessors, portending that fatal period to be near at hand.) After whose Death, Anno 886, this Kingdom for some few years tyrannized over by the Danes, was united by King Alfred to the English Monarchy.

Such was the Order and Succession of the Saxon Kings, during the Heptarchie, or division of it into seven Kingdoms; continuing separate and distinct till the prevailing Fortune of West-Saxons brought them all together into one, by the name of England. But so, that they were subject for the most part unto one alone, who was intitled Rex Genis Anglorum: those which were stronger than the rest, giving the Law unto them in their several turns; and are these that follow: *

The Monarch of the English Saxons in the time of the Heptarchie.

- A. C.
- 455 1 Hengist, King of Kent, who first brought the Saxons into Britain.
- 481 2 Ella, the first King of the South-Saxons.
- 495 3 Cerdic, the first King of the West-Saxons.
- 534 4 Kenric, King of the West-Saxons.
- 561 5 Chenline, or Celingus, King of the West-Saxons.
- 562 6 Ethelbert, King of Kent, the first Christian King of the Saxons.
- 616 7 Redwald, King of the East-Angles.
- 617 8 Edwin, King of Northumberland.
- 634 9 Offa, King of Northumberland.
- 643 10 Offa, King of Northumberland.
- 649 11 Wulfhere, King of Mercia.
- 675 12 Ethelred, King of Mercia.
- 704 13 Kenred, King of Mercia.
- 704 14 Cheleda, King of Mercia.
- 716 15 Ethelbald, King of Mercia.
- 758 16 Offa the Great, King of the Mercians.
- 794 17 Egfride, King of Mercia.
- 796 18 Kenwof, King of Mercia.
- 799 19 Egbert, the Son of Almond, King of the West-Saxons, who having vanquished all the rest of the Saxon Kings, and added most of their Estates unto his own, caused the whole united body to be called Engle-land, or England, in a Parliament or Council held at Wincester, Anno 819, being the 19th. year of his Reign over the West-Saxons; and by that name he was then crowned in the presence of his Nobles, and the rest of his Subjects, leaving it unto the rest of his Successors.

But before we come to the recital of their names, we are to take notice of the Danes, the next considerable Affairs on the Stage of England, who in the time of this

Egbert, first invaded the Country, and after exercised the patience of his posterity, till in fine they got the Kingdom to themselves. Of the Original and first Successors of this people, we shall speak more at large when we come to Denmark. Suffice it here to know, that having taken up the void Rooms of the Jutes and English in the Cimbriack Cherisuse, they thought it not amiss to follow them into Britain also; making a discovery of some part of the Coast thereof with three Ships only, Anno 787, being the first year of Brithic (the Father of Egbert) King of the West-Saxons. Which having done, and prepared themselves for the undertaking, in the time of Egbert they invaded Northumberland, the Isle of Shepey in Kent, and the Coasts of Wales; not without much difficulty driven out by him. In the Reign of the three Kings succeeding, having vanquished the Northumbrians, East-Angles, and a part of the Mercians; they erected many petty Tyrannies: by Alfred first stopped in their Career, by Edward the Elder outed of the East-Angles, and by Aethelstan of Northumberland also, the Danes for some time after being subject to the English Government, mixing in marriages and alliance, and incorporated with them. By the valour and good Fortune of Swain their King, they recovered their power again in England; and in the person of Cannus obtained the Kingdom: who having impolitically sent back his Danes into their Country (as if a Kingdom got by force, could be held by favour) opened a way to their exclusion from the Crown; which happened within seven years after his decease. Which laid, we come to the Successions of

The Kings of England of the Saxon Race:

- 819 1 Egbert, the last King of the West-Saxons, and the first of England. 18.
- 837 2 Ethelwulf, the eldest Son of Egbert. 20.
- 857 3 Ethelbald, the eldest Son of Ethelwulf. 1.
- 858 4 Ethelbert, the brother of Ethelbald. 4.
- 863 5 Ethelfred, the brother of the two former Kings, the third Son of Ethelwulf, and as much molested by the Danes, as his brethren were. 10.
- 873 6 Alfride, the fourth Son of Ethelwulf, who totally united the Saxon Heptarchy into one Estate, vanquished the Danes, whom he made subject to his commands, though he could not expel them. He divided England into Shires, and reformed the University of Oxon.
- 900 7 Edward, surnamed the Elder, the Son of Alfride, who recovered the East-Angles from the power of the Danes, whom he shut up in Northumberland. 24.
- 924 8 Aethelstan, the Son of Edward, who subdued the Britains of Cumberland and Cornwall, and compelled the Danes to submit themselves to the English Government. In his time lived Sir Guy of Warwick, famous for overcoming Colbrand the Danish Champion (the great Goliath of that people) near the Walls of Winchester. 10.
- 940 9 Edmund the Brother of Aethelstan, by whom the Danes of Northumberland were brought under obedience, and the Kingdom of the Britains in Cumberland utterly subverted.
- 946 10 Edred, the Brother of Edmund and Aethelstan, so fortunate against the Danes, that he compelled them to be Christianized. 9.
- 955 11 Edwy, the Son of Edmund.

955 12 Edgar, the Brother of Edwy, surnamed the Peaceable, the most absolute Monarch of England, since the time of the Saxons; by whom the tribute of money; imposed by Aethelstan on the Welsh, was exchanged into a tribute of Wolues. 16.

971 13 Edward II. Son of Edgar, treacherously murdered by his Stepdame, to make way for Ethelred her son; hence surnamed the Martyr. 3.

978 14 Ethelred, the younger Son of Edgar, and half Brother of Edward, enjoyed the Crown unjustly which he got unjustly. Oppressed and broken by the Danes, he was fain to buy his peace of them at the yearly tribute of 10000 pounds; enhanced to 48000 pounds within short time after; which monies were raised upon the Subjects, by the name of Danegeld. Weary of the exactions, he plotted warily with his Subjects to kill all the Danes, as they slept in their beds; which accordingly was put in execution on St. Brices night, November 12. Anno 1012. To revenge this outrage and dishonour, Swaine King of Denmark, with a Fleet of 350 Ships came into England; the fear whereof compelled Ethelred, a weak and impuissant Prince to fly into Normandy; leaving his poor Subjects to the mercy of the Danish Tyrant, who miserably plagued them till his death. To whom succeeded his Son Cannus (Cannus) a more temperate Prince; who mauve Ethelred now returned, or his Son Edmund Ironside, a most valiant King, did in the end possess himself of the whole Kingdom.

1016 15 Edmund II. surnamed Ironside, having in vain attempted to recover his Kingdom, at last divided it with Cannus: not long after which he was treacherously and basely murdered, by Edward, surnamed the Out-Law, his eldest Son; he was Grandfather of Edgar Aetheling, and of Margaret, Wife of Malcolm the third, King of the Scots.

The Danish Kings.

- 1017 1 Cannus King of Denmark and Norway, after the death of Edmund the second sole King of England. He married Emma the widow of Ethelred, and Daughter of Richard Duke of Normandy. 20.
- 1037 2 Harald the bafe Son of Cannus, surnamed Harfager. 4.
- 1041 3 Cannus II. commonly called Hardy Cannus, the lawful Son of Gormus by Emma, the Widow of Ethelred the second, and Mother of Edward surnamed the Confessor, the last King of the Danes in England. After whose death that people living tyrannized in England for the space of 255 years, (of which they had reigned only 26) were utterly expelled the Country, or passed in the Account of English; Edward the Confessor, the youngest Son of Ethelred, being advanced unto the Throne, by the power and practices of his Mother Emma, and the absence of the Children of Edmund Ironside his elder Brother, Anno 1042.

Now concerning the Danes abiding here, and going hence as they did, I observe three customs yet in use amongst us. First, each English house maintained one Dane, who living idly like the Drones among the Bees, had the benefit of all their labour, and was by them called Lord Dane; and even now when we see an idle fellow, we call him a Lord Dane. 2. The Danes used when the English drank, to stab them, or cut their throats: to avoid which villany, the party then drinking, requested some of the next unto him to be his furety or pledge, whilst he paid nature her due: and hence we have our usual custom of pledging one another. 3. The old Romans at the expulsion of their Kings, annually solemnized the Engalia: according to which pattern the joyful English having cleared the Country of the Danes, instituted the annual Sports of Hock-tide; the word in their old tongue, the Saxon, importing the time of scorning, or triumphing. This solemnity consisted in the merry meetings of the Neighbours in those days, during which the Festival lasted, and was celebrated by the younger sort of both Sexes, with all manner of exercises, and pastimes in the Streets, even as Shrove-tide yet is. But now time hath so corrupted it, that the name excepted, there remaineth no sign of the first Institution.

The Saxons re-enthroned.

A. Ch.

1042 16 Edward III surnamed the Confessor, half Brother both to Edmund Ironside, and Hardy Cannus the Dane, called out of Normandy, where he lived with the Dukes his Cousins, succeeded in the Realm of England. This King collected out of the Danish, Saxon, and Mercian Laws, one universal and general Law, whence our Common Law is thought to have had its original: which may be true of the written Laws, not of the customary and unwritten Laws; these being certainly more ancient. He was in his life of that holiness that he received power from above to cure many diseases, amongst others, the swelling of the Throat, called by us the Kings-Evil: a Prerogative that continueth Hereditary to his Successors of England. Finally after his death, he was Canonized for a Saint; and died, having reigned 24 years.

1066 17 Harald II. Son to Earl Godwyn, was chosen King in the non-age of Edgar Aetheling, Grandchild to Edmund Ironside, the true Heir of the Kingdom: to which Harald might pretend some title as being born unto Earl Godwyn by Thyra the bafe Daughter of Cannus the first, Sister by the whole blood to Harald Harfager, and of the half blood to Cannus the second, the last King of the Danes in England. But William Duke of Normandy, (of which people we have spoke already when we were in France and shall speak more at large when we come to Denmark, as the last Affairs on the Theatre or Stage of England.) This William (I say) pretending a Donation from his Cousin, King Edward the Confessor, invaded England, slew Harald, and with him 66654 of his English Souldiers, and possessed himself of the Kingdom; using such Policy in his new Conquest, that he utterly disheartened the English from hopes of better fortune. From him beginneth the new account of the Kings of England, those of the former Line being no longer reckoned in the computation of the first, second, or third, &c.

The

The Norman Kings.

- A. C.
1067 1 William, surnamed the Conqueror, after the vanquishment and death of Harold, acknowledged and Crowned King, altered the ancient Laws of England, and established those of Normandy in the place thereof: governing the people absolutely by the power of the Sword, and giving a great part of their Lands to his former Followers, and such as were engaged in the Action with him; from whom most of our ancient Families do derive themselves; those Lands to be holden in Knights-Service, which drew along with it the Wardship of the Heir in Minority, as a charge laid upon the Land.
- 1089 2 William II. surnamed Rufus, second Son to the Conqueror, succeeded by the appointment of his Father, and was Crowned King; slain afterwards in the New Forest, by an Arrow levelled at a Deer.
- 1102 3 Henry, for his Learning surnamed Beau-Clerk, the third Son of the Conqueror, in the absence of his Brother Robert (in the Holy-Land Wars) entred on the Kingdom, and afterwards took from him also the Dukedom of Normandy, and put out his eyes. Deprived of all his male-issue, he left one only Daughter whose name was Maud; first married to the Emperor Henry the fifth, and after to Geoffrey Plantagenet Earl of Anjou, Touraine, and Maine. 34.
- 1136 4 Stephen, second Son of Stephen Earl of Champaigne and Blais, and of Alice Daughter to the Conqueror, succeeded the Tribute called Danegelt: he spent most of his Reign in War against Maud the Empress. 19.

The Saxon Blood restored.

- 1155 5 Henry II. Son to Maud the Empress, Daughter to Henry the first, and to Maud Daughter to Malcolm King of Scotland, and Margaret Sister to Edgar Abeling, restored the Saxon blood to the Crown of England. His Father was Geoffrey Earl of Anjou, Touraine, and Maine; which Provinces he added to the English Empire, as also the Duchy of Aquitain, and the Earldom of Positon, by Eleanor his Wife; and a great part of Ireland by Conquest. Happy in all things, the unnatural rebellions of his Sons excepted. 34.
- 1189 6 Richard, the Son of Henry, surnamed Cœur de Lion, warred in the Holy Land, overcame the Turks, whom he had almost driven out of Syria, took the life of Cyprus; and after many worthy achievements returning homewards to defend Normandy, and Aquitain against the French, was by Tempest cast upon Dalmatia; and travelling through the Dominions of the Duke of Austria, was taken Prisoner, put to a grievous ransom, and after his return slain at the siege of Chalus, in the Province of Limousin. 12.

- 1201 7 John, Brother of Richard, an unhappy Prince, and one that could expect no better, as being an unnatural Son to his Father, and an undutiful Subject to his Brother. Distressed for a great part of his Reign by Wars with his Barons, outed of all Normandy, Aquitain, and Anjou, by the power of the French; to whom also he was likely to have lost the Realm of England. Finally, after a base submission of himself and his Kingdom to the Popes Legate, he is said to have been poisoned at Swinslade Abbey. 17.
- 1218 8 Henry III. Son of John, expelled the invading French out of England, and by a composition with Lewis the 9th, was restored unto the Dukedom of Guyenne, held by his Successors till the Reign of King Henry the 6th. Exhausted by the Pope, and oppressed a long time by his factious and unruly Barons, but at last victorious. 56.
- 1274 9 Edward, the Son of Henry, awed France, subdued Wales, brought Scotland into subjection, of whose King and Nobility he received homage. 34.
- 1308 10 Edward II. Son of Edward the first, a dissolute Prince, hated of the Nobles, and contemned by the Vulgar, for his immeasurable love to Pierce Gausson, and his Spencers, was twice shamefully beaten by the Scots; and being deposed by a strong faction raised against him by his Queen, and Roger Lord Mortimer, was barbarously murdered in Berkley Castle. 19.
- 1327 11 Edward III. Son of Edward the second, a most Vertuous and Valorous Prince, brought the Scots to obedience, overthrew the French in two great Battels, took the Town of Calice, and many fair possessions in that Kingdom. 50.
- 1377 12 Richard II. another of our unfortunate Kings, lost many of his Peers in France, and at last being over-awed by his two great Uncles of Lancaster, and Gloucester, and taken Prisoner by his Cousin the Duke of Hereford, he was forced to resign his Crown, and afterwards was murdered at Ponfret Castle.

The Lancastrian Line.

- 1399 13 Henry IV. Son to John of Gaunt Duke of Lancaster, the fourth Son of Edward the 3, was by the power of the Sword, but with the consent of the People, seated in the Throne; and spent his whole Reign in suppressing homebred Rebellions. 15.
- 1414 14 Henry V. the Mirrour of Magnificence, and Pattern of true Vertue, pursued the Title of France, and won it, being ordained Heir apparent to the French Crown, but lived not to possess the Kingdom. 9.
- 1423 15 Henry VI. a Pious, but unfortunate Prince, was crowned King of France in Paris, which he held during the life of his Uncle John of Bedford, and Humphrey of Gloucester; after whose deaths, he not only lost France to the French, but England and his life to the Turkish Faction. 38.

The

The Turkish Line.

- 1461 16 Edward IV. Son of Richard Duke of York, the Son of Richard Earl of Cambridge, and Grandson of Edmund of Langley Duke of York, the fifth Son of King Edward the third, challenged the Crown right of the Lady Anne his Grandmother, Daughter of Roger Mortimer Earl of March, the Son of Edmund Mortimer Earl of March, and of Philippa, his Wife, sole Daughter of Lionel Duke of Clarence, the third Son of the said King Edward, and elder Brother of John of Gaunt. The claim first set on foot by his Father the Duke of York, who lost his life in pursuance of it in the Battel of Wakefield; with better fortune and success, pursued by King Edward himself, who finally after nine bloody Battels fought between the Houses (especially that of Towton, in which were slain 36000 English) was quietly seated in the possession of England and Ireland. 23.
- 1484 17 Edward V. his Son, was before his Coronation murdered by his Uncle Richard, in the Tower of London.
- 1484 18 Richard III. Brother of Edward the 4. a most wicked and tyrannical Prince, to make way unto the Diadem, murdered King Henry the sixth, and 2. Prince Edward his Son. 3. George Duke of Clarence, his Brother. 4. Hastings: a faithful Servant to King Edward. 5. Rivers, Vaughan and Gray, the Queens Kindred. 6. Edward the fifth, his Sovereign, with his Brother Richard. 7. Henry Duke of Buckingham his dear Friend, and greatest Coadjutor in these his ungodly practices; and his own Wife Anne, so to make way to an incestuous marriage with his Nece Elizabeth, the eldest Daughter of Edward the 4th; but before the solemnity, he was slain at Bosworth. 3.

The Union of the Families.

- 1487 19 Henry VII. Earl of Richmond, Heir to the House of Lancaster, (as Son of Margaret Daughter of John Duke of Somerset, Son of John Earl of Somerset, Son of John of Gaunt Duke of Lancaster) after the overthrow of Richard, married Elizabeth, Daughter and Heir to Edward the 4. uniting by that marriage the divided Families. He was also extracted from the British and French Royal Blood, as being Son to Edmund Tudor Earl of Richmond, Son to Owen Tudor (descended from Cadwallader, the last King of the Britains) and Katharine of France, Widow of Henry the 5. His whole Wars was against home-bred Rebels, the chief being Lambart, and the Followers and Favourites of Perkin Warbeck. 23.
- 1509 20 Henry VIII. Heir to both Families, between which were fought for the Diadem 17 pitched Fields; in which perished 8 Kings and Princes, 40 Dukes, Marquesses, and Earls, 200000 of the common people, besides Barons and Gentlemen. This King banished the usurped Supremacy of the Pope, and began the Reformation of Religion; though formerly he had writ a Book against Luther, for which the Pope gave him the honourable Title of The Defender of the Faith; afterwards made Hereditary by Act of Parliament to his Heirs and Successors. A Prince of great vices, but of greater virtues. 38.

- 1547 21 Edward VI. the Son of Henry the 8th, by Jane Seymour his third Wife; out of whose Womb he is said to be cut, to come into the World, as Cesar was; but he had neither Cesar's Fortune nor length of life; dying very young, and his Affairs conducted by divided Councils; though otherwise of great hopes, and of a pregnancy of judgment above his years. 6.
- 1553 23 Mary, the Daughter of King Henry the 8th, by Katharine of Spain, the Widow of his Brother Arthur, restored the Popes Supremacy banished by her Father, with the whole mass of Popery abolished in her Brother's Reign. To which Religion so addicted, that in the short time of her Reign there was more blood shed, than in the whole 44 years of her Sister Elizabeth. In the last year of her Reign she lost Calice to the French, which proved the loss of her life, as it was supposed. 5.
- 1558 23 Elizabeth, the Daughter of King Henry the 8th, by the Lady Anne Bullen his second Wife, a most gracious Heroick Princess, was by the Divine Providence of God preserved from the Practices of her Enemies in her Sisters Reign, to sway the Scepter of the Kingdom. She pursued the Reformation of Religion, began in the times of her Father and Brother; refined the corrupt Coin brought in by her Father, furnished the Royal Navy with all kind of VVarelike Ammunitions; increased the Revenue of the Universities, by the Statute of Prenupt; secured the Scots against the French; the French Protestants against the Papists, and both against the Spaniards: defended the Netherland, against the attempts of Spain; commanded the whole Ocean; entred League with the Muscovites; and was famous for her Prudence and Government amongst the Turks, Persians, and Tartars, yea her very Enemies. Finally she died in the 45. year of her Reign, and the 70. of her life, on the 24. of March, Anno 1602. according to the computation of the Church of England, which beginneth the New Year with the Feast of the Annunciation. To whom succeeded JAMES the Sixth, King of the Scots, with the joy of all men, as the next undoubted Heir of the Crown. Of whom we shall say more when we come to speak of the Monarchs of Britain: of which he was the first since the fall of the Roman Empire, and such more properly than the greatest of all those Emperours had been before: None of them having all the North parts of Britain itself, or any part of Ireland at all, nor many of the Isles adjoining, under their Dominion.
- In the mean time to look on England as a State distinct, we will consider it and the Kings thereof, with reference to reputation abroad, and power at home; with the Revenues, Arms, and Military Orders of it, as in other places. And first for Reputation, when all Christendom in the Council of Constance, was divided into Nations, Anglicana was one of the Principal, and not Subalterna; and had its voice of equal balance with the Nations of France or Italy, in all affairs concerning the Doctrine, discipline and peace of the Church, which were there debated. And for the place due to the Kings hereof in those

N General

General Councils, and the rank they held among other Christian Princes; I find that the Emperor of Germany was accounted Major filius Ecclesie; the King of France, Minor Filius; and the King of England, Filius tertius & adpivus. The King of France in General Councils, had place next the Emperor, on his right hand; the King of England on his left hand, and the King of Spain being before Castile. Now indeed the King of Spain being so much improved, is the dearly beloved Son of the Church; and arrogeth to himself the place above all other Princes: but in time of Pope Julius, the controversy arising between the Emperor and the two Princes for precedence: the Pope adjudged it to belong of right to England. And Pope Pius the Fourth, upon the like Controversy arising between the Ambassadors of France and Spain, adjudged the Precedency to the French.

Touching the Souldiers of Engl. and their most notable achievements, both by Sea and Land, sufficient hath been said already. What Forces the Kings herof have been able to raise, and may command for present service, will best be seen by the action of King Henry the 8th. at Bulloign, the Armies of Queen Elizabeth in 88. and the numbers of the Trained Bands of the several Counties. First, for the Action of King Henry the 8th. he had in his Avant guard 12000 Foot, and 500 Light Horse in blow Tackets with red Guards; in the Rere-ward a like number both of Horse and Foot, and in the main Battel 20000 Foot; and 2000 Horse, all in Red Jackets and yellow Guards: the whole number 44000 Foot and 3000 Horse. They drew after them 100 great Pieces, besides small ones, and for conveyance of their Ordnance, Baggage, and other necessities, no fewer than 25000 Draught-horses, besides other carriages. In the next place for 88. the Queen dispersed in several places on the Southern Coasts of the Kingdom, to hinder the landing of the Enemy, 25000 Souldiers of both sorts; at Tilbury, for the defence of the City of London, under the Command of the Earl of Leicester, 22000 Foot, and 1000 Horse: and for the Guard of her own person, under the Lord Hunsdon, 34000 Foot, and 2000 Horse: in all the number of 84000 men: besides those goodly Troops which the Nobility and Gentry did present her with, at their own proper charges. And as for the Trained Bands, the number of both sorts disciplined and mulstered to be number of both sorts in the eighth year of King James, (for I have since seen no Muster-Roll of them) amounted to 29630 able men, 14315 armed men, 931 Demilances, 6777 Light-Horse, 19345 Pioneers, besides what was required of Peers and Bishops, supposed to amount to 20000 armed men, and 4000 Light-Horse. And for their strength at Sea, besides the Navy Royal, consisting of about 30 gallant Ships, (besides the lesser Vessels;) the best and bravest that any Prince of Christendom can boast of, as his own property; there are such store of Civil and Merchant Ships; fit for any service, that in the year 88 aforesaid, the Queen had 100 Sail of good Ships to oppose the Spaniards; and 20 more to wait upon the motions of the Duke of Parma. And in the year 1597, the fit out for the Iland Voyages, no fewer than 120 Sail of all sorts, of which 60 were men of War.

As for the Revenues of this Kingdom, Boswell reckoned them in the time of King Henry the 7th, to be no more than 400000 Crown per annum; but grants, that afterward they were improved to a million more, by King Henry the 8th; the dissolution of Monasteries, and the benefit redounding from the Court of Wards, making that improvement. And to say truth, the Universal dissolution of Religious Houses of all sorts, did for the time no tily increase his annual income; that he was fain to erect two new Courts (the Court of Augmentations, and the Court of Surveys) for the better managing of the same. But these Additions being waisted by his own exorbitant expenses, and the several Alienations made by King Edward the sixth; those Courts of new erection were dissolved again; and the Revenue fell so short of its former height, that in the 12. year of Queen Elizabeth, the profits of the Crown (besides the Court of Wards, and the Dutche of Lancaster) came to no more than to 183197 l. 4 s. Of which 110612 l. 1 s. 2 d. went that year out upon the Navy, the charge of Household, and other necessary assignments. Since which time the great increase of trading, both at home and abroad, and the great glut of money in all parts of the World, hath added very much to the Revenue. The certainty whereof as I do not know, so neither will I aim at it by uncertain Hearsay.

The Principal Orders of Knighthood are and were, 1. of the Round Table, instituted by Arthur King of the Britains, and one of the Worlds Nine Worthies. It consisted of 150 Knights whose names are recorded in the History of King Arthur; there were Sir Ure, a wounded Knight came to be cured of his hurts: it being his fate that only the best Knight of the Order should be his Chirurgion: The Arms of most of these, with their several Blazons (I know not on how good authority) we find in Bava, the French Herald. The principal of them were Sir Lancelot, Sir Tristan, Sir Lamorauc, Sir Gavin, &c. all placed at one Round Table, to avoid quarrels about priority and place. The Round Table hanging in the great Hall at Winchester, is falsely called Arthur's Round Table, it being not of sufficient Antiquity and containing but 24 Seats. Of these Knights there are reported many fabulous Stories. They ended with their Founder, and are feigned by that Lucian of France, Rablais, to be the Ferry-men of Hell; and that their pay is a piece of mouldy bread, and a phyllox on the Nose.

2. Of St. George, called commonly the Garter, instituted by King Edward the third, to increase vertue and valour in the hearts of his Nobility; or as some will, in honour of the Countess of Salisbury's Garter, of which Lady the King formerly had been enamoured. But this I take to be a vain and idle Romance, derogatory both to the to be a vain and idle Romance, derogatory both to the Founder, and the Order; first published by Polydore Virgil, a stranger to the affairs of England, and by him taken upon no better ground than fama vulgi; the tradition of the common people; too trifling a Foundation for to great a building; Common bruit, being so infamous a Historian, that wife men neither report after it, nor give credit to any thing they receive from it. But for this fame or common bruit, the vanity and improbabilities thereof have been elsewhere canvassed. Suffice it to observe in this time and place, that the Garter was given unto this Order, in testimony of that bond of Love and Affection, wherewith the Knights or Fellows of it were to be bound severally unto one another, and all of them jointly to the King as the Sovereign of it. So hath the Register of the Order, (in which occurreth not one word of the Ladies Garter) affirming that King Edward did so fit the habit unto that design, Ut omnia ad amicitiam & concordiam tendere nemo non intelligat. But to return unto the Order, there are of it 26 Knights, of which the Kings of England are Sovereigns; and is so much desired for its excellency, that 8 Emperours, 21 Foreign Kings, 22 Foreign Dukes and Princes, besides divers Noble men of other Countries have been Fellows of it. The English is a blew Garter buckled on the left leg, on which these words are embroidered, via. Henry sui qui mil y pene. About their necks they wear a Red Ribband, at the end of which hangeth this Image of St. George, upon whose day the Installations of the new Knights are commonly celebrated.

3. Of the Bath, brought first into England, 1399. by Henry the Fourth. They are created at the Convention of Kings and Queens, and the Installation of the Princes of Wales: their duty to defend true Religion, Widows, Maids, Orphans, and to maintain the Kings Rights. The Knights thereof distinguished by a Red Ribband, which they wear ordinarily about their necks, to difference them from Knights Bachelor, of whom they have in all places the precedence; unless they be also the Sons of Noblemen, to whom their birth gives it before all Orders.

4. Of Barnets, an Order instituted by King James in the 9th. year of his Reign, for the furtherance of the Plantation of Ulster. They have Precedency of the Knights of the Bath, but not of those of the Garter, nor of the younger Sons of the Nobility. But this being Here- itary, not personal, and rather Civil than Military; is not so properly to be ranked amongst Orders of Knighthood.

The Arms of the Realm of England, are Mars, 3 Lyons passant Gardant, Sal. The reason why these Arms quartered with the French, took the second place, are, 1. Because that France at the time of the first quartering of them, was the larger and more famous Kingdom. 2. That the French seeing the honour done to their Arms, might more easily be induced to have acknowledged the English Title. 3. Because the English Arms were compounded of the Lion of Aquitain, and the two Lions of Normandy, being both French Dutches.

There were in England, at and since the time of the Reformation.

W A L E S.

W A L E S is bounded on all sides with the Sea, except towards England on the East; from which separated by the River Dee, and a line drawn to the River Wie. Anciently it extended Eastwards to the River Severn, till by the puissance of Offa the great King of the Mercians, the Welsh or Britains were driven out of the plain Countries beyond that River, and forced to betake themselves to the Mountains; where he caused them to be shut up and divided from England by an huge Ditch, called in Welsh, Claudi Offa, i. e. Offa's Dike: Which Dike beginning at the influx of the Wie into the Severn, not far from Chepstow, extendeth 84 miles in length, even as far as Chester, where the Dee is mingled with the Sea. Concerning which Ditch, there was a Law made by Harold. That if any Welsh-man was found with a Weapon on this side of it, he should have his right hand cut off by the Kings Officers.

The name of Wales some derive from Idwallo, the Son of Cadwalader, who with the small remainder of his British Subjects, made good the fastnesses of this Country, and was the first who had the Title of King of Wales. Others conceive that the name of Welsh and Wales, was given them by the Saxons: who having possessed themselves of all the rest of the Country, called the Britains, who lived here by the name of Wyllys, which in their Language signifieth as much as Asians; because they differed from them both in their Laws and Language: which is the general opinion. Most probable it is, that as the Britains derive their Pedigree from the Gauls (as before was proved) so they might still retain the name; and were called Wyllys by the Saxons, instead of Gauls: the Saxons used in most words W for G, as Warr for Guerre, Warden for Guardian, and the like. And this to be believed the rather, because the Frenchmen to this day call the Country Galles, and the eldest Son of England, Le Prince de Galles: as also that the Dutch or German (of whom the Saxons are a part) do call such Nations as inhabit on the Skirts of France, by the name of Wallens.

The ancient Inhabitants herof in the time of the Romans, before it had the name of Wales, were the Silures possessing the Counties of Hereford, Brecknock, Radnor, Monmouth, and Glamorgan, all Gloucestershire beyond the Severn, and the South parts of Vorcestershire on the same side also: their chief Towns, Ariconium, now Hereford, (not reckoned since the time of Offa, as a part of VVales;) Bulcum, now Buelthyn Brecknock, Cobannium, now Abergavenny, in Monmouth; Magni, now New Radnor, in the County so named; and Bovium now Bewerton, in Glamorgan. 2. The Dinets, possessing Cardigan, Carmarthen, and Pembrookshires, whose chief Towns were Lovenium, now New Castle, in Carmarthen; Maridunum, or Caermarthen it self; and Ostodite, where now stands S. Davids, by the VVelch called Menev, whence that Bishop hath the name of Menevius in Latine. 3. The Ordovices, inhabiting the Counties of Merioneth, Carnarvon, Anglesey, Denbigh, Flint, and Montgomery; with the North part of VVorcestershire beyond the River Severn, and all Shropshire, on the same side of the River. Their chief Towns were Segontium, now Caer Seint, in Carmarvonshire; Conovium, now Convey in the same County; Bonium, where after flood the famous Monastery of Banchor, in Flintshire; and Mediolanum, now Llanvillin, in the County of Montgomery. By these three Nations was all that Tract possessed, which lieth on the other side of the Severn. A very stout and hardy people, and so impatient of the yoke, that two of the three Legions which the Romans kept constantly in Britain, as before is said, were planted in and near this People, the better to contain them in due obedience: that is to say, the second Legion at Caer Llew upon Uk, of which more anon; and the twentieth at Deuonana, where now stands VVest-Chester. So difficult a thing it was to make this Nation subject to the power of Rome; and no less difficult to bring them under the Command of the Saxons: whom they withstood, when all the rest of Britain had been conquered by them; and lived to fee their Villies overcome by the Normans, before themselves had yielded to a Foreign yoke.

The Christian Faith planted amongst the Britains, in the time of Lucius, they still retained, when all the residue of the Illud had been relapsed to Paganism; and they retained it not in secret, as afraid to own it, but in a well constituted Church. Insomuch that Augustine the Atok, when he first Preached the Gospel to the English Saxons, found here no fewer than seven Bishops; that is to say, Herfordensis, Tewkesburyensis, Banchoresensis, Elvynensis, VViceciensis, and Mowganensis, (or rather Menevynensis;) all which, excepting only Paterensis, do still

The Kings and Princes of Wales, according to the Welch History.

- A. Ch.
 688 1 Ivor, a potent Interloper, upon Cadwallader's departure usurped the Kingdom.
 690 2 Idwallo, or Edwal, Son of Cadwallader, restored into his Fathers Throne.
 720 3 Roderick Malwinioe, the Son of Idwallo.
 755 4 Conan Tiedadethwy, the Son of Roderick.
 820 5 Mervin Orich, in right of Eysylls his Wife, the Daughter of Conan.
 843 6 Roderick Mawre, (who divided Wales into three Estates) the Son of Mervin.
 877 7 Amarawb, Prince of Guynedth, the Son of Roderick Mawre.
 913 8 Edwal Voel Prince of Guynedth, Son of Amarawb; made tributary to Athelstan King of England.
 940 9 Howel Dha, (or the Good) Prince of Debenbarth, and Powys.
 948 10 Teuaf, and Jago, Sons of Edwal Voel, to whom King Edgar did release the Tribute ordained by King Athelstan, to be paid in money, for a tribute of Wolves; of which we spake before when we were in England.
 982 11 Howel, the Son of Teuaf, succeeded in the Kingdom of Wales, his Father being still alive, and of right Prince of Guynedth.
 984 12 Cadwallan, the Brother of Howel.
 986 13 Meredith ap Owen, Prince of Debenbarth.
 992 14 Edwalili, Son of Merick, the Eldest Son of Edwal Voel; which Merick had been pre-terminated, as unfit for Government.
 1003 15 Aeden ap Blethored, an Usurper.
 1015 16 Llewellen ap Sisyllth, descended from Amarawb, the first Prince of Guynedth, or North-Wales.
 1021 17 Jago ap Edwal, Prince of Guynedth, Son of Edwal the third.
 1037 18 Gryffith ap Llewellen, the Son of Llewellen ap Sisyllth, and the Lady Angbarth.
 1061 19 Blethyn, and Rhywallon, Sons of Angbarth, the Daughter of Meredith ap Owen Prince of Debenbarth, by a second Husband.
 1073 20 Trahaern ap Caradoc, Cousin to Blethyn.
 1078 21 Gryffith Prince of Guynedth, Son of Conan, the Son of Jago ap Edwal, one of the Princes of the fame, did Homage to William the Conqueror, and was the last that had the title of King of Wales.
 1137 22 Owen Guinedth Prince of Guinedth, and Sovereign Prince of Wales, Eldest Son of Gryffith.
 1169 23 David ap Owen Prince of Guinedth, the younger Son of Owen Guinedth.
 1194 24 Llewellen, Son of Torwerth, eldest son of Owen Guine's, excluded by David his younger Brother.
 1242 25 David ap Llewellen Prince of Guinedth, Son of Llewellen ap Torwerth.
 1246 26 Llewellen Son of Gryffith, the Brother of David, the last Sovereign Prince of Wales, of the race of Cadwallader; overcome and slain in Battle by King Edward the first, in 1282. as before is said: by means whereof the Principality of Wales was added to the Crown of England.

When King Edward had thus fortunately effected this great business, he gave unto his English Barons and other Gentlemen of note, many fair Signiories and Estates; as well to reward them for their service in the Conquest, as to engage to many able men, both in purse and power, for the perpetual defence and subjection of it. For the Lordship of Flint, and the Towns and Estates lying on the Sea-coasts: he held them in his own hands, both to keep himself strong, and to curb the welch: and (wherein he dealt like the politick Emperor Augustus) pretending the ease of such as he had there placed; but indeed to have all the Arms, and men of employment under himself only.

This done, he divided Wales into seven Shires, viz. 1. Glamorgan, 2. Caernarvon, 3. Pembroke, 4. Cardigan, 5. Merioneth, 6. Caernarvon, and 7. Anglesey, after the manner of England. Over each of these, as he placed a particular English Lieutenant, so he was very desirous to have one general English Vicegerent, over the whole Body of the welch. But this when they mainly withstood he sent for his VVife, then great with Child, to Caernarvon, where he was delivered of a Son. Upon the news whereof the King assembled the British Lords, and offered to name them a Governour born in Wales, which no man could task. Such one when they had all sworn to obey, he named his young Son Edward; since which time our Kings Eldest Sons are called Princes of Wales. There Invefition is performed by the imposition of a Cap of Estate, and a Coronet on his head that is invested, as a Rite, being the emblem of Government; by putting a Ring of Gold on his finger, to shew him that now he is a Husband to the Country, and a Father to her Children; and by giving him a Patent, to hold the said Principality to him and his Heirs Kings of England. By which words the separation of it from the Crown is prohibited; and the Kings keep in themselves so excellent an occasion, of obliging unto them their eldest Son, when they please. In imitation of this Custom, more ex Anglia translato (saith Mariana) John the first of Castile and Leon, made his Son Henry Prince of the Asturias; which is a Country for craggy and mountainous, that it may not improperly be called the Wales of Spain. And all the Spanish Princes even to these times, are honoured with this Title of Prince of the Asturias.

Notwithstanding this provident care of Edward the first, in establishing his Empire here; and the extrem rigour of Law here used by Henry the 4th, in reducing them to obedience, after the rebellion of Owen Glendower: yet till the time of Henry the 8th, and his Father, (both being extraits from the Welch blood) they seldom or never contained themselves within the bounds of true Allegiance. For whereas before they were reputed as Aliens, this Henry made them (by act of Parliament) one Nation with the English, subject to the same Laws, capable of the same preferments, and privileged with the same immunities. He added also 6 Shires to the former number, out of those Countries which were before reputed as the Borders and Marches of Wales; and inbaid them to send Knights and Burgesses into the English Parliaments: so that the name and language only excepted, there is now no difference between the English and Welch; an happy Union.

The same King Henry established for the ease of his Welch subjects, a Court at Ludlow like unto the ordinary Parliaments in France: wherein the Laws are ministered according to the Fashion of the Kings Courts of Westminster. The Court consisteth of one President who is, for the most part, of the Nobility; and is generally called, the Lord President of Wales; of as many Counsellors as one shall please the King to appoint; one Attorney, one Solicitor; licitor, one Secretary, and the four Justices of the Counties of Wales. The Town it self (for this must not be omitted) adorned with a very fair Castle, which hath been the Palace of such Princes of Wales, of the English blood; as have come into this Country, to solace themselves among their People. Here was young Edward the 5th, at the death of his Father; and here died Prince Arthur, Eldest son of Henry the 7th: both being sent hither by their Fathers to the same end, viz. by their preference to satise and keep in order the unquiet Welch-men. And certainly, as the presence of the Prince was then a terror to the rebellious, so would it now be as great a comfort to this peaceable people.

What the Revenues of this Principality are, I cannot say; yet we may boldly affirm that they are not very small, by their reasons following, viz. 1. By the Composition which Llewellen, the last Prince of Wales, made with Edward the first: who being Prince of North-wales only, and dispossessed of most of that, was fain to redeem the rest, of the said King Edward, at the price of 50000 Marks (which comes to 10000 pounds of our present money) to be paid down in ready coin; and for the residue to pay 1000 l. per annum. And 2dly, by those two circumstances, in the marriage of the Lady Katherine of Spain, to the above-named Prince Arthur. For first, her Father Ferdinand being one of the warriest Princes that ever were in Europe, giving with her in Dowry 200000 Ducats; required for Joynture, the third part only of this Principality, and of the Earldom of Chester. And secondly, after the death of Prince Arthur, the Nobles of the Realm perswaded Prince Henry to take her to Wife; that so great a Treasure as the yearly Revenue of her Joynture, might not be carried out of the Kingdom.

The Arms of the Princes of Wales differ from those of England, only by the addition of a Label of three points. But the proper and peculiar device, and which we commonly, though corruptly, call the Princes Armes; is a Coronet beautified with three Orlich Feathers, and inscribed round with ICH DIEN, that is, I serve; alluding to that of the Apostle, The Heir while he is a Child differeth not from a Servant. This Coronet was won by that valiant Prince, Edward the Black Prince, at the Battle of Crecie, from John King of Bohemia; who did there wear it, and whom he there slew. Since which time it hath been the Cognizance of all our Princes.

I will now shut up my discourse of Wales, with that testimony of the people, which Henry the second used in a Letter to Emanuel Emperour of Constantinople; The Welch Nation is so adventurous, that they dare encounter naked with armed men; ready to spend their blood for their Country, and pawn their life for praise: and adding only this, That since their incorporating with the English, they have shewed themselves most loyal, hearty, and affectionate Subjects of the State: cordially devoted to their King, and zealous in defence of their Laws, Liberties and Religion, as well as any of the best of their fellow-Subjects; whereof they have given good proof in these latter times.

The BORDERS.

Before we come into Scotland, we must necessarily pass through that Batable ground, lying betwixt both Kingdoms; called THE BORDERS; the Inhabitants whereof are a kind of military men, subtle, nimble, and by reason of their often skirmishes, well experienced, and adventurous. Once the English Border extended as far as unto the Fryth, or Strait of Edenburgh on the East, and that of Dunbriton on the West (the first Fryth, by the Latines called Badoria and the latter Glota:) betwixt which, where now standeth the Town of Sterling, was an ancient Bridge, built over the River which falleth into the Fryth of Edenburgh; on a Crofs standing whereupon, was writ this Passpori;

I am Free-march as passengers may kei,
 To Scots, to Britains, and to English-men.

But when England groaned under the burden of the Danish oppression, the Scots well husbanded that advantage; and not only enlarged their Borders to the Tweeds, but also took into their hands Cumberland, Northumberland, and Westmerland. The Norman Kings again recovered these Provinces, making the Borders of both Kingdoms to be Tweed, East; the Solway, West; and the Chevin hills in the midst. Of any great wars made on these Borders, or any particular Officers appointed for the defence of them, I find no mention till the time of Edward the first; who taking advantage of the Scots disagreements about the succession of Alexander the third, hoped to bring the Country under the obedience of England. This Quarrel betwixt the two Nations he began, but could not end: the Wars following the Author; so that what Velleins saith of the Romans and Carthaginians, I may as well say of the Scots and English: for almost 300 years together, aut bellum inter eos populus, aut belli preparatio, aut insida pax fuit. In most of these conflicts the Scots had the worst. So that Daniel in his History seemeth to marvel how this Corner of the Ille could breed so many, had it bred nothing but men, as were slain in these wars. Yet in the Reign of Edward the second, the Scots (having twice defeated that unhappy Prince) became so terrible to the English Borders; that an hundred of them would fly from three Scots. It is a custom among the Turks, not to believe a Christian or a Jew complaining against a Turk, except their accusation be confirmed by the Testimony of some Turk also; which seldom happens, is not the least cause why so little Justice is there done to the Christians. In like manner, it is the Law of these Borderers, never to believe any Scots complaining against any English-man, unless some other English-man will witness for him; and so on the other side. Ex jure quantum inter limitantes rati (saith Camden in his Elizabeth.) nullus nisi Scutu in Scutum, nullus nisi Anglus in Anglum, testis admittitur. This custom making void in this fashion all the infidelities of both sides committed. Besides, there were divers here living, which acknowledged neither King; but sometime were Scots, sometime English, as their present crimes and necessities required protection, or pardon. To keep in this people, and secure their Borders, there were in each Kingdom three Officers appointed, called the Lords Wardens of the Marches: one being placed over the East, the other over the West, the third over the middle Borders. In England, the Wardens of the East Marches had his Seat at Berwick, (a Town of great strength, and which for the convenience of its situation tion, was the first thing which the English took care to defend, and the Scots to surmount of which he was also Governor. The Warden of the West Marches had his Seat in Carlisle: which Henry the 8. for that cause well fortified. The Warden of the middle Marches had no set place of residence, but was sometimes in one place, sometimes in another, according as occasion required; the Office being executed for the most part, by the Wardens of the Eastern or Western Marches. But Imperii medium est, terminus ante fuit, by the blessed Marriage of the Kingdoms, that being now the middle of one, which was then the bounds of two Empires; these Officers, and the cause of them, the Wars, are quite extinguished.

SCOTLAND.

SCOTLAND is the Northern part of Britain, separated from England by the River Tweed and Solway, and the Cheviot Hills, extending from the one to the other. It is in length (according to Polydore Virgil) 480 miles, but of no great breadth; there being no place distant from the Sea above 60 miles, and the Country ending like the sharp point of a Wedge. And for the length assigned unto it by Polydore, it must be made up by measuring the Crooks and Windings of the shores, every where thrusting out with very large Promontories, and cutting deep Indentures into the Land. For measuring in a straight Line from North to South, the length thereof from Solway Firth to the Straithy-head, amounteth but unto three hundred and ten Italian miles; and from Berwick unto Straithy-head, is a great deal shorter. So that there is no such over-light in the Maps of Britain, nor such necessity to correct them, as was sometimes thought.

It was once called Caledonia, from the Caledonii a chief People of it: sometimes Albania, from Albanie or Braid Albin, a principal Province in the North. But the most usual name is Scotia or Scotland; though the reason of the name be not agreed on. Some fabulous Writers of their own fetch it from Scota, the Daughter of an Egyptian Pharaoh; of whom more when we come to Ireland. Others with better reason (though that none of the belt) from the Scoti, Scitti, or Scythia German, or Sarmatian people, of noted fame; whom they will have to fize first on some parts of Spain, from thence transplant themselves into Ireland; and out of Ireland into the Hebrides or Western Islands, now parts and members of this Kingdom. The more probable opinion is, that they were no other than mere Irish, (whose language, habit, and the most barbarous of their customs, the Highlanders, or natural Scots do still retain) united in the name of Scot, about the declination of the Roman Empire: the word Scot signifying in their language, a body aggregated into one out of many particulars; as the word Alman in the Dutch, Scot illud dicitur, (saith Camden out of Matthæi de Westmister) quod ex diversis rebus in unum acervum aggregatur. First mentioned by this name in some fragments of Perphyric (who lived about the time of the Emperor Aurelian, as they are cited by S. Hieron); after the death of Constantine much spoken of in approved Authors, as the confederates of the Picts, in harassing the Roman Province.

The whole divided commonly into the Highlands, and the Lowlands. The Highlanders or Irish Scots inhabiting the Hebrides, and the West parts of the Continent adjoining to them, more barbarous than the Wild Irish at this day: not to be civiliz'd (as King James observed in his most excellent Basilicon Doron) but by planting Colonies of the more Inland, orderly Scots among them. The Lowlanders or English Scots (as I well may call them) inhabiting on this side the two Fyrths of Dumblithen and Edinburgh, and the plainer Countries along the German Ocean; are the more civil of the two, as being of the same Saxons race with the English. This is evident, first by their Language, being only a broad Northern English, a Dialect only of that tongue: 2. By the Testimony of the Highlanders themselves, who are the true Scots, and speak the old Irish language, by whom the Lowlanders and the English are called by the same name of Saxons: 3. By the general consent of all Historians, affirming that the Kingdom of the Northern or English Saxons, beyond Humber, extended as far Northwards as the two Fyrths before mentioned; and there continued for the space of 300 years: and 4. By the confession of some ingenious Gentlemen of that Nation, who grant it for a probable Tenet. That the Saxons and the Scots invading Britain much about the same time, the Saxons might extort the Eastern shore lying next their Country, from the old Inhabitants; as well as the Scots did all the Western parts which lay next to Ireland, and the Hebrides or Western Islands, from whence they first passed into Britain.

The Country for the most part, especially beyond the limits of the Roman Province, is very barren and unfruitful, not able to afford sustenance for the Natives of it; were they not a people patient of want and hunger; temperate in diet, and not accustomed unto that riot and excess, used commonly in richer and more plentiful Countries. Fruit they have very little, and not many Trees either for Building or for Fuel: the people holding, as in France, at the Will of the Lord, and therefore not industrious to build, or plant. Their chief Commodities are coarse Cloth; Fish in great abundance, Hides, Lead, and Coal; of which two last their Mountains do afford some rich undecaying Mines.

The People have been noted by their best Writers, for some barbarous Customs entertained amongst them. One of which was, if any two were displeased, they expected no law, but bang'd it out bravely, one and his kindred, against the other and his: and thought the King much in their common, if they granted him at a certain day to keep the Peace. This fighting they call their Feids, a word so barbarous, that were it to be expressed in Latine or French, it must be by Circumlocution. These deadly Feids, King James in his most excellent Basilicon Doron adviseth his Son to redress with all care possible; but it pleased God to give him so long a life as to see it in his own days remedied: wherein he got a greater Victory over that stubborn born People, than ever did any foreign Prince, or any of his Predecessors could do before him; and Admired truly Royal, and worthy himself. Another Custom they had of that nature, that the like was hardly ever heard of amongst the Heathen, and much less in Christendom, which took beginning, as the Scottish Historians affirm, in the Reign of Ewen the third, who is the Fifteenth King in their Catalogue, after the first Fergus. This Ewen being a Prince much addicted, or wholly rather given over unto lasciviousness, made a Law, That himself and his Successors should have the Maidenhead, or first Nights lodging with every Woman, whose Husband held Land immediately from the Crown: and the Lords and Gentlemen of all those whose husbands were their Tenants or Homagers. This was, it seems, the Knights-service which men held their Estates by; and continued till the days of Malcolm Canmor: who at the request of his Wife Margaret, (the was the Sister of Edgar Abeling) abolished this Law, and ordained, That the Tenants by way of commutation, should pay unto their Lords a mark in money; which Tribute the Historians say is still in force. It was called Marcheta militaris: but whether from a Mark, a horse in the old Gallique (implying the obscene signification of Equivare) as Mr. Selden thinks; or from Alasca, the sum of money by which it was afterwards redeemed, I cannot determine. Certain I am that this last Custom was of such a barbarous and brutish nature, that the Custom of the Indians in giving to the Bramine the first nights lodging with their Brides; and that of many Savage unconverted Nations in prostituting their wives and Daughters to the lusts and pleasure of their Guests; have not more unchristianity in them, than this of those Scottish Christians, if I may call it such.

These Customs shew the ancient Scots to be rude and barbarous, partaking little of the civility of the neighbouring Nation: nor are they so broken of the former, but that they are observed by a modern Writer, to be full greedy of revenge where they find means to take it; as also to be a subtle and politic People, inclined to Factions and Seditions amongst themselves; which he that reads their Stories cannot choose but see. A people, as King James observeth in his Basilicon Doron, ever weary of the present State and desirous of Novelties, accustomed to judge and speak rashly of their Kings and Princes; towards whom they have always carried themselves with such untractableness, that more Kings have been betrayed, murdered and depoyed by the Scots, than by all the Nations in the World. But take them in themselves without these relations, and they are said to be an industrious people, capable of all Sciences which they give their minds to, and generally well versed in Grammatical Learning, of which most of their Gentry have a smattering. And of most note in point of Learning, have been 1. Marianus (surnamed Scotus), and 2. Fedor Batius, the Historians. 3. John Major, a well-known Schoolman, for the times before the Reformation. And for the times that followed, 4. George Buchanan, an ingenious Poet, but an unkind Statesman; whose History, and Dialogue De jure Regni, have wrought more mischief in the World, than all Marci works. Not to have been remembered here, but because he was a Pedagogue to 5. King James, of most famous memory; whose Printed works declare his large abilities in all kinds of Learning. 6. Nispius, the Laird of Alarichiston. 7. S. Barclay, the Father and the Son. 9. John Sleat, the best Antiquary of this Nation. 10. Doctor John Maxwell, the late learned Bishop of Ross, and my very good friend; besides some others of less note.

The Christian Religion was here planted by divers men according to their several Nations, who did here inhabit amongst the Low Landers, or Saxon Scots, by Aidan the first Bishop of Lindisfarne, or Holy Island; amongst the Picts, inhabiting the South-Eastern parts, by Ninias; Bishop of Candida Cafa, or Whit-borne, in Galloway; amongst the Northern Picts, An. 555. and finally amongst the Scots, by Palladius a Deacon of Rome, sent to them hither for that purpose by Pope Celestine. An. 435. or thereabouts. And for the Reformation of Religion, overgrown with the rust and rubbish of the Romish Church, (degenerated from it self in the latter days) it was here made by a strong hand, according to the judgment of Rites and others: not taking counsel with the Prelates nor staying the leisure of the Prince as they did in England; but turning Prince and Prelate, out of all authority; made by that means, more naturally subject unto alterations than it had been otherwise; or only to be made good by the same violence which first introduced it. 'Tis true, that for a while being in danger of the French; and of necessity to support themselves by the power and favour of the English; they bound themselves by a solemn Subscription, to adhere only to the Rites and Ceremonies of the Church of England, and to observe that form of Worship which was there established. Religionis cultus, & Ritibus cum Anglis communibus subscripserunt; as is affirmed by Buchanan, their own State-Historian. But no sooner was that danger over, but they found opportunity ever since by practices, and correspondence with that party here, and finally by force of Arms, to thrust their own Constitutions and Form of Worship on the Church of England.

As for the Government of the Church, it was originally by Bishops, (as in all parts else) but so as they exercise their Functions and Jurisdictions in all places equally, wherefore ever they come: The Kingdom not being divided into Dioceses, till the time of Malcolm the third An. 1070. or thereabout. Nor had they any Archbishops till the year 1478. The Archbishop of Tork being created and obeyed before that time, as the Metropolitan of Scotland. But being once seized in an orderly and constant Hierarchy, they held the same unto the Reformation began by Knox; and whence he and his associates approving the Genevan Plat-form, took the advantage of the minority of King James the Sixth to introduce the Presbyterial Discipline, and suppress the Bishops; forbidding them by their own sole authority, to intermeddle any more in matters which concerned the Church; and Contending the Kingdom into Presbyteries of their own affigging. And that the King might not be able to oppose their doings, they kept him under by strong hand, imprisoned him at Sterling, made him fly from Edenburgh, removed from him all his faithful Servants, and seized upon his principal Fortresses: and in a word, so baffled and affronted him upon all occasions, that he was minded many times to have left the Kingdom, and retire to Perice, which doubtless he had done, (as I have heard perceived by some of great place and power) had not the hopes of coming at the last to the Crown of England, made him stay it out: So that his Maxim of No Bishop, no King, was not made at random, but founded on the sad experience of his own condition. And though upon the face of those inconveniences, which that alteration brought upon him, he did afterwards with great both Policy and Prudence, restore again the Episcopal Order, and settled it both by Synodical Acts, and by Acts of Parliament: yet the same restless spirit breaking out again in the Reign of his Son, An. 1618. did violently eject the Bishops, and suppress the calling and setting up their Presbyteries throughout the Kingdom, as in former times.

The famous or miraculous things rather of this Country are, 1. The Lake of Nieras, part of whose waters do con-gral in Winter, and part of them not. 2. That in the Lake of Lemnos, being 24 miles in compass, The Fish are generally without Fins, and yet there is great abundance of them. 3. That when there is no wind stirring, the Mar-waters of the said Lake are so tempestuous, that no Mar-caller dares venture on it. 4. That there is a Stone called the Deaf-stone, 12 foot high, and 33 Cubits thick; of this rare quality, that a Musket shot off on the one side, cannot be heard by a man standing on the other. If it be otherwise (as he must have a strong Faith who believes these wonders) let Hector Boetius bear the blame, out of whom I had it.

Chief Mountains of this Kingdom are the Cheviot Hills upon the Borders; and Mount Grampius, spoken of by Tacitus; the safest shelter of the Picts, or Northern Britains against the Romans, and of the Scots against the English; now called the Hills of Albany, or the mountainous Regions of Braid-Albin. Out of these springeth the 1. Tay, or Tawa, the fairest River of Scotland, falling into the Sea about Dundee, in the East side; and 2. the Clwyd, emptying it self into Dumbrilton Frith, on the West side of the Kingdom. Other Rivers of note now are, the 3. Bane, emptying it self into the Frith of Edenburgh, on the Banks whereof was fought that fatal Battle of Bannock-burn, of which more anon. 4. Spey, 5. Dee, the Ocean of Polony: none of them of any long course, by reason that the Country Northward is but very narrow.

In reference to Ecclesiastical Affairs, this Kingdom hath been long divided into 13 Dioceses, to which the Dioceses of Edenburgh (taken out of that of S. Andrews) have been lately added: and in relation to the Civil, into divers Seneschallies and Sheriffdoms, which being for the most part hereditary, are no small hindrance to the due execution of Justice. So that the readiest way to redress the mischief (as King James advised) is to dispose of them as they fall or Elcheat to the Crown, according to the laudable custom (in that case) in England.

The greatest Friends of the Scots, were the French, to whom the Scots shewed themselves so faithful, that the French King committed the defence of his Person to a selected number of Scottish Gentlemen: and so valiant, that they have much hindered the English Victories in France. And certainly the French feeling the smart of the English Puissance alone, have continually heartened the Scots in their attempts against England, and hindered all means of making union betwixt them: as appeared, when they brake the match agreed on, between our Edward the sixth, and Mary, the young Queen of Scots. Their greatest Enemy was the English, who overcame them in many battles, seized once upon the Kingdom, and had longer kept it, if the mountainous and inaccessible woods had not been more advantageous to the Scots, than their Power: for so much King James seemeth to intimate in his speech at White-hall, 1607. And though, faith he, the Scots had the honour and good fortune never to be conquered, yet were they never but on the defendible side; and may in part thank their hills and inaccessible passages, that saved them from an utter overthrow, at the hands of all them that ever pretended to conquer them. But

Jan cuncti gens una sumus, sic finis in eum:

One only Nation now we are,
And let us so for ever be.

The chief Cities are Edenburgh (of old called Castrum Alatum in Latine, where is the Kings Palace, and the Courts of Justice. It consisteth chiefly of one street extending in length one mile, into which run many pretty lanes, so that the whole compass may be nigh three miles, extending from East to West on a rising ground, at the Summit or West-end whereof standeth a strong and magnificent Castle, mounted upon a steep and precipitous Rock, which commandeth the Town; supposed to be the Castrum Alatum, spoken of by Polomy. Under the command or rather the Protection of which Castle, and through the neighbourhood of Leith, standing on the Fryth, and serving as a Port unto it; and finally by the advantage of the Courts of Justice, and the Court Royal, called Holy-Rood-House, it soon became rich, populous, well-traded, and the chief of the Kingdom: but withal factious and seditious, contesting with their Kings, or siding against them upon all occasions. No way to humble them, and keep them in obedience to their Sovereign Lords, but by incorporating Leith, indulging it with the Privileges of a City, and removing thither the Seat Royal and the Courts of Judicature, which they more fear than all the Plagues that can befall them. It belonged in former times to the English Saxons, (as all the rest of the Country from the Fryth to Berwick, in whom oppressed by the tyranny of the Danes, it was taken by the Scots and Picts, Anno 800, or thereabouts. 2. Sterling, situate on the South-side of the Forth or Fryth, in the Sheriffdom so called; a strong Town, and beautified withal with a very fair Castle, the birth-place of King James the sixth, the first Monarch of Great Britain. Near to which Town, on the banks of the River Bannock, happened the most memorable discomfiture that the Scots ever gave the English: who besides many Lords and 700 Knights and men of note, lost in this Fight (as the Scottish Writers do report) 50000 of the common Soldiers (our English Historians confess 10000, and too many of that) the King himself (Edward the 2.) being compelled to flee for his life and safety. Some of the Scottish Writers tell us, that the purer sort of Silver, which we call Sterling money did take name from hence; they might as well have told us, that all our Silver Bullion comes from Bullion in Luxemburg, or from the Port of Bullion in France, the truth being that it took that name from the English or Merchants of East-Germany, drawn into England by King John to refine our Coin. 3. Glasgow, in Chindale, honoured with an Archbishop Sec, and a publick School (to which some give the name of an University) founded here by Archbishop Turnbull, Anno 1554. 4. S. Andrews, the chief Town of Fife, an Archbishop Sec, and an University; by the Latine called Fannus Regulus; which, and the English name, it took from the bones of S. Andrew the Apostle, translated first from Petrus in Peloponnesus where he suffered death, unto Constantinople; and thence brought hither by a Monk called Albanus Regulus, in the year 378 (if they be not mistaken in the time, who have made the Story). Over which Relicks he is said to have built a Monastery, which grew to be a City: called from the founder Fannus Regulus; in honour of the Saint S. Andrew. The Bishop hereof is the Metropolitan of all Scotland; the City seated on the Ocean, near the fall of the Eden, overlooked with a strong and goodly Castle, the Archbishops seat. 5. Parkland, in the same Province or Fife, beautified with a retiring house of the Kings, resorting thither, often on recess from business, or for the commodity and pleasure of hunting, which for the place affords. 6. Dundee, in Latine, Tadunum, a rich and noted Port at the mouth of the Tay, the chief Town of Angus. 7. Aberdon, at the mouth of the River Dons, whence it had the name, (the word Aber in the British signifying the mouth or influx of a River) an University, and Bishops Sec. 8. Peebles or St. Johns Town, seated on the Tay, but in the middle of the Kingdom; walled and replenished with an industrious people: the chief Town of the Sheriffdom of Peebles. 9. Scots, on the farther farther side of the Tay, adorned heretofore with a famous Monastery; the usual place for the inauguration of the Scottish Kings; the fatal stone, on which they did receive the Crown, (the Palladium of the Scottish Kingdom) here kept, till the removal of it unto Westminster, by King Edward the first. Upon which stone there were of old engraven these Verses.

Non fallat finium, Scotti quocunque locatum Invenient lapidem, regum timentur ibidem.

Translated in old Meeter thus:

The Scots shall brook that Realm as native ground,
If Weirds fail not, where ere this Stone is found.

Most happily accomplished in the Succession of King James the sixth, to the Crown of England. 10. Dumbrilton (Britannodunum in the Latine), seated in a grassie Plain, at the fall or influx of the River Levin into the Clwyd, upon two steep and precipitous Rocks, flanked on the West with the said two Rivers, and on the East with a miry Flat, drowned at every full Sea: the strongest hold of all the Kingdom, and thought to be impregnable but by Fire now or Treason, and the chief Town of the West side of Scotland; the name hereof communicated to the Fryth adjoining.

The Ancient Inhabitants of this Country dwelling within the limits of the Roman Province, were the Gadens, possessing Tevisdale, Tweeddale, March and Lathien, whose chief City was Castra Alata, now Edenburgh. 1. The Damii, dwelling in Clwydsdale, Lemnos, Sterling, and Menteith, whose chief City was Vandunara, now Roefraw; Lindum, now Lindisfarne. 2. The Selegos inhabited in Liddisdale, Tevisdale, Eskdale, Amundale, and Niddisdale, whose chief place was Carbanatorigum, now Caer-Laverock; and 4. The Noemets, containing Galloway, Carriek, Kyle and Cunningham. Principal places of which were; Lucebopis, now Withern, and Berigenium, now Bargenie. Without the Province, amongst the Picts or barbarous Britains, divided generally into Caledonii and Moetae, the Nations of most Note were, 5. The Caledonii properly so called, taking up all Strathern, Argile, Cantire, Albanie, Lorn, Peebles, Angus, and Fife. 6. The Vermenes of Mernis and Mar. 7. The Talzalii of Bugban. 8. The Pacomagi of Loquhabre and Murray. 9. The Canta of Ros and Sutherland. 10. The Contini of Cathness; and 11. The Cornubii of Strathbarn, the furthest Country Northward of all the Island. Chief Towns of which were, Tamias, Banatia, Orea, Deonias, and Tuesis, which we know not where to find upon any certainty.

The fortunes of this people, as they related to the Romans, hath been shewed before. On the withdrawing of whole Forces, so much hereof as formerly had belonged to that Empire, was possessed by the Saxons, the residue thereof, as formerly, by the Scots and Picts; save that the Saxons not content with that which the Romans held, made themselves Masters also of the Plain Countries, lying on the German Ocean, to which the passage out of Germany was both short and easy. By which account, besides those places in the East, they were possessed of the Counties or Sheriffdoms of Tevisdale, Tweeddale, March, Lathien, Liddisdale, Enfisdale, Eskdale, Amundale, Niddisdale, Clwydsdale, Galloway, Carriek, Kyle, Cunningham, Lemnos, and Sterling, being the richest and most flourishing part of the modern Scotland. The Scots for their part had the Counties of Cantire, Argile, Braid-Albin, (or Albanie) Lorne, Loquhabre, and Strathbarn, lying on the West and North: the other Northern moorly (except ing some parts near the Coast of the German Ocean possessed by the Saxons) containing the now Counties of Cathness, Sutherland, Ros, Murray, Bugban, Marer, Mern, Angus, Abal, Peebles, Fife, Strathern and Menteith, being only left unto the Picts. From whence the Saxons and Scots came into these parts: hath been shewn already. And for the Picts, (to omit here the refutation of those who will have them to descend from the Agathyrsi, a people of Scythia) they were no other than such of the natural Britains, as never were brought under the Roman Empire, but still preserved their Country in its former Liberty; called therefore by Terrillius, in accessu Romanis loca, as indeed they were: and using still their ancient custom of painting their bodies, after the rest of their Country men had conformed themselves to more civil courses, were by the Romans called Picti: and by that name first mentioned in the Fameyger of Emmami, in the time of Constantine the Great. They long possessed these parts without an Inmate, even till the year 422, when the Irish-Scots wanting room at home, and having formerly possessed themselves of the Western Isles, first set foot in Britain: which whom they had continual War, till in the end the Scots prevailing, compelled the Picts to abandon to them the Western parts, and withdraw themselves into the Eastern. Afterwards growing into better terms with the other, and willing to enlarge their Borders towards the more flourishing South, they contracted an Offensive and Defensive League against the Britains; who on all sides, they most miserably tortured, till vanquished and beaten back by the conquering Saxons, against whom they contracted a new Confederacy. Taking the advantage of the death of Ethelbert King of the Northumbrians, and the invasion of the Danes on the rest of England, they got into their hands all Berneckia, or so much of the Kingdom of the Northumbrians, as lay on the North of Tweed, and Salway; reckoned from that time forwards as a part of their Dominions. But this good neighbourhood held not long betwixt these two Nations. It hapned at the last, that Achaim King of the Scots, married Fergusia, Sister unto Hungus, King of the Picts, and had by her a Son called Alpine, who after the death of Hungus dying without Issue, and having none of a nearer kindred was in the Judgment of the Scots, to succeed in that Kingdom. But the Picts, alledging a Law of not admitting Aliens to the Crown, chose one Fergus of their own Nation, to be their King: with whom Alpine contended in a long War, victorious, for the most part, in conclusion slain. The quarrel notwithstanding did remain betwixt the two unfriendly Nations, till at the last, after many bloody battels and mutual overthrows (the Scots being for the most part on the losing side) Konmeth, the second of that name, vanquished Dunken, the last King of the Picts, with so great a slaughter of his people, that he extinguished not their Kingdom only, but their very name; passing from that time forwards under that of Scots. No mention after this of the Pictish Nation; unless perhaps we will believe that some of them passed into France; and there, forsooth, subdued that Country which we now call Picardy.

As for the Catalogue of the Kings of the Scots in Britain, I shall begin the same with Fergus, the second of that name in the Account of their Historians: leaving out that rabble of 39 Kings (half of them at the least before Christ Nativity) mentioned by Hector Boetius, Buchanan, and others of their Classick Authors. Neither shall I offend herein, as I conjecture, the more Judicious and understanding men of the Scottish Nation, (and for others I take little care) since I deal no more unkindly with their first Fergus and his Successors, than I have done already with our own Brutus, and his: The first Scottish King that settled gift, and as many of the Scots to advise about it, with the consent of all adjudged it to John Baliol Lord of Galloway, Son of John Baliol and Doroqueilla his Wife, Daughter of Alan Lord of Galloway, and of the Lady Margaret, the eldest Daughter of the said David; who having done his homage to the said King Edward, was admitted King.

1300 24 John Baliol, an English-man, but forgetful both of English birth, and English Favours, invaded the Realm of England in Hostile manner, and was taken prisoner by King Edward. Who following his blow, made himself Master of all Scotland, which he held during the rest of his life, and had here his Chancery, and other Courts. 6.

1306 25 Robert Bruce, Son of Robert Bruce, Lord of Annandale (Competitor with Baliol for the Crown of Scotland in Right of Isabel his Mother, the second Daughter of David Earl of Huntingdon, and consequently a degree nearer to the King deceased than Baliol was, though descended from the elder Sister) was crowned King in the life-time of King Edward the first; but not fully possessed thereof until after his death; confirmed therein by the great defeat given to Edward the second, at the fight of Bannock-burn, not far from Sterling, spoken of before. But he being dead, Ann 1322. Edward the third confirmed the Kingdom on 1332 26 Edward Baliol, Son of John Baliol, rejected by the Scots for adhering to firmly to the English; who thereupon harried Scotland with fire and Sword. 10.

27 David Bruce the Son of Robert, restored unto his Fathers Throne by the power of the Scots, and a great enemy to the English. Invading England when King Edward was at the siege of Calice, he was taken Prisoner by Q. Philip, the Wife of that King, and brought to Windsor, where he was Prisoner for a while with King John of France. Released at last on such conditions as best pleased the Conqueror. 29.

1371 28 Robert II. surnamed Stewarts, King of the Scots by descent from the eldest Sister of David Bruce, was extracted also from ancient Princes of Wales (as was said before): restoring thereby the British blood to the Throne of Scotland.

1390 29 Robert III. Son of Robert the second, called John before he came to the Crown; in which much over-awed by his own Brother the Duke of Albany, who had an aim at it for himself. 16.

1406 30 James, Son of Robert the third, taken Prisoner by King Henry the fourth of England, as he was crossing the Seas for France, to avoid the practices of his Uncle. Restored unto his Country in the beginning of the Reign of King Henry the sixth, after 18 years absence, he was at last most miserably murdered by the Earl of Arbol, claiming a right unto that Crown. 42.

1462 32 James III. slain by his own rebellious Subjects. 29.

1491 33 James IV. married Margaret the eldest Daughter of King Henry the seventh, but at the soliciting of the French, (against the Peace between the Nations) he invaded England (in the absence of King Henry the eighth) with 100000 men: but was met by the Earl of Surry (having 26000 men in his Army) nigh unto Floeden, where he was slain, together with two Bishops, twelve Earls, fourteen Lords, and his whole Army routed. 23.

1514 34 James V. Son of James the fourth, and the Lady Margaret, kept for a time such good correspondence with the English, that in the year 1536, he was created Knight of the Order of the Garter. But afterwards inheriting his Fathers hatred against them, he invaded their Borders in the year 1542: and was met by the Lord Wharthen, then Warden of the West Marches. The Battels being ready to joyn, one Sir Oliver Sinclair the Kings Favourite, though otherwise of no great Paragance, was by the Kings directions proclaimed General: which the Scottish Nobility took in such indignation, that they threw down their Weapons, and suffered themselves to be taken prisoners; there being not one man slain on either side. The principal Prisoners were the Earls of Glorcarn, and Cassiles; the Barons Maxwell, Oliphant, Somervell, Flemming, with divers others: besides many of the principal Gentry. 28.

1542 35 Mary, the Daughter and only lawfully-begotten Child of James the fifth, succeeded in her Cradle unto the Throne; promised in Marriage to King Edward the sixth of England; but by the power of the Hamilton carried into France, where married to Francis, then Dauphin, afterwards King of the French, of that name the second. After whose death, she married Henry Lord Darnley, eldest Son of Matthew Earl of Lennox, Outcast of her Dominions by a potent Faction, whereafter a tedious imprisonment she was put to death in Fotheringhay Castle in Northamptonshire, and interred at Peterburgh, Ann 1506.

1567 36 James VI. the Son of Mary Queen of Scots, and of Henry Lord Darnley, was crowned King in his Cradle also. He married Ann, the Daughter of Christian the third, King of Denmark; was chose of the Order of the Garter, Ann 1590. and succeeded Queen Elizabeth in the Realm of England, March 24. Ann 1602. And here I cannot omit the prudent fore-sight of Henry the seventh, who having two Daughters, bestowed the Eldest (contrary to the mind of his Council) on the King of Scots, and the younger on the King of the French: that so, if his own Issue male should fail, and that a Prince of another Nation must inherit England; then Scotland as the lesser Kingdom would depend upon England, and not England wait on France, as upon the greater. In which succession of the Scots to the Crown of England, the Prophecy of the fatal Stone, (spoken of before, did receive accomplishment. And so perhaps might that ascribed in the Polychronicon to an holy Anchor living in King Edward the time, which is this, Englithmen, for that they women them to drunkennels, to treason, and to retchlessnes of Gods house, first by Danes, and then by Normans, and the third time by Scots, whom they holden least worth of all, they shall be overcome. Then the world shall be unstable, and so divers & variable, that the instability of thoughts shall be betokened by many manner diversity of Clothing. For on this Union of the Kingdoms, this Prediction seems to have been accomplished; the circumstances mentioned in the same so patly agreeing, and the Scots never subduing England, but by this blessed Victory. Unless perhaps the Accomplishment thereof be still to come; or that it was indeed more literally fulfilled in the great Defeat at Bannock-burn, in which was slain 50000 English, as the Scottish Writers do report, and the name of Scot growing so terrible for a time, that an hundred of the English would flee from three Scots, as before was noted.

The Revenues of this Crown Boterus estimeth at 100000 Crowns, or 300000 sterling, and it is not like that they were much more, if they came to that: here being not commodity in this Kingdom to allure strangers to Traffick: the Domain or Patrimony of the Crown, but mean; the Country in most places barren, and many of the Subjects, those especially of the Out-Isles, and the Western parts, so extremely barbarous, that they add very small improvement to the publick Treasury.

And answerable to the shortness of their standing Revenue, were their Forces also. For though the Country be very populous, and the men generally patient both of cold and hunger, and inured to hardship; yet in regard the Kings hereof were not able to maintain an Army under pay, their Forces seldom held together above 40 days; and then, not a great deal sooner, did disband themselves. For the Nobility and Gentry being bound by the Tenure of their Lands, to serve the King in his Wars, and to bring with them such and so many of their Passals, as the present service did require; used to provide for themselves and their followers, tents, money, victuals, provision of all with nothing. Which being spent, they usually disbanded, and went home again, without attending long on the Expedition. Which I conceive to be the reason, why the Scots in the time of hostility betwixt the Nations, made only sudden & tumultuary incursions into England, without any thing of special moment: and that they have not acted any thing elsewhere in the way of Conquest, but only as Mercenaries to the French and other Nations that have hired them. And though it be affirmed that the Army of King James the 4th. when he invaded England in the time of King Henry the Eighth. (being then in France) consisted of 100000 fighting men; yet this I look on only as an argument of their populosity: few of those men being armed or trained up to service, and therefore easily diffracted by a far less Army. It's true that in the year 1645, the Scottish Covenanters raised an Army consisting of 18000 Foot, and 2000 Horse, and 1000 Dragoons; with Arms, Artillery, and Ammunition correspondent to it: which was the gallantest Army, and the best appointed, that ever that Nation did set out in the times foregoing. But then it is as true withal, that this Army was maintained and payed by two Houses of the Parliament of England, at the rate of 30000 l. per man, and an advance of 100000 l. before-hand, the better to invite them to embrace the action, and prepare necessities for it, without any charge unto themselves. And though the Army which they sent into England above five years after, under James Duke Hamilton of Arran, was little inferior unto this number, but far superior to it both in Horse & Arms, and other necessary appointments: yet it is well known, that the Scots brought nothing but their own bodies to compound that Army; the Horse and Arms being such as they had gotten out of England in the former War.

In point of reputation amongst Foreign Princes, the Kings of the Scots, and their Ambassadors and Agents, had place in all General Councils, and Ecclesiastical Assemblies, before those of Castile: and by the Statutes of late times, have been reckoned (with the Kings of England, France, and Spain) for absolute Monarchs. But I conceive that this was only since the first years of King Edward the third, when they had quitted their subjection and vassalage to the Crown of England. For that anciently the Scots were Homagers to the Kings of England, may be apparently demonstrated by these following Arguments: 1. By the Homages, and other services, and duties, done by the Kings of the Scots unto those of England: Malcolm the third doing Homage unto William the Conqueror; as William, one of his Successors, did to K. Henry the second: and that not only for the three Northern Counties, or the Earldom of Huntingdon (as by former pretended) but for the very Crown it self: Kenneth the third, being also one of those eight Tributary or Vassal Kings, which rowed King Edgar over the Dee, as before was noted. 2ly, By the interposing of King Edward the first, and the submission of the Scots to that interposing, in determining the controversy of succession betwixt Bruce and Baliol: as in like case, Philip the 4th. adjudged the Title of Artois, which was holden of the Crown of France, and then in question betwixt the Lady Maud, and her Nephew Robert; or as King Edward the third, in the right of the said Crown of France, determined of the controversy betwixt John Earl of Montford, and Charles of Blois, for the Dukedom of Bretagne. 3ly, By the confession and acknowledgement of the Prelates, Peers, and other the Estates of Scotland, subscribed by all their hands and Seals in the Roll of Ragman; wherein they did acknowledge the superiority of the Kings of England, not only in regard of such advantages as the Sword had given him, but as of his original and undoubted right. Which Roll was treacherously delivered into the hands of the Scots, by Roger Mortimer Earl of March, in the beginning of the Reign of King Edward the third. 4ly, By the tacit concession of the Kings themselves, who in their Coins, Commissions, and publick Instruments, assume not to themselves the Title of Kings of Scotland, but of Reges Scottorum, or the Kings of the Scots: and thereby intimating that though they are the Kings of the Nation, yet therein some superior Lord (King Paramount as we may call him) who hath the Royalty of the Land. 5ly, By the Judgments and Arrests of the Courts of England, not only in the times of King Edward the first, but in some times since. For when William Wallis a Scottishman by birth, and the best Soldier of that Country, was taken Prisoner and brought to London, he was adjudged to suffer death as a Traitor: which had been an illegal and unrighteous judgment, had he been a Prisoner of War, and not looked on by the Judges as a Subject to the Crown of England. The like done in the case of Simon Frezill, another of that Kingdom in the same Kings Reign. In like manner, in the time of K. Edward the third, it was resolved by the Court, in the Lord Beaumonts case, when it was objected that one of the Witnesses was a Scot, and therefore as an Alien not to give his evidence; that his testimony was to be allowed off, because the Scots in the Law of England did not go for Aliens. And when one indicted for a Rape in the 13th. of Queen Elizabeth the first, desired a Medietatem Lingue, because he was a Scotchman, &c. to an Alien; it was denied him by the Court, because the Scots were not reputed here as Aliens; but as Subjects rather. So also, when Robert Umfraville, Lord of Kyme was summoned to the Parliament of England, in the Reign of King Edward the third, by the name of Robert Earl of Angus, (which is a dignity in Scotland,) and after in a Writ against him was called only by his own name of Umfraville, without any addition of that honour; the Writ was judged to abate: which I conceive the learned Judges had not done, if Scotland had not been reputed to be under the Vassalage of the Kings of England, 6. and lastly, by a Charter of Lands and Arms, (which I have in my custody) granted by King Edward the first, in the last year of his Reign, to Peter Dodge of Stoworth in the County of Chester, one of the Ancestors of my Mother: in which it is expressed, that the said Lands and Arms were conferred upon him by that King, for his eminent services, encontre son grand Enemy & Rebel, Balioi, Roy d'Escoffe & vassal de Angleterre; that is to say, against his great Enemy and Rebel Balioi King of Scotland, and Vassal of England. A thing so clear, that if King James had not been extremely tender of the honour of his Native Country, he needed not to have put his Lawyers to the trouble of a New Invention, in hammering the Case of the Post-nati for him; to make the Scots inheritant unto Lands in England. The acknowledgment and Recover of their old Subjection would have served his turn. But of this argument enough, and perhaps too much. I only add, that upon conference which I once had with an honourable person of that Kingdom of Scotland employed unto the Court in a business of no mean consequence to the peace and quiet of his Country: I found him so sensible of the inconveniences of their present Government, by reason of the Kings absence, and the frequent divisions and partialities of his Council there; that he confessed that Nation could be never rich or happy, till they were made a Province of the English Empire; and governed by a Vice-Roy, as Ireland was.

IRELAND.

IRELAND is environed on all sides with the Ocean; parted from Britain by a violent and unruly Sea, called S. Georges Chancel. Situate to the West of Britain, next unto which it is the biggest Island of Europe, containing in length 300, and in breadth 120 miles: and is seated under the 8th. and 10th. Climates, the longest day being 18 hours and an half in the Southern, and 17 hours 3 quarters in the Northern parts. It was once called Scotia, from the Scots who did there inhabit; and Scotia Minor, to difference it from Scotland, in the Isle of Britain. But the general name hereof is Ireland; by the Latins called Hibernia, by the Greeks, Iernia. And though some frame a wretched Erynnia from Iernus, a Spanish Captain; and some from Inaulph, bites a supposed Duke hereof; as others, ab Hyberno aere, the Winter-like and inclement air: yet probably the name proceeded from Erinland, which signifies in their own language a Western land. And yet I must not pretermitt the Erynn given us by Bochart, (more near the name than most of his other Fancies) who will have it called Hibernia, from Ibernia, a Phœnician word, signifying the furthest Habitation: there being no Country known amongst the Ancients, which lay West of Ireland.

Their own Chronicles, or Fables rather, tell us, how Cesarea, Nidus Nece, inhabited here before the Flood;

The Principal Order of Knighthood in this Kingdom was that of S. Andrew, instituted by Uingus, King of the Picts, to encourage his Subjects in the War against King Arthellane of England. The Knights did wear about their necks a Collar, interlaced with Thistles, with the picture of St. Andrew appendant to it: the Motto Nemo me impune lacessit. It took this name because after the Battle, Hungary and his Souldiers went all barefoot to S. Andrews, and there vowed that they and their Posterity would henceforth use his Cross as their Ensign (which is a Saltire Argent in a Field Azure) whensoever they take in hand any warlike enterprise.

2. But this Order being expired many Ages since, there is now no Order of Knight-hood in it, (except Knights Bachelor) but that of Nova Sentia; ordained by King James, An. 1622. for the planting of that Country by Scottish Colonies; in imitation of the Orders of Barons in England, for the plantation of Ulster. Hereditary, as that also is; but the Knights hereof distinguished by a Ribband of Orange-Tawney.

The Arms are Sol, a Lion Rampant Mars, within a double Tressure counter-flowered: which Tressure counter-flowered was added to the Lion by Albain King of the Scots, at what time he contracted the League with France; signifying (saith Helio Boetius one of their Historians) Francorum opibus Leonem exinde munierunt; that the Scotch Lion should be guarded by the riches of France.

and savage Customs, it being a constant course amongst them, when they were delivered of a man-child, to put some meat into the mouth of it, on the point of a Sword, withering therewith it might not dye but in the midst of Arms, and the heat of Battle. Both sexes used to trim themselves with the Teeth of Fishes, white as the driven Snow, or the polished Ivory; and therein placed the greatest part of their pride and bravery.

Nor are the modern Irish much abhorrent from such barbarous customs, as plainly shew from what Original they descend; altered but little by converse with more civil Nations. Of natural constitution generally strong and nimble of body; haughty of heart, careless of their lives, patient in cold and hunger, implacable in enmity, constant in love, light of belief, greedy of glory; and in a word, if they be bad, you shall no where find worse; if they be good, you shall hardly meet with better. The Diet, especially of the meer Irish, is for the most part, on herbs, roots, better mingled with Oat-flower, milk, and beef-broth: eating flesh many times without bread, which they digest with Osgueagh; and give their bread-corn to their horses instead of Provender. More particularly, those of the richer sort in all parts, and of all sorts those which inhabit within the Pale (as they themselves call it) and in such places where the English Discipline hath been entertained; conformable to civility, both in behaviour and apparel: The Kernes (for by that name they call the wild Irish of the poorer and inferior sort) most extremely barbarous; not behaving themselves like Christians, scarcely like men. All of them so tenacious of their ancient customs, that neither Power, nor Reason, nor the sense of the inconveniences which they suffer by it, can wean them to desert or change them. A pregnant evidence whereof, is their use of Ploughing, not with such gears or harness, as in other places; but by tying the hindmost hortes head to the tail of the former; which makes the poor Jades draw in a great deal of pain; makes them unserviceable by the soon losing of their Tails, and withal is a course of so slow a dispatch, that they cannot break up as much ground in a week as a good Team well harnessed would perform in a day; yet no persuasion hath been able to prevail upon them for the changing of this hurtful and ridiculous custom. And when the Earl of Straford, the late Lord Deputy had damned it by act of Parliament, and laid a penalty on such as should after use it: the people thought it such a grievance, and so injurious to the Nation, that amongst other things demanded towards a Pacification of the present troubles, their Agents and Commissioners insisted eagerly on the abrogation of this Law. An humour like to this in the point of Husbandry, we shall hereafter meet with in another place. Near of kin to which, is a lazie custom that they have of burning their straw (rather than put themselves to the pains to thresh it) by that means to part it from the Corn. From which no Reason can dissuade them, nor Persuasions win them. They have among them other customs as absurd though less inconvenient: as placing a green bush, on May-day, before their doors; to make their kine yield the more milk; kneeling down to the New-Moon as soon as they see it, desiring her to leave them in as good health as she found them; and many others of like nature.

They use a language of their own, but spoken also in the West of Scotland, and the Hebrides or Western Islands which though originally British, or a Dialect of it, by reason of their intermixture with Norwegians, Danes, Essterlings, or Ogts-men, and English Saxons; hath no affinity with the Welsh, for ought I can learn.

The Christian Faith was first preached among them by S. Patrick, affirmed to be the Nephew of S. Martin of Tours, Anno 435. Reformed in the more civil parts, and the English Colonies, according to the platform of the Church of England: but the Kernes, or natural wild Irish, (and many of the better sort of the Nation also) either adhere unto the Pope, or to their own superstitious fancies, as in former times. And to say truth, it is no wonder that they should: there being no care taken to instruct them in the Protestant Religion: either by translating the Bible, or the English Liturgy, into their own Language, as was done in Wales, but forcing them to come to Church to the English Service, which the people understand no more than they do the Mass. By means whereof the Irish are not only kept in continual ignorance, as to the doctrine and devotions of the Church of England, and others of the Protestant Churches: but those of Rome are furnished with an excellent argument, for having the Service of the Church in a Language which the common Hearers do not understand. And therefore I do heartily commend it to the care of the State (when these dissenters are composed) to provide, that they may have the Bible, and all other publick means of Christian instruction and devotion in their natural tongue.

The Soil of it self is abundantly fruitful, but naturally fitter for grafs and pasturage, than it is for Tillage: as may be seen in such places where the industry of man is aiding to the natural goodness of the Soil. But where that wanteth, the Country is either over-grown with Wood, or encumbered with vast Bogs, and unwelshom Marshes; yielding neither profit nor pleasure unto the Inhabitants. In some places, as in the County of Armagh, so rank and fertile, that the laying of any soil or compost on it, doth abate its fruitfulness, and proves the worst Husbandry that can be.

It hath been anciently very famous for the Piety and Religious lives of the Monks. Amongst whom I cannot but remember Columbus, and of him this memorable Apologum: when offered many preferments to leave his Country, he returned this Answer, It becomes not them to embrace other mens goods, who for Christs sake had forsaken their own. Of no less piety, but more eminent in point of Learning, was Richard Fitz-Raffe, Archbishop of Armagh, commonly called Armacanus, who flourished about the year 1350. A declared enemy of the Errors and corruptions of the Church of Rome.

It is affirmed of this Island, that (amongst other Privileges which it hath above other Islands) it fostereth no venomous Serpent, and that no such will live here, brought from other places. Hence of her self we find her speaking in the Poet.

*Illo qui sunt Graiis Glacialis Hibernia dicta; Cui Deus, & melior verum nascuntur Origo;
Ius commune dedit cum Creta aliisque Tonantis, Angues ne nostris disjunctum Phisla in oris.*

I am that Island which in times of old
The Greeks did call Hibernia, icy-cold
Secured by God and Nature from this fear,
Which gift was given to Crete, Joves Mother deary,
That poisonous Snake should never here be bred,
Or dare to hiss, or hurtful venom spread.

The other miracles of this Island are, 1. That there is a Lake in the County of Armagh, into which if one thrust a piece of wood, he shall find that part of it which remaineth in the Mud to be turned Iron; and that which is in the Water, to be turned into a Whet-stone: richly deserved by him, if the tale be false, who did first report it. 2. That the Kine will yield no milk, if their Calves be not by them; or at least their Calves-skins stuffed with straw or hay. It is said also, that all the breed of this Country are of less size than they be in England, except Women and Grey-hounds, and those much bigger than with us.

As for the Clergy of this Country, they have been little beholding to their Lay-Patrons in former times: some of their Bishops being so poor, that they had no other Revenues than the Pasture of two milch-Beasts. And so far had the Monasteries and Religious Houses been invaded by Appropriations, the Churches Rights; that of late times in the whole Province of Connaught, the whole stipend of the Incumbent was not above 40 shillings, in some places not above 16. So that the poor Irish must needs be better fed than taught: for ad revivendum Beneficiorum necessarium sequitur ignorantia Sacerdotum. Poor Benefices will be fitted with ignorant Priests, said Panormitan rightly. But this remedied in part by his Sacred Majesty King CHARLES, the second Monarch of Great Britain, who liberally (at the suit of the late Lord Archbishop of Canterbury) restored unto this Church all the Improvements and Portions of Tithes, which had been velted in the Crown. An action of most singular Piety, and Princely Bounty.

Principal Rivers of this Country, are. 1. The Shannon (the Senar of Ptolemy) which arising in the Mountains of Leitrim in the County of Connaught, and making many fair Lakes as it passeth forwards; loseth it self after a course of 200 miles (of which 60 Navigable) in the Western Ocean. 2. The Liff, by Ptolemy called Liburnus, neighboured by the City of Dublin. 3. Avonbeg, supposed Black Water, as the English call it. 4. Slane, supposed to be the Medona of the ancient Writers. 5. The Shawne. 6. The Boyne, &c. Of which, and others of like note, take this following Catalogue out of the Canto of the Marriage of the Thames and Medway in the Faery Queen.

There was the Liff rowling down the lea,
The sandy Shannon, the Bony Avonbeg,
The spacious Shannon, spreading like a Sea,
The pleasant Boyne, the fishy-fruitful Bann,
Swift Avonbeg, which of the Englishman
Is called Black Water; and the Liff deep,
Sad Trent that once his people over-ran,
Strong Auld tumbling from Slaweg steep, And Maullo mine, whose waves I whilom taught to weep.

There also was the wide-embayed Mayne.
The pleasant Bandon crown'd with many Wood;
The spreading Lee, that like an Island fair
Inclodeth Cork, with his divided flood;
And bateful Oure, late stain'd with English blood,
With many more;

So the renowned Spencer in his Canto of the marriage of Thames and Medway.

But besides these Rivers, this Island is in most places well stored with Lakes, yielding great plenty of Fish to the parts adjoining. The principal of which, 1. Lough-erne, containing 15 miles in breadth, and 30 miles in length; shaded with Woods, and so replenished with Fish, that the Fishermen complain of too much abundance, and the often breaking of their Nets. It hath also in it many Islands, one most remarkable for the strange and horrid noises which are therein heard, called therefore by the Vulgar, St. Patrick's Purgatory. As much as big as this is. 2. The Lake of Carles, which loseth it self in the Sea not far from Galway. A lake of 26 miles in length, and four in breadth: said to have in it 30 Islets, abounding with Pine-Trees. 3. Lough-Foyle, supposed to be the Legia of Ptolemy. 4. Lough-Engab, out of which the River Ronne, abundantly well stored with Salmon, hath its first Original. And besides these and many others of less note, there are said to be three Lakes in the Province of Meath, not far asunder, and having an intercourse of waters: but of so different a temper, that the Fish which are proper to the one, (for each of them hath its proper and peculiar sorts) will not live in the other: but either die, or by some secret conveyances, find a way to their own Lake out of which they were brought.

It was divided anciently into five Provinces, each one a Kingdom of it self, that is to say; 1. Leinster, 2. Meath, 3. Ulster, 4. Connaught, and 5. Munster: but of late time the Province of Meath is reckoned for a Member or part of Leinster.

1. LEINSTER, by the Latines called Legenia, hath on the East, the Irish Channel, (commonly called S. Georges Channel) by which parted from the Isle of Great Britain; on the West, the River Newrie, (Newas, as the Latine call it) which divides it from Munster; on the North, the Province of Meath; and the main Ocean on the South. The Soil more fruitful generally than the rest of Ireland, because better cultivated and manured, as having been longest in the possession of the English: from whom a great part of the Inhabitants derive themselves, and for that reason more conformable to the civilities and habit of the English Nation. Well watered, besides a large Sea coast, with many fair and pleasant Rivers, the principal whereof, 1. The Barrow, called in Latine Bergus; 2. The Newrie, 3. The Shannon, 4. The Liff, (the Liburnus of Ptolemy) neighbouring Dublin the chief City.

It containeth the Counties of 1. Dublin, 2. Kilkenny, 3. Caterlough, 4. Kildare, 5. Leafe, or Queens-County; 6. Ophalie, or Kings County, and 7. Wexford: in which are comprehended 34 Towns of note, and 88 Castles well fortified, and able to make good resistance against an Enemy, the English being forced to fortifie themselves in their Plantations with strong holds and fortresses against the incursions of the Natives.

Places of most observation in it, 1. Dublin, supposed to be the Phlana of Ptolemy: by the Irish called Bale-digh, because, being seated in a fenny and moorish soil, it was built on piles, as the word doth signify in that language. Situate at or near the mouth of the River Liff, which affordeth it a commodious Haven, but that the entrances thereof are very times encumbered with heaps of sand. The City very rich and populous, as being the Metropolis of all the island, the Seat of the Lord Deputy, an Archbishop See, and a University; besides the benefits redounding from the Courts of Justice. In those respects well fortified against all emergencies: and adorned with many goodly buildings, both private and publick. The Principal of which, are the Castle, wherein the Lord Deputy resideth, built by Henry Landow once Archbishop here: a College founded by Queen Elizabeth to the honour, and by the name of the blessed Bartholomew; the Cathedral Church dedicated to St. Patrick, the Apostle of the Irish Nation; a fair Collegiate Church called Christ Church, besides thirteen others dedicated to Parochial services. Being destroyed almost to nothing in the Danish Wars, it was re-edified by Harold, surnamed Harsinger, King of the New-Norwegians, then Masters of most parts of the Island; and after the flight of it to the Crown of England, was peopled with a Colony of Brifol men. 2. Wexford, or Verford, the Metropolis of Ptolemy, situate on the mouth of the River Slane, supposed to be the Medona of the same Author, the first of all the Towns in Ireland which received a Colony of English; 3. Kilkenny, on the River Newrie, the chief Seat of the Bishop of Offory, and the fairest Town of all the Islands: so called quasi Cella Canice, the Cell or Monastery of Canice, a man of great renown for piety in these parts of the Country. 4. Killare an in-land Town also, and a Bishop See; but of more note for giving the Title of an Earl to the ancient Family of the Fitz-Geralds, of long time honoured with this Title. One of which being much complained of to King Henry the 8th, as a man of too unquiet and turbulent a nature, that his Adversaries closed their charge against him with this expression, Finally, all Ireland cannot rule this Earl; the King replied, that then this Earl should rule all Ireland; and so for his selfs sake made him Lord Deputy of the Kingdom. 5. Rosse, once populous, well traded, and of large circumference, now a ruin only; nothing remaining but the Walls, which were built by Isabel, the Daughter of Richard Strongbow, Earl of Pembroke, the fortunate Conqueror of this Island for King Henry the second. 6. Philips Town, the principal of the County of Upshire, or Kings County; so called in honour of King Philip; as 7. Mariburg, the chief of Leafe, or the Queens County, was in honour of Queen Mary. 8. Leighlin, a place of great importance, well walled and fortified against the incursions of the Irish, by the Lord Deputy Bellingham. 9. Caterlough, commonly but corruptly Carlow, a Town of great strength, and the chief of that County. 10. Kesh, not otherwise of note, but that it is conceived to be the Rheba of Ptolemy.

2. METH, by the Latines called Media, by Ciraldus, Midia; because situate in the midst of the Island, hath on the South Leinster; on the West Connaught; on the North, Ulster, on the East, the Irish Sea, or S. Georges Channel. A small, but rich and pleasant Province: well stocked with people and stored with all things necessary for their sustentation; and for a sweet and wholesome air not inferior to any. Divided into three Counties only, that is to say, 1. East-Meth, 2. West-Meth, and 3. Longford; containing 13 Towns of note, and 14 Castles of good esteem. By reason of which strength, it is called by some Writers, the Chamber of Ireland.

Towns of most consequence herein, are 1. Trim, the chief Towns of the County of East-Meth, the ancient Barony of the Laciers; possessed in former times of a fair Revenue in this County, and the Lords of the greatest part of Ulster. 2. Tredah, more properly Drogheda, situate on the River Bee on the edge of Ulster, to which Province belongs so much of the Town as lieth on the North-side of that River: a very fair and populous City, as well by art as Nature very strongly fortified, and furnished with a large and commodious Haven. It took the name of Drogheda, from the Bridge there built upon the River for the conveyency of passage (as the word signifies in that language) and therefore called Pontana by some Latine Writers. 3. Molings, the chief Town of West-Meth. 4. Delvin, in the same County also, the Barony of the Nugents, an ancient Family in this Part. 5. Longford; of most note in the County so named, but not else observable.

As for the Fortunes of this Province (for Leinster since the first Conquest of it, hath been inseparably annexed to the Crown of England) it was first granted in Fee-Farm by King Henry the second, to Hugh Lacy, a man of great merit and employment in the Conquest of Ireland; who left it unto Walter his younger Son. By Margaret and Matilda, the Nieces of this Walter by his Son Gilbert, one moiety hereof came to the Mortimers Earls of March, and in their right unto the Crown in King Edward the Fourth; and the other moiety to the Pevelins, by whom dispersed and scattered into divers Families. Accompted for one County only till the time of King Henry the 8th, in whose Reign it was divided into East-Meth, and West-Meth; to which the County of Longford was after added, as it continueth to this day.

3. ULSTER, by the Latines called Ultheria; is the largest Province of all Ireland, bounded on the South with Meath and Connaught; on the West, with the vast Irish Ocean; on the North, with that part of the Northern Ocean; to which Ptolemy gives the name of the Northern Sea; and on the East, with St. Georges Channel. A Country fruitful of it self, but in most places formerly overgrown with Woods, and drowned in Marishes and great Bogs, by the natural slothfulness of the people: a matter responsible to the Husbandman both for Corn and Pasturage; since the late Plantation of the Brish, than in times foregoing.

It is divided into the Counties of, 1. Louth, 2. Cavan; 3. Fermanagh, 4. Down, 5. Monaghan, 6. Armagh, 7. Coleraine, 8. Tirconnel, 9. Tir-Owen, and 10. Antrim. In which are comprehended 14 Towns of note for Commerce and Traffick, and 30 Castles for the defence of the Country, and keeping under the wild Irish; wilder and more untractable in these Northern parts, than the rest of Ireland. The whole well watered with a large and spacious Sea, on three sides thereof; many great lakes in the body of it, besides the Rivers of 1. Bene called in Latine Boandey, which divides it from Meath; 2. the Bann, 3. Meandry, and 4. the Eym, belonging to this Province wholly.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Armagh, on or near the River of Kalin, the chief Town of the County so called; and the See of an Archbishop, who is the Primate of all Ireland. An ancient City, but so miserably destroyed by fire in Tir-Owen Rebellion, that it can scarce preserve the reputation of a Market-Town. 2. Coleraine, 3. and 3. Dundalk, both situate on the Sea side, and both within the County of Louth. 4. Knew-Fergus, the chief of Antrim; more properly Reck-Fergus, (and in that sense called Carick-Fergus by the Irish) so called from Fergus one of the Kings of the Irish Seas, to whom they suffered Shipwreck. Seated upon a large and spacious Bay (the Findevius of Ptolemy) which giveth it both a safe and commodious Port; as well by natural situation; as the works of Art, very strongly fortified; by reason of the Neighbourhood of the Scots in Canine, from which little distant. 5. London-Derry, a Colony of the Londoners, best built of any Town in the North of Ireland. 6. Dungannon, the principal Seat and residence in former times, of the great O-neals. 7. Dungall, the principal of Tirconnel. 8. Raboghs, a small Village at present, but anciently a Bishop See: fit to be mentioned in this place, in regard it still preserveth some foot-steps of the old Roboghs, an Irish Tribe, and placed by Ptolemy in this tract, where they gave name unto the Presannony by him called Roboghs, now the Fair Farel; as is probably conceived by the learned Cambden.

This, as it is the largest Province of all this Kingdom, so was it with most difficulty subjected to the Crown of England, and reduced to good order and civility. First conquered by John Curcy, a valiant Englishman, in the Reign of King Henry the second, by whom created Earl of Ulster. But being malignant for his eminent Virtues, and after profecuted by King John, this Title and Estate were both conferred upon Hugh Lewis, the Lord and Conqueror of Meath, whom before we speak of. By an Heir General of the Laciers, it came unto the Burghs then Lords of Connaught; and by the marriage of Elizabeth Daughter and Heir of Richard de Burgh, the last Earl of that Family, mily, it came to Lionel Duke of Clarence, the second Son (then living) of King Edward the third ; as by his Daughter Philipp, to the Earls of March, from them by the like marriage to the House of Tork, and in the person of King Edward the 4th, to the Crown again. But being neglected by the English in the whole course of their Government, especially in the Wars betwixt Tork and Lancaster, it was cantoned in many Eftates and Principalitys, by the great Lords of the natural Irish ; (who had Born too great Iway here in the former times :) and so estranged from the civillities of England, and their Allegiance to that Crown as if that it had never been in subjection to it. In which estate it did continue (the Kings of England having here no more power or profit, than the great ones of the Country were pleased to give them) : till the Rebellion first, and afterwards the vanquishment of Hugh O'neal, the then Earl of Tir-Ow brought it in full subjection to the English Government, of which more hereafter.

4. CON NAUGHT, in Latin called Connacia, by the Irish Connaght, is bounded on the North with Ulster; on the West with the main Ocean; on the South with Munster; from which parted by the River Shannon; and on the East, with Meath and some part of Leinster. So called from the Nagmata, an old Irish Nation; or from Nagmata a Port-Town, both placed by Ptolemy in this Tract. The foil of the same temper with these later times, is as woody and as full of bogs till these later times, in which indifferently well cleared of both inconveniences.

It hath been also called by our English Writers the County of Clare, from Thomas de Clare, one of the younger Sons of Gilbert de Clare Earl of Gloucester, on whom it was conferred by King Edward the first: and is divided at the present into five Shires, that is to say; 1. Letrim, 2. Roscommon, 3. Maio, 4. Slege, and 5. Galloway and Twmond. In which are comprehended but 8 Towns of any consequence, for Commerce and Traffick; (an argument of the imperfect Plantation of it by the English Conquerors); and about 24 Castles for defence of the Country, of old erection, besides such Fortresses as have been raised occasionally in these latter troubles.

Places of most note and observation, 1. Town, an Archbishops See. 2. Athenry an ancient Town, but decayed and ruinous; of most renown for being the Barony of John de Bermingham, a noble Eng^lishman, who had great po-session in this tract. 3. Letrin, the chief Town of the County so named, neighboured by the Curlew-Mountains, unfortunately memorable for the great defeat there given the Eng^lish in Tir-Owen rebellion; and by the Spring or Fountain of the River Shenn or Shanon, whose course we have before described. 4. Slego, and 5. Kaleemmon, the chief Town of their several Counties. 6. Athlone, a place of great strength, and the great Key of Connaught. 7.
Twomond, not otherwise much observable, put for giving the title of an Earl to the Family of O Brian, (descended from the Kings of Connaught) advanced unto that honour by King Henry the 8th. 8. Galloway the principal of this Province, a Bishops See, and the third City of the Kingdom for beauty and bigness. Situate near the fall of the great Lake or River of Corbet, in the Western Ocean, defended on that side from the fury of the Sea, and fear of Invasions, by the interposition of some Islands (called the Isles of Arran) very strongly fortified. A noted Emporia, and lately of so great fame with foreign Merchants, that an out-landish Merchant meeting with an Irish-man, demanded in what part of Galloway, Ireland fold; as if Galloway had been the name of the Island, and Ireland the only name of some Town.

This once a Kingdom of it self, as the rest of thole Provinces the last King whereof was Roderick, firrmed the Great, who having a great hand over the rest of the Key-telest, entituled himself sole Marcher or King of Ireland. But being forced to submit himself to K. Henry the second his Country at the last was brought into subjection to the Crown of England: by the valour and good fortune of William de Burgh, Gilbert de Clare Earl of Gloucester, William de Bermingham, and other Noble Adventurers of the English Nation. And though all of them did partake of the fruit of their labours; yet the greatest part fell to the spoil-together with the title of Lords of Connaght, due to the Family of the Burghs from them to Lionel Duke of Clarence; and by degrees unto the Crown, as before was shewn. Canted on again amongst the Irish and degenerate English, as Uffer was, by the supine neglect of the Kings of England: till the Rebellion of Tyr-Oer, involving all the chief of the Irish Nation in the same cause with him, involved them also consequently in the same destruction.

3. MONSTER, by the Latines called Momonia, is bounded on the North with Commaugh; on the East with Leinfster; on the West with the Atlantic or Western Ocean; and on the South with the Verginia. By the natural Irish it is called Mown, whence the English had the name of Monster. A Province, which for rich Towns, commodious Havens, fair Rivers, and the fertile of the Soil, yields not to any in the Kingdom.

It is divided into fix Countiees, viz. Limerick, 2. Waterford, 3. Cork, 4. Desmond, 5. Kerry, and 6. Tipperary, which two last anciently enjoyed all the rights of a County Palatine : And in these Shires are comprehended (besides many safe Stations and Roads for Shipping) 24 Towns of Note and Trading, and 66 Cattles of old cretion. Places of most observation, 1. Cusset, in the County of Limerick, an Archbishop's See, advanced unto that honour by Pope Eugenius the third, about the year 1150.

 2. Limerick, the principal of that County, and the fourth in estimation of all the Kingdom : Situate in an Island compassed round about with the River, Shannon, by which means well fortified ; a well frequented Empery, and a Bishops See ; distant from the main Ocean about 60 miles, but so accommodated by the River, that Ships of Burden may use up close to the very walls. The Castles and the Bridge-pieces of both great strength and beauty, were of the foundation of King John, exceedingly delighted with the situation. 3. Cloanel, in the County of Tipperry, of great strength and consequence. 4. Willy Croft, in the same County also, once flourishing by reason of the great resort of Pilgrims, to see and worship there a piece of the holy Croft as it was supposed : which supposition as it drew much wealth unto the Town, so it obtained the rights of a County Palatine for the County also. 5. Thurles in the same County, which gives the Title of a Viscount to the Earls of Ormand, but not else observable. 6. Waterfordo, on the River Shannon, a well traded Port, a Bishop's See, and the second City of the Kingdom. Of great fidelity to the English since the Conquest of Ireland, and for that cause endowed with many ample privileges. First built by some Norwegian Pirates, who thought they fixed it in one of the most barren parts of such a desolate the Country, yet they made choice of such a fine and commodious site for the use of Shipping, that of a Nest Pirates it was effused made a Receipt for Merchants, and suddenly grew up to great Wealth and Power. 7. Carraiga (by the Latines called Corcegia) the principal of that County, and a Bishops-See : well wall'd and fitted with a very commodious Haven ; consisting chiefly of a street reaching out in length inhabited by a civil, wealthy and industrious people. 8. Dunk-Eran an old Episcopate

Sec

See, supported by some to be the Juvenis of Plymouth, but not else observable. 8. Kinsale, upon the mouth of the River Barry, commodious Port, opposite to the Coasts of Spain, and fortified in Tyr Oent Rebellion by a Spanish Garrison, under the command of Don John de Aquila; but soon recovered (after the defeat of that Grand Rebel near the Walls herof) by the valour and indefatigable industry of Charles Lord Mountjoy, the then Lord Deputy of this Kingdom. 9. Baltimore, 10. Toughall, and 11. Zere-haven, all upon the Sea, and all provided of forts, harbours or convenient Havens". 12. Lefmore, of old a Bishops See, now annexed to Waterford, in which Shire it standeth. Nothing in point of story singular which concerns this Province, but that it was to be carefully looked to by the Kings of England, that there was appointed over it a peculiar Officer (in the Reign of Queen Elizabeth, in power and place next to the Deputy himself) called the Lord President of Munster: by whose vigilancy there have hapned fewer Rebellions here, than in any Province of this Island.

The ancient Inhabitants of this Island, being originally Britains (as before is said) were in the time of Ptolemy diffused into the Nations of Rubogudii, Darnii, Volanii, Etnicii, and Eradii, possessing the Northern parts, now Ulster; the Auleri, Gangani, and Naganni, inhabiting Conanagh; the Felibrii, Oernii, Vodii, and Criodii, in the South, now Munster; and the Menapii, Caueti, Blamii, Brigantes, taking up the Provinces of Meath and Leinster. Principal Cities of the which were Eblannu, now Dublin; Menapiu, now Waterford; Nagennu, which Ptolemy honoured with the Title of Urbisregium; Rhigiia, Rheba, Macclunio, Luberu, Iuernii, &c. not easily discernable by what names we may call them now: this Country never being so happy as to come under the power of the Romans, the great Masters of Civility and good Letters in the West of Europe: and by that means, the actions and affairs thereof buried in ignorance and silence. Towards the falling of which Empire we find the Nation of the Scots to be feated here, and from hence first to take possession of the Hebrides, or Western Isles, next of the Western part of Britain on the North of Dunbritton Friar. Afterwards some of the Saxon Monarchs cast their eyes upon it, and made themselves Masters of Dublin, and some other places; but being incumbered with the Danes, could not hold them long: being hardly able to defend their own against the people. The next that undertook the Conquests, were the Northern Nations, Danes, Swedes, and Norwegians who christened of that time under the name of Norwegians: the who first scoured along the Coast in the way of Piracy. But after finding the weakness of the Island, divided amongst many petty and inconsiderable Princes, they made an absolute conquest of it under the conduct of Turgesius, whom they elected for their King: soon rooted out by the policy of the King of Meath, the only Irish Prince who was in favour with the Tyrant. This petty King by name Oma-Laghilben, had a Daughter of renowned beauty, whom Turgesius demanded of her Father to serve his lusts: and he seeming willing to condescend to the motion, as if honoured by it, made answer, That besides his Daughter, he had at his disposing many others of more exquisite beauties, which should all be ready at command Turgesius following this bait, desired him with all speed to effect the meeting. But the King of Meib, attiring in the habits of a Woman, a company of young Gentlemen, who durst for the common liberty adventure their several lives: conduced them to the Tyrants Bed-chamber, and they according to the directions given them, (when for that little modesty sake he had in him, he had commended all his attendants to avoid the room) assaulted him, now ready for and expecting more kind embraces, and left him dead in the place. The Mahian King had by this time acquired a divorce of the better sort with his plot; all which upon a sign given, rush into the Palace, and put to death all the Angians, and other attendants of the Tyrant. After this, the Angians enjoyed their former Dominions, till the year 1172, in which Henry, Max Morengh King of Leuler, having forced the Wife of Mawrice O Rork King of Meib, and being by him driven out of his Kingdom; came to the Court of England for succour. To this Petition, Henry the second then King, consented: sending him aid under the leading of Richard de Clare, surnamed Strongbow, Earl of Penbroge, who retook King Dermot, and brought a great part of the Island under the English subjection. John, King of England, was the first who was entitled Lord of Ireland; which title was granted him by Pope Urban the third, who for the ornament of his Royalty, sent him a plume of Peacock Feathers: and when Ty-Om filled him Defender of the Irish Liberties was by Clement the 8. honoured with the like plume. But here we are to understand, that though the Kings of England used no other title than Lords of Ireland; yet were they Kings hereof in effect and power, Lords Paramount, as we use to say. And though themselves retained out the name of Lords, yet one of them gave to one of his English Subjects, the honourable but invidious title of Duke of Ireland. And they retained this title of Lords, till the year 1542; in which Henry the 8th, in an Irish Parliament, was declared King of Ireland, as a name more sacred, and repleat with Majesty, than that of Lord: at which time also he was declared to be Supream Head, under God, of the Church of Ireland; and the pretended jurisdiction of all foreign Powers, especially the usurped authority of the Pope of Rome renounced by Law, though still acknowledged by too many of his superstitious and untractable People.

The Government of this Country, since the first Conquest by the English, hath been most commonly by our Supreme Officer, who is sometimes called the Lord Lieutenant, most generally the Lord Deputy of Ireland; that whom our Vice-Roy in all Europe hath greater power, and comes nearer the Majesty of a King in his Train and State. For his assistance he hath a Privy Council attending on him, though resident for the most part at Dublin: and in emergencies, or cases of more difficult nature proceedeth many times in an arbitrary way, without formalities of Law. And for their Laws, which are the standing Rule of all civil Government, they owe their being and original to the English Parliaments. For in the Reign of King Henry the 7th, Sir Edward Poyning, then Lord Deputy, caused an Act to pass in the Irisht Parliament, whereby all Laws and Statutes, which were made in England before that time, wereto be entertained and stand in Force as the Laws of Ireland. On which Foundation they have raised many Superfluities both of Law and Government, enacted in their own Parliaments, summoned by the Lord Deputy at the Kings appointment: in which, by another State made in the time of the said Poyning, the People are enabled to make Laws for their own good Governance, conditioned they were first transmitted to the Court of England to be considered of by the King, before they were Voted to in either of the Houses of the Irisht Parliaments: Which Laws commonly called Poyning's Laws, have hitherto continued in force amongst them; though the last much stomached and repined at, not only as a badge of their subjection to the Crown of England, but as a Curb of Marriages to hold them in.

Yet notwithstanding these good Laws; and the ample power of their Commission, the Lord Deputies could never absolutely subdue the Island, or bring the people to SCHETLAND, an island belonging to the Crown of Scotland; and is by many learned men, upon very good reasons; supposed to be the Thule of the Ancients. For first, it lieth in the 63 degree of Latitude, in which Ptolemy placed Thule. Secondly, it lieth opposite to Bergen in Norway; against which Pomponius Mela hath related it. And thirdly, Cæsar Penninus hath observed that this Scheland is by Mariners called Thylet; a name in which of Thule is apparently couched. That name in which was not Thule (as most say) we shall shew you when we come to Norway; and the Northern Islands Here we add only, That the Ancients did report many strange things of it, and some of them beyond all belief. Pliny affirming that they had no day here for all the Winter (nihil enim per brumam dies his own words are) with whom agere Solinus and many others, as to that particular Isidore adds (Origen lib. 14. c. 6.) nihilum ultra eam diem esse, as if here had been the end of the World and Nature. But Pytheas in Polybius goes beyond them all, reporting that in this Isle there was no distinction of Earth, Air, and Water: et ad Cæsarum in eadem, but a confused mixture of all together, like the Primitive Chaos of the Poets. Thereason of which strange report was the audaciousness of those who had seen the Island, and thought that whatsoever they said of it would not be disproved, because of the remoteness of it from more civil Countries. So truly and judiciously spoken was that of Symonius, a right learned Prelate, "Hic oculus hominis non potest videre ultra." Thule (saith he) gave those who had failed unto it, the opportunity of lying without controul. An opportunity which many of our Mariners and vulgar Travellers had made too much use of in these last times also.

III. The HEBRIDES, HEBUDAE, or Western Islands, situate on the West of Scotland: are in number about 44. The chief whereof, 1. Ila, 24 miles long, and 6 in breadth; plentiful in Wheat, Cattle, and herds of Deer. 2. Faero, famous for the Sepulchres of the old Scythian Kings; whose chief Town is Sadore, once a Bishops See, called hence Sadorensis; his jurisdiction comprehended these Islands with the Isle of Man; his See erected by Pope Gregory the 4th; anno 840. or thereabouts. His dwelling for the most part of it in the Isle of Man; as the wealthier and more pleasant part of his Diocese; till the Conquest of it by the English; at what time those of the Western Islands, withdrew themselves from his obedience, and had a Bishop of their own: both of them for a long time called Sadorensis, but at last this took the name of Isleland. Bishop of the Isles, which he still retains. 4. Mela, by Ptolemy called Maleor, (that of Ila before mentioned being the Epida) mountainous and hilly, but affording good Mines of Lead and Copper, 25 miles more in compass than that of Ila. 4. Lewis, or Levis, the largest of all the Hebrides, said to be 60 miles in length and 30 in breadth, the more Western of the two Hebrides spoken of by Ptolemy: the other being now called Skye, famous for the multitude of Sea-Calves in the Creeks thereof. 6. Racine, the Recine of Ptolemy, the smallest of the Hebrides; and most near to Ireland. The rest of the Isles, note, not known, or not inhabited in the time of the Romans; and not very well peopled at the present, I forbear to name: for of them rather Rocks than Islands, others scarce having grass enough to hide their barrens. The people of them all, as well in language as behaviour, resemble the Wild-Irish; and are called Red-Shanks: a people, as King Tames affirmeth in his Basilicon Doron, utterly rude, and without all shew of Civility; such as endure not to be governed by Laws, or kept under by Discipline. Legum severitate, & judiciorum metu se aligari non pa- timur, saith judicious Cambden. Such as they are, they came unto the Crown of Scotland by a Contract betwixt Magnus King of Norway, and King Alexander the third: the Orcades being bargained for at the same time also.

South of the Hebrides, in the Bay of Dunbritton Frith; lieth the Isle of Rothay, (now called Bule) which gives the Title of a Duke to the Prince of Scotland: and the Isle of Arran, which gives the title of an Earl to the chief of the Hamiltons.

IV. MAN is situate just over against the Southern part of Cumberland, from which it is distant 25 miles, and was judged to belong to Britain rather than to Ireland; because it fostered venomous Serpents, brought hither out of Britain. By Ptolemy it is called Monada, or the further Monna, to difference it from that which we call Anglesey; by Pliny, Monabia; Menavia, by Orcinus and Beda; Eubonia, by Gildas an old British Writer. The Welsh at this day call it Menaw, the Inhabitants Maning, and the English Man. It is in length 30 miles, in breadth 15, and 8 in some places. The people hate Theft and Begging, and use a Language mixt of the Norwegian and Irish tongues. The Soil is abundant in Flax, Hemp, Oats, Barley, and Wheat; with which they use to supply the defects of Scotland, if not the Continent it self, yet questionable the Western Isles which are a member of it. For thus writeth the Reverend Father in God John Mericke late Bishop of this Island, in a Letter to Mr. Cambden, at such time as he was composing his most excellent Britannia. Our Island (saith he) for Cattle, for Fish, and for Corn, hath no other sufficient for its self, but sendeth also good store into other Countries. Now what Countries should need such supply (England and Ireland being beforehand with such provision) except Scotland, or some members thereof, I see not.

Venerable Bede numbered it in 300 Families, and now it is furnished with 17 Parish Churches: the chief Towns are, 1. Balauceri, and 2. Ruffin, or Casle-Town, the Seat of a Bishop, who though he be under the Archbishop of York, yet never had any voice in the English Parliament. In this Island is the Hill of Seafull, where on a clear day one may see England, Scotland, and Ireland: here also are bred the Soland Geese, of rotten Wood falling into the VVater. This Island was taken from the Britains by the Scots, and from them regained by Edwin King of Northumberland. Afterwards the Norwegians seized on it, and made it a Kingdom; the Kings thereof ruling over the Hebrides, and some part of Ireland. From them taken by Alexander the 3. of Scotland, by a mixt title of Arms and purchase. After which time it was sometime English sometimes Scythian, as their fortunes varied; till in the end, and about the year 1340 William Montacute Earl of Salisbury, descended from the Norwegian Kings of Man, won it from the Scots, and sold it to the Lord Scepe, who being condemned of Treason, Henry the Fourth gave it Henry Piercy Earl of Northumberland; but he also proving false to his Sovereign, it was given to the Stanleys, now Earls of Derby.

- 1593 11 Ferdinand Lord Stanley, Earl of Derby.
- 12 William Lord Stanley, Earl of Derby.
- 13 James Lord Stanley, Earl of Derby, Lord of the Isle of Man, now living, An. 1648. King in effect, though but Lord in title, as having here all kind of Civil power and jurisdiction over the Inhabitants under the Fifth and Seventh of the Crown of England, together with the nomination of the Bishop, whom he presents unto the King for his Royal assent, then to the Archbishop of York for his consecration. And this I take to be the reason why the Bishop of Man was no Lord of Parliament, none being admitted to that honour, but such as held immediately of the King himself, nor was it reason that they should.

V. ANGLESEY, is an Island situate in the Irish Sea; over against Cæternarvonshire in North-Wales, from which it is divided by a narrow Strait, which they call the Menai: By the Britains themselves, as by the Welsh at this day, it was called the Man, from whence the Romans had their Manai; but being conquered by the English, it obtained the name of Anglesey, as one would say, the Island of the English-Men (as in the Saxon language signifying an Island.) A place of such a fair revenue to the Princes of it, that Llewellyn, the last Prince of Wales being stripped of almost all the rest of his Estates by King Edward the first, paid to that King a tribute of 1000 per Annum for this Island only.

And to say truth, the Island is exceeding fruitful both in Corn and Cattel: from whence the Welsh are liberally supplied with both: and therefore it is said proverbially, Man Man Cymru, that Anglesey is the Mother of Wales. In length from East to West, about 20 miles, and 17 in breadth. Containing in that compass 74 Parishes, divided into six hundreds, and hath in it only two market-Towns: that is to say, 1. Beaumaris seated on a flat or marsh ground, near the Menai, built by King Edward the first to secure his Conquest: by whom well walled and fortified as the times then were. 2. Neynburgh, a Town of no great antiquity, as the name doth intimate, by the Welsh called Ressur: in former times it had an Haven of some good receipt, but now choaked with sand. The other places of most note are, 3. Aberffraw, a small Village now, but here before the seat Royal of the Kings of Wales: and 4. Holyhead, seated on a head-land or Promontory thrusting into the Seas made holy (or thought to be at least) by the religious retirement of Saint Kibb, or Kibin, one of the Disciples of St. Hilary of Poitiers; from whence by the Welshmen called Cæu Culy: of most note for the ordinary passage betwixt Wales and Ireland. Antiently this Island was the seat of the Druides, and brought with no small difficulty under the power of the Romans, by Suetonius Paulinus: the people fighting in other parts of Britain for their liberty only; but here pro Aris & Focis too, for their Religion, Liberty, and their Goods to boot: Being defeated by the Romans with the rest of Britain, it remained in the possession of its own natural Princes, till the final period of that State when added to the Crown of England by the puilliance of King Edward the first, by whom made one of the Thirces of Wales, as it still continues.

Not far from Anglesey, somewhat inclining to the South, is the Isle of Bardsey, by Ptolemy called Edri, by Pliny Adros, by the Welsh Eanly, extended towards the East with a rocky Promontory; but rich and fruitful towards the West: the retiring place of many godly and devout Hermits in former times. Southwards from hence and over against St. David's, are two other Islands, the one called Selame, plentiful of wild honey; the other named by the Welsh Lymen, by the English Ramsey; thought to be the Limm of Ptolemy, the Silimann of Pliny; but not else remarkable.

VI. THE ISLANDS OF THE SEVERN SEA are four in number; of no great note, but I must take them in my passage to the Isles of Scilly. Of those the first is Flat-Holm; for the flat and level. The 2. Stebolin, from the steep and craggy disposition of it: both by the Welsh called Echm, and both situate over against the County of Somerset. More towards the opening of the Channel, lieth the Isle of 3. Chaldy called by the Welshmen Inis Fyr, of as small note as the other: and at the very mouth thereof the Isle of 4. Lundey, over against Devonshire, the principal Island of this Sea: extending two miles every way; of excellent pasturage, well stored with Corn, and great plenty of Pigeons. Situate a good distance from any part of the land, in the midst of the salt and brackish Ocean, and yet yieldeth many Springs of Fresh-water for the use of the people; inhabiting for the most part in a Town of the same name with the Island. A place of very great strength and safety; begirt about with dangerous unapproachable Rocks: and having but one way of access into it, and that so narrow, that two men cannot go a breast.

VII. The Isles of SCILLY, in number 145, are situate over against the Western Promontory of Cornwall, from which distant 24 miles; and lye round together in the manner of a ring or Circle. Discovered first by the Silures, a Phœnician Colony in Spain, opposite against which they lye; thence called Silures by Solinus; much traded and referred to by the said Phœnicians from the line of Gades; invited thereunto by the unexhaustible Mines of Tin, which they found amongst them. A Trade so great and gainful to them, that they held it a secret from all the world, as we find in Strabo: who adds the story of a Carthaginian or Phœnician Merchant, encountered in his voyage hither, by some Roman Vessels; and splitting his ship on the next shore (where he knew the Romans would not follow him) rather than let them know to what place he was bound; was rewarded for his honest care, and recompensed for the loss of his Ship and goods, out of the publick Treasury. From this abundance of Tin, the Græcians when they came to know them, called them Cassiterides (Cassiteros in that language signifying Tin) accordingly Herodotus, ἐν τῇ Cassiterides ἰστέον ἐν τῇ Cassiterides ἰστέον affirming that he knew not those Islands called Cassiterides, from whence Tin was brought. The richness of this commodity, the pleasures of the place, and the Western situation of them makes many of the Græcians call them Hebrides: mistaking them for the Fertimate Islands. By Solinus they are called Silures; as before is said; Sigdes in the corrupt Copies of Antonius; in false Silina, by Sextus Sulpitius; from whence we have the name of the Isles of Scilly. OF

BELGIUM.

HAVING pursued the Fortunes of the Roman Empire, through the four Western Diocesses or Divisions of it, wholly subdued to the Command of that Conquering State: let us next look on those Countries which lay farther North, and either never felt the force of the Roman Armies, or were but Conquered in part, or else were reckoned as the members of some greater Province. Of this last sort was all that Tract which is now called Belgium, or the Netherlands, bounded Eastward with Westphalen, Culick, Cleve, and the land of Triers, Provinces of the higher Germany; on the West with the main Ocean, which divides it from Britain, on the North with the River Emse, which parts it from East-Friesland, on the South with Picardie and Champagne, two French Provinces; upon the South-east with the Dukedom of Lorraine.

By the Latines (especially of these last times) it is called Belgium, from the Belgæ, the most potent people of all these parts; and sometimes also Germania inferior or the Lower Germany, (in the same sense as by the English it is called the Low-Countries and the Netherlands) from their low situation, and the conformity which they have with the German in Laws, Languages, Customs and Manners. By some it hath been called by the aggregate name of the Seventeen Provinces, from the like number of several and distinct Estates united under the Command of the King of Spain. The more peculiar name is Flanders, which, though but one of the Seventeen Provinces, hath yet given denomination to all the Netherlands; the people of which were once generally called by the name of Flemmings: and that either for the power of that Province, in regard of the others; or by reason of the great Trade and Traffick formerly driven at the Fairs or Marts of Bruges (a Town thereof by the Merchants of all parts of Europe; or in respect that lying nearer than the rest to France, Spain, Italy, and England, that name was better known and took notice of. But this was when the whole Country was under the command of many Princes; of which the Earls of Flanders were esteemed most potent. And though this name continued also after the incorporating of most of these Provinces in the House of Burgundy, at which time they were called the Estates of Flanders: yet since the falling off of Holland and the rest of the United Provinces from the Kings of Spain, it hath lost this Honour, the name of Flanders being now restrained within narrower bounds.

But for the name of Belgium, though I find that name most current amongst the Latines of this Age, yet I see little reason for it. For first, old Belgium contained in it many fair and large Estates which are not now within the compass of these Belgick Provinces; that is to say, the Dukedom of Lorraine, Berg, Juliers, and a great part of Cleve, the Bishopsricks of Triers, Metz, and Colen, and so much of the Kingdom of France as takes up all Picardy, with parts of Champagne and of France specially so called. Secondly Gallia Belgica extended somewhat farther yet, comprehending a great part of the Lower Palatinate, all Alsace, the whole County of Burgundy, and so much of Switzerland as lieth on the French side of the Rhene. And thirdly, the whole Provinces of West-Friesland, Groningen, Over-Yssel, Zuphen, together with all North-Holland, and so much of Gelderland, and Utrecht as lieth on the father side of the middle Channel of the Rhene, were never counted of as parts of either Belgium or of Gallia Belgica, (though now within the compass of the Belgick Provinces) but as parts of Germany; clearly without the limits of the ancient Gaul, of which nobody Belgium was a limb or member in the Roman estimate.

As for the Belga, from whence we have the names of Belgium and Gallia Belgica, they were originally Germans, who driving out the Gauls, planted themselves within the Rhene; esteemed by Cæsar to be the valiantest of the Gallick Nations for these three Reasons. 1. They were the farthest from Provence, where the Roman Civilities and more affable course of life was embraced. 2. They dwelt on a Sea not then frequented by Merchants; and so wanted those allurements to Effeminacy which are in Countries of traffick. 3. They bordered on the Germans, a warlike Nation, with whom they were continually in Arms. This people seeing the prosperous success of Cæsar's Victories in Gaul, joined together in a League, and mustered an Army of 260000 Fighting men against him. But seeing they could not draw him out of his Fortresses, they retired again, and that in such disorder, that three Legions (for no more was Cæsar's Army) put them to an infinite slaughter. After this, Cæsar, fighting against them feverally, overcame them all; and made their Country, and the Country of the bordering Germans, whom he also vanquished, subject unto the Roman Empire. By Constantine the Great it was made part of the Dioceses of Gallia, and by him cast into five Provinces: that is to say, 1. Belgica Prima, containing the Dukedom of Lorraine and the Land of Triers, the Metropolis whereof was Tri- ers; 2. Belgica Secunda, comprehending Artois, Picardy, and the Country of Cambray, with parts of Champagne and France special, of which the Metropolis was Rouen; 3. Germania Prima, comprehending Alsacia, part of the Palatinate and the Bishoprick of Metz, the Metropolis of that Province; 4. Germania Secunda, containing Cyria, Cleland, Brabant, Gelderland, Namur, Luxemburg, Limbourg, and the land of Colen, which hath been honoured with the title of Metropolis; 5. Maxima Sequanorum, so called of the Sequani, the old Inhabitants thereof, containing the whole County of Burgundy, and so much of Switzerland as lieth on the French side of the Rhene, of which Besancion was the Mother City. But at this time none of the Provinces above specified are comprehended under the account and name of Belgium, but such as were possessed in these latter Ages by the House of Burgundy; some petty Seigniouries and Estates which properly do belong to Germany being added to it: that is to say, the Lordship of West-Friesland, given to the Earls of Holland by Charles the Bald; the Earldom of Zuphen united unto that of Gelders by Earl Otto of Nassau; and finally the Estate of Groningen, Over-Yssel, and some part of Utrecht by Charles the fifth. Under which name and notion we do now consider it.

And taking it according to this name and notion, it is in compass 1000 Italian, or 250 German miles; and is situated in the Northern temperate Zone, under the 7, 8, and 9. Climates: the longest day in the mid t of the 7th Climate, where it doth begin, being 16 hours; in the beginning of the 8th (Climate increased to 16 hours three quarters, or near 17 hours. The Air in these later days is grown more whole-some than formerly; partly by the wonderful increase of the people, who, by draining the incredible industry of the people, who, by draining the Marishes, and converting the standing waters into running Streams have purged the Air of many gross and unhealthy Vapours, which did thence usually arise in times foregoing.

The Country is very populous, containing well-nigh three millions of souls; the men being for the most part well-proportioned, great lovers of our English Beer, mindful of both good turns and injuries, of good wit for inventing, and of a most indefatigable industry for perfecting the rarest Manufactures. For unto them we are indebted for the making of Cloth, which we learnt of the Flemmings; as also for Arras-hangings, Dormix Clocks, Watches, and the perfection of the Mariner's Compass. They restored Mulick, and found out divers Musical Instruments, being naturally good Musicians, and generally so given unto it, and so perfect in it, that therefore (till the Art of Mulick grew more common) there were not many Great mens houses which had not Musicians to teach their Children. To them belongeth also the invention of Chariots, the laying on of Colours with Oyl, the working of Pictures in Glass, and the making of Worsted, Seyes, and Tapestries; the making of which and other Seyes, being driven out of their Country by the Duke of Asses, they first taught the English. The Women generally are of good complexion, well-proportioned, especially in the Legs and Feet, honourers of Vertue, active and familiar. Both within doors, and without they govern all: which considering the natural desire of Women to bear rule, maketh them too imperious and burthenfome.

They use for the most part the German and Dutch Language, with a little difference in the Dialect. But in the Provinces adjoining to France, that is to say, Luxemburg, Namur, Artois, Hainault, and some parts of Flanders and Brabant, they use the French; but the same very corruptly and imperfectly, by reason of that mixture which it hath of the Dutch or German, yet so that one may easily discern those people to be French originally, or some remainder of the old Gauls, interbred by the French, but not rooted out: from their Language or first Original called to this day by the name of Wallons, the German usually changing O into V, as VVarre for Guerre, VVarden for Guadian, and in the like cases VVale for Galle, I know there is another Etymology of the name of Wallons, some making them to be of the Burgundian race, who, at their first pushing over the Rhene, enquired their way of the Country-people in these words, On allons, i.e. Whither go we? which being oft repeated by them: occasioned them to be called Wallons. A trim invention doubtless, but of no solidity, nor to be farther honoured with a confutation.

The Country in those parts which lie towards Germany, especially on the South-east bordering upon Cleland and Lorraine, is somewhat fvelled with Hills and over-shaded with Woods, the relics of the great Forest of Ardenne, which once took up a great part thereof: But towards the West and North, where it joins to the Sea, it is plain and level, full of Flats and Marthes, affording very little Corn, but abounding in Pasturage, which yields a great increase of Butter and Cheese, good store of Beeves and Horses of more than ordinary bigness. By reason of which low and level situation, and the ill neighbourhood of a troublefome and unruly Sea, it hath been formerly much subject to Inundations; inasmuch as in the time of King Henry the 2. Flanders was so overflowed, that many thousands of people, whose dwellings the Sea had devoured, came into England to beg new seats; and were by that King first placed in Torkshire, and then removed to Pembrokeshire. Since that, it hath in Zeland (swallowed eight of the Islands, and in them 300 Towns and Villages; many of whose Churches and strong buildings are now a dead low water to be seen. And as once Ovid said of Helice and Barris, Cities of Achaia, so may we of these;

Inclinata solum cum manibus oppida versis.*

That is to say,

The waters hide them, and the Sailors show
The ruin'd Walls and Steeples as they row.

The chief Commodities which they vent into their Countries are Linen, Scarlets, Worsted, Seyes, Silks, Velvets, and the like rich Stuffs; together with great quantities of Armour, Ropes, Cables, Butter, Cheese, &c. Of which excepting Cheese and Butter, there is nothing of the natural growth of the Country: the rest being Manufactures which they make out of such materials as they fetch out of Foreign Regions. But the Commodity which yieldeth them most benefit is that of fish, not caught up on their own Coast neither, but either in the Northern Seas or the coast of England, the very Herring which they catch on the shoars of England (to the no small dishonour of the English Nation) bringing them a Revenue (besides what is purled up by the Adventurers) of 440000 pounds per annum; and that of Cod-fish, which they catch on the Coasts of Friesland, amounting to 150000 l. sterling yearly.

Captains of note and eminence it hath bred but few, the People living till of late in perpetual peace. The chief of those whose names have been transmitted to us are, 1. Guis, a Prince of the Batavians, for subtilty of Wit compared to Hamul and Servilius: of which in the long War against the Romans, in the time of Vespasian, he gave very good Proof. In the middle times, 2. William Earl of Holland, elected Emperour of Germany. 3. Baldwin Earl of Flanders, Emperour of Constantinople. 4. Philip the Good, and 5. Charles the Warlike, Dukes of Burgundy. 6. Charles, the Fifth Emperour and King of Spain: And of late times the Princes of the House of Nassau and Orange, transplanted hither in the Regency of Maximilian out of higher Germany. And to say the truth their Genius doth not lie so much for Land-service as it doth for the Seas; in which they have been very Famous, and not less fortunate. For of this Nation was Oliver Vander Noordt, the fourth that compassed the world, Jacob le Maire, the first discoverer of the Strait of Freem, which now beareth his name, besides divers others. And generally the people are so expert in Navigation, (especially those bordering on or near the Coasts) that they seem born for and to the Seas: many of which, being born on Ship-board and bred up at Sea, know no other Country, and brook the Land as ill as a Fifth doth the dry Ground. VVhich natural inclination to, and the necessity they have of employing themselves that way, (the Country not being otherwise able to provide sustenance for those multitudes of men which it doth abundance with) hath so exceedingly increased their Shipping, that it is thought that they are masters of more Vessels of all sorts, taking one with another, than almost all the rest of Europe.

Scholars of note it hath bred many. 1. Erasmus, the great restorer of Learning in these parts of the VWorld. 2. Justus Lipsius, as eminent a reviver of the Latine Elegancies. 3. Joseph Scaliger, the Son of Julius, imprimis variorum scriptor, a man not to be followed in all parts of Learning; but of equal Arrogance. 4. Rudolphus Agricola. 5. Levinus Lemnius. 6. 7. Janus Dousta, the Father and the Son. 8. Abraham Ortelius, and 9. Gerard Mercator, the Geographers. 10. Geo. Cassander, 11. Dr James Hermin. 12. Gerard Vassius, eminent Divines. And 13. Hugo Grotius, of as great parts (but teamed with more moderation and moderation) as the famous Scaliger. 14. Jansenius, and 15. Pamelius, two right learned Men, but of the Pontifician party.

As much unfortunate it hath been in some wretched Hereticks, in none more than in David George, born at Delf in Holland who called himself Christ and King immortal. Flying from Delf to Basil with his VVife and children, An. 1545. he there taught his Doctrine, viz. 1. That the Law and Gospel were unprofitable for the attaining of Heaven; but his Doctrine able to save such as received it. 2. That he was the true Christ and Messias. 3. That he was not to refigure the House of Israel by Death or Tribulation, but by Love and Grace of the Spirit. 4. That he had been till that present kept in a place unknown to all the Saints. And that this last Point might obtain the easier credit amongst the people, he bound his Disciples, first to conceal his name; secondly, not to reveal of what Condition he had been, thirdly, not to discover the Articles of his Doctrine to any man in Basil without his permission. But for all this great care of his with in three days after his death (which happened in the year 1566) his Doctrines, being made known, were condemned by the Senate & Church of Basil, his goods confiscated, and his Bones most deviously taken up and burnt. Of somewhat less impiety, but of no less phrensy, was 2. John of Leyden, (another Town of the same Province) who from a Tailor was made King of the Anabaptists, when they had ragged in Munster, and there we shall hear farther of him. 3. Cappinus, and 4. Quintinus, both Flemmings, the joint Authors and Co-founders of the Sect of the Libertines.

The Christian Religion was planted in several Provinces by several men: in Holland, Zealand, and Friesland, by Willibrord an English man, the first Bishop of Utrecht, whence by degrees it gained on the rest of the Country; these being the first people of the Franks; or Germans; converted totally to the Gospel. In tract of time it fell from the Primitive Purity, participating of the Errors and Corruptions of the Church of Rome; from which when they desired to reclaim themselves, they were there in opposed by the King of Spain and his Ministers. Hence the beginning of the Troubles; enlarged afterwards on pretence of Civil rights invaded and infringed by the Spaniards affecting a more absolute Dominion over them than their Laws admitted. At this time, as the Country doth stand divided betwixt the States and the Spaniards, so stands it with Religion also: the Spaniards permitting only the Religion of the Church of Rome within the Provinces and Estates under his Command; and the States General indulging the free use of all Religions (even the very Jews) but countenancing only that of the Reformed Churches, according to the Platform laid down by Calvin.

Chief Forests of this Country are, 1. That of Ardenne, which in the time of Cesar extended from the banks of Rhene as far as Tournay one way, and Champagne another way, and was in compass 500 miles in the least accompt. In which circuit there was comprehended the Southern parts of Brabant and Flanders, all Limbourg, Luxemburg, Luyckland, Namur, and Hainault, together with the land of Gulick in the higher Germany, as some Writers say. At this time, though the greatest of all Gaul Belgic it reacheth but from Liege to Theuville, so leagues in length, and yet not all that Woodland neither, though within the Verge of the Forest: there being much Tillage and many Villages in that tract of ground, the principal of which is the Town of S. Hubert, situate almost in the midst of it. 2. Niepe, and 3. Nonnen, in the Earldom of Flanders; the first extending to the banks of the River Lis, the other coming up close to Tper. 4. Pondsberg, in the Confines of Hainault and Flanders, near unto Mont-Gervard. All these were parts of this great forest of Ardenne, which once overhadowed all this Country. 5. No maids, in Hainault, in which is much Charcoal made; supposed for that reason to be a part of that Forest which the old French called La Charbonniere. 6. Echterwald, in Gelderland, near Arnhem, &c.

The chief Rivers are, 1. Rhene, which ariseth out of two Springs in the Lepontian Alps amongst the Griçons, went into one stream near Chur: thence passing by the Cities of Constance, Basil, Spire, Vormes, Metz, and Colen, it is again divided about the confines of Gelderland into four Branches or Chancels. Of which the first is called the Vaal, which running through Gelderland by Nimwegen and Bommel, loseth it self in the Maes. The second, which keeps the name of the Rhene, passeth by Arnhem, from thence in a contracted channel to Utrecht, and so through Holland unto Leyden. The third, called the Leek, taketh his course through the Provinces of Utrecht and Holland, and so into the Sea betwixt Dort and Rotterdam. And the fourth called the Tissel, which passing by the Towns of Zutphen and Deventer betwixt Gelderland and Over-Tissel, emptieth it self into the Ocean near Amsterdam. Ayl of these Branches I have given the exacter reckonings, partly because the course of that famous River is otherwise not easie to be observed; and partly because the knowledge of a great part of these Provinces dependeth on the knowledge of the course of this River, it being the middle branch of the Rhene (that which goeth by Leyden) which anciently divided Germany from Gallia Belgica. A River of such reputation in the ancient times, that into it the old Belgae used to cast the children which they suspected to be illegitimate: For were they born of lawful bed, they floated on the waters, if of unlawful they sank immediately. Whereunto Claudian, alluding, saith, Nascentes explorat gurgite Rhenu. But the great teacher of Antiquities, Pliny, is of opinion, that thereby they only insured their Children to hardness, and made trial of their strength; Adultery being rarely found among them, and so to these kinds of Experiments needless. 2. Maes, the Maes, as the Dutch or the Mens, as the French men call it, which springing from the Mountains of Pange in the confines of Lorraine, and not far from the Fountains of the Seine and Mayne, runneth through Lorraine, Luxemburg, Luyckland and Namur; from thence by Ruremond and Venlo, two known Towns of Gelderland, where turning towards the West it taketh in a part of the Rhene, and from thence passing by Maastricht, divides Brabant from Holland, watering the Town of Grave in the one, and of Dort in the other; and falleth into the Sea not far from Briel with so great a violence, that the waters of it for a long space continue fresh. 3. Emis in Latine called Amisus, dividing the two Frislands; of which more in Germany. 4. Scaldt, which arising in Picardy, and running through Artois, and between Hainault and Brabant, meeteth with the Sea a little above Antwerp. And 5. Lis or Ley, which runneth quite through Flanders. Besides which Rivers, and others of inferior note, (which we shall meet withal in their proper places) here are great flocks of Lakes, Pools and Marshes, which do both fortifie the Country, and provide it of Fish: besides many navigable Chancels, made by the hand of man from one River to another, for the convenience of passage, and the more easie transport of their Commodities.

The Shoar of this Country hath been much worn out by the Sea, especially that of the Islands of Zeland, and such as lie scattered about Holland; where they are defended with Banks and Ramparts, painfully made, and chargeably maintained. These Banks are about a league in height, and twenty five in breadth at the bottom: they are made of the hardest clay that may be gotten, in the inside stuffed with wood and stone, on the outside covered with mats strong and thick made.

The former Inhabitants were divers, and were as differently disposed of in their several Countries. That is to say, the Archevats in the greatest part of Artois; the Morini in the part of the Imperial and Dutch Flanders; the Nervi in Hainault; Namur, and Flanders Gallicani, the Batavi in South-Holland, and so much of Gelderland and Utrecht as lies on the South-side of the Rhene, with the Mætiani intermixt in the Dukedom of Gelder; the Mætiani in the Illes of Zeland; the Aduatici and part of the Tongri in the Dukedom of Brabant, with part of the Trovis in Luxemburg, and of the Eburones in Luyckland and the Dukedom of Limburg: all which were Belgic Nations, and therefore anciently accompted of as parts of Gallia. Then on the Northern side of the middle Channel of the Rhene there dwelt the Frisi in North Holland, and so much of the District of Utrecht as lies on the farther side of that channel; the Frisi in West-Friesland and the State of Groning; some parts of the Sicambri in the Earldom of Zutphen and the rest of Gelderland, with part of the Bructeri in Over-Tissel all German Nations, and properly not within the reckoning of Gallia Belgica. Those which passed under the accompt and name of Belgae being subdued, together with other Tribes of that numerous Nation, by the valor and good fortune of Julius Caesar, continued subject to the

Romans

Romans, without any notable disturbance unto their affairs but the Rebellion raised against them by Crovis Prince of the Batavians in the time of Vespasian. In the declining of the Empire they were possessed by the French, under whom they made a part of the Kingdom of Metz or Oslemreich, united by Childerich the third to the rest of France, and made a member of that Kingdom; as they continued till the time of Lewis the Godly, Son of Charles the Great. In the division of whose Empire amongst his Children, the Countries of Flanders and Artois being laid to France, the residue of these Countries on this side of the Rhene made up a special part of the Kingdom of Lorraine. Those, on the farther side of the middle Channel of that River, being German Nations, gained to the vast Empire of the French by Charles the Great, in the division of the spoil spoken of before fell to the share of Lewis surnamed the Ancient, the first King of Germany, and after his decease to his Successors in that Estate, whether King or Emperours. And so we have the whole divided betwixt the three great Kings of France, Lorraine and Germany, by that means subdivided into lesser parcels, (no fewer than nineteen in all) we shall see anon.

In the mean time we are to know, that in the beginning of the French Conquests in the rest of Gallia, there started up in Belgica two great Estates, founded by Abernon, Regnault and Ranchaire, Sons of Clodion, the second King of the French; who being disaffected of their Fathers Kingdom by Merove Master of his Horse, to whose Tutelage and Guardianship they had been committed, betook themselves to the most defensible places of the great Forest of Ardenne, and the Countries to the banks of the River Moselle; where they founded the two great Earldoms from thence denominated. That of Ardenne (for of the Earldom of Moselle we shall speak elsewhere) contained part of the modern Flanders, and some part of Brabant, together with all Hainault, Namur, Limbourg, Luxemburg and the Dukedom of Bouillon. Grown to this greatness by the withdrawing of the French forces into richer Conquests, and dismembering of that Empire into many Kingdoms, and trusting too much to that greatness, they drew upon themselves the jealousy of those mightier Princes: occasioning Clotaire the second to give their Country unto Dagobert his eldest Son, then King of Metz, whom he furnished with convenient Forces for the Conquest of it. Brunniph, the then Prince hereof, being by him discomfited and slain in Battle. By Sigebert, who succeeded his Father Dagobert in the Kingdom of Metz, the Earldom of Hainault is taken out of it, and given to Albert, one of the youngest Sons of Brunniph. By Dagobert himself, succeeding in the Realm of France; (and whilst he lived sole King of the French) the parts of Flanders and Brabant, formerly belonging to these Princes, were dismembered from it, and laid unto two new Estates of his own creating. And probable it is, that either to weaken this great House, or to comply with the ill Customs of thosetimes; the Earldom of Namur might be taken out of it at the same time also, for the portion of some other of the younger Brethren. The rest of the Estate, with the title of Earl of Ardenne, remained unto the eldest Son: whose Posterity, notwithstanding this great diminution grew to such effect; that Judith, the Widow of Buin, and Sister of Basun, Earls of Ardenne, was thought a fit Wife for Charles the Bald, King of France and Emperour, by whom (the more to honour his Family) the said Basun was created King of Arles and Burgundy. During the Empire of Osbo the first, the Earldom of Luxemburg was divided from it, and given to Sigefride, one of the younger Sons of Ricinus the preceeding Prince, and so perhaps was Limbourg also for another of them. The rest remained to Godfrey the eldest Son, who by Matilda, a Daughter to Osbo the second, was father of another Godfrey, who succeeded after Charles and Osbo, the third Duke of Lorraine: that Dukedom being ever since enjoyed by the House of Ardenne, and there we shall hear further of it. This said, and so much of the Story opened as concerns the general, we will proceed to a particular Survey of the modern Belgium, divided at the present into seventeen Provinces, besides the two great Bishopricks of Liège and Cambray, which being always under the protection of the Belgic Princes, partakers of their fortunes, either good or ill, and lying intermixt among their Estates, shall have their turn in the description of these Countries, divided generally

Of these nineteen, two only did acknowledge the Sovereignty of the Kings of France, viz. Flanders and Artois; the Earls whereof were Homagers unto that Crown, but seldom did defend so low as do their Homage; quitted at last to Philip the second King of Spain, and his Successors, by King Henry the second of France in the Treaty at Cambray, anno 1558. The rest were held originally of the German Empire, and by Maximilian Emperour of Germany, and Regent of those Countries for his Son Philip, (who had a purpose to subject them to the Empire again) where made the tenth Circle of the Empire, called the Circle of Burgundy. But neither since, nor before that time; would the Princes of the House of Burgundy, acknowledge any such subjection, but governed these Estates as absolute Princes, without relation to the Empire, or Subordination to the Emperour or Imperial Officers; never appearing at the Diets, nor contributing to any Taxes there imposed, not holding themselves bound by any Constitutions which were made therein. So that these several Relations being out of use, we must behold it at this time as it stands divided betwixt the Spaniards and the States: beginning first with those Provinces which belong to the Spaniards, the true Proprietors of the whole; and therein first with Flanders, as of most esteem.

1. FLANDERS, and 2. ARTOIS.

These two I have thought fit to join together, because at first but one Estate; and though divided for a time, yet after five or six Descents again united, and have so continued ever since.

1. FLANDERS is bounded on the East with Hainault and Brabant, on the West with the English or German Ocean; on the North with the Seas of Zeland and a branch of the Scheldt, and on the South with part of Picardy in France, interposing betwixt Calice and Graveling. So called, as some say, a Flandis, because it lieth open to the winds; as others say, from Flanders, the Son of Blesindus, Daughter of Clodion, the second King of the French. Some fetch it from a Town of this name, situate in that part of the Country where now Ardenburg stands; so long since ruined, that very few except themselves could ever hear of it; and others (which I think moft probable) from Flandrina the Wife of Lideric the fecond, the firft who governed in thefe parts by the name of Forefter.

The Soil is indifferently fruitful in Corn and Pafture; the Air healthful, temperate and pleafant. The whole Country not in length above 90 miles, and in breadth but 60, and yet containing in that compafs above thirty Cities, (for they reckon all Cities which be walled) and 154 Villages, which ftand fo thick, (as needs they muft in fo narrow a compafs) that the Spaniards, at their firft coming in with King Philip the fecond, took the whole Province for one Town. Divided commonly into 1. Imperial, 2. Galicam, and 3. Tenonicam; or 1. Flanders Imperial, 2. Flanders Gallicam, and 3. Flanders Flammengant.

1. FLANDERS FLAMMENGANT, which is the greateft of the three, is bounded on the Eaft with Imperial Flanders and the River Scheld, on the Weft with the English Ocean, on the North with the Seas of Zeland, and on the South with Artois and Flanders Gallicam. The chief Towns of it, 1. Gaunt, in Latine called Gandavum, feven miles in compafs, but taking in the Suburbs, which are great and large, the whole circuit is ten miles at leaft. One of the greateft Cities in Europe for extent of ground but not fo populous as many of a lefs capacity; there being much waite ground even within the Walls. Coming thence feated on the banks of the Scheld and the Ley, modiously together with 98 Bridges: and had not her many Seditions ruined her Beauties, (he might have been the Queen of Europe). In this Town were born John Duke of Lancafter, commonly called John of Gaunt, and Charles the fifth Emperour, and King of Spain: which laft, to refrain the people from their old Seditions, which had been very troublefome to his Predeceffors, (the Gauntis taking on them many times to rule in the place where flood the Princes) built a strong Citadel in the place where flood the Abby of Saint Bavon. For Churches, Monafteries, and other places of Devotion, there were, numbered in 55, all of them unfavourable to the grandeur and renown of the City; the private Buildings being alfo very ftately, if not Majestical. But now it is much fallen from its former glories, the often Seditions of this People drawing upon themfelves the vengeance of their angry Prince; and their Wealth much impaired by the long Wars, and the diversion of their Trading by the Hollanders, who command the Seas. 2. Bruges, or Brugges, more within the land. A Town that hath neither Port nor River, yet formerly of fuch Wealth, and the People in thofe times willing to thew it, that Queen Joan, the Wife of Philip the Fair, having been there, and marked the Pomp of the Women, complained that She was not Queen alone. The Town of four miles circuit within the Walls, wonderfully well peopled; the Buildings fair and fumptuous, (amongft which 60 Churches and Religious houfes) the Streets large and ftraight, and a fpaacious Market-place, from which the 6 principal Streets of the City do pafs direftly on to as many gates, which is very pleafant to behold. And though the Town hath neither Port, nor River as before was faid, yet was it anciently of fo great Trading, that it was accounted one of the four Mart-Towns of Chriftendom; flourishing chiefly by the benefit of the English Cloth, and fenfibly decaying when the English Traffick was removed hence to Antwerp. It was walled by Earl Baldwin, an 890, is diftant three leagues from the Sea, and feated on a fair and deep Channel made by Art, and filled with the waters of all the adjoining Fountains and Rivulets; which artificial Channels are in thefe Countries very frequent, to the great enriching of the whole State. 3. Tyres, a Town feated very ftrongly, and almoft impregnable, on a fmall River fo named: a reasonable rich Town, and well built, though moft of the Houfes be of Timber, very well ferv'd with Water, conveyed into every houfe almoft in leaden Pipes, of which there is fo great a number, that the Foundations of it feem to be laid in Lead. 4. Bourbourg, a fine strong Town, but little pertaining to the French King in the right of the houfe of Bourbon. 5. Comines, on the River Lys, or Ley, beautified with a strong Caftle, and an excellent Library; but more in being the Birth-place of Philip de Comines, that notable States-man and Hiftorian. 6. Courtray, on the fame River of Ley, one of the ancientest Towns in Flanders, yet ftill continueth well built of very great ftrength both by Art and Nature, famous for a great Overthrow given the French, Anno 1301, for which the Town was called of long time the Sepulchre of the Frenchmen. 7. Ardenburg, (called in times paft Radenburg) a pretty Town enriched every year with a great Horfe-fair every Year, and beautified with one of the goodliest Churches in all this Province: the principal Town of that part herof, which properly is called Flanders; that name being firft given to the parts hereto adjoining, as fome conceive, and after by degrees communicated to the reft of the Country. 8. Bierfort, both a Town and Ifland, and furnifhed with a good and commodious Haven; yet not to be mentioned in this place, but that the falting of Herrings was here firft invented by one William Bekekeles, who died anno 1397. 9. Winockeberg, fo called of a goodly Abby built upon an Hill in the honour of St. Winock an English man of an holy life, facked by the French, anno 1538, but fince re-edified, and made more beautiful than it was before. 10. Graveling, on the Sea-fide, which, fince the taking of Calice by the French, hath been made the ftrongest Town in the Low-Countries. 11. Oudenard feated on the Scheld, a fair strong Town and of very great Traffick, efpecially for Tapeftry and the fineft Linens, which are here made: the Birth-place of Margaret, Dutcheffe of Parma, and Mother to Alexander Prince of Parma, that renowned Souldier.

The principal Ports of Flanders, being four in number are all of them feated in this part. 1. Dunkirk, a fmall but fafe Port, belonging to the French King (as doth Graveling alfo) in the right of the Houfe of Vendofme; but ftrongly Garrifoned by the Spaniards, even in times of Peace, becaufe of the importance of their fiteuation both by Sea and Land. Moft memorable in thefe days for that the People of it in the times of War fo infected the Seas. 2. Sluys, feated at the mouth of the Channel of Bruges, beautified with a very fair Haven able to contain 500 good Ships; and is now fubjeft to the State, with whofe fafety it could not well ftand to let the Spaniards enjoy any fafe and large Harbors for near unto them. Over againft it lieth the Ifle of Cassand, famous for the birth of George Cassander, a moderate and learned Papift) formerly as big again as it is at the prefent, having then a fair Town in it and many rich Villages, of which there is but one remaining, (of the fame name with the Ifland) the reft all fwallowed by the Sea. 3. Nieuport, a pretty Town, with a very strong Caftle, built on a well frequented Haven, but not very fafe, and therefore not much ufed by the men of War, nor made rich by Piracies, as Dunquerque; Near to this Town, anno 1603, was fought the Field-battle betwixt the Archduke Albert and the States; the Victory, next under God being gotten for the States by the valour of the English, and the excellent Conduct of the Vere. 4. Opfend, not walled till the Low-country Wars, and then but with a mud-wall only, and that not finifhed till the Arch-duke faid down before it: in fomuch as the Arch-duchefs Isabel is faid to have fworn, that she would not shift her fhock till the Town were taken: who, had she kept that raft Oath, had been very lowlie; the Town (then garrifoned with English) holding out againft the faid Arch duke a Siege of three years and as many months.

2. IMPERIAL FLANDERS, fo called, becaufe it was long under the obedience of Emperours, is fevered from Brabant by the River Dender, and from the Gallick Flanders by the River Scheld, about Oudenard. It was fometimes called Bracani, of a Caftle of that name, destroyed by Baldwin le Debonaire, Earl of Flanders; and is now called the County of Afls, from the chief Town thereof fo named; the Jurifdiftion whereof, containing 170 Villages, extendeth as far as to the Walls of Gaunt and the Gates of Oudenard. The Town is strong, and indifferently fair, ftuate on the River Dender, moft famous in thefe times for a Fair of Hops which is kept there yearly. 2. Hulft, a walled Town, and the chief of the four Towns in the County of Waes; the other three being, 3. Axle. 4. Mouchant. 5. Affende; of which little memorable, but that they were all taken from the Empire by the faid Baldwin le Debonaire in the time of the Emperour Henry the Fourth. 6. Dendermond, ftuate at the mouth of the Dender where it eneth into the Scheld; a strong Town both by Art and Nature, and much enriched by making Fullians, and a weekly Market of Flax. A diftinct Seigniorie of it felf, with many rich Villages belonging to it; incorporated into the Earldom of Flanders by the Marriage of Earl Lewis de Malaine with the Lady Margaret of Brabant, to which houfe it formerly appertained. 7. Rupelmond, on the mouth of the River Rupel, where it falleth into the Scheld: Famous in former time for an ancient Caftle, in which were kept the Monuments and Records of the Earls of Flanders; more in late times for being the Birth-place of Mercator, that renowned Cosmographer. 8. Mont-Gerhard, called by the French Gronnoy, a fine and pleafant Town feated on the Dender. Which three laft Towns, together with Bornhem, a fair large Village, having fome Jurifdiftion on the parts adjoining, made up that Eftate which was called the Proper or Domaine of Flanders, becaufe not holden of the Empire or the Kings of France, but in the Sovereignty alone of the Earls herof.

3. FLANDERS GALLICANT, fo called from the French language there fpoken, lieth on the South of Flanders Flammengant; having Hainault on the Eaft, Artois on the Weft, and the Country of Cambray on the South. The chief Towns of it are, 1. L'ifle, in Latine, Insula, fo called from its Ifland-like fiteuation, among Ponds, Pools, Marfhes, dried up and made firm land by Earl Baldwin de Barby, who built the Town, anno 1007, which afterwards was called by Baldwin de Lifle, his Son (born in his Town, and hence fo named) anno 1066. The Town made rich by Manufactures and reort of Merchants, accounted the beft Town of Traffick, next Amftterdam and Antwerp, in all the Netherlands. Not far from which are to be feen the Ruins of an ancient Caftle called Brug, the Seat or Manor-houfe of the ancient Forfevers, who had the Government of this Country for the Kings of France. 2. Dunoy, (Duacum in Latine) a fair and strong Town feated on the Schep, having many Fountains, good Buildings, and a great number of Churches; made an University by King Philip the fecond of Spain, who built therein a Seminary or College for English fugitives. 3. Orchies, a pleafant Town, and well traded for the making of Serges; which, with the other two, make up the three Eftates of this part of Flanders. 4. Armentiers, an unwalled Town, but of very great Trading; there being yearly 250000 pieces of Cloth fent hence to Italy, and thence to Constantinople. 5. Tournay, (or Dernick as the Dutch call it) a great, rich, mighty and strong Town, feated on the Scheld, well built, and full of ftately and magnificent Churches and Religious Houfes, and anciently honoured with a See Epifcopal. A Town of great importance, and much contended for betwixt the Flammings and the French; but finally fell unto the French by the eighth of England, an 1513, to whom the Citizens paid 100000 Ducats for their prefent Ranfom; refcued by him unto the French, an 1518, for the fum of 600000 Crowns; and finally from them recovered by Charles the fifth, who reforted it to the body of Flanders, from which it had been long difmembered; but fo that it is governed as a State apart, and to the Walls of Tournes, having a goodly Jurifdiftion over the Country round about it. 6. St. Amant, in the Country of Tournes, pleafantly feated on the Schep; in which is one of the richeft Abbies in all Flanders; the Abbot thereof having the temporal and fpiritual Jurifdiftion over it and the parts about it. And fo much for the Chorography of the Earldom of Flanders, inhabited by the Nervii and Morini in the time of Cefar.

2. ARTOIS is bounded on the Eaft with Flanders Gallicam and the Country of Cambray, on the South and Weft with Picardy, on the North with Flanders Flammengant, and the River Lys. The name is derived from the Arrebat, the old Inhabitants herof: the Air exceeding temperate, and the Soil fo fruitful, that it ferveeth as a Granary to a great part both of Flanders and Brabant.

On the Weft part herof towards France lieth the Earldom of S. Paul, fo called from the chief Town thereof; a goodly Seigniorie, and of great Jurifdiftion and Revenue, containing, befides many Villages, the good Town of Pere, a walled Town, and of great importance. The Earls herof were lineally derived from Walleran, brother of Henry the 7. Emperour of Germany and Earl of Luxemburg; the laft of which was Lewis of Luxemburg, made Countable of France by King Lewis the eleventh, with whom, as alfo with Edward the 4. of England, and Charles Duke of Burgundy, he paid fo many crofticks, that having long deluded them all, and kept them in a continual jealousie of one another, he was at laft by Duke Charles taken and beheaded. After whose death this goodly Seigniorie fell to the Houfe of Vendofme in France, by the Marriage of Francis Earl of Vendofme with Mary the Daughter of this Lewis; to whom it was adjudged by the power and favour of the French King's; the Heirs-males being made incapable of Succellion in it by the Attainder and Confifcation of the faid laft Earl by means whereof the Houfe of Vendofme was intituled to many fair Eftates in Artois, Flanders, Hainault, and much good Lands in France, which they were poffeffed of; Francis the 2. Son of that Francis, and Francis the only Son of this, being intituled, whilst they lived, Earl of S. Paul, and Dukes of Tuicville.

The Arms of thefe Earls were Argent, a Lion Gule armed and crowned Or, his tail forked of the fecond.

As for the residue of Artois, the Towns of moft importance in it are, 1. Arras, in Latine Arrebatum civitas, the chief City of the Arrebat the old Inhabitants herof in the time of Cefar, and till the chief City of this Province; a large, populous and well-fortified City, anciently honoured with a See Epifcopal, and stocked with an induftrious people, the firft makers of the Cloth of Aras, which took name from hence: divided into two diftinct Towns, both of them walled, and called by two feveral names; the leffer called La Cite, fubjeft to the Bifhop, beautified with a Fair and ftately Cathedral Church, and a Library containing many excellent Manufcripts; the leffer called La Ville, fubjeft to the Prince, having large Streets, and a rich Manfory of the yearly Revenue of 20000 crowns. By Problemy it is called Regiacum, feated within a bow-shot of the River Scarp, and heretofore the Metropolitan Town of Flanders, till Arois was dismembered from it; since which time the chief City of this Province, as before is said. 2. S.Omar, a fair Town, and well peopled, seated upon the River Aa, some eight Dutch miles from the Ocean; so called from S.Omar; or Adamant, Bishop of the Morins, who built a Monastery in this place, from which grew the Town, the second of esteem and rank in all the Country. Near to it is a goodly Lake of fresh water, in which are many little Islands affording good pasturage for Cattel: of which Lewis Guicciardine reporteth, that by fastning a Cord unto the Bufhes which grow in them, a man may draw them which way he will; and that under them there are found great numbers of Fifishes, who bed themselves there for shelter against the Weather. 3. Bathune, a strong Town; and feated amongst excellent Pastures, of which the people make great plenty of the best Cheefe: which, with the Territory hereof, fell to Guy de Damperre, Earl of Flanders, in right of Maud his Wife, Daughter and Heir of Daniel the Lord of this Town, honoured in that regard with the birth of their eldest Son, who from this place had the name of Robert de Bathune. 4. Ayre, on the Liz, a strong Town, with a Castle of great Antiquity. 5. Barpaunne, a little, but well Fortified Town; and yet more strong, because it cannot be beleegued for want of fresh water, which is not to be had within three Leagues of it. 6. Renty, an unwalled Town, but Fenced with a very strong Castle, beleegged by the French, Anno 1594, they being overcome in a fet Field by Charles the fifth, they were fain to raise the Siege and go home again. 7. Hafdisfont, on the confluence of two little Riversets, Blangis and Cauche; a Frontier-town on the edge of France; one of the strongest and most defensible places of all the Netherlands, built by Charles the fifth out of the ruins of old Hafdisin, which having taken from the French, he commanded it to be raied as no longer serviceable, and raised this Town in stead thereof, somewhat nearer France. 8. Tervin, or Tervane, the Tervamae of Ptolomy, and Givius Marinus of *Antoninus*a Frontier-Town, held for a long time by the French, by whom thought impregnable, till taken by King Henry the eighth, Anno 1513. they changed their opinion. A Siege not only memorable for the issue of it, but for two other matters of great moment The one, that the Emperour Maximilian came and served in person under the colours of S. George, with the English Cross upon his breast : the other, that the French intending to victual the Town, had so great an overthrow, that had the English followed their Fortune, they had opened a fair way to have made themselves masters of all France; the French King being so aflonished at all France; that he prepared to fly into Bretaign. But news hereof, that he prepared to fly into Bretaign. But the English more minded the Spoils and riches of Tervin, than the sequel of an absolute Victory; Ei frui maluerunt victoria, quamuti, as the Historian saith of Hannibal. It is now after many changes of Fortunes in the hands of the French, and by some reckoned and accounted of as Towns of Picardy. There are, besides these, three walled Towns more, that is to say, Lillers, Lens, and La Bassée, of which little memorabile, and to the number of 854 Villages.

River

Villages. These Countries of Flanders and Artois were anciently, if not a part, (as the parts hereof about Tournay most undoubtedly were) yet much of the same nature with the great forest of Ardenne, nothing but a continual waste of Woods and Defarts till the Conquest of it by the French; the Sea-coasts being then uncoppled for fear of the Danes, who by their frequent Piracies did much vex those Shores and the inland Countries meanly planted, for want of Corn and other necessities for the life of man : subject in part to the greatt Princes of Ardeme, till the disfigurement of Earl Brunniph by Dagobert fole King of the French, by whom about the year 621 this wild Countrey, extending then as far as the River Sonne, and comprehending, besides Artois and Flanders, a good part of Picardy, was given unto one Liderick de Buque with the title of Forsler, to be holden under the Sovereign of that Crown. In whose posterity it continued with the title of Forslers till the time of Baldwin the first, the son of Odoacer, the seventh of the Forslers, whose names occur upon record; there being a long intermixture of their names and memories during the Ravagements and Depredations of the Danes and Normans. This Baldwin having first ravished, and afterwards married, Judith, Sister to Charlet the Bald, King of France and Emperour, was by him created Earl of Flanders, the Sovereignty thereof reserved as before it was: in whose Issue it remained intire, till Philip the first Earl of that name gave unto Philip Augustus, King of France, the Countrey of Artois with the Earldom or Countrey of Fermandout, part of Picardy, in Marriage with Ishabel his Niece, Daughter of Baldwin Earl of Hainaut. By Lewis the eighth, Son and Successor of Philip Augustus, Artois was given in Portion to his youngest Son Robert, made the first Earl of Artois by King Lewis the 9. An. 1234. And by the Marriage of Lewis the first of Flanders with Margaret the Heir of Artois and of the Earldom of Burgundy, both these Estates werecedd unto this of Flanders; now made far mightier than before. And yet before this great accession of Estate it was accounted the prime Earldom, as Millane was the prime Dukedom of Europe: these Earls being privileged to write themselves Dei gratia, all others Dei clementia only; and Flanders being now grown abroad to so great extent, that it was generally used for all the Netherlands. Finally, by the Marriage of Margaret, Daughter of Lewis de Hainaut, with the Earl of Flanders, to Philip the Hardy, Duke of Burgundy, this great Estate became united to that Houte, and afterwards was conveyed to that of Austria, as shall be shew'd hereafter in due time and place. In the mean season let us take a brief survey of

The Earls of FLANDERS and ARTOIS.

- 864 1. Baldwin, the first Earl of Flanders.
879 2. Baldwin II.

and Emperor of Constantinople.

3. HAINÁVULT

HAINEAULT is bounded on the East with Namur, on the West with Flanders, on the North with Brabant, on the South with Picardy and Champagne in France. It was anciently called Salutis Carbonaria, from the abundance of Charcoal made in the Woods and Forests of it; by some Writers of the middle times, the Lower Picardy; by the Latine Writers of these times called Hannonia. It seemeth to have taken this new name from the River Hain or Hania, which passeth through it, and the word Hain, signifying a Wood, as being overspread in a manner with the Forests of Normandy; St. Amand de Faignd, and that of Poodberg, and then Hainaut will be quasi *Hain*holz. i. e. a Country of VVoods and Forests on the River Haine. Thus called originally by the French, (as the word is improper); but by the Dutch best known by the name of Haingow, i. e. the Country bordering on Haine, as the name signifieth in that language.

The length thereof is 60 miles, 48 the breadth; comprehending in that compass 950 Villages, and 24 Towns; in and amongst which there is reckoned one Principate, 10 Earldoms, 12 Peerdoms or Pairries, 22 Baronies, 26 Abbeyes, one Lord Marshal, (besides other Officers of the Prince) descending by inheritance to the Lords of this Province.

The Air hereof is very good, and the Soil Fruitful, by reason the Country is watered with so many Rivers, as the Scheid, the Sambre, the Dender, and several lesser Streams, befides divers Lakes, Marfhes, Ponds and Pools, which do much enrich it, the Country abounding in most places with fresh Meadows and sweet Pastures, good Fruits, and profitable Trees, but especially with great plenty of Corn. Here are also some parts of it notable Mines of Iron and Lead, and excellent Quarries of the best Stone, fit for all kind of Buildings.

The principal of these Towns are, 1 Mons, situate at the confluence of Haine and a little River called Trulle, which gives a good natural strength unto it; fortified besides with a very strong Vall, three large deep Ditches, and an ancient Castle. The Town is great, beautiful and rich, adorned with sumptuous buildings, both private and publick, and replenished with wealthy Merchants and men of Trade; the principal of all the Provinces, erected into an Earldom by Charles the Great, and sometimes used for the style of Earls of Hainnault: In this Town is the noble Nunnery of S. Valdrade, once a Duchess of Lorraine, the Nunnes whereof are to be Ladies and Gentlewomen of Noble Families, in the morning apparelled in white, like Nuns, in the afternoons according to their Birth and Qualities; who when they please may leave the Cloister and be married. The Abbess hath Jurisdiction both in the Town and Country about it, and anciently did put the Earls of Hainnault into possession of the State. Another Nunnery like this (but not of such large Revenues) theris at 2 Maubeuge on the Sambre a good Town of Merchandise. 3 Valenchiennes, situate on the Scheld, and a little River called Ronelle, which make not only in it many pleasant fies, but pass almost under every man's house, to the great benefit and delight of the place and people. The life here is so strong by Nature (besides the Fortifications of Art) that on the one side it may be easily made unapproachable by water; and on the other side is so defended by Hills, that it can hardly be besieged but by three Armies at once. A goodly, large and beautiful Town, especially for publick Building: the Chief whereof are the Church of our Lady, built after the ancient

- 1205 19. Joan, eldest Daughter of Baldwin the Emperor, first married to Ferdinand, Son of Sanche King of Portugal, and after to Thomas the 3d Son of Thomas Earl of Savoy; both in her right called Earls of Flanders.
- 1244 20. Margaret, Sister of Joan, and 2d Daughter of the Emperor Baldwin, Widow of William of Dampierre, governed the Eftate of Flanders as long as she lived, admitting William her eldest Son to the Title of Earl, which he continued till his death (being many years before his Mother's) Anno 1255.
- 1278 21. Cy, of Dampierre; the second Son of Margaret, admitted to the Title of Earl on the death of his Brother, and to the Eftate it self on the death of his Mother.
- 1304 22. Robert III. firnamed of Bethune; who married Toland, Heir of Odo of Bourgoigne, Earl of Nevers, by whom he had a Son called Lewis, who married Mary Daughter and Heir of James Earl of Reibel.
- 1323 23. Lewis, Son of Lewis, and Grand-son of Robert the 3. in right of his Mother Earl of Reibel, in right of his Grandmother, Earl of Nevers, and of Flanders in right of his Father and Grand-father.
- 1347 24. Lewis de Malain, Earl of Flanders; Nevers and Reibel, in right of his Father, and of Artois and of Burgundy, in right of his Mother, whom he fucceeded at her death, but the time I find not.
- 1369 25. Philip II. firnamed the Hardy, Duke of Burgundy, fucceeded in the Earldoms of Flanders, Artois, &c. in right of Margaret his Wife, Daughter and Heir of Lewis de Malain, whom he married folemnly at Gant, in the 1369. Of which Philip and his Suceffors in these Eftates we fhall hereafter fpeak in a place more proper.

The Earls of ARTOIS.

- 1234 1. Robert of France, Grand-son of Philip Augustus, and Johal the Daughter of Baldwin the 8th, made the first Earl by Lewis the 9th.
- 1245 2. Robert II. Son of Robert.
- 1302 3. Otheline, Earl of Burgundy, succeeded in right of Maud his Wife, the Daughter of Robert the 2.
- 1315 4. Philip the Long, King of France, Earl of Bur- gundy and Artois, in right of Joan his Wife, the Daughter and Heir of Maud and Otho, or Otheline.
- 1331 5. Eudes, Duke of Burgundy, Earl of Burgundy and Artois in right of Joan his Wife, the eldest Daughter of Philip.
6. Philip, the only Son of Eudes, in right of his Mother, Earl of Artois, and so called in his Father's life-time.
- 1349 7. Philip III. Son of Philip the II. and Nephew of Eudes, Duke and Earl of Burgundy, and Earl of Artois, who died young and without issue, anno 1361.
- 1361 8. Margaret, Daughter of Philip of France, and of Joan Countess of Artois and Burgundy, married to Lewis Earl of Flanders, &c. succeeded Philip 3. (being then a Widow) in the Earl-doms of Burgundy and Artois, anno 1361.

The Arms of Flanders are Or, a Lion Sable, langued and armed Gules. Those of Artois being Semé of Flower-de-Luces Or, in a field Azure, a File of three Labels, Gules charged with as many Castles of the first.

manner of Architecture, with sumptuous Arches and goody Pillars of Marble and Porphyry; the Earl's Palace, and the Town-hall, Buildings of great magnificence and excellent workmanship. The Birth-place of Henry the 7th. Emperor of Germany, of Mary Daughter of Charles the Warlike, and of Froilart, the great French Historian. Finally a Town which, for the eminence thereof, is governed as a State apart by itself, having under the Jurisdiction of it 3 Towns, 132 Villages, which on occasion of Appeal resort not to the Provincial Council at Monts, but the great Council at Meclun. 4. Chimay, upon the River Blanche, near a pleasant Forest, which gives the title of a Prince to the eldest Son of the Duke of Arschot, one of the principal Lords of Brabant, who hath here a very goody Palace. 5. Halle, seated on the Simme, which runs through it, a place of great credit amongst the Parus, by reason of an Image of the blessed Virgin famed for many Miracles. Of which see Lipsius on that subject. 6. Beauvais or Bavay, an old Town, at a Pillar whereof begin all the ways leading into France, made of Pavestones by Bruneault the Wife of Sigebert King of Meiz, and Austrasia, who with Prisegonde the Wife of Chilperic, and Katharine Medici, the Wife of Henry the 2d, are said to be the three Furies of France. 7. Landreux, on the River Sambre, famous for the notable resistance which it made to Charles the 5th. 1543. 8. Marientburg, built by the Mary Queen of Hungary, Governess here for the said Charles, An. 1524, to serve as a Bulwark against France, on which it frontiereth. 9. Philip-Ville, built and well fortified for the same reason by K. Philip the 2d. 19 Bouchain, upon the Scheld, in the County of Ofrinand, which County is the Title of the first Son of Hainault: and by that name William the eldest Son of Albert Earl of Hainault and Holland, was admitted Knight of the Garter by King Richard the 2d. 11 Conde, a good little Town seated on the Scheld, the moiety whereof belonged heretofore to the House of Montpensier in France, as 12 Eughen, a Town of great Trade for Tapestry, to the House of Fendefne: from whence the Princes of Conde, and Dukes of Enghein do derive their Titles. 13 Beaumont, upon the knap of a goody Hill, whence it hath the name; belonging at the present to the Dukes of Aerschot, but anciently the Partage of the second Son of the Earls of Hainault. 14 Binsor Binsche, on a branch of the River Hain, one of the Jointure-Towns of the Countesses of Hainault, much beautified and made a place of pleasures by Mary Queen of Hungary, to whom it was given by Charles the fifth, (commonly called the Queens Paradise) but burnt and utterly destroyed by the French, An. 1554. 15 Aerh, seated on both sides of the Dender; a little, but a pleasant and wealthy Town; here being held the Staple of Linen for all this Country, and the Cloth here sold amounting to 200000 Crowns per annum. As for the History of Hainault, the ancient Inhabitants thereof were the Nervii, the most valiant and most potent people of all the Gauls, possessed not only of this Province, but of the whole Earldom of Namur, and some part of Flanders, able to bring, and de facto did bring into the Field, when the Belge murthered under their united forces against Julius Caesar, no fewer than 50000 fighting men. Won from the Romans by the French, they became a part of the great Earldom of Ardenne, continuing so till the death of Brunnibp, discomfited and slain in battle by Dagobert sole King of the French, whom his Father in his life time had made Duke of Ardenne, and designed under the conquest of it. But the fury of the War being over, the parts of Flanders and Brabant which belonged unto it effaced upon other Houses, and the rest allotted out amongst his Children, Alberic, firnamed the Orpelin, one of his younger Sons, was by Sigebert King of Meiz, or Austrasia, enfeoffed of this Country, by the name and Title of Earl of Hainault. Twice this Estate was added or united to that of Flanders. 1. In the person of Baldwin 9. Earl of Flanders, succeeding hereunto in right of Richild his Wife, Daughter of Regnier the 3d. 2. By the Marriage of Baldwin the 6th of Hainault with Margaret Countess of Flanders, Sister and Heir of Philip of Alsace, Earl of Flanders. But being divided the first time by the usurpation of Flanders, wrested from Arnulph the 3d. by his Uncle Robert and the second time by the intrusion of John de Avesnes, natural Son of Margaret the second Daughter of the Emperor Baldwin, into the Estate and Earldom of Hainault; it was finally annexed to Holland by the Marriage of John de Avesnes to Adelize or Aleide, Daughter and (at the last) Heir of Florence the 4th. Earl of Holland, Zealand, &c. From which it never was divided, till they were both incorporated into that of Burgundy.

The Earls of HAINAULT.

1. Alberic, one of the younger Sons of Brunnibp Earl of Ardenne.
2. Wautier, Son of Alberic.
3. Wautier II. Son of Wautier the first.
4. Wautier III. Son of Wautier the second.
5. Albon, in right of his Wife, eldest Daughter of Wautier the third.
6. Albon II. Son of the said Albon by that Wife.
7. Manassier, Son of Albon the second.
8. Regnier, Son of Manassier.
9. Regnier II. Son of Regnier the first.
10. Regnier III. Son of Regnier the second.
11. Baldwin V. of Flanders, and the first of that name in Hainault, succeeded in right of Richild his Wife, the sole Daughter to Regnier the third.
12. Arnulph, Son of Baldwin and Richild, dispossessed of his Estate and life by his Uncle Robert, who seized on the Earldom of Flanders.
- 1071 13. Baldwin II. Brother of Arnulph, succeeded in Hainault.
14. Baldwin III. Son of Baldwin the second.
15. Baldwin IV. Son of Baldwin the third.
16. Baldwin V. Son of Baldwin the fourth.
17. Baldwin VI. of Hainault, Son of Baldwin the fifth, and the eighth of that name in Flanders, into which also he succeeded in right of Margaret his Wife, Sister and Heir of Philip of Alsace, Earl of Flanders.
- 1199 18. Baldwin VIII. of Hainault, and 9. of Flanders, Emperor of Constantinople.
- 1205 19. Joan Countess of Hainault and Flanders, first married to Ferdinand of Portugal, and then to Thomas Earl of Savoy.
- 1244 20. Margaret the younger Sister, of Joan, married to William of Bouillon Lord of Damphier, by whom she had William and Guy both Earls of Flanders.
21. John de Avesnes, base Son of Margaret, begot before her marriage by Buchart her Guardian the Prior of St. Peters in L'Isle, by force and fraud extorted Hainault from his Brethren born in lawful wedlock, and married Alide Daughter and Heir of Florence the 4th. Earl of Holland; whose Successors in both Estates we shall meet with there, and amongst them with William the 3. Father of Queen Philippa, Wife of Edward the 3d. one of the most considerable of all the number.

The Arms hereof are quarterly Flanders and Holland.

4. The Bishoppick of CAMBRAY.

Southward from Hainault lieth the Bishoppick of CAMBRAY, containing a goody Town and Territory, reckoned of anciently as a part of Hainault, now a State distinct, rather confederate with the Princes of the Netherlands, than subject to them.

The principal City hereof is Cambray, (called in Latine Cameracensis) situated on both sides of the River Scheld, a fair, goody and mighty City, full of people, many of which are rich Merchants, but all of them industrious, especially in making that fine linen Cloth from hence called Cameras, or Cambrick. The private Buildings are very fair, but the publick much fairer, especially the Monasteries and other Churches, of which the most remarkable is that of our Lady, an ancient and sumptuous Fabric, and the See Episcopal. From whence the Country and Territory hereunto adjoining is called Cambrésie, in which are divers Villages and places of importance. The chief of which are, 1. Costeau Cambresis, six leagues from the City, remarkable for the Treaty held there betwixt France and Spain, Anno 1559 in which a Peace was happily settled amongst all the chief Princes of Christendom, after a long and tedious War between those Kings and the Confederates of each: and before that, for the Confederacy there made by the said Kings of France and Spain, the Emperor, the Pope, and many of the Princes of Italy, against the Seignoury of Venice, Anno. 1568 called the League of Cambray. 2. Avesnes le Sec, (so called to distinguish it from Avesnes in Hainault) near which are digged excellent white Stones for building, little inferior unto Marble.

This Bishoppick was Founded in the person of S. Diogenes, a Greecian born, An. 390, or thereabouts: whose Successors in trade of time became so potent, that at the last the Bishop hereof became both the Lord spiritual and temporal of the Town and Territory, honoured with the title of a Duke, and Prince of the Empire, and was in the end made an Archbishop by Pope Paul the Fourth, An. 1562. And as for the City of Cambray, it was made Imperial by the German Emperours, afterwards by Henry the fifth, given in protection to Robert of Jerusalem, Earl of Flanders, and finally settled and confirmed on all his Successors by the Emperor Frederick, An. 1164. Which not withstanding, the French finding it convenient for them, divers times possessed it: but governing with too great insolence, they were driven out by the people in the time of Louis the 11th, and the Town yielded voluntarily unto Maximilian, Governour of these Countries for his Son Philip, Charles the fifth, in the year 1543, built a strong Citadel in it, pretending that he did it for defence of the Town against the French, but indeed to keep it for himself. After this it was taken by the Duke of Alençon, (Brother of Henry the 3. of France) then Governour of the Netherlands, An. 1582, but regained not long after by the Spaniards, the Inhabitants giving up the Town for want of vituals. Since that continually possessed by the Spaniards, and by them strongly garrisoned; but so, that the people still enjoy their ancient Privileges, and are governed by their own Laws and Bishops, as in former times.

5. NAMUR.

THE Earldom of NAMUR hath on the East Hainault, on the West the Bishoppick of Liege, on the North Brabant, and on the South Luxembourg; so called from Namur the chief Town of it; Namurcum and Namnetensis Comitatus in our Latin Writers. The Country is very small, containing only 182 Villages, and four walled Towns, but plentiful of all commodities and replenished with a loyal and industrious people. Particularly the Air hereof is very wholsom; the Country watered with many Rivers and pleasant Brooks (amongst which the Sambre and the Maes) which, besides the benefit of Portage, yield great plenty of Fish. The Hills, whereof it hath not many, are clothed with Woods, abounding with all kind of Fowl and Venison; the Vallies eminently fruitful of all sorts of Grain, rich Mines of Lead, Quarries of Marble of all colours, as also of Porphyrie or Jasper, and great plenty of Coal. In Mines of Iron so abounding, and that continually hammered by a painful people, that Vulcanus Forge may seem to be restored to the world again and seated here; which as it makes the people wealthy, so it keeps them from idleness. And as for the Nobility they are generally valiant, given to all military exercises fit for their degree, and very affectionate to their Princes, the greatest virtue of a Subject.

Walled Towns it hath but four, as before was said; that is to say, 1. Namur, the chief of all the Province, where resideth the Council for the Country, from which lieth no Appeals but to Archelin only. Seated it is between two Hills on both sides of the Sambre, which doth there fall into the Meuse. The City is rich, inhabited for the most part by the Nobility, defended with a strong Castle, and beautified with a fair Cathedral. Founded here in the Church of S. Albin, Anno 1559. Not far off in the Villages of Ardenne and Monsieur are two Nunneries of Ladies, like those of Monts and Mabouge, spoken of in Hainault. 2. Boisvies, upon the Meuse, sacked by the French, Anno 1554, since repaired and fortified. 3. Charlemont, a small Town, but of most exact Fortifications, built by Charles the fifth, An. 1555, to oppose the French, who had then possessed themselves of Marientburg a Town of Hainault. 4. Valencour, a little Town, but standing in a goody and fruitful Country. Of the Villages the chief is Douc, seated on the Meuse or Maes, fortified with a strong Castle, and honoured with the title of a Viscountie. 2. Floren, 3. Vesvie and 4. Sanfon, of much beauty and greatness.

The ancient Inhabitants of this Country were a part of the Nervii. It was first made an Earldom by some of the Descendents of the Sons of Clodion, the second King of the French, who being dispossessed of their Father's Kingdom by Meroveus, the Master of his Horse, (to whom he had committed the Guardianship or Tuition of them) were forced to betake themselves to the most defensible places of the great Forest of Ardenne and the parts adjoining, where they founded the great Earldoms, of Ardenne and Moselle, as before is said, divided in succeeding times into many parcels, of which this is one. By what and how many Earls this Earldom was possessed, I am yet to learn, the Estate being small, and consequently the Princes of it not much considerable. They were allied to the Royal House of France, by the Marriage of Albert Earl hereof with Irmingarde Daughter of Charles of France, the first Duke of Lorraine; and after unto the House of Flanders, by the Marriage of N. the Daughter and Heir of Peter, the last Earl of that race, to Henry the Second, Son of Baldwin the eighth of Flanders, and Brother of Baldwin Earl of Flanders, and the first Emperor of the Latines in Constantinople, whom he succeeded in that Empire. After whose death it came by Toland his Daughter to Peter Earl of Auvergne, who succeeded also in the Empire, and after his decease to Philip his younger Son. But he deceasing without Issue, and Robert his elder Brother reigning in Constantinople, it was seized on by Philip the Brother of Henry, who, to assure themselves thereof, took to Wife Mary Daughter of Philip Augustus King of France, by a Niece or Cousin of this Philip it was conveyed in Marriage to Henry Earl of Luxemburg; (the Father by a former Wife of Henry the seventh, Emperor and Earl of Luxemburg) and finally brought back again to the House of Flanders, by the Marriage of Guy of Dampierre Earl of Flanders, by Isabel Daughter of that Henry by the Heir of Namur, and in his Issue it continued (for ought I can find) till it was swallowed up with the rest of the Belgick Provinces, by the House of Burgundy. So that the highest we can go in search of the Earls of Namur, is to the time of Hugh Capet and Charles of Lorraine, which was 540 years after the coming in of the Sons of Clovis. From which time downwards the Succession is confused and broken, and towards the latter end discontinued for 140 years. Such as are left upon Record I have drawn together (not without much trouble) in as good order as I could, and here present them in the ensuing Catalogue of

The Earls of NAMUR.

1. Albert, Co-temporary of Hugh Capet, spoken of before.
2. Godfrey the Son of Albert, and Father of Alice Wife of Baldwin the fifth of Hainault, and Mother of Baldwin the sixth of Hainault, and the eighth of Flanders.
3. Peter the Son or Brother of Godfrey.
4. Henry the second, Son of Baldwin the eighth of Flanders, in right of N. his Wife, the Heir of Peter, Emp. of Constantinople, also on the death of Baldwin the 9th, his elder Brother.
- 1216 5. Peter II. Son in Law of Henry Emperor of Constantinople, and Earl of Namur.
- 6, 7. Philip, the younger Son of Peter and John the elder Brother of Henry, both taking to themselves the title of Earl of Namur, the one at Constantinople, the other in the Netherlands, and both deceasing without Issue.
8. Philip II. Brother of John and Henry without Issue also.
9. John II. surnamed of Dampierre, the third Son of William of Dampierre by Margaret Countess of Flanders, Daughter and Heir of the Emperor Baldwin, succeeding by the gift of his Mother, challenging the disposing of it as next Heir of Philip the second, or in the right paramount of the Earldom of Flanders, enjoyed upon a better Title by
10. Guy of Dampierre, Earl of Flanders; and elder Brother of John the second, in right of Isabel his Wife, Daughter of Henry Earl of Luxemburg by the Heir of Namur; but I neither find her Name nor Parents.
11. John III. Son of Guy and Isabel.
12. John IV. Son of Guy, by a former Wife, the Brother of John the third by the whole blood being absent or unfriended, and so put beside.
13. Guy II. the Brother of John the Fourth by the same Venter.
14. John V. Son of Guy the second, who in the year 1307. married a Niece of Lewis the ninth of France, by Robert Earl of Clermont, a younger Son.
15. John VI. who in the year 1420. sold his Estate to Duke Philip the Good, to be enjoyed by him on the death of Theodore, the next Heir here of, inform, and (as it seems) without hope of Children.
16. Theodore, or Theodorick, the last Earl of Namur, after whose Death Duke Philip entered on this Earldom by the former Contract, and as the next Heir of the House of Flanders it continuing ever since into his Posterity.

The Arms hereof are Or, a Lion Sable, bruiſed with a Bend Gules.

6. LUXEMBURG.

LUXEMBURG is bounded on the East with the Moselle and the Land of Trier, on the West with the Meuse or Maas and a branch of the Forest of Ardenne, on the North with Luyckland, Namur, and a part of Hainault, and on the South with the Dutchie of Lorraine; so called from the Castle near the Town of Luxemburg, selected by Sigefride the first Earl hereof for his Seat and Residence.

The whole is divided into parts: the Eastern part being called Favanne, fruitful of Corn, and yielding withal some Wines, some Mines, and many excellent Quarries of goodly Stone, the Western called Ardenne, a remainder of that spacious Forest, which sometimes overshadowed all this Country, barren of Corn, but very plentiful of Venison, and of Fowl good store.

The people of this Country are not all of one Language: those nearer Germany, as in Luxemburg, Arlon, Rodemack, Theorville and the rest on that side speaking the Dutch; as those of Montmedy, Marville, Dampvillers, with the rest bordering on France, do corrupt or broken French, in which regard the Pleadings held before the Council residing in Luxemburg are made in both Languages, that so they may be understood by all that have business there. But the Nobility and Gentry (of which there is more in this Province than in any other of the Seventeen) speak both Tongues perfectly. A breed of men full of Vertue, Courtesie, and Hospitality towards one another, and of great Truth and Faith to their Prince: but reckoned for the worst Landlords in all these Countries; governing their Subjects and Tenants like the Peasants of France, contrary to the use and Liberties of the rest of the Netherlands. Both sorts, as well the Nobility as the Commons, hate both Law and Lawyers, and for the most part end their Controversies amongst themselves without any Process.

The whole Country containeth in compass about 70 leagues, or 200 Italian miles, in which are comprehended 23 walled Towns, and 1168 Burroughs and Villages: The principal of which are, 1. Luxemburg or Luxemburg, built in the place where anciently stood the Augusta Vermaniorum of Ptolomy; and took this new name quasi Lucis burgum, from the Image of the Sun there worshipped; seated on the Alsummus or Alze, which runneth through it; large and of a strong situation, but not very well built, nor yet recovered of the spoils which the long Wars betwixt the French and the Spaniard brought upon it before the Treaty of Cambray. However it is the chief Town of the Province, honoured with the Residence of the Council hereof, and the Sepulchre of John King of Bohemia, slain in the Battel of Cressy against the English, An. 1348. 2. Arlon, on the top of an Hill, so called quasi Ara Luna, from an Altar consecrated to the Moon in the time of Paganism. 3. Theorville, on the Moselle, over which it hath a goodly Bridge; a Frontier town near Metz, and the Border of Lorraine, and for that cause made marvellous strong; but taken by the French, An. 1558. and restored the next year by the Peace of Cambray. 4. Boffelack, a fair Town, and very well traded, commonly called the Paris of Ardenne, in which part it standeth. 5. Montmedy, on an high Hill, at the foot of which runneth the River Chiers. 6. Dampvillers, once a very strong place also, both taken and ranſacked by the French, An. 1552. 7. Marville

7. Marville, upon the Chiers, the one half whereof be-longeth to the Duke of Lorraine, the other to the King of Spain as Duke of Luxemburg, for which cause it is called la Ville Commune, 8. Rock di March, fortified with a strong Castle. 9. Tois, a place once of great importance, sacked by the French, An. 1552. and restored by the Treaty of Cambray, on condition it should never more be walled. 10. La Frette on the Chiers, a Town of the same condition.

In the skirts of this Country towards France standeth the Principality of Sedan, extended all along the banks of the River Maas, from the borders of Lorraine on the South, to the great Forrest of Ardenne and the Dukedom of Bouillon on the North. A small, but very fair Estate, of fruitful Soil, and beautified with many rich Villages, and some Towns of note: the principal whereof are, 1. Jamais upon the borders of Lorraine, by the Duke whereof it was taken after a long season, from the Lady Charlotte, the last Heir-general of the House of Mark, An. 1585. and laid unto that Dukedom as a part thereof. A place of great importance, and therefore much contended for by each Pretender. 2. Dunchery, a strong Town of War, bordering on Tiraphe in Picardy, to which by some it is ascribed. 3. Sedan, in Latin called Sedunum ad Mosam, because situate on the banks of the Maas or Mosel; the usual Residence of the Prince: a fine neat Town, well fortified, and planted with 80 brass pieces of Ordnance; is honoured with a seat of Learning, which being of a middle nature betwixt a Grammar-School and an University, is in the Criticism of the times called a Schola illustis, to which men may send their children to learn good Letters, though they can take in them no Degrees, that being a privilege reserved only to the Universities. So that these Schools may be somewhat like our Collegiate Churches of Westminster, Winchester and Eaton, but that the younger Students in these last named are more restrained to Rhetorick and Grammar, than in the other, though these more liberally endowed for the encouragement and reward of Learning than all the Schola illustis of either Germany. 4. Moson, a Town of great strength and consequence on the River Maas, upon some jealousies of State, garrisoned by the French, as also in Sedan it self, and most of the other good Towns belonging unto this Principality; but so that the Revenues of it, execution of Justice, and all other rights of Sovereignty, are still enjoyed, as formerly, by the Lords thereof.

This estate anciently was a part of the Dukedom of Bouillon, from which it was diffembred for the Portion of the young Prince, at such time as Godfrey Earl of Ardenne and Bouillon succeeded in the Dukedom of Lorraine, after Charles and Otto the first Dukes; or else excepted and reserved by Godfrey, surnamed of Bouillon, Duke of Lorraine, and King of Hierusalem, when he sold the Dukedom of Bouillon to the Bishop of Liege. By many mean Conveyances and alterations of the Owners it came at last to the House of Ardenberg, a Family of great wealth and power in Westphalen, (a Province of Germany not far off) by the Heir-general of which House it was brought in Marriage to Engelbert Earl of Mark, about the year 1330, from whom descended Robert Earl of Mark, and Sovereign of Sedan with the Towns annexed, who succeeding his Mother in the Estates of Sausy and Florenge, first holden of the Dukedom of Bouillon, and eagerly offering to unite the Estates together, (as they had been anciently) purchased the Town and Title of Duke of Bouillon of Eberhard Earl of Mark, his Brother, Bishop and Cardinal of Liege, and consequently Duke of Bouillon also. Proud of his honour, and being somewhat too stiff in maintaining the Rights of his new Dukedom against a Sentence passed in the Imperial Chamber, in a Suit there depending betwixt two of his Vassals, he took up Arms against the Empire, with far more courage than discretion. For being in the court of that War worsted by Charles 5. (for whom he was too weak an Enemy) the Town of Bouillon, being taken by the conquering Emperor, was afterwards restored to the Bishops; and nothing but the Title of Dukes of Bouillon left to the Princes of Sedan. And that he might be able to hold Sedan, this Robert was fain to return again to the protection of the French, (as his Ancestors from the time of Charles 8. had done before) and died Anno 1535, leaving his Titles and Estate unto Robert his Son, one of the Marshals of France, whose Grandson, called also Robert, being a dear friend and companion of Henry of Bourbon King of Navarre, and afterwards of France also, dying without Issue at Geneva, Anno 1588, committed to him the disposal of his Estates, and of the Lady Charlotte his only Sister. And he so well discharged his trust, that (having settled his own affairs) he gave the Lady in Marriage to Henry de la Tour, Vicount of Turenne, in France, (one who had done him very good service in the course of his long War, against the Leaguers) and with her the possession of Sedan, and the Title of Bouillon; whose posterity do still enjoy it. The whole Succession of these Princes we shall find in Bouillon, of which more anon.

But to return again unto the Dutchie of Luxemburg, It was at first a part of the great Earldom of Ardenne, dismembered from it in the time of the Emperor Otto the first by Sigefride the Son of Ricinus Prince thereof, who, in the division of that Estate amongst his Brethren, had this for his Portion, with the Title of Earl. Of his Successors there is little to be found upon good record in a constant order of Succession, until the time of Henry 1. Father of Henry 2. Emperor of Germany, and they of a most considerable, though all of them of eminent quality in their several times, viz. 1. Henry, elected and crowned Emperor by the name of Henry 7. laid to be poisoned by a Friar in the holy Chalice, to prevent some designs he had against the Pope, in asserting the Imperial power in Italy. 2. John, the Son of this Henry, chosen K. of Bohemia, in regard of his Marriage with Elizabeth the Daughter of Wenceslaus King thereof, the possession of which Realm he left unto his posterity, advanced unto a Dukedom by Charles 4. the eldest Son of this John, in the person of Wenceslaus his younger Brother. What else concerns it we shall find in this following Catalogue of

The Earls and Dukes of LUXEMBURG.

1. Sigefride, the Son of Ricinus, Prince of Ardenne, the first Earl of Luxemburg.
2. Gilbert, the Father of Ogine, Wife of Baldwin the fourth of Flanders; but whose Son I find not.
3. Godfrey, Earl of Namur, was also Earl of Luxemburg by the right of Marriage, Father of Agnes the Wife of Simon the second Duke of Lorraine.
4. Conrad, perhaps the Son of Godfrey by the Daughter of Luxemburg, Father of Catharine, Wife of Matthew the second, Duke of Lorraine.
5. Henry Earl of Luxemburg, slain in the quarrel of Raimond Earl of Geldres, contending with John Duke of Brabant for the Dutchie of Limbourg.
6. Henry II. Son of Henry the first, by means of his Brother Baldwin, Elector of Trier, was chosen Emperor of the Germans, the seventh of that name, Anno 1308, first crowned at Aken,

- Aken*, and afterwards at Rome; one of the last Emperors that meddled in the affairs of Italy.
- 1313 7. John, Son of Henry II. Earl of Luxemburg, married Elizabeth, Daughter of Winceslaus the elder, K. of Bohemia; which was upon that Marriage elected and crowned King, Anno 1311, in the life of his Father; slain by the English in the Battle of Cressy, Anno 1346.
- 1346 8 Winceslaus, the younger Son of John, created Duke of Luxemburg by his elder Brother Charles the 4th, Emperor and King of Bohemia.
- 1583 9 Winceslaus II. eldest Son of the said Charles 4. Emperor and King of Bohemia also, succeeded his Uncle in the Dukedom.
- 1419 10 Sigismund, Brother of Winceslaus, succeeded Winceslaus in all his Estates; to which he added the Crown of Hungary, by the Marriage of Mary, Daughter of King Lewis the first.
- 11 Elizabeth, Daughter of John Duke of Gorizia, (a Town of Lusatia) the Brother of Sigismund, by the gift of Sigismund her Uncle, becoming then alive, the better to fit her for the Bed of Anthony of Bourgoyn Duke of Brabant, after whose decease he married John the 3. Earl of Hainault, Holland, &c. But having no Issue by either of them, she fold her interest in this Dukedom to Duke Philip the Good.
12. Philip the Good (succeeded on the Sale aforesaid made by the said Elizabeth, in pursuance of the Contract and agreement made at her first Marriage, for settling this Estate in the House of Burgundy. Of whom, and his Successors in these Belgick Provinces, we shall speak hereafter.

The Arms are B. fix Barrulets A. supporting a Lion G. crowned and armed Or.

7. LIMBOURG.

THE greatest of the Estates of Belgium for extent of Territory, at the time of their incorporating in the House of Burgundy, was that of Brabant, comprehending 5 of the 19 Provinces; that is to say, the Dukedom of Limbourg and Brabant, the Marquisate of the Holy Empire, and the Seigniory of Mechlin, with the Sovereignty of Liege or Luxemburg.

LIMBOURG hath on the East the Dukedom of Guilick in High Germany, on the West the Bishoprick of Liege, on the North Brabant, and on the South the Dukedom of Luxemburg. The Soil is fruitful of all necessary Commodities, excepting Wines, the want whereof is recompensed with most excellent Wheat, great store of Fewell, and plenty of the best Iron Mines in all these Countries: all which Commodities it hath of so great excellency in their several kinds, that it is said of them proverbially, that their Bread is better than Bread, their Fire hotter than Fire, and their Iron harder than Iron. It is also well stored with medicinal Simples, and enriched with a Mine of Copperas, (by Pliny called Lapis arseus, lib. 34. c. 10.) which being incorporated with Brafs makes Latrin, and increaseth the Brafs by one third part. Lapis arseus multum aris habet, & ex eo fusifus aris, as that Author hath it.

It is one of the least of the Belgick Provinces, containing in it but 125 Villages, and no more than five walled Towns or Cities; viz. 1. Limbourg, which gives name to the whole Estate, pleasantly seated on a Hill amongst shady Woods, under which runneth the River Wejdes; which, having watered the whole Country; emptieth it self into the Maes; well built, and fortified with a very strong Castle, mounted upon a steep Precipice, of no facile access. 2. Valkenburg, called by the French Fauquemont, a reasonable fair Town, with a large Territory, two Dutch miles from Maestrich; conquered from Reynold, Lord hereof, by John the third Duke of Brabant. 3. Dalem, a little Town with a Castle, the Territory thereof extending beyond the Maes; conquered by Henry Duke of Brabant, of that name the second. 4. Rhode le Duc, a little old Town with as old a Castle, half a league from Valkenburg. 5. Capeen, situate between Guilick and Collen, beautified with a Collegiate Church and a strong Castle, in which thereto a Governor with a good Garrison for defence of the place. Each of these Towns hath Jurisdiction on the parts adjoining, but with Appeal unto the Chancery at Brabant.

The ancient Inhabitants of this Tract, and the Bishoprick of Liege adjoining, were the Eburones. When it was first made an Earldom, I am yet to seek. Most probable it is, that lying within the Verge of the great Forest of Ardenne, it was at first a member of that Earldom also, dismembered from it for the Portion of some younger Son, as Luxemburg and Namur were, or seized on by some strong Pretender (as Guilick was) when Godfrey and Baldwin Dukes of Lorraine and the direct Heirs of the House of Ardenne, were absent in the VVars of the Holy Land. But whensoever & by whomsoever it was made an Earldom, certain it is, that of an Earldom it was made a Dukedom by the Emperor Frederick Barbarossa, An. 1172. Henry, one of the Dukes hereof, married his Daughter Margaret to Godfrey the third, Duke of Brabant, which gave that House some colour to pretend unto it; backed with a better Title on the Death of another Henry, the last Duke of Limbourg, whose next Heir, Adolph, fold it to John, Duke of Brabant, pretending to it in the right of the former Marriage. An. 1293. But Reynold Earl of Geldris, thinking himself to have a better Title than Adolph in right of Ermengrady his Wife, the Daughter of Herman, a late Duke hereof, but in his place, and challenged by force of Arms; but being vanquished and taken prisoner by the said Duke John in the Battle of Warancan, was slain, for his Release, to release all his Claim and Title to the Dukedom of Limbourg, after that quietly enjoyed by the Dukes of Brabant, till they fell both together to the House of Burgundy.

The Arms hereof are Argent, a Lion Barrie of ten pieces, Or and Gules.

8. LUTCK-LAND, or, the Bishoprick of LIEGE.

WESTWARD of Limbourg, but a far mightier Estate than it, lieth LUTCK-LAND, as the Dutch, or the Bishoprick of LIEGE, Leodiensis, as the Latin and French Writers call it; anciently under the protection of the Dukes of Brabant, and afterwards of the Princes of the House of Burgundy, as Lords of that Country. By some it is accounted of and described as a part of Germany; but for the reasons before mentioned I shall place it here. It is environed on all sides with the Belgick Provinces, that is to say, with the Dukedom of Limbourg and the Earldom of Namur on the East, with Brabant on the North and West, on the South with Luxemburg.

The Air hereof is very wholesome, and the Earth as fruitful, abounding with all kind of Grain and Fruits with some store of VVine; and as for Fleish, Fish, and Fowl and Venison, it hath very great plenty, and that too of excellent taste: less fertile it is in such parts hereof as lie towards Luxemburg in which it is most swelled with Hills, and over-spread with shady Woods, remainders of the great great Forest of Ardenne, within which it stood. But the chief Riches of this Country is under ground, consisting in mines of Lead and Iron, and some few of Gold; Quarries of Alabaster, mingled with all sorts of Marble; rich veins of Brimstone, and unexhaustible pits of Coals: which last it hath in such abundance, that there is digged within the compass of one league of the City of Liege, not only sufficient for that great City, but to much over-plus, as being sold at mean prices of the Country, amounts unto 100000 Ducats of yearly value. The Coal much sweeter than elsewhere, and of nature contrary to all other Coal, in that it is kindled with water, and quenched with oil, and the strong fervour of it taken off by casting Salt on it.

The whole Country containeth 24 walled Towns, and 1800 Villages. The principal of which are 1. Liege or Luyck, (in Latin Legidium) situate in a pleasant Valley environed with Hills, the Meuse entering it in two branches, accompanied with four lesser Rivers, which make in it many delightful Islands. The compass of it is about four miles; the ordinary Buildings very fair, all built of Stone; the Bishops Palace a magnificent and sumptuous place; the Churches in number forty, of which eight are Collegiate, 32 Parochial, all of them for their riches and beauty exceeding all in any City of France or Germany. Besides these, there are so many Convents, Monasteries and Religious Houses about the Town, that taking all together they amount to an hundred; all of them of such fair Revenues, so well endowed, and the Religious Persons there of so great authority, that it is called the Paradise of Priests, and that deservedly. It is also an University of good antiquity, wherein were Students at one time 9 Kings Sons, 24 Dukes Sons, 29 Earls Sons, besides Barons and Gentlemen; the greatest part of which were Canons of the Church of S. Lambert, which is the Cathedral of the City. Yet notwithstanding it hath tasted of the malice of Fortune as well as others, being first destroyed by the Danes, then by the Normans, twice taken, and once destroyed by Charles of Burgundy, Anno 1468. Subject it is unto the Bishop as Lord temporal of it; from whom (being long since made an Imperial City) there lieth an appeal to the Chamber of Spire. 2. Dinant, upon the Meuse, near Namur, of very great Traffick, till destroyed by Charles of Burgundy in the same year with Liege: hardly recovered of which wounds, it was again sacked by King Henry the second of France, Anno 1548. 3. Museyk, upon the Meuse or Maes also, a league from whence is the fair Nunnery of Thuren, of the same nature with that of Mons and others spoken of before: the like to which there is near 4. Bissen, another Town of this Bishoprick; the Abbesses of each having the privilege of Coining both Gold and Silver. 5. Lontz, by the Dutch called Borchwin, in the County of Disfigne; made a County in the time of Charles the Great, the Title and possession of Ogier the Dane, so famous in the History of Gallen of France and others of the old Romances. 6. Franchimont, which gives the Title of a Marquis to the Bishop of Liege. 7. Centron, or St. Truden, a fair Town, so called of the Abbey dedicated to that Saint. 8. Hay or Hoey, so called of a violent River which there runs into the Meuse. 9. Tingres, the City of the Tongris, which together with the Eburones were once the inhabitants of this Tract; in which, are still the ruins of a Temple consecrated to Hercules. Anciently it was an Episcopal See, translated hence to Maestrich, and at last to Liege; and in those times so great and of such renown that Attila the Hun destroyed in it 100 Churches; now but a very small Town, and not worth the mentioning but for these Antiquities. Eight leagues from hence amongst the shady Thickets of the Forest of Ardenne, is 10. that so celebrated Village, and those famous hot Baths frequented from all the places in Europe, called the Spa; not so pleasant as wholesome, not so wholesome as famous. Yet are they good for sundry distempers, as the Tertian Ague, the Dropick, the Stone, the Exulceration of the Lungs, the Sciatica, &c. They are of most virtue in July, because they are then hottest; and to such as taft them they relish much of Iron, from some Iron Mines, it seemeth, through which the waters run, which feed them. These Baths were of great fame in the time of Pliny, who doth thus describe them: Tongri Civitas fontem habet insignem, plurimis bullis stillantem ferruginei saporis, quod ipsum non nisi in fine potius intelligitur. Furgat hic corpora, febre tertiana discurit calculorumque sitia. So be, lib. 31. c. 2. agreeably to the nature of them at this present time.

This Country (not taking the Dukedom of Boillon, though now reckoned as a part thereof, into this account) followed the same Fortunes with the rest of Belgica, till the Conquest of it by the French, by whom it was made a part of the Kingdom of Lorraine in the division of which fell unto the share of the Kings of France, and Germany it most wholly on the West or French side of the River Maes, which parted their possessions in that broken Kingdom. Won from Latharicus the French King (the last but one of the Caroline Race) by Orho the 2. it was by him made part of the Dukedom of Lorraine, then by him created, and continued as a part thereof, till, then by Godfrey of Boillon, Duke of Lorraine, sold to the Bishops of Liege, (of which more anon) since which time it hath been the Patrimony of those wealthy Prelates. As for the Bishoprick of Liege, it was founded at Tingres, as before was said; after the sackage of which City by Attila, it was removed Anno 498. by S. Servatius unto Maestrich. But the people of Maestrich having martyred S. Lambert their Bishop, Anno 710, by Hubert, his designed Successor, with the leave of Pope Constantine, it was translated to this place, and a Cathedral Church here founded by the name of S. Lambert. His Successors did so well husband their advantages that they did not only buy the Dukedom of Boillon, but the City and Territory of Liege, fold unto Spemius and Obernus successively Bishops of it by Godfrey of Boillon Duke of Lorraine; at his departure hence to the Holy Land: not much increased since that in Lands, though they be in Titles, the Bishop being filled a Prince of the Empire, Duke of Boillon, Marquis of Franchimont, Earl of Loetz and Hainbin. Yet are not his ordinary Revenues above 30000 Ducats yearly; 1. his Subjects living very well under him, at ease Rents, and growing for the most parts unto good estates. An argument of may be, that when the Liegeois had rebelled against Philip the Good, Duke of Burgundy (under whose Clientele they were as Dukes of Brabant) they bought their Peace of him at the Price of 600000 Florens of the Rhene, Charles the Warlike, (as they have been observed to be the most rebellious City in Europe, excepting Gamm) they were able to wage 30000 men; but not being able to withstand the Forces of their Lord Protector, they fell into that miserable destruction spoken of before. Since that time they have lived with more moderation under the protection of the Princes of the House of Austria: but were counted Neutral in Quarrels betwixt the King of Spain and the States Confederate, as formerly between the Spaniards and the French; though many times they suffer in the contentions.

Southward hereof betwixt it and Luxemburg, lieth the Dukedom of Boillon, subject unto the Bishops of Liege, but a State distinct, and holden by a different Title. It taketh up a great part of that Country which more particularly and specially is called the Forest of Ardenne, with the Woods thereof many places over-shadowed; but not unprovided of fair Towns and wealthy Villages. The principal of which are, 1. Loni, and 2. Muljon-Courty, destroyed by Charles the fifth, in his War against Robert Earl of Mark and Duke of Bouillon, but, on the Peace ensuing, repaired again. 3. Sausi, and 4. Floringe, Fiefs, as before is said, of the Dukedom of Bouillon, but possessed by the Sovereigns of Sedan, since the time that Robert Earl of Mark and Sovereign of Sedan had them in Marriage with Joan his Wife, the right Heir thereof, from whom came Robert Earl of Mark, the first Duke of Bouillon of that Family. The last a pretty Town, till destroyed by the French, in the Wars betwixt Henry and Philip the seconds, Kings of France and Spain, since passing in account as a principal Village. 5. Hierk, of the Forest of Ardenne, the cause of the great War betwixt Charles the fifth and Robert Duke of Bouillon, spoken of before; the Emperor having passed sentence in behalf of the Embrises, who laid claim unto it, and Robert favouring the pretensions of the House of China. 6. Bouillon, built on the side of a Hill near the River Semo, a fair large City, and beautified with a goodly Castle on the top of the said Hill, and commanding over a large and goodly Territory, so strong, as well by Art as Nature, that before the use of great Ordnance it was held impregnable; much spoiled in the War betwixt Charles the fifth and Robert of Mark, and tossed from one Master to another in a little time, for being taken from Earl Robert by the power of Charles, it was from him gotten by the French, an. 1552, and finally restored to the Bishop of Liege by the Treaty of Cambray, an. 1559, but without prejudice to the Claim and Title of the Prince of Sedan. So that there are no fewer than three distinct Families which at this time enjoy the Title of Dukes of Bouillon, that is to say, the Bishop of Liege, who hath precedence of Title, and the possession of the City, the House of de la Tour, who hold Floringe, Sausi, and some other pieces; and the Heirs-males of the collateral Line of the House of Mark, who hold Lunaigne, Roefhorst, and some other places, but of less importance.

This Dukedom, once a part of the great Earldom of Ardenne, in the division of that Estate betwixt the Children of Ricquene, Prince or Earl thereof, fell to the share of Godfrey his eldest Son, (Sedan with its appurtenances then belonging to it) with the Title of Earl of Ardenne and Bouillon. By Godfrey his Son it was united to the Dukedom of Lorraine, who succeeded into that Estate after Charles and Orbo, and by another Godfrey the first Duke of Lorraine dismembered from it, and given in Dower with his Sister Ida, at her Marriage with Eustace Earl of Boulogne in Picardy. Of these was born the famous Godfrey, commonly called Godfrey of Bouillon, since he became he was here educated, or in regard he was Duke hereof before he did attain to the Dukedom of Lorraine; who, to provide himself of necessities for the Wars of the Holy Land, (so fortunately conveyed as afterwards by him) sold first this Dukedom unto Orbo, as Bishops of the whole Country of Luxembourg to Speunim, Bishops of Liege successively, and their Successors for ever; which though accounted by most Writers for a part of Luxembourg, or of the Bishoprick of Liege, call it which you will, was notwithstanding held by those great Prelates as a State distinct, and governed under them by the Estates of the Country, from whose Sentence there lay no Appeal. The maintenance of which Privileges, on an Appeal made by the Embrises unto Charles the fifth, cost Robert Earl of Mark to dear, who had not long before purchased this Estate of his Brother Eberhard, Bishop and Cardinal of Liege, as was said before. The rest of the Story we have had already in our description of Sedan: we will now look upon the Princes which have born these Titles.

The Dukes of Bouillon of the House of Ardenne.

1. Godfrey, the eldest Son of Ricquene, Prince or Earl of Ardenne, the first Earl of Bouillon, and Husband of Matilda, a Daughter of the Emperor Orbo the 2.
2. Godfrey II. Son of Godfrey the 1. who in the year 1004, by adoption of Duke Orbo his Cousin, and the power of Henry the 2. Emperor, succeeded in the Dukedom of Lorraine.
- 1019 3. Gozelo, Brother of Godfrey the 2. Duke of Lorraine and Bouillon.
- 1044 4. Godfrey III. Son of Gozelo.
5. Eustace, Earl of Boulogne, and Ida his Wife, Daughter of Godfrey the 3. by him endowed at her Marriage with the Dukedom of Bouillon.
6. Godfrey IV. surnamed of Bouillon, Son of Eustace and Ida, on the death of his Uncle Godfrey, succeeded in the Dukedom of Lorraine, Anno 1078, and died King of Jerusalem. Going unto the Wars of the Holy Land, he held this Dukedom to Orbo Bishop of Liege and his Successors, anno 1096, who did accordingly enjoy it till the year 1509 or thereabouts; when it was sold by Eberhard of Mark to his Brother Robert, of whose descent and Successors you may take this view in the ensuing Catalogue of

The Sovereigns of Sedan, and Dukes of Bouillon of the House of Mark.

1. Engelbert, the ninth Earl of Mark in Germany, by marrying with the Daughter and Heir of Aremberg, added Sedan, Tamais, &c. to the House of Mark.
2. Everhard, second Son of Engelbert by the Heir of Aremberg, Lord of Aremberg, Sedan, &c.
3. John, Son of Everhard, Earl of Mark, Lord of Aremberg, Sedan, &c.
4. Everhard II. Brother of John Earl of Mark, &c.
5. John II. Earl of Mark, Son of Everhard the 2.
6. Robert of Mark, the 2. Son of John the 2. Lord of Sedan, his elder Brother Everhard succeeding in the Estates of Aremberg. He added Floringe and Sausi, Towns of the Dukedom of Bouillon, to his other pieces.
7. Robert II. Son of Robert the 1. Sovereign of Sedan, and Duke of Bouillon, which Dukedom he purchased of Everhard his Brother, Bishop and Cardinal of Liege.
- 1534 8. Robert III. Son of Robert the 2. one of the Marshals of France, Sovereign of Sedan, and Titular Duke of Bouillon.
- 1556 9. Henry, Son of Robert the 2.
10. Robert-William, Son of Henry, zealous in the Reformed Religion, and a great follower of Henry of Vendigie King of Navarre, to whom, dying at Geneva, anno 1588, he bequeathed the care of his Estates.
11. Charlotte, the Sister of Robert-William, married by Henry of Navarre (then King of the French) to Henry de la Tour, Viscount of Turenne in France.
12. Henry de la Tour, Viscount of Turenne in France, descended from the Heirs-general of Eustace Earl of Boulogne and Duke of Bouillon, by Marriage of the Lady Charlotte, and the gift of Henry the 4. of France, succeeded in the Sovereignty of Sedan and Title of Bouillon; a Protestant, and the Founder of the Schola Illustris in Sedan.

13. D.

13. De la Tour, Son of Henry by one of the Daughters of William Prince of Orange, succeeded his Father in his Estates, but not in his Religion also, which, to ingratiate himself with the French King, he exchanged for Papistry, made thereupon one of the Marshals of France, and now living Anno 1648.

9. BRABANT, 10. THE MARQUISATE, and 11. MECHLIN.

These I have joined together, though distinct Estates, because they have a long time followed the same fortune, and that the two last do no otherwise differ from the first than the parts from the whole; the Marquisate and Mechlin being now reckoned as parts of Brabant, and included in it.

1. BRABANT is bounded on the East with Luxembourg and the Bishoprick of Liege, on the West with the River Scheld and a part of Flanders, on the North with the Maes, which severeth it from Holland and Gelderland, and on the South with Hainault, Namur and a part of Luxembourg: as called guasi Brackland, that is to say, a barren Land, as at first it was; or from the old Brabantium, which Cesar placeth in this Trade; but from whether of the two is not yet determined.

The Air hereof is generally very wholesome and good, and the Soil naturally fruitful, excepting Kempenland, (being the parts thereof lying towards the North) which being barren of it self, is made indifferently fertile by keeping Cattle, Soiling the ground, and other arts of good Husbandry. The people live in most freedom, and are the best privileged of any in Belgium. A thing for which they are more beholden to the Prince's goodness, than their own great vices: being noted to be none of the wisest, especially as they grow in age, when most men learn wisdom. Brabant, quo magis fenscent, eo magis stultescunt, as Erasmus.

The length hereof, from S. Gertruydenburg to Gembours, North and South, is 22 Dutch or German miles; from Helm to Bergen of Zoome, East and West, 20 of the same miles; the whole compass 80. Within which circuit are contained 26 walled Towns, and Villages with Parish Churches 718; of which the odd 18, called France or Market-Towns, enjoy the Privileges of walled Towns or Cities, though unwall'd themselves.

Places of most importance in it are, 1. Hertogen Bosch, or the Bosch, as the Dutch Bos le Duc; or Baldue, as the French; and Sylvia Ducis, or Bosnum Ducis, as the Latins call it: each name derived according to their several Languages, from a pleasant Wood, belonging to the Dukes of Brabant, where the Town now stands, situate on the little River called Diesse, some two Leagues from the Maes, near the borders of Gelderland. A large and well-built Town, very strongly fortified, and of great trade for Clothing, here being made yearly in the time of Lewis Guicciardine 20000 Clothes, worth 200000 Crowns to the Clothier or Draper: Made an Episcopate Sec., an. 1559, the Cathedral, which is fixed in the Church of S. John, being fair and large, and beautified with one of the goodliest Dials in the Christian world. This is the principal Town of Brabant (properly and distinctly so called) comprehending under it the four Countries of Kempenland, Masland, Peelland, and Overwick, and was taken by the Confederate States from the King of Spain, after a long and chargeable Siege, anno 1628. 2. Tilmon, on the little River Geet, once chief of Brabant, but long since decayed. 3. Aerschot, on the little River Demere, which gives the title of Duke to them of the noble House of Croy, descended from the Kings of Hungary (of which we spake before at large when we were in Picardy) the Dukes hereof (advanced unto that honour by Charles the fifth) being men of greatest Revenue and Authority of any in Belgium. 4. Bergen of Zoome, so called from the River Zoome upon which it is situate, about half a league from the influx of it into the Scheld, and not far from the Sea; which gives it a reasonable good Haven. A Town of great strength by nature, but more strongly fortified; famous for being made a Marquisate by Charles the fifth, an. 1553; more for the notable Resistance which it made to the Marquis Spinola, an. 1622. 5. Byede, upon the River Merck, a Town pleasantly seated, well fortified, and of great Revenue, having under it the Town and Territory of Steenberg, the Franchise of Rosendale, and the Seigniority of Offenhou; the Residence, Barony, and chief Town of the Princes of Orange, from whom being taken by the Spaniard in the beginning of those wars, it was again recovered by some venturesome Gentlemen, who hiding themselves in a Boat covered over with Turf, were conveyed into the Castle, which they easily mastered, and made the Prince Lord of it again; after retaken by the Spaniard, an. 1623, but now in the possession of its natural Owners, to whom it came by the right of the House of Nassau by the Marriage of Engelbert the 7. Earl of that House, with Mary Daughter and Heir of Philip the first Duke hereof, about the year 1400. 6. Diesse, on the River Demere, a good Town and invested with a goodly Territory, belonging to the Prince of Orange, whose Ancestors of the House of Nassau had it in exchange for some other Lands of the Duke of Cleve; and in right hereof he is Burgave of the City of Amstrep. 7. Grimbergen, an ancient Barony, with a large Jurisdiction, defendible on the youngest Son only, after the manner of Burg Englis, as our Lawyers call it. 8. Gertruydenburg, standing on the Douge, not far from the influx of it into the Maes, the farthest town in the North of Brabant, where it joins to Holland; which makes it a matter of dispute betwixt those Provinces, to which of them it doth belong. A Town of great trade for Fishing, plenty of Salmons and Sturgeons being taken here, but of Sheds especially, whereof 18000 are sometimes caught in a day, fatted, and sent abroad into Foreign parts. It acknowledgeth the Prince of Orange for the Lord thereof, as doth also 9. Grave, a good Town upon the Maes, bought by these Princes of the King of Spain without consent of the States, without whose approbation no part of the Domain is to be dismembered. 10. Masfriebe, (in Latine Traxellum ad Mosam) so called of a Ferry over the Maes in former times; supplied now with a goodly Stone-Bridge in the place thereof. A fair and goodly Town, beautified with two Collegiate Churches, in one of which the Dukes of Brabant were always Canons; subject in part to the Bishop of Liege, and partly to the Duke of Brabant. The Children are subject to that Prince to whom the Mother was subject at the time of the Birth, without relation to the Father according to that Maxim of the Civil Law: Partus sequitur ventrem. And if a Stranger come to live there, he must declare to which of the two he will be subject. Yet is the Duke of Brabant the chief Sovereign of it, he only having the power of Coining, and of granting Pardon to Offenders: and as a Town of this Dukedom it was bequeathed and taken by the Confederate States, anno 1632.

Here is also within the limits of this Dukedom the Town and Seigniority of Rosvleissin, situate on the banks of the Maes, held by the Dukes of Cleve of the Duke of Brabant, but no otherwise subject: and on the same River the Town and Country of Horn, a Fief Imperial, beautified with a strong Castle and a goodly Territory; in which is Wiert, the Residence of the Earls of Horn; descended of the ancient House of Montmorency in France.

2. The MARQUISATE OF THE EMPIRE, so called because the farthest Bounds and Marches of the German Empire fronting on Flanders, which appertained unto the Sovereignty of the Crown of France, comprehended four of the best Towns in Brabant, with very large and spacious Territories adjoining to them: viz. 1. Lovain, on the River Dille, about four English miles in compass; but in that compass much of the ground is taken up with Vineyards, Gardens, Meadows and pleasant Fields, which make the situation far more delightful than if all built and peopled. It was the Mother-Town of Brabant, and sometimes gave the Title of an Earl to the Dukes thereof: afterwards was made an University by Duke John the 4. an. 1426. wherein are contained about 20 Colleges, such as they be, much privileged, and enriched with Penions for publick Readers, by King Philip the 2. 2ly, Brussels, (Bruxella) the Seat of the ancient Dukes of Brabant, and of the Dukes of Burgundy also, after they came to be Lords of those Countries; seated upon the time, and other sweet Springs and Rivers, which make it one of the sweetest situations in all Europe, having withal a goodly Chanel made by Art from Brussels to the River Dille, and from thence to the Scheld, the charge whereof amounted unto 500000 Crowns. It is of the same compass with Lovain, the Building sumptuous, and the Town very rich, not only in regard that it is the ordinary Seat of the Prince or his Regent, and the Chancery for all Brabant and the Duchy of Limbourg; but in regard of the rich Manufactures of Armour and Cloth of Arras, of Silks, Gold and Silver, which are there industriously pursued. 3. Nivelles, on the borders of Hainault, in a very rich and fruitful Soil, remarkable for the abundance of fine Linen which is therein made, but most of all for a very rich Nunery (or rather a Nursery) of noble Ladies of the same nature with those of Mons and others before described. 4. Antwerp, situate on a goodly Plain on the River Scheld, above 17 leagues from the Sea, but furnished with eight Channels, cut out of the River for the Transport of Commodities, one of the which is capable of 100 great Ships. The private Buildings are very handsome, but the publick sumptuous; the chief whereof were reckoned the Church of Nolre-Dame, the Burse, the Town-house, and the House of the Easterlings or Eastern Merchants. Well peopled it is, and of so great Trade in former times, that it was held to be the richest Empory of the Christian World; the Commodities here bought and sold amounting to more in one month than those of Venice in two years. The causes of which sudden growth and increase of Trading are said to be these. 1. The two Marts holden here every year, either of them during fix weeks, in which time no mans person could be arrested, or his goods distrained. 2. The King of Portugal having in the year 1503 diverted the course of Merchandise from Alexandria and Venice to the City of Lisbon, kept here his Factories, and sent hither his Spices and other Indian Commodities: for which cause the Merchants in the year 1516 forsook Bruges in Flanders, and settled here. And 3. many of the Nobility and Gentry, during the long and bloody Wars betwixt France and Spain, forsook their Country-houses and repaired hither: by means whereof Antwerp, in a very little time grew bigger by 3000 houses than it had been formerly. But as the growth hereof was sudden, so the fall sensible; occasioned through the yoking it with a Cittad by the Duke of Alva, which made Merchants afraid to resort any longer thither, as a place of little freedom and less security; but chiefly by blocking up the Haven and intercepting the Trade at Sea, by the more powerful Hollanders, which hath removed this great Traffic to Amsterdam and other Towns of their Country. So that now the chief support of it is the reputation which it hath of being an Imperial City, the place of receipt for the Kings Revenues, and a Bishops See founded here in the year 1559, which draweth hither some resort of Lawyers and Churchmen.

3. The Seigniorie of MECHLIN consisteth only of that City and a small Territory of 9 Villages adjoining to it. The City is seated on both sides of the River Dille, which ebbeeth and floweth to the Town and a league above it, and runneth through the very midst, maketh in it a number of small Islands, to the great ornament and commodity of it. A goodly Town containing seven Parishes-Churches, besides the Cathedral, being the See of an Archbishop, founded here in the year 1559. Strong, in regard it may be easily drowned on all sides; and of great wealth, by reason of the many Manufactures of Lincen, great Artillery of Brasse and Iron, Bells, Painted works, and others of like use and ornament. And being situate in a manner in the Centre of Brabant, distant 4 Leagues from Antwerp, Lovain, and Brussels, it was made by Charles the Warlike (who loved the place) the ordinary Seat of the great Council of State, to which Appeals are made from the other Provinces. But yet it was more beautiful in former times than it is at the present; the City being much decayed by firing 200 Barrels of Powder, an. 1546, and by the Sackage of the Spaniards, by whom it was taken by force, anno 1572. Most memorable at this time for a famous Nunery, like to that of Nivelles, wherein are sometimes 1600 Nuns, who when they please may leave their Cloister and be married. A Town though in Brabant, yet not of it, but a State distinct: for which cause many Women at the time of their Child-birth use to lay down their Bellies in some Village of Brabant, that their Children may be capable of the Privileges and Immunities of that Country. The principal of the Villages is named Leest of Heyff, pleasantly seated on an Hill, the residue of the Burroughs lying at the foot thereof. Both Town and Villages were the Patrimony heretofore of the noble Family of the Bertholds; which failing in the person of Gautier, slain in the Battell of Warancan by John Duke of Brabant, it fell the one half to the Bishop of Leige, who fold his moiety to John the 2 Duke of Brabant; the other to the Earl of Gelders, who in the year 1333 fold his part unto Lewis of Malain, Earl of Flanders. But he fold nothing but the Title; John the third Duke of Brabant having seized upon, and added it to his Estate: the occasion of some quarrel between those Princes, compounded by the Marriage of Lewis with the Heir of Brabant.

But to return again unto Brabant it self, the ancient Inhabitants heretofore were the Aduaticci and some part of the Tongri: it was accompanied by the Romans a part of the Province of Germania Secunda, and by the French a Province of the Kingdom of Frace, or Austrasia; the Southern parts thereof towards Hainault unto the Governance and Command of the Earls of Ardenne; the Northern parts lying towards the Sea, and terribly infected by the Depredation of the Danes and Normans, committed to the care of some principal Officers, whom they called Lords Wardens of the Marches. Theobert Son of Theodorick the first King of Austrasia, accompanied with Orilo a Boatman Prince, having repulsed these common Robbers, obtained for Orilo, of his Father, the command of those Countries, and possession of a great part of them also, by the Title of Lord Marquess of Antwerp, the fourth from whom, called Arnulph, was the first Maior of the Palace (of this House) to the Kings of France, made as it were hereditary unto his Successors. By Dagobert the first, sole King of the French, that part of this Country which was under the Earls of Ardenne being taken from them, the whole Estate was conferred on Ansegisus, the Son of Arnulph, with the Title of Duke of Brabant. The actions and achievements of so many of them as were

Maiors

Maiors of the Palace we have already seen when we were in France. The whole Succession follows here in the ensuing Catalogue of

The Marquesses of Antwerp and Dukes of BRABANT of the German or Boiarian Race.

1. Orilo, Son of Theobert, the first Duke and Nephew of Aldigerius, the last King of the Boiarians.
2. Hugbert, Son of Orilo.
3. Aspert, the Son of Hugbert, and Husband of Plybilda, Daughter of Cloaire the first of Brussels.
4. Arnoldus, the Son of Aspert.
5. Arnulph, Son of Arnoldus, the first Maior of the Palace of this Family.
6. Ansegisus Son of Arnulphus, Marquess of Antwerp, and Maior of the Palace by Dagobert the first made Duke of Brabant.
7. Pepin, surnamed the Fat, Son of Ansegisus, Successor to his Father in his Honours, Offices and Estates, and was herein succeeded by
8. Charles the base Son of Pepin, for his valiant acts surnamed Martel, there being no lawful Issue of his Father living.
